KENNEDY, Thomas.—Every kind of business has its representatives in Springfield, and that of shoeing horses is not neglected, for there are some excellent blacksmiths whose work is known all over Sangamon County because of its good quality. One of the men thus engaged is Thomas Kennedy, whose place of business is conveniently located on Eighth street, between Washington and Adams streets. He was born in Ottawa, Ill., February 25, 1853, a son of John and Ellen (Weech) Kennedy. The parents were natives of Ireland, who left their own land for the United States in 1849, bringing with them their only child, a daughter. They were four weeks on the trip to New Orleans, and the ship was nearly lost in the terrible storms they encountered. After reaching New Orleans, they found yellow fever raging and lost their little daughter from it. As soon as possible, they left the pest-ridden city for Little Rock, Ark, where they lived for two years, then coming to Ottawa, Ill., where for forty years the father worked in a starch factory. During the Civil War he served as a private in Company I, Fifty-third Illinois Volun teer Infantry for three years. During this period he was wounded several times, and never was strong after his war experience. His death occurred in Ottawa, as did that of his wife. Four children were born to these parents: Dennis; John, who died in Springfield, having also been a blacksmith; Thomas; and the daughter who died of yellow fever in New Orleans.

Thomas Kennedy never received much schooling, although he did attend the public schools of Ottawa for a few years, and then began to work at the starch factory, continuing there for seven years. Coming to Springfield April 10, 1871, he worked for Uncle Jim Kennedy, a blacksmith, and after four years with him, went into business for himself at No. 821 East Washington street. After continuing at that number for four years, he removed to Seventh street, and in 1885 located on Eighth street.

The marriage of Mr. Kennedy took place in Springfield in 1877, to Kate Donohue of this city, daughter of Charles Donohue. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy are the parents of children as follows: Ella, Mrs. Thomas Slick of Springfield; Edward; Thomas; Irene; Celia; Frank and John, twins. Mr. Kennedy owns his comfortable home at No. 1408 East Washington street. He is a Democrat in politics, but has not desired office. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, being interested in the work of his lodge. A good workman, a kind-hearted man, Mr. Kennedy established a fine business and made and retained friends throughout the county.

KENNEY, John, now living retired from active life in his comfortable home at 1113 North Ninth Street, Springfield, has resided there the past thirty-two years, and until recently was identified with mining interests in Sangamon County. He was born in County Galway, Ireland, June 24, 1845, a son of Timothy and Ella (Broderick) Kenney, both natives of that county, the father born in 1806 and died in 1881, and the mother born in 1815. The father was a farmer by occupation and both parents spent their entire lives in their native country. They had children as follows: Thomas J., a sketch of whom appears in these pages; Michael, of Pittsburg, Pa.; John died at the age of two and one-half years; Patrick died at the age of one year; Patrick (2), of St. Louis; John, of this sketch; Timothy, of Pittsburg; Jane, wife of Michael Connors, of Athens.

Mr. Kenney received his education in the schools near his boyhood home and his first work was performed on his father's farm. He came to America in 1806 and one year later located in Sangamon County, where he has since made his home. He was connected with various mining interests in the county until 1911, when he retired. His present house was erected thirty-two years ago, in September, 1879, and he also owns two other residences in the same block on North Tenth Street, which he also erected.

Mr. Kenney was married at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, by Father Brady, May 8, 1878, to Miss Mary Welch, born in Ireland, daughter of Patrick and Bridget (Hogan) Welch, natives of County Limerick. Mr. Welch was born in 1821 and still resides in his native place. Mrs. Welch was born in 1825 and died at the age of thirty-five years. Their only child was Mrs. Kenney, and she died March 26, 1890, having borne her husband one child, Timothy, born in Springfield, in 1879, now residing at Champaign, Ill. Mr. Kenney was married (second) at St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Springfield, by Rev. Father Ryan, April 8, 1894, to Hannah Barry, who was born in Springfield May 9, 1848, daughter of John and Catherine Barry, natives of County Clare, who came to Sangamon County in an early day. She is one of three children, the others being: Bridget, wife of Martin Mahoney, of Menard County, and Catherine, of Springfield. Mrs. Kenney is the second child. Mr. and Mrs. Kenney are members of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church and he is affiliated with the Catholic Order of Foresters and the Loyal Americans. In politics he is a Democrat. He is recognized as a useful, public-spirited citizen and has a large circle of friends.

KENNEY, Thomas J.—The city of Springfield can number with its best class of citizens those men who have chosen it as a permanent home after retiring from an active business life, investigating in property there and taking a deep and intelligent interest in all that concerns its progress and development. It is not unusual to find among these substantial, retired citizens natives of Ireland, for that country has contributed generously to America. Among those indicated is Thomas J. Kenney, who has lived at Springfield since 1808. He was born in County Galway, Ireland, December 6, 1845, a son of Timothy and Ella (Broderick) Kenney. Timothy Kenney was born in 1806, in County Galway, and died there in 1851. He married Ella Broderick, who was born in 1815, in the same place, and survived her husband. They never came to America, the crossing of the Atlantic Ocean and forming new ties in a strange country seeming too great an undertaking for them. To them were born nine children, seven of whom still survive, namely: Thomas J.; Michael, residing in Pittsburg, Pa.; Patrick, a resident of St. Louis, Mo.; John, living at Springfield; Timothy, making his home at Pittsburg; Julia, wife of Michael Connors, living in Ireland, and Anna, wife of Joseph Shangnessey, living in New Zealand.

Thomas J. Kenney attended school in Ireland and worked for his father on the home farm. In 1866 he came to the United States and settled first in New Jersey, from there went to Pittsburg, and later to Grafton, W. Va., in 1885 coming from there to Springfield, III. He acquired his independent means as a miner, gradually working his way up from the bottom until he became mine manager, and when he retired, in April, 1910, he was serving in the important and responsible position of manager of the Capitol Coal Mine.

On July 11, 1868, Mr. Kenney was married at Springfield, in the Church of the Immaculate Conception, by Rev. Father Sullivan, to Miss Mary McGrevey, who was born in County Mayo, Ire., June 16, 1851, a daughter of Patrick and Bridget (McDonald) McGrevey. The father of Mrs. Kenney was born in Ireland in 1819, and died May 2, 1909, at Springfield, in which city he had settled in 1877. His wife was born also in County Mayo, in 1806, and died at Springfield in 1891. Mrs. Kenney was the eldest born of their three children, the others being: Bridget, who is the wife of James Redmond, a retired farmer living at Springfield; Annie, who is the wife of James Berry, also of Springfield. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kenney, four of whom survive, as follows: Nellie E., who was born December 23, 1873, lives at home; Mary, who was born June 5, 1876, is the wife of John Gafney, and they live at Toledo, Ohio; Julia, who was born January 19, 1878, is the wife of William Dray, and they live at Chicago; and John J., who was born December 23, 1882, is married and lives at Springfield.

Mr. Kenney and family are members of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, at Springfield. In politics he is a Democrat. He is a member of the organization known as Loyal Americans, while Mrs. Kenney belongs to the Pioneers of America. They have a wide circle of friends.

KESSLERBERGER, A. W.—The various business, financial and public interests of Springfield, are in the hands of men who can be relied upon to keep them up to the standard, and in hands just as good have been placed the keeping of the city's artistic interests. Prominent among the latter class, may be mentioned A. W. Kesslerberger, whose well-appointed studio is located at Nos. 419-421 East Adams Street. Mr. Kesssberger was born in Springfield, August 6, 1862, a son of August and Christine (Hagedorn) Kesssberger. August Kesssberger was born Oc-
October 21, 1835, in Wiesbaden, Germany, and his wife, October 12, 1839 at Arrenvenhohn-on-the-Rhine, in the same country. They were married in Springfield, and became parents of the following children: A. W.; George, William, Edward, Bertha, and Dorothy M.; and Clara and Henry, who are deceased.

The early education of Mr. Kessberger was obtained in the public schools and the high school at Springfield, and later he attended business college for one year. Early in life, he showed artistic talent, and at the age of fourteen years made pen and ink maps for the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. He studied under a well-known artist for six years and was first in business with a Mr. Halliday, under the firm name of Halliday & Kessberger. This connection continued successfully for sometime, but subsequently was dissolved, and Mr. Kessberger became associated with Victor Georg, the firm name becoming Kessberger & Georg. After five years with Mr. Georg, in August, 1862, Mr. Kessberger decided to go into business alone, and in 1902 opened a fully equipped studio at his present location on East Adams Street. Many evidences of his beautiful work can be seen in his comfortable home. On October 21, 1884, at Springfield, Mr. Kessberger was united in marriage with Miss Gussie Leona Hopkins, a daughter of Caleb and Elizabeth (Dennis) Hopkins. Six children have been born to Mr. Kessberger and wife, as follows: Minnie Leona married August Wise, of Indianapolis, and they have two sons—Frederick and Jack; Mabel Irene, wife of Howard W. Gillett, of Chicago; Elsie Christine, deceased; Clara Augusta, Laurence August and Frank Howard. Mr. Kessberger and family are connected with the First Church of Christ, Scientist. Fraternally, he holds membership with the Masons, having attained the Knight Templar degree, with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

KESSLER, Charles W.—Sangamon County contains the names of some of the bravest pioneers the State ever knew. These hardy forerunners of civilization braved the dangers and hardships of frontier life, and by hard work and thrift turned their prairie holdings into valuable farms. The Kesslers came here at a very early date, and one of their representatives, Charles W. Kessler, of Pawnee, is one of the worthy and respected residents of the county. He was born in Sangamon County, III., December 30, 1862, being a son of Henry W. and Angle E. (Hill) Kessler. The family originated in Germany, whence representatives came to the United States, locating in Virginia, where Mr. Kessler's grandfather was born. He migrated to Sangamon County at an early day, dying here, and both his wife, the latter passing away in 1876. Grandfather Hill was born in Tennessee, and he, too, was a pioneer of Illinois and an earnest worker in the Cumberlost their only child at birth. While Mr. Kessler is not the oldest resident of Pawnee, he is one of the most prominent, and certainly one who exerts an influence for good. An earnest Christian, he seeks to bring to others a realization of the peace and happiness to be found in the right faith. Upright in business, reliable in every relation, strictly honorable in politics, Mr. Kessler is a model citizen and a thoroughly good man, who has the confidence of all who know him.

KESSLER, George, a retired German-American citizen of Williamsville, Ill., has been a resident of that village for the past fifteen years and is well-known in the community. He is a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, born June 28, 1832, son of John J. and Mary Dorothy (Brul) Kessler, both also natives of Germany, who died in that country. The father was an extensive manufacturer of cloth and carried on a successful business. He and his wife were parents of four sons and seven daughters, of whom all are deceased except George and one daughter, Mrs. Margaret Delpel, now eighty-one years of age, and residing in Baltimore.

George Kessler attended the schools of his native country until he was fourteen years old, then engaged in various occupations until he sailed from Bremen, July 10, 1848, for the United States, landing in Baltimore, where he lived twenty years, learning and following the trade of shoemaker. He became a skilled workman and established a good trade in custom work. From Baltimore he went to St. Louis in 1868, and there spent one year at his trade, then spent a short time in various places in Missouri, and one year in Leavenworth, Kan., after which he returned to St. Louis. He worked two years at Jerseyville, Ill., spent several months in New Douglas, Ill., lived six months in Morrisonville, whence he moved to Springfield, and December 23, 1863, came to Williamsville, where he built up a trade in custom work. He is one of the prominent and representative citizens of Williamsville and has established himself in the good will and esteem of his fellow-townsmen. He owns a very pleasant home in the village.

Mr. Kessler was married in Baltimore, in 1856, to Margaret Stoffel, a native of Germany, whose parents came to Baltimore and there spent the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Kessler died, having had five children, of whom but one survives, a daughter residing in Baltimore. Mr. Kessler is a member of the Lutheran Church and lends his influence to church and benevolent work. He has many friends in the community.

KETTERER, Joseph M.—Pawnee is the home of some very prosperous business men who have located there because of the advantages offered by its location and the trade it controls. One of those who have proven this to be a good location in every sense of the word, Joseph M. Ketterer, born in Montgomery County, Pa., January 18, 1842, a son of John Ketterer, born in Germany about 1800. By trade the father was a tinner, and worked at his trade in Baden Baden, his native place. There he married, bringing his wife to the United States with him, but she died in Pennsylvania. He later married Katherine Hummer, the mother of Joseph M., John, Jacob, Joseph and Henry, and two who are deceased. John Ketterer is now living in Iowa, where the father moved, and where both parents passed away. The grandparents on the paternal side were natives of Germany and never left their native land.

Joseph M. Ketterer remained at home until he was eighteen years of age, growing up fond of outdoor sport and dancing. He declares that he has often walked five miles for the privilege of dancing. His educational advantages were limited to those offered by the country schools, but he learned the tinner's trade and has followed it the greater part of his life. At eighteen years of age he went to Clinton, Iowa, to work for his brother, but after two years there, entered the firm of Young & Armstrong, remaining with them for three years. Following this he moved to Edinburg and went into business for himself. In 1880 he came to Pawnee, opening a tinner's shop, and has since continued in this line of business, building up an excellent trade.

Mr. Ketterer was married in Clinton, Iowa, April 24, 1869, to Priscilla Mates, born in Germany, but brought by her parents to the United States. They located at Lyons, Iowa, where both parents died, having had children as follows: Joseph, John, Mrs. Ketterer, Annie, William, Emeline, Frederick and Rose, one son being a Catholic priest. Her grandparents were Germans, who never left their native land. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ketterer: Charles R., born in Lyons, Iowa, November 7, 1870, married and living near Pawnee; four children; Frederick C., born in Lyons, Iowa, July 18, 1872, married and living in Pawnee; Rosa R., born in Edinburg, Ill., April 19, 1876, married and residing in Iowa; Jessie L., born in Edinburg, December 28, 1882, married and living in Chicago, three children; and Percy, who was born in Clinton, Iowa, February 25, 1879, and died in Edinburg, in 1899. The military spirit is inherited in the Ketterer family, for John Ketterer served his term in the German army in the Franco-Prussian War, receiving a wound in his side, which was dangerous, but not fatal; and his grandson, was a soldier in the Spanish-American War, seeing service in Porto Rico.

For a number of years Mr. Ketterer has been a member of the Odd Fellows. He and his family belong to the Lutheran Church and are interested in its good work. A staunch Democrat, Mr. Ketterer is prominent in the councils of his party. An excellent business man, a good citizen, and a devoted husband and father, Mr. Ketterer combines the virtues of both the German and American nations, and is proud of his descent. His children do him credit, and show the results of careful rearing and the influence of a Christian home,

KEYS, George E., a prominent citizen of Springfield, Ill., has been connected with the Farmers National Bank, in which he is now holding the position of Assistant Cashier, since leaving school. He is a member of a family that has been prominent in business and social circles in Springfield for several generations, his grandfather, Isaac Keys, having served as Postmaster of the city under President Grant. George E. Keys was born in Springfield, March 22, 1850, son of Edward Douglas Keys, also a native of Springfield, who has long been well known in banking circles and is now President of the Farmers National Bank, of Springfield. This bank was organized in May, 1882. Edward D. Keys married Miss Louisa Howard Todd, born in Lexington, Ky., daughter of Levi Todd and Louisa (Searles) Todd. Mr. and Mrs. Keys were parents of three children, George Edward, Alvin Searles, and Edward Lincoln.

The early education of George E. Keys was received in the public schools of Springfield and he afterward attended the military academy at Orchard Lake, Mich., graduating in the Class of 1898. Upon leaving school he entered the bank where he is now employed, as clerk, and has been promoted from time to time until he reached his present position. June 3, 1910, he was married by the creditors of, the estate of Lee Kincad, Bankrupt, as Trustee. He is well and favorably known in business and banking circles as a young man of integrity and reliability, and has the confidence and esteem of all with whom he has been associated. In politics he is a Republican and in April, 1908, was elected a member of the Board of Supervisors of Springfield, being re-elected in 1905, 1907 and 1909, and in 1907 and again in 1910 was elected Chairman of the Board. Mr. Keys was married, in Springfield, April 20, 1894, to Miss Frances Crawford Paddock, born at Kankakee, Ill., December 27, 1880, daughter of James H. and Mary L. Paddock, and two children were born of this union, Mary Louise, born December 3, died December 6, 1899; and George Edward Keys, Jr., born November 2, 1910. The family reside at 227 East Lawrence Avenue.

KIDD, Robert R.—A fair percentage of the representative citizens of Springfield, Ill., are men whose active period was spent in agricultural pursuits, and who have now retired after long years spent in arduous struggles with the soil. Robert R. Kidd, who for twenty years has lived in his residence at No. 444 West Henderson Street, was for thirty years engaged in agricultural endeavors in Sangamon County. He was born at Pittsburg, Pa., November 12, 1828, a son of Andrew and Esther (McClelland) Kidd. Andrew Kidd was born in Pittsburg, Pa., in January, 1800, and there spent his life. He was a commissioned officer in the Twelfth United States Cavalry during the Civil War, and his occupation was that of a blacksmith.

Robert R. Kidd, a public-spirited, he always worked in the public schools of Pittsburg. In his youth he started to learn the trade of a brick mason, and on Christmas day, 1855, came to Springfield. After a short time there he went to the southern part of the State and worked on a farm, and in the spring of 1856 located in Sangamon County. While there, in 1861, he enlisted for service in the Union army during the Civil War, but he was taken sick before getting into action and was unable to serve. On returning, Mr. Kidd worked at brick making for several years, then again took up farming, and this he made his business for thirty years, at the end of which time he moved to Springfield and secured a position with the Illinois Watch Company, in whose services he remained six years and six months, then retired from active pursuits. During his long and active life Mr. Kidd has seen many changes take place in Sangamon County, and has done his share towards bringing these changes about. Always industrious and public-spirited, he makes an ideal citizen, while personally he has made friends and admirers by the score through his generosity and integrity. In 1860 he was a member of the Volunteer Fire Department, and as such was absolved from military duty, but chose to volunteer and would have done his share in the way of fighting but for the sickness that overtook him; Mr. Kidd is a member of the Baptist Church.

On January 1, 1857, Mr. Kidd was married to Anna V. Wise, who was born in Springfield, December 22, 1839. The parents of Mrs. Kidd, who were natives of Hagerstown, Md., came to Springfield at an early day, and there it was that Mrs. Kidd met Abraham Lincoln, with whom she became acquainted. Of the eight children of Mr. and Mrs. Kidd, all are living: Emily E., the wife of Edward Schwarberg, of Springfield; Laura, the wife of Eugene Roderick, farming in Sangamon County; William, living at Okarche, Okla., where he is serving as Deputy Sheriff, and Mrs. S.; Frank T. of Apache, Okla; Robert, of Springfield; and Katherine, the wife of William H. Eastman, of New York City. Mr. and Mrs. Kidd have twenty-four grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. Mr. Kidd's brother, William, enlisted in 1861 for service in the United States Navy and became a sailor on the famous "Merrimack," which was later captured by the Confederates and transferred into an iron-clad, thus revolutionizing naval warfare. Later William Kidd was a police officer in Pittsburg, and there his death occurred. His other brother, Thomas, enlisted in Company E, Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, served gallantly, was promoted through the ranks and was a major when discharged. He was presented with a magnificent sword, for bravery and efficiency as an officer. He lives in East Des Moines, Iowa. Members of the Kidd family have served their country as soldiers in every war in the history of the nation.

KING, Ira George.—There have been so many innovations in the musical world, in the manufacture of instruments and the methods of conducting business, within the last few years, that this industry now offers a vast field for those looking for a lucrative and pleasant means of a livelihood. Ira George King is the proprietor of one of the largest musical houses in Springfield, and by his good business judgment and the excellence of the instruments he sells, has made his name well known in musical circles throughout the city. He is a native of Cook County, Ill., born September 28, 1875, a son of Joseph R. and Jennie L. (Hoover) King, farming people of New York State, who came to Illinois about 1860.

Ira George King received his education in the public schools of Omarga, Ill., and his early life was spent in much the same manner as that of any Illinois farmer’s son. He remained on the home place until he reached the age of twenty-two years, when he left the farm, deciding that there was a better opportunity for him to succeed in the business world. He came to Springfield June 15, 1906, and established himself in the music business, in which he has been very successful. His business has grown gradually but steadily, and he can now boast of one of the largest stores of its kind in the city. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen, while his politics have always been those of the Prohibition party, he being a stanch adherent of temperance in all things.

On August 10, 1904, Mr. King was united in marriage with Miss Mary Ellen Devereux, whose mother now resides with Mr. and Mrs. King, the father being deceased. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. King: Lawrence Devereux, born June 23, 1908, and one child who died at birth. The family affiliates with the Methodist Church.

KING, John W.—One of the venerable residents of Palmyra, Macoupin County, Illinois, and a man whose life has been spent in activities connected with farming and stock raising, is John W. King, father of the distinguished Dr. King, of Springfield, whose biography is treated of at length elsewhere in this work. Mr. King was born in Russellville, Ky., on Christmas day, 1822, being a son of David and Jemima (Gooch) King, natives of North Carolina and Kentucky, respectively. David King and wife were married in Kentucky, where they resided for some years, coming West seventy-two years ago and locating at Palmyra, Ill., which remained their home until their death. He was a Democrat, and both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was an Elder. The King family has long been associated with American history, its representatives having ever been found prompt to respond to every call of the country. Its members served in various wars of the country, beginning with the Revolution. It is thought that W. R. King, an early Vice-President of the United States, is a connection of this branch of the family.

John W. King went to school in Palmyra during his early days, and worked for his father on the farm. This determined his life work, and he made his money at farming and stock raising. Although a stanch Democrat, Mr. King has never cared for office, preferring to exert his influence as a private citizen. His religious faith is that of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and he belongs to that denomination.

On February 19, 1845, Mr. King was married near Palmyra, Ill., to Rebecca Jones, daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth (Black) Jones, natives of North Carolina and Kentucky, respectively. Mr. Jones moved to Kentucky when eighteen years of age, and there met and married his wife. The two were members of the Baptist Church and devout, good people. Mr. and Mrs. John W. King have had seven children, six of whom survive: Jennie, wife of the Rev. S. T. Hawkins, of the Methodist Church; Joseph, who resides at Palmyra; Dr. Stephen J. King; Rev. William T., a minister of the Christian Church at Lomax, Ill.; John W., a farmer and real estate dealer of Alpha, Idaho; and Nellie, wife of Virgil Hoover of Milton, Pike County, Ill. Mr. King has sixteen grandchildren, of whom he is immensely proud.

KING, Stephen Jones, M. D.—In these days of progressive competition, professional men are realizing the expediency of specializing along certain lines. This is specially true in medicine and surgery, for the field is so wide and the necessity for expert knowledge so necessary that it is almost impossible for any one man to be proficient in all. One of the most learned and eminent physicians and surgeons of Sangamon County is Dr. Stephen J. King, specialist in chronic rectal and intestinal diseases, external cancer and skin diseases. Dr. King was born in Macoupin County, Ill., July 9, 1890, being a son of John W. King, a sketch of whom appears in this work.

After a boyhood spent in the district schools near Palmyra, Ill., Dr. King taught school for some time before taking a scientific and literary course at Vincennes, Ind., from which he graduated in the Class of 1880. Following this he attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Chicago, passing the examinations, but was not given a diploma, as he was under the prescribed age. He then studied medicine at Hospital Medical College, of Louisville, from which he graduated in 1855, with the degree of M. D., carrying off distinguished honors. He served in the hospital connected with the college as interne, thus securing a very valuable experience. After traveling over the country to a considerable extent, Dr. King settled at Illi-opolis, Ill., and practiced for ten years. Feeling the need of wider knowledge, he took several post graduate courses in Chicago, New York, London, Paris and Berlin, fitting himself for the special work he is now doing. In 1907 he came to Springfield, which is still his home. Here he has built up a large practice, giving special attention to the diseases already mentioned. It is a man of eminence in his profession, and is a microscopical investigator, and during his researches has discovered an absolute cure for piles and cancer. It may be safely said that no physician has done more to alleviate the suf-fering of his patients than has Dr. King. In conjunction with his work and experiments, Dr. King is writing an exhaustive work on rectal surgery which promises to be of invaluable service to the profession. He belongs to the Illi-nols State Medical Society, the Sangamon County Medical Society and the Decatur Medical Society, and is one of the best known men of his profession in this part of the State. In addition to his professional duties Dr. King is president of the National Coal Mining and Development Company, of Springfield, with lands in Kentucky, which is capitalized at $500,000. He is also a stockholder in the United Oil and Pipe Line Refining Company of Beaumont, Tex., and is a good business man as well as an eminent physician.

Dr. King was married at Lomax, Ill., January 7, 1901, to Mary L. Crowenover, daughter of Robert and Temperance (Curts) Crowenover, natives of Kentucky. After the death of his wife, the family lived at Philadelphi.a, Miss. Mr. Crowenover was a farmer, who came with his family to Illinois, settling at Lomax, where both he and his wife died. He was a Republican, a Methodist, and a substantial, reliable man. Dr. and Mrs. King have one child, Eva Audrey, born January 9, 1894.

Ever since he cast his first vote, Dr. King has believed in voting for the men and measures best suited to the needs of the whole people, and still pursues this policy. He is a broad-minded, liberal man, whose interests are centered in his profession, and he is a valuable addition to any community in which he may see fit to locate.

KIRLIN, Bernard M.—Springfield, Ill., has a large number of the solid, reliable and successful business men of Sangamon County, and not a few of these are representatives of old families who are proud to claim an Irish ancestry. One of these who occupies a leading position in the business life of this city is Bernard M. Kirlin. Mr. Kirlin was born in Springfield, September 15, 1862, and is a son of Michael and Bridget (Brady) Kirlin.

Michael Kirlin was born in County Londonderry, Ireland, and died at Springfield, Ill., in 1903. About 1822 he embarked for America with his family, landed at Philadelphia, and from there came to Springfield. He engaged in a general mercantile business, in which he continued until the time of his death. He was a man of considerable enterprise and possessed business capacity and, although he never ac-quired a large fortune, he reared his family as the leading citizen. In political views he was a Democrat, but public office never had any attractions for him. In Ireland, Michael Kirlin was married to Bridget Brady, who was born in County Monaghan and died at Springfield, surviving her husband two years. Of their eight chil-dren, the eldest, a daughter, died in Ireland. The others were as follows: Rose, widow of M. Flinnery, is a resident of Chicago; Tilley, who is now deceased, was the wife of Augustus Fields; Ella, who married George Ball, resides at Springfield and they have two children, Laurette and Ellen; Bernard M.; Mary and Elizabeth, both are married and live in Illinois; Elizabeth, who is now deceased. Michael Kirlin and wife reared their children in the faith of the Catholic Church.

Until he was sixteen years old Bernard M. Kirlin was mainly engaged in helping his father in the store and in obtaining his education, attending both the public schools and St. Mary's Catholic School. He then entered his father's employ and in two months had earned enough to purchase a horse, after which he went into business for himself. He operated a huckster wagon for a time and then engaged in a regular dray business, and within one year had not only acquired a team of horses but had $200 in the bank. His initial business venture encouraged him and he continued in the dray business for four years, then enlarged the scope of his operations by starting a livery and coal business, together with draying. That was about twenty-four years ago and Mr. Kirlin has continued his livery interests up to the present time. Shortly after starting in the above line he embarked also in undertaking. In 1895 he formed a business partnership with Edward Egan, and together they have conducted both the under-taking and livery establishments. They have well equipped quarters. The livery barns, with dimensions of 45 x 120 feet, are located at Nos. 110-118 South Fourth Street, while the under-taking establishment is situated at No. 411 East Adams Street. They have eleven closed car-riages, a fine city ambulance and an undertaking wagon, together with both black and white funeral cars. All their equipment is modern in every particular and suitable for every oc-casion. Mr. Kirlin is a graduate of the Barnes College of Embalming, and under his direct supervision all the details of funeral direct-ing arc carried out in a perfect manner and with the dignified attention so grateful to those in sorrow and affliction. This firm probably handles the larger part of all funeral directing in this city.

On June 27, 1859, Bernard M. Kirlin was married to Mary Egan, also of Irish extraction. Mr. and Mrs. Kirlin have one daughter, Mary, who is a student at St. Agnes Catholic School. Mr. Kirlin is one of the leading members of St. Agnes Catholic Church, at Springfield, and is interested in many of its social and benevolent organizations. He also belongs to St. Agnes Court of Foresters and to the Knights of Columbus. While he has been identified with the Democratic party since he reached manhood, he has never been willing to accept political office, his business, family, social and fraternal life filling up the full measure of his time. In all essentials, Mr. Kirlin is a self-made man, and is entitled to the respect and admiration of his fellow citizens as such. In these modern days of fierce competition in every line, to be able to push ahead and without financial or other backing, to honestly acquire an independent position in the business world, proves pretty forcibly the possession of tact, judgment and business capacity. Personally, Mr. Kirlin is pleasant, frank and courteous.

KLINTWORTH, Henry, a veteran of the Civil War, is now retired from active life, and since 1892 has resided in his place of birth, East Brown Street, Springfield. He was born in Hanover, Germany, January 12, 1831, son of Peter and Adeline Klinton, natives of Germany, where both spent their entire lives. The father owned a farm and conducted it until his death. There were six children in the family and all came to America and settled. They were: Adeline, Benjamin, Henry, Peter, Dieterleib; John, who was killed in a sugar refinery in London, England, where he lived for a time.

Henry Klinton spent his boyhood on a farm and was educated in Hanover. He left school at the age of fourteen years and in 1853 came to America with a brother, landing in New York City. He went to Philadelphia and soon afterward found employment on a railroad, where he spent a short time, then worked a few months in a sugar refinery, after which he and his brother Peter went to Chicago, remained there nine days, then went to Milwaukee and thence to Madison, Wis., where he worked two months in a brick yard for $22 a month and his board. He then went on to Minnesota, where he found a German settlement, where he was welcomed and warmly invited to remain. He worked two months for a Norwegian manufacturer in a lime kiln, receiving $50 per month for his services, then went to St. Louis and for a time, there changed his gold money for paper, receiving $1.75 in paper for each gold dollar he traded. In 1857 Mr. Klinton came to Springfield, where he worked in a brick yard about four years.

In 1861, when President Lincoln issued his first call for troops, to the number of 75,000, Mr. Klinton enlisted for three months, in Company A, Fifth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, at St. Louis, and at the end of his term enlisted for three years and served under General Sigel Osterhaus. He participated in many important battles and many skirmishes. Among them were those at Camp Jackson, Booneville, Springfield, (Mo.), Pea Ridge and Little Rock, (Ark.). He went to the State of Louisiana on July 4, 1863, crossed the Mississippi River to Vicksburg, and took part in the siege against that city; served on pilot duty on a transport to Cairo, Ill.; thence proceeded up the Ohio River to Cumberland, thence up the Tennessee River a short distance, and then returned the same way to Vicksburg. He was discharged from service at the close of the war, at St. Louis, Mo., and went from there to Springfield, Ill., where he located permanently. He was a brave and faithful soldier, whose record speaks for itself.

After the war Mr. Klinton purchased a small piece of land in Sangamon County, where he carried on gardening until he retired from active life, purchasing the home he still occupies.

Mr. Klinton was married, in 1871, to Mary (Bose) Klinton, daughter of Frederick and Mary Bose, and widow of John Klinton, who was a brother of Henry Klinton. She was first married in London, England, after her husband was killed in the sugar refinery there, brought her son Fred with her to America. She had five children by her first marriage, of whom Peter died in South Carolina, July 18, 1869; Henry, died in infancy; Frederick, of Pawnee, Ill.; Dieterleib, died in London, at the age of three years; Catherine, born in London, was brought to America by Peter Klinton and his wife, and grew to womanhood in Springfield, where she was married, in 1881, to Frank Richards, an employee of the Standard Oil Company at Springfield. Mr. and Mrs. Richards live with Mr. Klinton and have six children. Elizabeth, Frank, William, Marguerite and Wilbur. Mr. Klinton and the members of his family are devout members of the German Lutheran Church. He is much interested in public affairs and in politics is a Republican. He is well known in the community and genuinely respected.

KOCH, Casper.— Those who served their country as brave and gallant soldiers during the Civil War are regarded with special veneration by the people who are now enjoying the fruits of their endeavors. The Government does all it can to express its gratitude, although it is insufficient, and when her possible contracts are terminated, offers government positions upon its veterans. A man now residing in Springfield who has proven his bravery in both war and peace, is Casper Koch, one of the German-Americans of the city. He was born in Bavaria, Germany, December 5, 1854, being a son of Casper and Barbara (Pope)
Koch, both born in Bavaria, he in 1807 and she in 1809. The father was a shoemaker by trade, as is his son, and came to America July 4, 1849, his wife joining him in September, 1854. They came to Springfield, where they resided until the father enlisted in the Union Army, and met his death on the battle field of Bull Run. The mother continued to reside here until her death in 1883.

Casper Koch, Jr., was educated in the public schools of Germany, and learned his trade from his father, working at it until 1865, with the exception of the time he served in the war. In that year he was made Chief of Police in Springfield, and for two years very efficiently discharged the offices of that position. Following this he worked again at his trade until 1869, when he was appointed to the capital police force at Washington, D. C., serving on it until 1881. He then came back to Springfield, which has since been his home. Here he has continued working as a shoemaker, and has had a large and reliable trade. Mr. Koch enlisted in 1862, under Colonel Campbell and General Balsch, and was made watchman of the government stores at Springfield. He was also policeman at the State House, then was made first door janitor, and still later was appointed to oversee the heating plant. For forty years Mr. Koch has been a member of Mt. Vernon Lodge No. 5, Knights of Pythias, which he joined in 1870, while residing in Washington. A strong Republican, Mr. Koch takes pride in the fact that his first vote was cast for John C. Fremont.

On January 26, 1856, Mr. Koch was married in Springfield to Barbara Will, born in Germany in 1832. After the death of his first wife he married, on April 1, 1872, Laura Groes, of Baltimore, Md. Mr. Koch has children as follows: William, Frank J., Adeline, Katherine, are living; Edward; Ellis; Sofie, deceased; and one died in infancy. His wife died in childbirth with twins. William lives in Washington, D. C., where he is a plumbing and gas fitting business; Frank J. is a brick mason of Springfield; Adeline (or Mary), married Walter Murray, a clerk in a grocery store, and Kate married Richard Douglas, a moulder by trade. Mr. Koch owns his home at No. 129 West Carpenter Street, which he bought in 1855, as well as other city realty; and is in comfortable circumstances. His prosperity is due to the fact that he had always tried to do his full duty, to give every man a square deal and to live up to the obligations placed upon him.

KOERNER, Gustavus. (Vol. I, pp. 321-322.)

KOHL, John, a prosperous farmer of Springfield Township, Sangamon County, III., was born in Germany, son of John and Julianna Kohl, both natives of Germany, the father born March 19, 1820, and the mother November 4, 1825. The father was for many years a successful farmer and stockman in Sangamon County. He and his wife brought their family to the United States in 1863, and settled at Old Berlin, Sangamon County, where they lived for a time, then purchased a farm north of Springfield, and lived there until 1892, when they moved to Bissell, Ill., and later located at 1048 North Seventh Street, Springfield, the present family home. They were parents of nine children, of whom the following survive: William, a farmer living ten miles west of Springfield; Godfrey, a miner; Mary, wife of John Feulner, a bartender; Julia, wife of John Stromsterfer, died twenty-six years ago.

John Kohl, subject of this sketch, attended Sand Hill School when a boy and lived on his father's farm until nineteen years of age, then worked in the rolling mills in Springfield a short time, worked two years in a brick yard, and for nineteen and one-half years worked for Springfield Water Works as fireman and engineer. In 1889 he purchased his father's homestead, where he has lived ever since.

Mr. Kohl takes pride in the fact that his first vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln. In 1899 he was elected School Director and served two years. He is well known in the community where he resides, and is considered a representative, useful citizen. He is an energetic farmer and has been accordingly successful.

September 8, 1880, Mr. Kohl was married, in Sangamon county, to Miss Amelia Hahn, who was born November 9, 1860, daughter of Abraham and Wilhelmina Hahn. Mr. Hahn was born October 18, 1839, and his wife May 5, 1832, both in Germany. She came to America in 1847 and he married the same time. They had seven sons and three daughters, and Mrs. Kohl has two brothers living in Sangamon County, one brother in Dundee, Ill., and a sister in Chicago. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kohl, namely: Herbert J., married Anna M. Kounske, lives on a farm in Sangamon County and have three children living: Mildred, Mary and Harlan J.; Reuben E., at home on his father's farm; Walter G., married Anna B. Klor and has one child, Alma V. and he is employed at the United Zinc & Chemical Works, in Springfield; John W., on a farm, near Lanesville, Ill., as is Chester J.; Amelia J., married Oscar O. Churchill and lives in Sangamon County, and Marle L., married Robert S. Curry and lives east of the home farm; and one died in infancy. Mr. Kohl has a farm of about eighty seven acres, devoted principally to general farming, fruits and truck farming. He also owns 140 acres in Christian County, Ill., near Edinburg. He is a member of the Anti-Horse Thief Association and North Western Life Insurance Company.

KORNACK, August, a prominent and successful farmer of Capitol Township, Sangamon County, Ill., is a public spirited and useful German-American citizen and has the respect and goodwill of all who have had dealings with him, in business or social life. He was born in Prussia, November 16, 1852, son of Andrew and Lena Kornack, both natives of Germany. They were farmers and came to America in 1881, locating in Riverton, Sangamon County, Ill., where their son August lived with them for some time. Both parents died on this farm, the father on August 23, 1884, and the mother in 1888. They had three daughters and one of these, Lena, married Mr. Hartwick, of Farmingdale, Ill. One son, Anton, lives in Springfield.

August Kornack received his education in the schools of his native country, which he attended until he was fourteen years of age, then worked on a farm and at fishing until he came to America. He landed in New York after spending fourteen days on the trip and came direct to Riverton, Sangamon County, where he remained one year, then for four years worked for the Wabash Railroad Company. He returned to the farm, where he spent four years, then purchased 100 acres of his present farm. Both he and his father had served in the German Army before coming to the United States.

Mr. Kornack was married in Prussia, in February, 1879, to Adeline Blum, a native of Germany, who came to the United States with her husband and died in 1881. Her parents emigrated to the United States and settled in Wisconsin, where they spent their remaining days. Two children were born of this union; Charles A., a farmer of the vicinity of Des Moines, Iowa, and one child deceased. Mr. Kornack was married (second) in 1883, to Wilhelmina Gosh, a native of Germany, whose parents died in that country, and eight children were born of this union: Fritz Otto, Henry, Albert, George; Emma, wife of Franz Clayton, lives in Peoria, Ill.; Bertha, wife of Ed Wells, lives near Springfield; Lizzie and Basil. There are three grandchildren in the family.

Mr. Kornack has 120 acres of excellent land in Capital Township and is accounted one of the three representative and most successful farmers in his community. He is actively interested in public affairs and is a Democrat in politics. He belongs to the Lutheran Church. He and his wife have lived many years on their present farm and have many friends in the neighborhood.

KRAMER, Jacob.—When a man has spent his life in well-directed effort, he owes himself a rest, both of body and mind, and some of the most responsible residents of Springfield have thus earned the retirement they are now enjoying. One whose name must appear in a record of this description, in order that it be truly representative, is Jacob Kramer, of No. 729 South Twelfth Street. He was born in Mercer County, Ohio, October 4, 1856, a son of Mathias and Mary A. (Dom) Kramer, both of Germany. Mathias Kramer was a tobacco raiser, who came to America in 1848, at the time of war in his own land, and settled in Mercer County, where he was engaged in farming for fourteen years. He then came to Springfield and became gardener for Governor Yates, Sr., working for him during his incumbency of the gubernatorial office. Mr. Kramer later retired and lived in Springfield until his death. There were eleven children in the family, six of whom survive; Matthew, of the city fire department; John; Barney; Mrs. Mary Burch; Mrs. Eve Holtman, and Jacob.

Jacob Kramer attended school in Springfield and learned the trade of boiler-maker under William Drake. After several years with Mr. Drake he engaged with the Wabash Railroad Company, being boiler-maker in their shops. He followed this occupation all of his active life, and is still interested in everything pertaining to his trade, although he retired several years ago.

In 1881 Mr. Kramer was married, in Springfield, to Josephine Redden, born in Ireland. Her parents never left that land, and are now deceased. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kramer, five of whom are now living: William, a baker of Springfield; Charles; Edward, Carrie and Eva, all at home. There is one grandchild in the family, the pet of all. Mr. Kramer owns his home, and has comfortable means. In religious faith he is a Roman Catholic, while politically his sympathies are with the Democratic party. He is a man who, through hard work and thrifty habits, has been able to rear his family and provide comfortably for his old age. It is such men who constitute the backbone of the nation.

KRAMER, John E.—The older farmers of Sangamon County realize the remarkable advance that has been made in farming conditions during the past half century. They know the difficulties under which the agriculturist of former days was forced to labor, as he struggled to support his family from the scanty yield of his poorly cultivated acres. Now the farmer can earn from his highly developed land more in a year than he could in the old days from half a section, and this has brought about a considerable change in methods. One of the prosperous farmers of Sangamon County who has been devoting himself to the cultivation of a small farm, is John E. Kramer. He was born in Montgomery County, Pa., November 29, 1839, a son of John and Mary (Davis) Kramer, natives of Pennsylvania, the latter born in the city of Philadelphia. The parents came to Illinois in 1849, locating on a farm in Macoupin County, where they resided until 1858, when they came to Sangamon County and settled in Chatham Township. There the father was engaged in farming for many years, living until March 22, 1877, while his widow survived him until September 20, 1887. Mr. Kramer traces back to an honorable ancestry, his grandfather having been a soldier of the Revolutionary War. The Kramer family originated in Germany, while the Davis family is of English origin. John E. Kramer had two brothers, but Thomas D. of Nevada, Mo., is the only one now surviving.

While residing in Pennsylvania and Macoupin County, Ill., John E. Kramer attended school, but after arrival in Sangamon County he was called upon to do a man's work on the farm. Eventually he engaged in farming for himself, and for some years has resided on his present farm of thirteen acres. In addition to this he owns other property.

The marriage of Mr. Kramer occurred in Chatham Township, August 15, 1861, to Ellis Beam, born in Ohio, October 28, 1840, her parents being natives of New Jersey, who settled in Ohio in 1838, being farming people. They had three sons and two daughters, but Mrs. Kramer and a son alone survive. Mr. and Mrs. Beam came to Illinois in 1845, locating in Chatham Township, Sangamon County, where the father died June 6, 1890, and the mother, March 2, 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Kramer became the parents of three sons and one daughter: Isaac T. is a farmer of Christian County, Ill.; Mary E., wife of William Ellison, a farmer of the same county; Thomas and Charles are farmers of Sangamon County. There are fifteen grandchildren and three great-grandchildren in this family.

Mr. Kramer has been quite prominent politically, having been honored by the Democratic party by election to the office of Constable for three successive terms, from 1894 to 1897. He also served as School Director for three years. Since young manhood he has been a member of the Baptist Church, and has supported it liberally. He is a solid, practical man, whose ideas about farming are worth while, as his success proves. He has brought up a nice family, lived to see them happily settled, and enjoys their prosperity and the affection of his grandchildren. Although he has worked for many years, he is still so active that he can take the pride in the fact that he can still teach young men how to take care of his farm. Always interested in public matters, he is well posted on current matters, and can discuss them intelligently and sensibly.

KREIDER, George N., A. M., M. D., than whom there is no more prominent figure in medical circles in Illinois, has attained distinction of an international nature as a physician, surgeon, lecturer and writer on subjects of a medical nature, and has been chosen to represent his State and country in a number of the largest and most prominent gatherings of medical men the world has known. Dr. Kreider is a native of Lancaster, Ohio, born October 10, 1834, a son of Edmund Cicero and Mary (Gates) Kreider. Colonel E. C. Kreider was serving as Postmaster of Jacksonville, Ill., at the time of his death, September 8, 1905.

Dr. Kreider's grandfather, Dr. Michael Zimmermann Kreider, was a leading physician of Ohio during the middle of the nineteenth century, practicing in Lancaster from 1825 until his death in 1855. He was Secretary of the first medical convention held in Ohio, in 1835, and was a prominent Mason, being the first to hold the office of Grand Commander of the Knights Templar of Ohio, elected to that position in 1843, and serving three years. He also served as Grand Master of Ohio Masons in 1847-49.

The education of Dr. George N. Kreider was commenced in the public schools of Ohio, and he later attended Washington High School, of Jacksonville, Ill., and the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, Ohio, from which he graduated in 1857 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After attending a course at the Miami Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, and graduating from the Medical Department of the University of the City of New York, in 1880 he began the practice of his profession in Springfield. In 1885 and 1886 he studied under medical professors in London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna, and again in 1890 he went to Europe and continued his studies at the University of Jena, completing his medical education in 1897 at the University of Gottingen, Strasburg, in 1903 and Heidelberg in 1908.

Dr. Kreider was in 1884 elected President of the Capital District Medical Society; in 1895 was President of the District Medical Society of Central Illinois; since 1891 has been an officer of the Illinois State Medical Society, President, 1901, Treasurer, 1901-1900, and Editor of the Illinois Medical Journal, 1899-1912; a member of the American Medical Association; from 1894 until 1887 a member of the Illinois State Board of Health, Assistant Surgeon General Illinois National Guard 1896-1901, and other offices too numerous to mention. He attended the Ninth International Medical Congress at Washington, the Tenth at Berlin, the Eleventh at Rome and the Twelfth in Moscow. He is a Knight Templar Mason, belonging to Tyrian Lodge No. 333, A. F. & A. M.; Springfield Chapter No. 1, R. A. M.; Springfield Commandery No. 4, R. & S. M. and Elwood Commandery No. 6 K. T. of which he has been Eminent Commander three times.

On February 18, 1894, Dr. Kreider was united in marriage with Miss Emma Pasfield, daughter of Dr. George and Hathaway (Pickrel) Pasfield, of Springfield. Ill. Five children have been born to this union, as follows: George Pasfield, April 10, 1895; Mary, April 28, 1896; Paul Gates, February 21, 1898; Emma Jane January 27, 1900, and Salome Carpenter, June 11, 1907.

KREIGH, Elie M., Jr. (deceased)—The firm of Springsfield have from earliest times profited from existing conditions. The constantly growing population has created a demand for household supplies, which they have bought from local merchants. The business of the city has more than kept pace with its growth, and this is largely due to the efforts of those who have had matters of this kind in charge. One of the best known stove and hardware merchants there was the late E. M. Kreigh, Jr., born in Hagerstown, Md., January 22, 1843, a son of E. M. Kreigh, Sr., and Mary Ann Kreigh, natives of Hagerstown. The father brought his family to Springfield, April 12, 1855, and lived in Sangamon County the rest of his life. At the time he was survived by a widow and two children, a son and daughter.

The education of E. M. Kreigh was secured in the Springfield schools, and when he left school he went into his father’s store and thence business, becoming so well versed in it, that when the latter died he was able to assume full charge. He continued in the same line until his own demise, branching out and increasing the volume of his sales. A keen, shrewd business man, he was able to meet and overcome every obstacle, and when he died he was one of the largest operators in his line in this part of the State. In the very prime of life, which was so filled with good things for him, Mr. Kreigh was called away August 12, 1906, and his remains were laid to rest in beautiful Oak Ridge Cemetery, where they are marked by an imposing monument. He belonged to Capital Lodge No. 14, K. of P., of Springfield. The Christian Church had in him an earnest, steadfast member. Although a staunch Democrat and active in his party, he did not care for office of any kind.

Mr. Kreigh was married in Jacksonville, Ill., October 4, 1864, to Helen Pyatt, born there, July 17, 1845 daughter of Benjamin and Mary Ann Pyatt, the former born in Pittsburg, Pa., May 18, 1821, and the latter in Paris, Ky., January 2, 1821. Mr. and Mrs. Kreigh had the following children: Charles B., born November 6, 1867; Mary Catherine, born September 15, 1876, married Dr. Moulton, and has two children. Mrs. Kreigh owns her pleasant home at No. 207 South Walnut street, as well as other city realty. Her husband left her an excellent provision, and it is pleasant to her to recall how anxious he was to secure her comfort through hard work and untiring devotion to business.

KRESS, Philip.—Few men are more independent than the farmer of Illinois, for the fertile soil of the Prairie State responds readily to their care, and the land has so increased in value that those who are fortunate enough to own any of it are reaping abundant profits. A representative of this class in Sangamon County is Philip Kress, residing on Section 32, Woodside Township, born February 2, 1835, of Old Berlin, after the close of the war, and his widow died in 1876. Arnold Kress died February 2, 1911, and is buried in Calvary Cemetery. Philip Kress received a good common-school education in his native place, and at the same time helped his father on the farm, remaining at home until he was eighteen years old. He has spent his life in farming and understands it thoroughly. In 1896, he began farming for himself on his present farm, which consists of 260 acres of rich land as can be found in this country. Prior to that he had some experience working a farm for Emil Walner and another for J. H. Drennan, and has always been successful, for he is industrious and earnest in all he undertakes.

Mr. Kress engages in general farming, as well as stock raising, specializing on cattle and hogs. His premises show the result of his care and attention. For years he has been interested in securing the most improved farm machinery, and his methods are followed by a number of his neighbors. The Kress family has been actively identified with agricultural interests in Sangamon County for many years. Two aunts of Mr. Kress, John and Philip Kress, were among the early settlers there, while two of his brothers are also farmers, they being Joseph A. and Alfred. These two brothers, with Mr. Kress and two sisters, Mary E. Morrissey, wife of Patrick Morrissey, of Bates, Ill., and Rebecca J. Morrissey, wife of John Morrissey, are all that remain of the nine children born to their parents.

The marriage of Mr. Kress occurred at New Berlin, Ill., January 25, 1888, being solemnized by the Rev. Father Mohr to Mary E. Gorey, daughter of Patrick and Margaret Gorey, the former born in 1838 and the latter March 23, 1843. They were natives of Ireland who came to Springfield in the fifties. Mr. Gorey died February 26, 1895, but the mother survives, residing at Chatham, Ill., aged sixty-seven years. One son has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kress, William Charles.

Mr. Kress is a member of the order of Owls, No. 1191, of Springfield, and is interested in its work. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership, and he is connected with Immaculate Conception Parish, of Springfield. In politics he is a Democrat, being elected School Director in 1901, and serving six years in his township. He was also elected Collector of Woodside Township in 1907, serving in that office for one term. As a public official Mr. Kress proved himself conscientious and conservative, looking towards the interests of his township and doing all he could to conserve the affairs of his constituents in a public-spirited manner. He has been eminently successful, but has risen through his own unaided efforts to be one of the prosperous agriculturists of the county.

KRETHNER, Conrad.—It is remarkable how well the Germans succeed when they come to this country, for it is but seldom a native of the Fatherland is found who has not accumulated a good competency. They receive an excellent training in their youth that teaches them to work and save, and when they reach this country, with its better chances, they are not slow to take advantage of the opportunities offered them. Sangamon County has received many of these honest, hard-working men, and has always extended them a warm welcome, appreciating what good citizens they make. One of the German-Americans of this locality is Conrad Kresthner, of Springfield Township, one of the county's most successful farmers.

Mr. Kresthner was born February 17, 1830, in Germany, being a son of Ernest and Mathila (Brisco) Kresthner, the former born in 1794, and the latter in 1795. His father was a soldier during the Napoleonic wars, and afterwards served in the Prussian army for five or six years. Later in life he was a mail carrier. His death occurred in 1850, but his wife passed away when Conrad Kresthner was born.

After being educated in the public schools of Göttingen, he began working in his father's flour mill, remaining at it for three years, and at the age of seventeen years, went to Cassel (in Germany) to learn gardening. After five years in that city, he decided to try his fortune in the New World, so set sail from Bremen and was sixty-two days on the water. Landing in New York, September 22, 1855, he went to Lancaster, Pa., first obtaining employment at a summer resort, but a year later went on a farm in that locality. Later he was employed by a government contractor to care for horses and mules, and was thus engaged for three years, but left Pennsylvania in 1862, to come to Sangamon County. Reaching Springfield in March, 1862, he worked on a farm that is now included in the corporate limits of the present city, for four years, when he had saved enough money to buy his present farm of ten acres and later bought enough to make eighty acres, in Springfield Township. Since then he has made many improvements, now having one of the most productive farms in the county.

The marriage of Mr. Kresthner occurred in Lancaster, Pa., October 18, 1861, to Prisco Mante, born in 1832, in Germany. Her parents died in Germany, she coming to this country alone. Mrs. Kresthner died July 31, 1900, and her remains were tenderly interred in Oak Ridge Cemetery, where a beautiful stone marks her last resting place. Four children were born of this marriage: Lizzie, wife of William Probst of Chicago, one daughter Anna; Anna, at home, keeping house for her father; Amelia married to William Sobar, two sons, Julius and Conrad; and Ernest, at home. There are three grandchildren in the family, of whom Mr. Kresthner is very proud. For many years he has been one of the stalwart members of the Lutheran Church, of Springfield, and takes much comfort in his religion. The Democratic party secures his support, and he votes for its principles and candidates. Although advanced in years, Mr. Kresthner takes a lively interest in his farm, ably conducted by his son, as well as in public matters, keeping himself well informed on current events. His recollections of Springfield of fifty years ago are very vivid and interesting. As he talks the listener sees a city of entirely different aspect from that of today, and realizes how much work has been accomplished by the men who have made these improvements possible, and not only built up a beautiful capital, but established a firm and reliable government upon a stable foundation.

KRIEMMEL, Charles F., who has been a resident of Springfield, Ill., nearly fifty years, worked there for many years at his trade of carpenter, but has now retired from active life. He was born at Williamsburg, N. Y., December 2, 1839, son of Ludwing and Rosina (Hahr) Kriemmel, both natives of Wurtzburg, Germany. Ludwing Kriemmel and his wife came to the United States in 1839, spending about a year in Williamsburg, N. Y., where he worked at his trade of watch-maker, then moved to Belleville, Ill., where he opened a general store and conducted it many years. He subsequently opened a factory for the manufacture of all kinds of wooden goods and continued in this occupation until his death, which occurred in 1848, when he accidentally drowned in a creek near Belleville. The widow of Mr. Kriemmel conducted the factory about one year, after which it was sold.

The education of Charles F. Kriemmel was acquired in Belleville, and in his youth he worked at the trade of painter, but later learned the trade of carpenter. He worked on a farm for a short time and during the Civil War enlisted in Company B, Ninth Illinois Infantry, for three months. At the expiration of his term of enlistment he re-enlisted in Company A, Twelfth Missouri Infantry, serving three years. He participated in the Battle of Vicksburg and many other important engagements, serving under Col. Osterhaus and under Gen. John A. Logan and Gen. Sherman. While passing through Georgia he was Chief Wagon Master for the First Division Army Corps, and also served as Forage Master and Sergeant of Company A in the Twelfth Missouri Regiment, which was mustered out at St. Louis, August 12, 1864. Mr. Kriemmel is a member of Stephenson Post No. 30, G. A. R., of Springfield.

At the close of the war Mr. Kriemmel located in Springfield, working several years at his trade, then embarked in business on his own account and for nine years conducted a rendering plant there. He worked for a short time as stationary engineer in the employ of Franz Brothers, of Springfield, and then resumed work at his trade, continuing this occupation until his retirement a few years since. He was a good workman and was successful in a financial way, having acquired several pieces of property in Springfield, besides a comfortable residence at 115 West Mason Street all of which he has since sold. Mr. Kriemmel is a Democrat and is actively interested in the welfare and progress of his community. He is well known in the city, where he has won many friends.

Mr. Krimmel was married, in Belleville, Ill., May 16, 1866, to Mary Whitever, born in Mascoutah, Ill., June 14, 1850, daughter of Nicholas Whitever. Her father was born in Germany and her mother in Virginia. Seven children blessed the union of Mr. Krimmel and his wife, five sons and two daughters, and six of them are now living, namely: Josephine, wife of William Peterson, of Bloomington, Ill.; George, a baker, living in Springfield; Edward, a butcher and meat cutter, of Springfield; Mrs. David Black, whose husband is head clerk in the Illinois Hotel in Springfield; Walter and Charles E., employed by a firm dealing in ice. Mr. Krimmel has six grandchildren living.

KRUGER, Nick, an enterprising and successful farmer of Sangamon County, is a native of the county, born near Glenarm, August 17, 1822, son of John A. and Harriett (Hargus) Kruger, both born in Germany, in 1822. The father was a farmer and he and his wife came to Sangamon County at an early date, locating near Chatham. When their son Nick was three years of age, they located in Rochester Township, where they lived seventeen years. Nick Kruger was educated in the public schools and lived on his father's farm until he began learning the trade of carpenter and wagon-maker. He also learned blacksmithing, and for three years worked as carpenter for depots and tanks for the Wabash Railroad Company. Later he took up the occupation of farmer and gardener, and has found this occupation profitable. He has always been industrious and active and has been successful through well-directed efforts. He has lived at his present place, where he owns forty acres of land, for the last eleven years.

Mr. Kruger was married, in Springfield, January 7, 1888, to Mary C. Mohr, born March 7, 1857, daughter of John and Sophia (Fisher) Mohr, natives of Germany, who came to America in an early day. Eight sons and one daughter were born to Mr. Kruger and his wife: Louis, John H., Bernhart, Joseph C., Henry W., William A., Caroline, Charles, died at the age of three years and George, born in 1908. Mr. Kruger is a good friend and neighbor and has the good-will of all who know him. He has a fine family of children, of whom he is reasonably proud. He belongs to the Catholic church and to the Western Catholic Union; in politics he is a Democrat, and he takes a great pride and interest in the affairs of his community. He is the friend of progress and is much interested in the cause of the church and school. He is a reliable and useful citizen and has a good standing in the community.

KUHN, August.—Germany is the land which has given more desirable citizens to the United States than any other, and the German-Americans of our land stand high in public esteem. One of this class residing in Sangamon County, is August Kuhn, now living retired at Dawson. He was born in Prussia, April 5, 1833, a son of Gottlieb and Sophia (Fisher) Kuhn, both natives of Germany. The father was a farmer, and neither he nor his wife ever came to America, rounding out their useful lives in their native land. They had four sons and three daughters, but of these August and Michael, the latter a farmer in Clear Lake Township, are the only survivors.

August Kuhn received a good German education until he was fourteen years of age, and during his boyhood worked on the homestead. As is usual in German families, he was apprenticed, and learned thoroughly the trade of blacksmithing. In 1850 he came to the United States, sailing from Hamburg and landing in New York City a month later. Coming west, he located in Springfield, where he worked with a brother chopping wood, until he obtained employment at his trade, with Henry Van Horn, of Springfield. In a year in this position he worked for other blacksmiths for twenty-three years. Like many of his countrymen, he served during the Civil War, enlisting in the Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and serving under General Palmer. After serving three months he was honorably discharged on account of disability with rank of Sergeant. In 1896 Mr. Kuhn moved to Buffalo, Ill., working there for J. H. Dawson, a wagon-maker, for several years, but in 1900 settled at Dawson, which is now his permanent home. Until a recent date he conducted his own blacksmith shop there but, owing to his years, his family induced him to retire.

In September, 1893, Mr. Kuhn was married in Springfield to Sophia Brusz, born in Prussia, Germany, August 29, 1842, a daughter of Gottlieb Brusz, who, with his wife, died in Germany some years ago. He was a skilled machinist in his native land. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kuhn, but they have interested themselves in the schooling and benefitting of their relatives and are beloved by a wide circle. They belong to the German Lutheran Church, which receives their generous support. In politics Mr. Kuhn is a Republican, but his busy life has left him no time for public office. He possesses many characteristic traits of the German and has bought his home in Dawson out of his earnings.

KUHN, Michael, who owns an excellent farm of 114 acres in Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, has lived on his present farm since 1883, and has met with very fair success in carrying it on. He was born in Prussia, Germany, in March, 1828, son of Charles and Louise (Fisher) Kuhn, natives of Germany, where they spent their entire lives. The parents resided on a farm and were useful and respected members of their community. Michael Kuhn attended school until he was fourteen years of age, and later worked on his father's farm. He was reared to agricultural pursuits and has followed them the greater part of his life.

In 1854 Michael Kuhn followed his desire for a new field of endeavor, and sailed from Bremen for New York. He came west to Chicago, thence to Springfield, where he lived twenty years, and for ten years was employed in the yard of the Miller Brick Company. He has made several improvements on his present farm, and has a very comfortable home. He has now retired from active life. His land is in a high state of cultivation and he has been an industrious, energetic farmer. He has established himself in the good-will and esteem of his community and has many warm personal friends. He is a member of the German Lutheran church and is interested in many worthy objects.

Mr. Kuhn was married in Germany, in 1853, to Minnie Lueck, also a native of that country, whose parents were early settlers of Springfield, where her father now resides, at the advanced age of ninety-six years. He spent his entire active life at his trade of tailor. Eight children were born to Mr. Kuhn and his wife, of whom five survive: William, a farmer living near Loami; Bertha married Jacob Rook, and they live on a farm near Springfield; Henry, a farmer of Clear Lake Township; Minnie married Henry Leder, a blacksmith by trade, and they live in Omaha, Neb.; Fred, a member of the city police force of Springfield; Tena, wife of Herman Williams, of Springfield; Herman, a farmer living near Curran. There are twenty-five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren in the family.

KUPISCH, August.—The German-American element in a community lures a solidity and substantiality not often produced by any other people. The Germans are a thrifty, reliable, industrious people, and when they come to the United States they do not leave these characteristics behind, but develop them to their own advantage, as well as that of the locality in which they locate. One of the excellent German-Americans of whom Sangamon County is justly proud, is August Kupisch, of No. 1030 Ohio Avenue, Springfield. He was born in Germany, November 16, 1836, a son of William Kupisch, born in Germany in 1841, and Charlotte Fuch, born in Germany in 1844. The father was a shoemaker, who is still living in Germany, but the mother died in March, 1910, aged sixty-five years. Two children were born to the parents; William and August.

August Kupisch was educated in the public schools of Germany and taught to farm, thus continuing until 1863, when he came to Springfield, locating in the city and building his present residence, which he owns. In April, 1882, he married Wilhelmina Allreich, born in Germany, August 18, 1853, daughter of Joseph and Mary Allreich. There were four children in the Allreich family: Charlotte, Hohn, Fritz and Mrs. Kupisch. Mr. and Mrs. Kupisch were parents of nine children, three of whom were born in Germany and six in America:—Martha, born May 10, 1896; Johanna, born in March, 1898; Mary R., born in December, 1900; Anna and Ernest (twins), born November 16, 1909; Leida, born November 18, 1909; Henry R., August, and William. Mr. Kupisch is a member of the Lutheran Church and gives it his liberal support. In politics he is a Republican. He is in comfortable circumstances and stands high among his neighbors.

KUSSMAUL, William F., who has for the past forty years been successfully engaged in mercantile business in Springfield, III., has been a resident of the city since 1854. He was born at Wurttemburg, Germany, March 1, 1832, son of John G. and Johannah (Shafer) Kussmaul, both of whom were born in Germany. The father was a linen waver by trade and died in 1870, and the mother died in 1865. They had three children and one son died young. The father served through the Prussian-Austrian War of 1851.

The education of William F. Kussmaul was received in the public schools of Germany, and he worked with his father until fifteen years of age, when he was apprenticed to learn the trade of locksmith. He spent three years in learning his trade and worked at it four years afterwards. He worked nine months in the capital of Baden, then sailed for America, June 3, 1854. He proceeded at once to Springfield, which has since been his home. He became employed as helper in a blacksmith shop and worked at the trade three years, then entered the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company, where he remained thirteen years. He then embarked in business on his own account, in the line of retail groceries. He is an enterprising and progressive merchant and has established a good trade, having won the confidence and esteem of all with whom he has had dealings. He is well known in the city and has won a large number of warm personal friends there. He was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, for whom he voted in 1860, this being the first vote he cast.

Mr. Kussmaul was married, in Springfield, III., November 29, 1854, to Christina Yost, who was born February 16, 1833, daughter of David and Catherine (Plumer) Yost. The parents of Mrs. Kussmaul came to America in 1854 and located in Springfield. Both died in Sangamon County; he in 1879 and she in 1884. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kussmaul, namely: Henry, who has for the last twenty-four years been employed in the Springfield post-office; Julius, for the past twelve years employed as machinist for the Wabash Railroad; Lizzie, married Archie Ennewet, who has been employed for twenty-six years by the Babcock Boiler Company; Emma, lives at home. William F. Kussmaul has two grandchildren—Thomas and Wilhelmina Kussmaul.

Mr. Kussmaul owns a handsome residence at 931 South Eleventh Street, where he has eighty feet front, and he also owns five other houses in the city. He is interested in the progress of the community and in politics is a Republican.
He belongs to the German Lutheran Church and fraternally is connected with Lodge No. 39, United Workmen. He is of the highest type of citizen and is most public-spirited and patriotic in his sentiments towards his adopted country.
By his industry and ambition he has established a paying business and has attained a place of standing and position among his fellows.

KUTSCHER, Henry (deceased).—Efficient and faithful service in any line of endeavor wins approval and respect, and the late Henry Kutscher, during his long association with the Wabash Railroad Company, as carpenter and contractor, established himself as one of its most trusted and valued employees. He was one of the prosperous German Americans who located in Springfield, where his widow now resides. Mr. Kutscher was born in Prussia, January 22, 1829, a son of John and Hannah Kutscher. John Kutscher was a school-teacher in Germany, and thus able to give his son Henry more than ordinary educational privi-

sailing for New York City, where he remained a short time and then coming to Springfield, which continued to be his home for fifty years.
For thirty-five years he was connected with the Wabash Railroad shops and the company never had a better man working for them. He was of quiet habits, never seeking public notice.
Outside his home and business his only interests were centered in the German Lutheran Church, of Springfield, to which he gave an earnest, hearty and loyal support, and he died firm in its faith, December 6, 1907, his remains being buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

On February 14, 1858, Mr. Kutscher was united in marriage in Springfield, to Minnie Martin, born in Prussia, July 16, 1839, daughter of George Martii and wife, who never left their native land. Mr. and Mrs. Kutscher had children as follows: Julia Kerst, born July 16, 1858, and Minnie, born February 16, 1869, mar-rried and residing in Springfield.

Mrs Kutscher owns her residence at No. 1516
South Eleventh Street, which has been her home for forty years. She is a most estimable lady, a true Christian and an active worker in the German Lutheran Church. She is an excellent housekeeper and has brought up her daughters to be good wives and mothers. The family stands high in the community, and although Mr.
Kutscher has passed away, he is tenderly remembered for his most excellent traits of character.

LADAGE, Fred William.—The farmers of several decades ago were willing to carry on their operations in just one way, ekewing what they might from their property and only gaining as a general rule, fair results from their long hours of laborious toll, never thinking what the years and science would bring towards lessening their labors and improving the results.

Modern farming is as much different from the ancient, as one could readily imagine. The powerful new machinery has taken the place of the time-worn handplow, rotation of crops, formerly unheard of, has become a regular institution, tillage and grading are recognized as necessities and the agricultural colleges are yearly turning out young men who have revolutionized the business of farming, and have brought it up from a mere occupation to something akin to a profession. One of the best-known scientific farmers in Sangamon County if not in Illinois is Fred William Ladage, geu-eral manager of the Ridgeley Farm, on Section 25, Auburn Township. He was born in Woodside Township, Sangamon County, Ill., April 15, 1875, a son of Henry G. and Louisa (Oster-meier) Ladage, both natives of Hesse, Germany.

The parents of Mr. Ladage came from the Fatherland about the same time, in 1853, first locating near Greer ville, Darke County, Ohio, where Henry G. Ladage worked for a short time in a brickyard, later rented a farm on the estate where he had previously been overseer, and after the death of the owner, he rented the entire estate, which he controlled for six years.
In 1868, he came to Sangamon County, Ill., locating near Springfield, where he rented 240 acres of land. From Judge Hay, took charge of most of the Judge's farm, and introduced rotation of crops and other new ideas, which stamped him as an advanced and far-seeing agriculturist. He continued in control of the farm until his death, April 12, 1866, while his widow still survives him, making her home on the farm of her youngest son and daughter.
Mr. and Mrs. Ladage were the parents of the following children: Caroline, at home; Henry, a farmer in Auburn Township; William, carrying on operations in Woodside Township; Euma, the wife of Isaac Freund, a farmer in Woodside Township; Louise, the wife of Wil-burt Stinkey, of Truman, Mlsm.; Charles, who has charge of the farm on which his father located in 1868; and Fred William.

Fred William Ladage was reared on the home farm and attended the district schools, and being a bright and ambitious lad also attended night school. His father died just before his twenty-first birthday, and in 1888, he decided to secure a broader education, subsequently entering the commercial department of the Valparaiso (Ind.) Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1896, and in the fall of the same year he entered the State University in the College of Agriculture on a two-year scholarship which had been presented to him by the Farmers Institute of Sangamon County. He
ing worked his way while in college and thus is d not only a self-made but also a self-educated man. On his return home he rented a farm of 170 acres in Woodside Township, where he began to put his practical knowledge to the test in both farming and stockraising, and he was soon demonstrating the value of an education
along these lines. On February 22, 1905, Mr. Ladage was united in marriage with Anna C. Richmann, who was born at St. Charles, Ill., May 14, 1878. In 1906 Mr. Ladage was given charge of the Ridgley Lauds, in South Sangamon County, which include 1,850 acres, and which at that time, through bad management, had become run down and were much depreciated in value. He at once started crop rotation, and the results obtained by him have been almost beyond belief. The yield has increased phenomenally, and in every manner Mr. Ladage has shown that the practicability he inherited from his father, when linked with the scientific methods he learned during his course of education, have made him one of the foremost scientific farmers and stockraisers in Illinois. Various agricultural pamphlets written by him, have been spread broadcast, people come from far and wide to converse with him and learn his methods, and he is cheerfully doing all in his power to assist agriculturists the country over to recognize the fact that scientific tilling of the soil, is the only proper way for the farmer to work.

Mr. and Mrs. Ladage have had three children: Richard, born January 21, 1906; Anna, born March 15, 1907; and Frederick, born November 24, 1908. Mr. and Mrs. Ladage were both baptized and confirmed in the German Lutheran Church, and both are now members of Trinity Church of that denomination in Springfield, where Mr. Ladage has for years sung in the choir.

LAIRD, Dr. Florus Alva, veterinary surgeon, located at Auburn, Ill., has in the past few years built up a large practice in the southern part of Sangamon County, and has one of the best equipped hospitals for use in a professional way in his part of the State. He is a member of a family that has long been well known in Sangamon County, his grandfather, Josiah Laird, having been one of early settlers of Ball Township. Dr. Laird was born on his father's farm in Ball Township, September 22, 1878, son of Joah J. and Mary J. (Stroud) Laird, the father also a native of Ball Township. Joah was a son of Josiah Laird, who became one of the extensive landowners and stockmen of the county.

Joah Laird was reared on his father's farm and in time grew to be one of the leading farmers of his township. He was one of the most highly esteemed citizens of his community, a staunch Democrat, and often held township offices, discharging every duty faithfully and well. He belonged to the Blue Lodge and Royal Arch Chapter of Masons, the former of Auburn and the latter of Pawnee. He died September 8, 1884, and his widow later married Mr. T. J. Molohan and now resides in Oklahoma. Mr. Laird and his wife had six sons (of whom four survive) and two daughters, the survivors being: Samuel M., of Anthony, Kan.; John R., on part of the home farm in Ball Township; Nicholas E., of Harvel, Ill.; Dr. F. A.; Alice, wife of F. M. Jones, living on South Seventh Street, Springfield; Cynthia married Miles M. Smoother and they reside at Hawthorne Hill.

When Dr. F. A. Laird was six years of age, his father died and he went to live with his brother-in-law, F. M. Jones, where he remained until he was fourteen years of age, at which time he started to work out by the mouth, thus continuing until his marriage, February 9, 1898, to Miss Angle Colea, a native of Cotton Hill Township, Sangamon County, daughter of M. W. Colea, a successful farmer of that township. After marriage, the young couple settled on the home farm, and in the fall of 1899, having decided to learn a profession, Mr. Laird entered McKillip Veterinary College, of Chicago, where he took a course. He was graduated from the Chicago Veterinary College with the Class of 1902, after which he began to practice in Springfield with Dr. Albert Babb, which connection was continued until 1904, when Dr. Laird located in Auburn and engaged in practice alone. He has excellent accommodation for patients brought to him, and put in his charge and has saved the lives of many valuable animals. In 1909, he erected an office to be used in connection with his hospital, and there has modern appliances to aid him in his operations, or treatment. He has five single stalls and four box stalls. Dr. Laird keeps pace with his fellow practitioners by reading the most modern literature along the lines of his profession, subscribing for the best journals dealing with this topic, and he chose this profession because he realized the need for intelligent men to take it up from love of the work and consequent interest in its every detail. Dr. Laird is a member of the Illinois State Veterinary Association, and December 29, 1909, was appointed First Assistant State Veterinary Surgeon, in which post he has served most satisfactorily.

Three children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Laird, namely: Everett, born May 9, 1899; Eva, November 11, 1902, and Gladys, April 17, 1900. Mrs. Laird is an active member of the Methodist Church. Dr. Laird is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and both he and his wife belong to the O. E. S. He is an enthusiastic member of the Democratic party. He has won a good reputation in his profession and as a citizen has taken a commendable interest in public affairs, winning many friends by his pleasing personality and honest worth.

LAKE, John Spencer, a well-known farmer of Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, and a veteran of the Civil War, belongs to a family that is one of the oldest in the region. Lutheran Church and in politics is a Republican. He is known as a man of strict integrity and is honest and upright in all business dealings. He and his wife are well known in social circles and have a beautiful home at 1023 West Calhoun Street. He owns other property in the city, some of it on Pasfield Avenue. There is no German family in Sangamon County that is more worthy of representation in a work of this character than the Lamond family. They stand high in the estimation of the people, and may well be proud of their reputation.

LAMOND, Charles Edgar, who has been for many years a trusted and valued employee of the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, has been engaged in a similar line of work ever since he reached the age of twenty-two years. He was born in Lancaster, Pa., March 7, 1853, son of Samuel and Ellen Lamond, both natives of that State. The father was in the employ of a railroad company most of his life.

The education of Charles Edgar Lamond was acquired in the public schools of Chicago and Cairo, Ill., and upon leaving school he learned the trade of harness-maker, which he followed but a few years, then began to work for a railroad company, and has been promoted from time to time until he now has a position as foreman of a switching crew in the Springfield yards of the Chicago & Alton road. He is well fitted to perform the work satisfactorily and well, and has a decided preference for this occupation. He has many friends and is a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, of Springfield. In politics Mr. Lamond has always favored the principles and views of the Republican party, and takes great interest in public affairs in his community. In religion he is a Catholic.

Mr. Lamond was married, December 15, 1880, to Mrs. Louisa (Miller) Dewey, who was born in Missouri, July 29, 1852, daughter of Mary and Susan (Fate) Miller, natives of Louisville, Ky. Mrs. Lamond was married, (first) November 17, 1875, to William Dewey, who was born in Akron, Ohio, in 1840, and three children were born to them: William, Mark and Max Earl. Mr. and Mrs. Lamond have no children. They reside at 1006 East Edwards Street, Springfield.

LAMUN, John, son of one of the early settlers of Sangamon County, Ill., has spent most of his life there. He was born in Ross County, Ohio, July 2, 1823, and is of German and Irish descent. His father, James Lamun, was born in Ross County, December 12, 1802, and his mother, originary of Ross County, was born January 1, 1802. They were married in the native county and became parents of two sons and two daughters, of whom John was the eldest. Two of these children now survive. John, of this sketch, and Mrs. Elinor Prickett, of Kansas. The other son was a member of the Home Guard, entered the service in Missouri, served throughout the Civil War and was mustered out in Missouri. James Lamun purchased land in Launesville Township, Sangamon County, and carried on farming there several years. He then learned the trade of carpenter, which he followed many years, but returned to farming, in which occupation he continued until his death, March 3, 1882. His wife died, May 30, 1830, when all her children were quite small.

Mr. Lamun received his education in the country schools of his native country and was reared on a farm. In the fall of 1843 he came to Sangamon County and remained there four years. He returned to Ross County and resided there twelve years, then returned to the farm which was owned by his father, and later purchased forty acres of land in Launesville Township, where he carried on farming several years, then located on his present farm in Section 1 of the same township, where he has lived the past forty-three years. He has been a successful farmer and has earned the good will and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact. Though now in his eighty-eighth year, he has retained an active interest in all that goes on about him and has a pleasant personality. He was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, for whom he had a firm friendship and sincere admiration. He owns 100 acres of good farm land, where he lives, although he has now retired from active life.

Mr. Lamun was married August 10, 1852, in Allen County, Ohio, to Naucy Carson, a native of that county, whose parents were early settlers of Sangamon County, where they carried on farming. Mrs. Carson died in Ohio and her husband died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lamun, in Sangamon County. Mrs. Lamun died at her home in Sangamon County, May 21, 1867, having borne seven children, of whom three are deceased, the others being: Emory P., a resident of Sangamon County, where he carries on farming; Leslie G., a farmer of Indiana; Judith A., wife of James T. Lemon, of Launesville Township; James E., living in the old home farm in Launesville Township.

Mr. Lamun was married (second) in Launesville Township, August 6, 1869, to Mary Hammel, a native of Ohio, where her parents died. She died October 25, 1891, having had no children. Mr. Lamun was married (third) March 29, 1890, in Springfield, to Agnes Vonderlieb, who was born at Mt. Pulaski, Ill., August 18, 1854, daughter of Herman Mattfield, who was born in Hamburg, Germany, June 1, 1817. Mrs. Mattfield was born in Hamburg, June 7, 1819. Mr. Mattfield was educated for the profession of teaching and came to the United States at the age of eighteen years, locating in Michigan, where for many years he taught school. He came to Mt. Pulaski in 1856 and engaged in a drug business there, which he continued until he retired from active life. His death occurred January 24, 1884, and his widow died February 1, 1886. They were parents of six children, two of whom are deceased, the others being: Mrs. John Mayer and Mrs. George Mayer, of Mt.

mun. Mrs. Lamun's grandfather was an officer in the German Army.

Mr. Lamun is a believer in the Millennial Dawn, and in politics is a Democrat. He formerly served as School Director and Road Commissioner. He is ready to support every worthy cause and is interested in the welfare of his community.

LANAHAN, Edward J., a business man in Springfield for many years, has now passed away, leaving behind him the recollection of many good deeds and kindly charities that he hid from the world. He was born in Rosecom-mon, Ireland, about 1847, and when but a small boy was brought to the United States by his parents, who landed at New Orleans. From that city they came to Springfield, locating on East Carpenter Street, between Ninth and Tenth, and this continued to be the home of Edward
J. Lanahan until his marriage.

Growing up in Springfield, the lad enjoyed the advantages offered by the parochial schools, and began his business life as a grocery clerk.
Later he went into business for himself, continuing thus until about thirteen years prior to his death, when he retired. His death occurred January 7, 1906, and he passed away firm in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church, being a member of St. Agnes parish. A strong Democrat, he was very popular in the ranks of his party, and exerted a wide-spread influence among those who knew him.

On September 13, 1877, Mr. Lanahan was married, in Springfield, to Miss Katherine Kelley, daughter of Henry Kelley, who for many years was associated with the shoe industries of Springfield. The maiden name of Mrs. Lanahan's mother was Ann Galligan. Mr. and Mrs.
Lanahan became the parents of children as follows: John, who was killed in the woolen mills in 1905; Annie, who died in infancy; Edward, who died at the age of twenty-four years;
Catherine, deceased; Margaret, at home, as are Agnes and Joseph. Mrs. Lanahan is a consistent member of St. Agnes Church, and continues many of her husband's charities, being a lady of great kindness of heart. She is beloved in her neighborhood and church, and her children are proud of her and the love she inspires.

LANPHIER, Charles H. (Vol. I, p. 328.)

LARSON, Peter B.—Among the men who have become owners of good farms through industry and enterprise is Peter B. Larson, of Section 28, New Berlin Township, Sangamon County.
Mr. Larson stands high in the community as a man of earnest purpose and integrity, and has the respect of all who know him. He was born in Sweden, October 24, 1844, son of Laus and Camna Larson, who spent their entire lives in their native land, and died near Lancerma. The father was a farmer by occupation and he and his wife were parents of four sons and three daughters, six of the children still surviving and five being residents of America: Catherine, widow of Louis Nelson, now living in Helson-burg, Sweden; Andrew, died in Illinois and is buried in Springfield; Nels, a farmer near Elkhart, Ill.; Swan, a carpenter, living in Springfield; Mary, wife of a Mr. Clifford, a miner living in Idaho; Anna, wife of K. D. Williams, of Idaho, and Peter B.

As soon as Peter B. Larson was old enough he began to work out by the month, having previously attended school in his native place.
In 1871 he emigrated to America and located in Champaign County, Ill., where for over two years he worked at farming for the same man.
At the end of six years in Illinois he returned home and remained there from 1877-79, and then came back to Illinois, locating north of Springfield, in Sangamon County. He was married, March 10, 1881, to Miss Nellie Lembborg, born in the same locality in Sweden as himself, daughter of Peter Lunburg. The father still resides in Sweden but Mrs. Lunburg is now deceased. Mrs. Larson had one brother and one sister who came to America: Swan, a farmer residing near Summer, Neb., and Christhian, wife of Hans Jansen, a farmer of Quick-ville, Kan.

After his marriage Mr. Larson rented a farm near Cantrall, Sangamon County, where for two years he successfully carried on farming, then spent six years in Menard County, and in 1851 rented land in Dewitt County. In 1901 he returned to Sangamon County and rented land in Guran Township, from a Mr. King, having for several years rented land in Dewitt County from Mr. King, thus renting eighteen years from this family. In 1906 he purchased eighty acres of the farm he now occupies, on which he has since made many improvements. He has been industrious and prudent in his operations and the farm won a very fair degree of success through patient endeavor and good judgment. He is enterprising and progressive in his methods of carrying on his work and has reaped the max-um of profit from his efforts.

To Mr. Larson and his wife the following children have been born: two died in infancy:
Catherine O., born in Sangamon County, June 30, 1882; John, born in Menard County March 15, 1884, was accidentally shot while out hunting and died from the effects, December 18, 1905; Emma, born in Menard County, May 22, 1886, wife of H. W. Renfrow, a contractor and real estate dealer of Springfield, and they have one child, Leo W.; Clarence W., born in Dewitt County September 30, 1889, at home; Lilie E., born in Dewitt County April 5, 1894, a member of the Berlin High School Class of 1911. All have received good educations and have been well fitted to assume the duties of life. Mr.
Larson and his wife were both reared in the Swedish Lutheran Church and the family are all interested in church work. Miss Kate is an active member of the Presbyterian and Mrs. Renfrow of the Christian Church.

Mr. Larson has been one of the leading Swedish-Americans in his community. In politics he has always been an advocate of the principles of the Republican party. He is a public-spirited and useful citizen, interested in the public welfare and progress. He has brought his land to a high state of cultivation and has a very pleasant home. He keeps a good grade of stock and has found that this policy pays in the long run.

LAUTERBACH, John.—Every line of industrial activity has its representative at Springfield and in Sangamon County, for this is a central location, with unexcelled transportation facilities, in addition to which there exists here a large and healthy demand for commodities of all descriptions. One of the prosperous business men of the county is John Lauterbach, a brick manufacturer. Like so many of his fellow townsman, Mr. Lauterbach is a native of Germany, having been born February 5, 1840. He is a son of John and Margaret Lauterbach, both natives of Germany. The parents came to America in 1844, landing in New Orleans, whence they came by wagon to Sangamon County. For two years the father worked at whatever employment he could secure that promised to yield a living for his little family, but the hardships were too much for him and he died in 1846. The brave mother, however, struggled along, bringing up her son John, who was the only one of her five children to survive. Mrs. Lauterbach died in 1891.

John Lauterbach attended the little subscription schools of Springfield, and early had to seek employment to help his mother. This was first found in the slaughter house, when he was twelve years old. There he learned the butcher’s trade, working at it until he was thirty-two years of age. He then turned his attention to the manufacture of bricks. Finding this a profitable business, he has since been engaged in it, and has furnished brick for a number of the stately piles that make Springfield so beautiful a city, including the State house. He also furnished the brick for the fair grounds, the rolling mills, several school buildings and other important structures, the quality of his product being such as to command an excellent market.

Mr. Lauterbach was married in Springfield, Ill., February 24, 1863, to Margaret Young, born in Pennsylvania, a daughter of Adam Young. He came to Illinois at an early date, being one of the pioneers, and died in 1886. He served in the Civil War and was a well known character. Mrs. Lauterbach died in February, 1903, and her remains were interred by the side of three of her eleven children, and one grandchild. Eleven children were born to them, those living being: Margaret, wife to Herman H. Straustaffer, a farmer; Malie, wife of Oliver Dunn, a carpenter; J. E., a grocer of Springfield; George W., a teamster; Fred, a partner of J. E. in the grocery business; Ada, wife of William Bauer, a contractor and builder; Clarence living at home, and Katherine Boemer. There are thirteen grandchildren in the family.

The Lutheran Church holds Mr. Lauterbach’s membership, and he is an earnest supporter of its creed. He has always voted the straight Democratic ticket and believes in the principles of that party. For fifteen years he served as a member of the old fire department, and has borne his part in saving property and preserving the lives of those in danger. He owns eighteen acres of fine land, near the cemetery, that is worth $500 per acre.

A sturdy, upright, honorable man, Mr. Lauterbach displays many of the distinguishing traits of his compatriots, being industrious and thrifty. He has worked up from nothing into his present state of affluence, and has every reason to be proud of having accomplished so much within the span of a lifetime, hampered by early poverty and lack of training. His family is a fine one, and he takes great pleasure in their progress and affection and that of his grandchildren.

LAW, Matthew.—Among the native-born residents of Sangamon County, who are members of pioneer families, Matthew Law deserves a prominent place. He was born September 30, 1830, son of Benjamin and Jane (McCleece) Law, natives, respectively, of Pennsylvania and Kentucky. Benjamin Law was a farmer and one of the early settlers of Lautermann Settlement, in Springfield Township, where he lived until 1840, then moved to the farm now occupied by his son, in Clear Lake Township, where he died in 1878, his widow surviving until 1893 and dying on the home farm. There were three sons and seven daughters in the family, and six children now survive: Matthew and his twin brother, Mark, the latter of whom lives in Springfield; Thomas, a farmer of Sangamon County; Mrs. Rebecca Harwood, of Minneapolis; Mrs. Jane Lovelace, who lives with her brother Mathew; Catherine married Henry Haynes, of Springfield.

Matthew Law secured his education in the public schools of Sangamon County and early began to help with the work on the home farm, which he has continued to the present day. He owns forty acres of fine land in Clear Lake Township, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation. He is a prominent member of the Old Settlers’ Association and is a public-spirited, useful citizen. He is a Republican in all politics and cast his first Presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. He belongs to a family that has been prominent in Sangamon County history and affairs for more than eighty years, and whose members have always stood for the best interests of their communities. He was personally well acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, of whom he has some interesting recollections. Mr. Law is unmarried.
LAW, Thomas.—One of the oldest settlers of Sangamon County, now residing there, is Thomas Law, who accompanied his parents to Clear Lake Township in 1836. He was born in Tennessee, September 23, 1831, a son of Benjamin and Louisa J. (McCleese) Law, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Indiana. The father was a farmer by occupation and came to Illinois in an early day. He lived in Clear Lake Township a few years, then moved to a farm west of Springfield, but in 1852 returned to Clear Lake Township, where he purchased a farm and spent the remainder of his life. He and his wife had nine children, of whom five now survive, namely: Thomas, of this sketch; Mathew and Mark, twins, living on the home farm; Rebecca, widow of Henry Harwood, living in Minneapolis; Catherine, wife of Henry Harnes, of Springfield, and Mrs. Louisa J. Lovelace, living on the home farm with her brothers.

Mr. Law received a somewhat meager education in the country schools near his father's home, and in boyhood helped his father with the farm work. In the spring of 1851 he moved to the farm of 155 acres on Section 6 of Cooper Township, which he now owns, and where he has since carried on farming successfully. He has generally improved the condition of his land and buildings, and is held in high esteem by his neighbors and acquaintances. He and his wife are members of the Christian Church and he is a Republican in political views. He has always taken an active interest in public affairs and has given his approval and assistance to many worthy causes. Mr. Law was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, and when the latter was living in Springfield hauled wood to the city for his use.

Mr. Law was married in Springfield, October 16, 1861, to Louisa J. Gibson, a native of Sangamon County, born March 14, 1840, whose father, Samuel Gibson, a native of Virginia, was a son of her husband. Mrs. Law was an early settler of Sangamon County and there carried on farming until his death. His wife was a native of Indiana and they were parents of twelve children, of whom two sons and four daughters now survive. Eight children were born to Mr. Law and wife, of whom four survive, namely: Clara, widow of William Lagio, a farmer of Cooper Township; Abigail, wife of Owen Jones, a farmer of Mechanicsburg Township; Samuel, of Oklahoma, and Frank, living at home with his father and mother. Mr. and Mrs. Law have fourteen living grandchildren, in whom they feel reasonable pride. They have witnessed radical changes in Sangamon County during the native of Virginia and are able to recount many interesting anecdotes of the early days. The parents of both were members of the band of hardy pioneers who paved the way for higher civilization and for the present prosperity and well-being of Sangamon County, and were identified with the best interests of the people.

LAWLEY, James P., who for more than thirteen years has held the office of Postmaster of Glenarm, Ill., has long been identified with the public, agricultural and business life of this part of Sangamon County, and is an honored veteran of the great Civil War. Mr. Lawley was born in Ball Township, Sangamon County, December 10, 1845, a son of William B. Lawley. William B. Lawley was born in Tennessee, June 24, 1811, and came to Sangamon County in 1828, settling on a farm in Ball Township, on which the remainder of his life was spent, and where he died March 23, 1877. He married Sarah M. DuCan, who was born in North Carolina, September 6, 1821, and came with his parents to Sangamon County in 1828, her father born in 1800 in North Carolina and died in Christian County, Ill., in 1850. Grandfather Lawley was born in 1777 in Virginia, the son of a Revolutionary soldier who lost his life while serving in the Continental Army.

James P. Lawley received his education in the country schools of Sangamon County and remained at home until eighteen years of age, working on the farm for his father until his enlistment September 9, 1863, at Vicksburg, Miss., in Company E, Hundred and Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Capt. S. M. Shoop. He served two years and eight months, being mustered out at Montgomery, Ala., and receiving his final discharge and pay April 24, 1866, having been transferred from his regular company to the Fifty-eighth Illinois Regulars in August, 1865. During his long service he received several wounds and participated in the battles of Guntown, Tippoo, Oxford, Nashville, Spanish Fort, Fort Blakely, and many minor battles and skirmishes, always proving himself a brave and faithful soldier and gaining an excellent record. After the termination of his services to his country, he returned to the home farm, but one year later went to Christian County, Ill., where he lived six years. He then returned to Sangamon County, and from 1877 until 1896 was engaged in agricultural pursuits there, at the end of that period moving to Glenarm, where he entered the grocery business and October 1, 1897, was appointed Postmaster of the place, an office which he has held to the present time.

Mr. Lawley is a member of the Modern Woodmen and the Odd Fellows, and his wife affiliates with Court of Honor No. 1338 and the Royal Neighbors. His religious connection is with the Cotton Hill Christian Church, and he has always been a supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Mr. Lawley is an enterprising and successful businessman and an efficient and conscientious public official and a good and public spirited citizen. His strict integrity in all matters has won him the respect and confidence of his community, and he has made as good a record for himself during times of peace as he did during the dark days of the Civil War.
On December 9, 1869, Mr. Lawley was married in Ball Township, to Nancy J. Jones, who was born in Sangamon County, January 10, 1851, daughter of William and Martha A. (Lillard) Jones, natives of North Carolina, the former of whom died in Christian County in November, 1858, and the latter in Glenarm, in 1898. Eight children were born to Mrs. Lawley's parents, namely: Temperance, Tabitha, James T., Colvin W. and Nancy J., who are all living, and Robert A., Sarah E. and an infant, who are deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawley have three children: Nora A., born in Christian County, May 10, 1871, died September 12, 1872, and was buried in the Christian Church cemetery; and Robert W., born in Christian County, Ill., January 24, 1874, was married December 26, 1897, to Ellen Shoup, in Springfield, Ill.; where they now reside, and they have had one child, James E., born in Springfield, February 15, 1903.

LAWSON, James, a retired farmer living in Springfield, Ill., is a veteran of the Civil War and has lived in Sangamon County most of the time since he first came to the Southern Illinois country, as a part of the family of John Lawson, of Pike County, Ohio, February 11, 1847, and is a son of Paschal and Lucy (Munce) Lawson, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. Paschal Lawson moved to Ohio in an early day and there carried on farming until 1870, then came to Sangamon County and engaged in farming near Sherman, where he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives.

During his boyhood James Lawson worked on his father's farm in Ohio and attended the country schools of the neighborhood. He served one year in Company H, One Hundred Seventy-sixth Volunteer Infantry, enlisting in 1864, and being mustered out at Nashville, Tenn. He had taken part in no other wars and faithfully performed any duty required of him. Soon after the close of the war Mr. Lawson came to the vicinity of Springfield and carried on farming there until 1906, when on account of poor health he was compelled to retire from active pursuits, and then purchased his present comfortable home at 1223 North Nineteenth Street, which he has since occupied. He has been industrious and thrifty and success has attended his efforts in all his undertakings.

Mr. Lawson was married in Lincoln, Ill., August 3, 1876, to Miss Rosina Shockey, daughter of Nelson and Susan (King) Shockey, a native of Missouri. Her father was a native of Maryland and her mother of Pennsylvania. The parents were early settlers in Missouri, where the father carried on farming, and there his death occurred, while the mother died in Broadwell, Logan County, Ill. Four sons and four daughters were born to Mr. Lawson and his wife, and seven children now survive: Gertrude, wife of Loren Taylor, a farmer; Ada, wife of William Staudage, of Springfield; Esther, wife of Arthur Standage, of Springfield; Lester and James H., of Springfield. One daughter, Eunice L., is deceased. There are eight grand-children in the family.

Mr. Lawson is a Republican. He is interested in public affairs and ready to support any measure he considers will be of benefit to the community where he lives. He has the reputation of being honest and upright in his dealings and is esteemed and respected for his many good qualities.

LAWSON, John.—The history of many of the farmers of Sangamon County records successes, for the land there yields an abundant profit upon the investment of time and money. A number of men who have tried farming elsewhere recognize this, and leave old homes to come there to devote themselves to the cultivation and improvement of their properties. One of the men who is honored as an upright citizen and good farmer is John Lawson, of Section 18, Williams Township. He was born in Tennessee, July 11, 1832, a son of Paschal and Lucy (Robbins) Lawson, both natives of Tennessee. The parents moved to Platt County, Ohio, in 1832, settling on a farm, where they remained until 1850, then came to Illinois, locating near Broadwell, in Logan County, not far from the Sangamon County line. There the father farmed until his death which occurred in 1882. His wife had died three years before on the same farm. There were eleven children in the family nine of whom were sons, and of all these but four survive.

John Lawson was educated in a log school-house in the country districts of Ohio, and then attended only in the winter time. He tramped through the heavy snows to secure the knowledge he so craved, and before and after school and in the summers worked on his father's farm. With the rest of the family, he settled in Sangamon County in 1880, but seven or eight years later went to Missouri. After a year there he returned to Logan County, but later came to Sangamon County and bought twenty acres on Section 18, Williams Township. This land he devotes to specialties. He attends the Methodist Church, of which he is a member, and votes the Republican ticket. He is proud of the fact that he knew Abraham Lincoln, and recalls many pleasant memories of the great man.

The first marriage of Mr. Lawson occurred in Platt County, Ohio, in 1858, when he was united with Eliza A. Rickard, born in that State, whose father came to Illinois at an early day. After a short stay, he went to Arkansas, where both he and his wife died. By trade he was a blacksmith. Mr. and Mrs. Lawson had five children, three of whom are now living: Richard, of Montana; Isabella, wife of Henry Slavin, of Peoria, and William, of Springfield. Mrs. Lawson died in 1874. On October 15, 1875, Mr. Lawson married Nora Hannon, born in Christian County, Ill., September 3, 1852. Her father was born near Louisville, Ky., but came to Illinois in pioneer days, settling in Christian County, where he farmed until his death. There were thirteen children in the family, all of whom are deceased with the exception of Mrs. Lawson and two others. Mr. and Mrs. Lawson became the parents of twelve children, eight of whom are living: Flora, wife of Ray Birks, of Nebraska; Rosie, wife of James Lawson, of Colorado; Fannie, wife of William Burke, of Nebraska; John, of Augusta, Ill.; Thomas, of Minnesota; James, of Athens Ill.; Orville and Ray, at home. There are twenty grandchildren and four great-grandchildren in the family.

Mr. Lawson has lived to see his children grow up and is proud of the fact that so many of them are engaged in farming; for he believes that this line of work is the most suitable. He has been a farmer all his life, he appreciates the possibilities of the work, and also prefers that his off-spring should lead the free life possible in the country, removed from the temptations of city influences. Having lived in this part of the State for so many years, he remembers and appreciates the many changes which have taken place there, and looks forward to others which he believes will come to pass. His faith in the future of Sangamon County is unbounded, and he is interested in all matters pertaining to its further advancement.

LAWYER, John W. (deceased), who settled in Sangamon County in 1850, was well known in Mechanicsburg Township, where he carried on farming for a quarter of a century. He was a veteran of the Civil War and never fully recovered from sickness incurred during that struggle, in which he served one year. He was a conscientious, public-spirited citizen, a good neighbor and devoted to his home and family. He was born in Ohio, in 1825, a son of Benjamin Lawyer, also a native of Ohio, where both parents died on a farm.

After receiving his education in the country schools of his native State, Mr. Lawyer worked on the farm for his father until coming to Illinois. He carried on farming in Mechanicsburg Township until his death, which occurred in 1875. He enlisted, in August, 1861, in Company A, Twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being mustered in at Camp Butler, and at the end of a year was discharged on account of disability. He was sick for some time after his return home, but finally became able to resume the care of his farm. He was a member of the Methodist Church and in politics was a Democrat. He had a reputation for uprightness and integrity and was always ready to do his full duty in every relation of life.

Mr. Lawyer was married (first) in Ohio, to Bessie Sinneth, a native of that State, and of this union four children were born, all of whom are deceased, and the mother died soon after coming to Illinois. He was married (second) to Miss Nancy Davis, of Taylorville, Ill., a native of Christian County, and the two children born of this union are both deceased. Mr. Lawyer's third wife was Martha M. Blue, born in Paris, Ill., in April, 1830. Her father, a native of Indiana, became an early settler in Mechanicsburg Township Sangamon County, and there carried on farming until his death. He and his wife were parents of five daughters and one son of whom the only survivor is Mrs. Lawyer. Six children were born to Mr. Lawyer and his third wife, of whom the only survivor is William H., a contracting painter and decorator living in Mechanicsburg. Mrs. Lawyer owns a comfortable home in the village of Mechanicsburg and is well known and much esteemed in the community. She is a member of the Christian Church. Though she is in her eighty-first year, she retains a keen interest in affairs and events about her and greatly enjoys the companionship of her family and friends.

LAX, Prosser M. (deceased).—In every community there are certain men who, by reason of their aptitude for business detail, thoroughness of purpose and broad-gauged policy, take a foremost part in all progressive movements. Such a man was the late Prosser M. Lax, of Springfield, identified with the city's best interests, in both a financial and public way. He was born at Jacksonville, Ill., July 9, 1862, a son of Edward C. and Hattie (Prosser) Lax, the former born in England and the latter in Jacksonville, Ill. The father was an old settler of Jacksonville, having come there in 1838, and was identified with the grain interests of the locality, and was extensively engaged in this line until his death. Dr. Prosser, the maternal grandfather of Prosser M. Lax, was one of the first physicians of Jacksonville, and was the son of a Revolutionary soldier.

Prosser M. Lax was educated in the public schools of Jacksonville and the college of that city. His first business experience was secured in handling furniture, and when he located in Springfield, in 1886, he embarked in the same line and became a leading business man, carrying on a flourishing business until 1898. He then entered upon another field of endeavor, that of handling real estate and insurance. He was quite as successful in this line and was still thus engaged when he passed away in February, 1908, in the very prime of life, and in the midst of useful activity.

On December 21, 1887, in Springfield, occurred the marriage of Prosser M. Lax and Cora B. Barkley, born in the city October 15, 1866, a daughter of General J. H. Barkley, whose biography appears elsewhere in this work. Three children were born of this union: Helen Prosser, with the Franklin Life Insurance Company; Louise C., attending high school, and Barkley Edward, with the McKinley Interurban System.

Mr. Lax was a member of the Illinois National Guard, serving as a commissioned officer under General Barkley, with rank of Quartermaster Sergeant. He was one of the first members of the Business Men's Club of Springfield. Fraternally he belonged to the Knights of Pythias and was Grand Chancellor at one time. He was also Quartermaster General, with title of Colonel, under General Barkley in the Uniform Rank of Knights of Pythias, being one of the most popular members of Pervical Lodge. His religious affinities were with the Congregational Church. While he never desired to attract public notice, preferring to exert his influence in a quiet, unassuming way.

It is safe to say that during his mature life no measure for advancement of the city's interests were advocated, that did not receive his hearty support. He never spared himself when time or money were needed to help others, and those who were unfortunate knew where they could find a warm and ready sympathy. His employees were devoted to him, appreciating the fair treatment they received. His business associates agreed that they never had to deal with a man whose outlook was wider, or whose keen sense of honor was more rigidly sustained in business operations.

LEADABRAND, Henry (deceased).—In naming the representative citizens of Sangamon County, Ill., the biographer finds that many of the best and most useful men that the county has had have been natives of Germany. The Fatherland has furnished the State and county with many good agriculturists, men in whom have been bred the sturdy, sterling qualities which have meant so much in the development of various sections, and who have spent long, useful lives in faithful, energetic labor. Henry Leadabrand, who was for many years engaged in agriculture on his farms in Section 3, Rokeby Township, was born in Germany, in the city of Berlin, January 20, 1820, a son of Jacob and Christina Leadabrand, farming people of that country.

Henry Leadabrand was reared to the life of a farmer, and his education was secured in the public schools of his native country, where his father served a term in the army. After leaving school he served for a time as a hostler, but later engaged in farming, and in 1846, realizing that he could find a better field for his labor in the New World, he came to the United States. He made the trip in a sailing vessel, the journey covering a period of fourteen weeks, and while on board ship he met the lady who later became his wife. He first located in New York, but later removed to Ohio, where he resided four years, and finally settled in Sangamon County, Ill., where the rest of his life was passed, his death occurring in Ball Township August 18, 1869.

Mr. Leadabrand was married in New York, in November, 1846, to Christina Coalstead, who was born in Germany in 1822, a daughter of John Coalstead, who came from Germany to New York in 1846, her three brothers, John, Michael and Jacob Coalstead, coming two years later. To Mr. and Mrs. Leadabrand were born the following children: Mary, born October 14, 1848; Joseph, April 10, 1850; Peter, November 20, 1852; George, January 22, 1853; Anna, June 18, 1854; Albert, February 3, 1855; Marle, February 17, 1862; William, July 6, 1864; Philip, July 30, 1866; Henry, November 9, 1880; Tobias, September 3, 1881; Emma, December 11, 1882; Charles, February 8, 1883; Tresie, July 1, 1888; and Lucy, March 10, 1891.

In his political faith, Mr. Leadabrand was a Democrat, and was always faithful in his adherence to the principles of that party. He was a Catholic in his religious belief. Mrs. Leadabrand now resides on a 1040-acre farm in Ball Township, on which her husband spent so many years. The family is well known in this part of the county and its members are popular and highly esteemed as some of Sangamon County's best citizens.

LEAMONS, John, a veteran of the Civil War, now living retired from active life at Mechanicsburg, Ill., where he has resided many years, was born in Highland County, Ohio, May 1, 1836, a son of Isaac and Jane (Murray) Leamons, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Ohio. The father, a flour miller by trade, moved to Ohio as a young man and for many years conducted a mill in Highland County, spending the remainder of his life in the State. He and his wife had three sons and one daughter, of whom the daughter and one son are deceased.

As a boy John Leamons learned the trade of miller with his father, for whom he worked until his marriage, in 1859. He received a common school education in the schools of his native county and began to work young. After his marriage he moved to Franklin, now Springfield, which he carried on for four years. During the Civil War he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving to the end of the war and being at different times under the command of Generals Schofield, Sherman and Thomas. He started with Sherman on the famous March to the Sea, which it was turned back and participated in many important battles and minor skirmishes. He was mustered out at Charlotte, N. C., receiving his final discharge at Columbus, Ohio.

Soon after the close of the war Mr. Leamons brought his family to Mechanicsburg and there for thirty years conducted a saw-mill. He was an active and enterprising business man and achieved fair success. He owns a beautiful home in the village and other property in the neighborhood. He is liberal in religious views and the family are members of the Christian Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

Mr. Leamons was married June 19, 1859, to Mary J., daughter of Adam Miller, who was born in Highland County, Ohio, April 21, 1840. Adam Miller was born in South Carolina, of German parents, and his wife was born in Ohio of Scotch parents, her maiden name being Sarah James. Mr. Miller moved from his native State of Ohio with his mother, and there carried on farming until his death, his wife also dying in Ohio. The grandmother of Mrs. Leemons lived to the unusual age of one hundred and four years. Adam Miller and wife were parents of six daughters and seven sons, all of whom are deceased.

Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Leemons, of whom the following five now survive: Milton, clerk in the employ of Robert Alvey, of Mechanicsburg; Walter, a farmer of Mechanicsburg Township; Bert, an engineer in the West; John, book-keeper for the Coronado Coal Company; and Elieh, who, by the marriage of John Reed, lives with her father. Mr. Leemons has six grandchildren. He is well known in the community, where he carried on an important enterprise so many years, and is universally regarded with esteem and respect.

LEHNEN, John P.—Long years of earnest effort well directed usually result in ultimate success, and this is the case of John P. Lehnem, of No. 910 Osborn Avenue, Springfield, widely known in mining circles. He was born in Prussia, Germany, March 29, 1845, being a son of John P. and Margaret (Becker) Lehnen. The father was a farmer, who came to America in 1852, with three children having come prior to this. Upon his arrival, he located in Springfield, where he lived until his death a short time afterwards. His wife died in Germany and he married again, his second wife surviving him and making her home in Springfield. There were three sons and four daughters in the family, of whom five survive; in addition to Mr. Lehnem, namely: Joseph and John, of Springfield; Margaret, wife of John Ensch, of Springfield; Katherine, wife of John Harris of Pennsylvania, and Mary, wife of Ernest Scheffer, of Springfield.

The education of John P. Lehnem was obtained in Germany, he working on his father's farm and learning the trade of a miller. By the time he had completed his apprenticeship, Mr. Lehnem entered the German Army and after his three years' service came to America, sailing from Havre, France, to New York. From that city he came direct to Springfield to engage in mining, which line of endeavor has engrossed his attention ever since. For the past five years he has been with the Lincoln Coal Company, of Springfield. Prior to that he worked in various mines of the locality. For four years the family have lived at the present residence, which Mr. Lehnem owns, in addition to other city property. He built the first house on Lincoln Avenue.

On January 16, 1878, Mr. Lehnem was united in marriage in this city with Catherine Hisdorf, born in Prussia, Germany, June 15, 1890, a daughter of Martin and Elizabeth (Schneider) Hisdorf. The father was a manufacturer, who never came to this country, he and his wife dying in Germany. He had seven children, but Mrs. Lehnem is the only one living. Mr. and Mrs. Lehnem had seven children, but only two are now living: Fred who is connected with the Edward F. Hartman Printing Company, and Marie, who is in the employ of the Illinois State Register.

Mr. Lehnem is a member of the Western Catholic Union. His son is also a member of the W. C. U., the Catholic Order of the Sword, Mozart Social Club, and is Secretary of the Bookbinders Union. Mrs. Lehnem and daughter belong to the Court of Honor. Both children are musicians, being accomplished singers. They are devout Roman Catholics and belong to SS. Peter and Paul parish. In politics Mr. Lehnem is a Democrat, but has never aspired to office.

LENGENFELDER, Andreas.—Many of the more progressive farmers of today are devoting themselves to raising large crops from a smaller acreage than was formerly deemed necessary. Experiments have proven that it is better in every way to bring a small farm to the highest state of cultivation than indifferently to farm a large one, and Andreas Lengenfelder has one of the best pieces of property in his part of the county, to prove the truth of such a statement. He is conveniently located on Section 15, Cooper Township, where he owns thirty-one acres, every inch of which is made to produce a crop, according to thrifty German methods, for Mr. Lengenfelder was born in that country, April 3, 1867, a son of Conrad and Margaret (Selbert) Lengenfelder. They were farming people, who never left Germany, the father dying in 1882, but the mother survives, being seventy-nine years old. Andreas Lengenfelder had two brothers, Albert and William, but both are now deceased.

Growing up in Germany, Andreas Lengenfelder worked for his father until he was twenty-two years old, when he gave his country a three years' service, and then came to the United States, arriving in New York in 1892, and passing through Castle Garden. From that city he came direct to Springfield and spent two years, but then went to Bates, III. After six months there, he came back to Springfield and spent the following five years there. He then returned to Germany on a two months' visit, following which he once more came to Springfield. A short time later he went to Christian County, and spent two years at Blackburn Station, but in 1900 settled on his present farm.

On April 16, 1898, Mr. Lengenfelder was married in Springfield to Miss K. Jerrer, born February 12, 1869, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Miller) Jerrer. The Jerrers are short-timers in Germany, the father in 1842, and still surviving, and the mother died in 1870. Mrs. Lengenfelder has three sisters: Anna, Elizabeth and Katherine, all living in Germany, while Mr. Lengenfelder had the following brothers and sisters: John, William, Albert, Elizabeth, Margaret, Regina, Barbara, of whom one sister and two brothers are living in America. Mr. and Mrs. Lengenfelder have had two children:
Anna, aged twelve years, and Carrie, aged five years.

Mr. Lengenfelder is a Republican. The Lutheran Church holds his membership. He is a reliable, hard-working, practical farmer, and is widely known and universally respected.

LENHART, Valentine, a successful farmer of Section 4, Cotton Hill Township, Sangamon County, is well known as a public spirited and useful citizen, and stands well in his community. He was born at Strasburg, Germany, November 1, 1834, a son of George and Catherine (Eversold) Lenhart, both natives of Germany and the former a weaver by trade. The father followed his trade in his native country until his death. He and his wife had three sons and one daughter, and the only two children now surviving are Valentine, of this article, and George, living near Decatur, Macon County.

In youth Valentine Lenhart learned the trade of weaver from his father, and meantime attended the public school of his native place. Later he engaged in the weaving business on his own account, and when about twenty years of age emigrated to the United States, sailing from Havre and landing at New York City after spending sixty-nine days on the voyage. He came at once to Springfield, where he arrived August 15, 1854. His first occupation there was candy-making, which he followed nine years; then he purchased land and engaged in farming, in which he was fairly successful. He has lived on his present place the past six years, and has a comfortable and well-situated residence. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church and in politics is a Democrat.

Mr. Lenhart was married in Springfield, September 16, 1858, to Miss Annie Roedemayer, who was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, June 16, 1835, and whose parents never left their native land. Of the nine children born to Mr. Lenhart and wife the following now survive: Henry a farmer of Sangamon County; David; Samuel, living in the West; Elizabeth, wife of George Blakely, a sketch of whom appears in these pages; Catherine, widow of Matthew Blakely, of Sangamon County; Annie, wife of Charles Stanfield, living in the West.

LENZ, Albert David.—German training cannot be surpassed, and for this and other reasons those born in the Fatherland receive a welcome whenever they settle in any locality. Sangamon County is fortunate in having so many of these thrifty, reliable men among its residents, and one of them is Albert Davld Lenz, born in Prussia, Germany, February 7, 1852, son of John and Wilhelmina Lenz, both of Prussia. The father was a farmer and never came to America. His religious belief was a Lutheran. He and his wife had four children as follows: Frederick, Albert D. Paul, Julius, Emil, Amelie; Paulina, wife of Augustus Ott; Martha, Minnie and Marie.

Albert D. Lenz was educated in Germany, and when only six years old began working on his father's farm, continuing thus until twenty-four years old. He then came to this country, landing in 1906, and first worked in Milwaukee, but after spending a short time in a machine shop, came to Springfield. This was in 1907, and he went at once to work in the boiler works, remaining there a year. Following this he spent two years in New Hampshire working as a machinist, but returned to Springfield in the early part of 1910, and entered the employ of the Wabash Railroad. He bought two houses he resides. In November, 1910, he accepted the position of janitor of the German Lutheran Church, and still holds it.

On February 17, 1906, he was married in Springfield, by the Rev. Frederick Brandt, of the German Lutheran Church, to Emma Skoda born in Germany, March 30, 1890, daughter of John Skoda, both he and his wife being natives of Germany. Mrs. Lenz was the only child of her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Lenz have two children: William B., born December 23, 1907, and Minnie, born December 23, 1906. In politics Mr. Lenz is a Republican and a member of the German Lutheran Church. He is one of the progressive young German-Americans of Springfield and his present success only indicates what may be expected of him in the future.

LENZ, Frank Joseph.—In looking over the records of Springfield, once the home of such men as Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas, the biographer is impressed by the number of young men now engaged in upholding the city's prestige in the business world. They seem to be able to forge ahead and to attain success long before they have rounded out two score of years. It is necessary, in these days of fierce competition, that this be true. The exacting demands of a business life wears a man out, and unless he reaches success in his very prime he will not be able to attain it. One of the live, keen young business men of Springfield, who certainly has every reason to be content with what he has accomplished, is Frank Joseph Lenz, born in Buckhart, Sangamon County, August 22, 1873, son of Valentine and Bertha (Geler) Lenz, both natives of Germany. The parents came to America in youth, meeting in Springfield, where they were married. They then began farming near Buckhart and Breckendridge, thus continuing for years, until their retirement to Springfield, in 1902. They now reside in their comfortable home at No. 1002 South Fourteenth Street. The father is a Democrat and a member of the Sacred Heart Catholic Church. The children born in this family were: Albert, boiler maker with the Marine Boiler Works, of Toledo, Ohio; Frank Joseph; Henry, who lives in the vicinity of New Berlin, Ill.; Valentine, with the Illinois Watch Works; Edward, with Lochman Brothers, Jewelers, and one deceased.

Mr. Lenz attended school at Cascade, Ill., until he was about seventeen years old, when he left to work on his father's farm. He continued with his parents until he attained his LENZ, Valentine, a retired farmer living at 1002 South Fourteenth Street, Springfield, III., carried on agricultural operations in Sangamon County from 1871 to 1885. He was born in Baden, Germany, April 2, 1845, and received his education in his native country, remaining at home on the farm of his parents until he was eighteen years of age. He is a son of John and Rachel (Schussler) Lenz, both natives of Germany, the father born in 1800 and the mother in 1807. They spent their entire lives in Germany, where the father died in 1853 and the mother in 1867. John Lenz was a man who was much esteemed by all who knew him, for his many fine qualities of mind and heart and his high character. Valentine Lenz had three sisters and a brother who came to America in 1853 and all are deceased. One brother, who was born in 1830, is still residing in Baden.

In 1867 Valentine Lenz emigrated to America and came direct to Sangamon County, III., locating on a farm in Cooper Township, where he lived twenty years. He then moved to Cotton Hill Township and lived there fifteen years, after which he retired and located at home in a comfortable home, where he has resided the past nine years. He was an energetic and able farmer and became very successful in this line. He is a Democrat in politics and served as School Director in 1890. He is a member of the Catholic Church and belongs to Sacred Heart Priests.

Mr. Lenz was married, in Springfield, Ill., April 17, 1877, to Bertha Gier, who was born in Germany, December 13, 1854, daughter of Francis James and Margaret Gier, the former born in 1810 and the latter in 1828. Both Mr. Gier and his wife spent their entire lives in Germany, where he died in 1875 and she in 1890. Three brothers of Mrs. Lenz came to America in 1873. Six children were born to Mr. Lenz and his wife, of whom five survive, namely: Albert, born January 20, 1882, is a boilermaker and lives in Ohio, married to Pearl St. John; Francis, born August 22, 1883, is in business in Springfield; Henry W., born July 15, 1887, is a farmer and lives near Quincy, Ill.; Valentine, Jr., born April 2, 1891, is employed in the Illinois Watch factory; Edward Leo, born October 15, 1895, living at home, is a messenger in the employ of the Hamann Printing Company, of Springfield. Mr. Lenz is actively interested in the general welfare and prosperity and is the friend of progress. He has witnessed many changes and improvements in Springfield and Sangamon County since he has resided here. He belongs to the Loyal Americans and his wife to the Catholic Foresters. Many changes and improvements have taken place since Mr. Lenz came to Sangamon County. He has witnessed the building of the State and Federal Buildings, and all improvements in the city.

LEONARD, Edward F. (Vol. I, p. 333)

LEUTENMAYER, Maximilian, an honored veteran of the Civil War, who has worked hard most of his life, is now living retired, at his comfortable home at 525 West Reynolds Street, Springfield. He is an honest, upright citizen, of good standing with his neighbors, and is well known in the city, where he has resided since 1854. He was born in Bavaria, Germany, May 3, 1842, son of Joseph and Agatha (Stoater) Leutemayer, both natives of Germany. The father was born October 30, 1817, and died in September, 1882, and the mother was born February 1, 1821, and died October 30, 1866, at the age of nearly eighty-seven years. The parents emigrated to America in 1854, landing in New York December 28th, and during the following year located in Springfield, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The father of Joseph Leutemayer served in the Russian War, under Napoleon, and all the ancestors were natives of Germany.

The early boyhood of Maximilian Leutemayer was spent in Germany, where he attended school until coming to America with his parents. He completed his education in the latter country and lived with his father on a farm until he enlisted for service in the Civil War. He was fond of outdoor life and sports, and became very useful to his father in carrying on the farm.

On September 30, 1861, Mr. Leutemayer enlisted in Company B, Teutu Illinois Cavalry, under Captain Hilt, and served three years and four months, being mustered out at Brownsville, Ark., December 30, 1864. He proved himself to be a brave and faithful soldier, who performed his every duty. Among the many battles in which he participated were Prairie Grove, Little Rock, Saline River, and many skirmishes. He captured Captain Todd and two men who were with him, about October, 1862, and is justly proud of this feat. Captain Todd was a cousin of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln. In a skirmish at Niagara Creek, October 18, 1862, they killed four Rebels and lost but one man of their company. Mr. Leutemayer is a member of Stephenson Post G. A. R. and is highly esteemed by his comrades.

Upon leaving the army Mr. Leutenmayer returned to Springfield and engaged in driving a team for a mill and later worked for various other concerns. For twenty years he was employed at Oak Ridge Sawmill as an industrious worker and has retired from business life. In politics he is a Republican, although he takes no very active part in public affairs. He is a devout Catholic and belongs to SS. Peter and Paul’s Church in Springfield. He is a man of public spirit and takes great interest in the welfare of the community, being always ready to voice any worthy cause which comes to his notice.

The marriage of Mr. Leutenmayer took place at Springfield, August 4, 1870, when he was united with Miss Eloese Hagedorn, who was born in Germany, April 27, 1849, daughter of Philip Hagedorn and his wife, natives of Germany. Three children were born of this union: Albert, born August 15, 1871, foreman of the Illinois Central roundhouse and a resident of Paducah, Ky., married Louise Regner, and they have two children, Hazel and Charles; Adolph, born September 1, 1873, assistant engineer for Reisch Brewing Company of Springfield; Frances Agatha, born December 31, 1877, is in the employ of the Illinois Watch Company.

LIGHTFOOT, Gabriel M.—Pioneers of Sangamon County can appreciate the remarkable changes effected during the past half century, as can many others who were born before the county was fully settled. Prior to 1850 much of the county was a wilderness, with the sod unturbed and giant trees covering the land along the water courses. It was the work of the early farmers to develop this land, clear it of timber and plant it to productive crops. One of the native sons of the county who belongs to a pioneer family, is Gabriel M. Lightfoot, born January 21, 1828, a son of Philip and Margaret S. (Lightfoot) Lightfoot. Phillip Lightfoot was born in Alabama, while his wife was born in Kentucky.

Philip Lightfoot was a physician, who came to Sangamon County in pioneer days, but after a few years’ residence there, went to Morgan County. He had been a school teacher in Sangamon County, but after going to Morgan County, practiced medicine in Manchester and Murrayville, later going west. After some time, during which he continued his practice, he returned to Illinois, buying a practice at Roodhouse. Still later he was in practice at Winchester, but eventually returned to Murrayville, where he died in January, 1906. Although eighty-three years old at the time of his death, he was still in active practice. He and his wife had seven children, three of whom survive. The Lightfoot family originated in Virginia where some of its members still reside.

Gabriel Lightfoot went to school in the little log cabin of his neighborhood. He, with the other pupils, sat on slab seats, their feet resting on a floor built from puncheons. A huge fireplace heated the room in winter, but in summer it was very warm, the only air and light coming from the door hole. Books were a luxury, and the teachers often were mere boys themselves, and yet these primitive schools have turned out some of the smartest men Illinois has ever known. Mr. Lightfoot has been a farmer all his life, operating in various parts of the county. His son owns four acres of land which is devoted to small fruit.

The marriage of Mr. Lightfoot occurred in the old Central Hotel of Springfield, in September, 1870, when he was united with Henrietta Davis, born in Pike County, Ohio, February 6, 1848. Her parents were born, reared and died in Ohio, coming of old pioneer families of that State. Mr. and Mrs. Lightfoot have had children as follows: Henry, at home, is a cement worker; John, deceased; Anna M. married Charles Gray and they live at Rochester. They have two adopted sons.

Mrs. Lightfoot is a member of the Methodist Church and is one of its most efficient and earnest workers. Mr. Lightfoot was a small boy when Mr. Lincoln was first elected president and lacked a few years of his majority when the president was assassinated. Some of his most pleasant recollections are of this great man, and his stories of the times when the nation’s martyr was a resident of Springfield are intensely entertaining. While not entering into the public life of the township, Mr. Lightfoot has always had its best interests at heart, and is proud of the progress of his county. He has borne his part in its development and can always be relied upon to support all measures looking towards the securing of good government and moral uplift. In his various transactions he has proven himself to possess strict integrity, and his business associates, as well as his friends, count on him as a man whose word is as good as his bond.

LINCOLN, Robert Todd. (Vol. I, p. 338.)

LISTMAN, John.—Looking back over a long and well-spent life during which he served well in many capacities, John Listman, of Springfield, may well be satisfied with what he has accomplished. Brick manufacturer, policeman and hotel man, he has experienced many changes in his business career and has accumulated a property that inspires his old age from want and provides him and his family with all of the necessities and many of the luxuries of our now complex existence. He was born in Germany, in 1834 and, coming to the United States in 1858, brought with him the sturdy qualities of his countryman which work for ultimate success. Landing in New York City, he came straight to Springfield. Although he had secured a good German education, he was ignorant of the English language, but, having gained strength and vitality on his father's farm in his native land, his services were accepted in the brick yards at Springfield, where he worked during the summer months, and in the winter he made shoes. During 1860 and 1861 he worked as a shoemaker at Auraria, but returned to Springfield in the latter year, resuming his alternating occupations of brick making and shoe-making. In 1865, while on a visit home, he brought his two sisters back with him, and a year later sent for his parents. In 1870 Mr. Listman was married, in Burlington, Iowa, to Anna Katrina Bernhart, a frugal, industrious German girl, who made him an excellent wife and bore him seven children: John, of Springfield; Emma, Mrs. George Anderson, of Springfield; Frank, Henry C., Katherine B., Mamie and Alice, all of Springfield, the three last named being at home. Mr. Listman, in 1843, was appointed to the police force in 1879 and was a very efficient and capable officer. In 1883 he bought the Club Hotel, changing its name to that of the Central Hotel. Under the efficient management of Mr. and Mrs. Listman, this hotel gained a well-earned reputation for excellent cooking and homelike quarters. In 1895, however, they sold, moving to No. 900 North Twelfth Street, which remains the family residence. Although not connected with any religious denomination he believes in church work, and contributes liberally towards it. He has not associated himself with any party, believing in exercising his discretion in casting his vote. In his opinion it is the man and not the platform that is important. Genial, kindly in disposition, a splendid business man, Mr. Listman has been successful in every way, and is one of Springfield's most representative men.

LITTLE, Samuel N., senior partner in the Little & Sons Livery Company, Corner of Fourth and Adams Streets, Springfield, was born in Fleming County, Ky., in February, 1811, and was brought by his parents to St. Clair County, Illinois, in the spring of 1818. The following year (1819) his father came to Sangamon County, locating in what was afterwards known as Little's Point, three miles southwest of the court house, on what is now known as the Wiggins Farm. He raised one crop and in 1829 brought his family and settled, living there until his death, January 1st, 1848. This was the home of Samuel N. Little until the autumn of 1851, when the family moved into the city.

On June 29, 1843, Mr. Little married Eliza M. Morgan, daughter of Daniel and Mary Morgan, early pioneers of Illinois. To this union there were six children, three sons and three daughters, also an adopted daughter: William H., Gershom J., Sanford H., Mary E., Harriet C., Minerva C., and Francis Z. Little.

The three sons were engaged in the livery business with their father, who established the business in 1851. Mrs. Little died March 15, 1902.

William H. Little was born March 16, 1845. He married Cordelia Perkins and was afterwards killed in a railroad wreck on the Chicago & Alton Railroad near Chicago on August 17, 1873. He was buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery in Springfield, Ill. Sanford H. Little died on June 4, 1900.

Gershom J. Little, the surviving son, was born February 19, 1847, in Sangamon County. He read medicine and graduated from Rush Medical College of Chicago in 1868. He practiced only a few years and then went in business with his father. Mr. Little has been twice married, his first wife being Nellie A. LITTERM, William (deceased).—The virtues and good qualities of a man are oftentimes not fully appreciated until he has passed from this life. Deeds which were little noticed during his lifetime, spring into prominence after his demise, and reflect credit upon his kindness of heart and singleness of purpose. Especially has this been true in the case of the late William Littrel, of Springfield, who during a long and useful life showed forth in his actions the faith he early professed when he joined the communion of the Methodist Church, and his memory is enshrined, not only in the hearts of his immediate family, but in the thoughts of those with whom he was brought into contact in both a social and business way. Mr. Littrel was born in Jefferson County, Ky., March 22, 1848, a son of Perry and Mary (Conroy) Littrel, farmers, who came to Springfield at an early day, participating in the history of those times and assisting in developing the city. Mr. Littrel passed away December 24, 1890, and his remains are interred in the beautiful Oak Ridge Cemetery. After a boyhood spent with his parents, Mr. Littrel started out in life for himself, becoming one of the best known men in his line in Sangamon County. Through a thorough knowledge of his work and his keen, sagacious business methods, Mr. Littrel became one of the prosperous men of Springfield, dying in the very prime of life, honored by all who knew him. He was a Methodist and a Democrat, but never cared for public office. His marriage occurred in Springfield June 30, 1879, to Nancy Miller, born on a farm in Coshocton County, Ohio, March 30, 1850. The family came from Ohio to Springfield, in 1868, and this city has since been the home of Mrs. Littrel. A brother of hers, David Miller, owns and operates a fine farm about fifteen miles south of Springfield. Mr. and Mrs. Littrel became the parents of the following children: Frank, Mrs. A. C. Anderson; Mary Elizabeth, Nancy, married and residing in Chicago; Cora Ida and Ellen, the latter living with her mother in Springfield. Mrs. Littrel has a beautiful home at No. 1418 East Monroe Street.

The life of a man who spent his time attending to his own business and living up to his standards of Christianity, points a moral that the rising generation will do well to heed. He left a sufficient fortune to provide for his dear LOCHRIDGE, Robert Henry, an energetic and successful farmer of Section 5, Auburn Township, Sangamon County, Ill., was born in the county, January 17, 1850, son of John Milton and Jane (Nuckolls) Lochridge, who lived on a farm in Chatham Township. The family were early settlers of Sangamon County, and the grandfather of Robert H. Lochridge. John Lochridge, was born in Virginia. He was married, in Kentucky, to Margie Killough, and in 1826 they moved to Owen County, Ind., and thence to Sangamon County, where they arrived October 20, 1838. To them were born eight children, deceased, except Mrs. S. Steele, of Indiana.

John Milton Lochridge was born in Montgomery County, Ky., January 15, 1814, and in 1837 came to Sangamon County, Ill., where he purchased a farm. He became one of the leading farmers and representative men of the county. He was married, July 2, 1840, to Miss Jane Nuckolls, and to this union were born five sons and three daughters, and four of these children survive: the three daughters died in infancy; John William died December 17, 1905; James Monroe, a soldier in the Civil War, now lives in Auburn; Andrew H., retired and living in Auburn; Robert H.; Charles E., a farmer living near Amelia, Tex. John Milton Lochridge was an industrious and thrifty farmer and at the time of his death owned 340 acres of fine land. He was often elected to township offices, and served several terms as a member of the Board of Supervisors. He was a Republican in politics. He attended himself ably and honorably of all the duties of public and private life and was one of the most honored and trusted men of his day. He lived to see many changes take place in the county and township, being a resident of the county from 1837 until the date of his death, November 9, 1905. His widow survived him but a short time and passed away December 21, 1905.

An ancestor of Mr. Lochridge, his great-grandfather, John Lochridge, was a soldier in the Revolution, taking part in the Battles of Guilford Court House, Cowpens, and many others, and in later life drew a pension for his services. He lived in Virginia and was married there. Shortly after his marriage the family moved to Sangamon County they have been actively interested In measures of public interest and contributed their share to the progress and development of the community in which they have lived. They have been active in church and religious matters, helping in the building of churches and schools, and have always been life members of the Masonic lodge. They have been very successful farmers, and have had the uplifting and educating of the people. John Milton Lochridge and his wife lived in Sangamon County over sixty-five years, happy and contented, and in their later years were surrounded by their children, who had settled on neighboring farms.

The younger days of Robert H. Lochridge were spent on the farm, where he was only eight years of age when he attended the district school and helped with the work on the farm, beginning to follow the plow at the age of eight years. He remained on the farm until twenty-two years old, then was married, May 3, 1871, to Miss Ellen Hough, who was born in Lewis County, N. Y., July 22, 1855, daughter of Horace and Emily (Rich) Hough. She has no recollection of her mother, who died when she was a child. After their marriage Mr. Lochridge and his wife settled on a farm in Ball Township, where they lived until 1884, then sold out and moved to Kansas, but returned in 1887 to the scenes of his boyhood days and settled on a farm in Section 5, Auburn Township. He improved the land and erected a beautiful home.

Mr. Lochridge is a member of the I. O. O. F. and his wife belongs to the Rebekah Lodge. He now has 160 acres of land in a high state of cultivation and raises a good grade of stock. For the past five years he has made a specialty of the Duroc Jersey breed. He has raised most of these hogs raised by him, receiving $9.55 per hundredweight, May 3, 1910, and these hogs averaged a weight of 300 pounds.

One child blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lochridge, Emily Daisy, born December 9, 1876, who was married, June 4, 1896, to Benjamin F. Lewis, a native of Auburn Township. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have two children; Robert Lochridge and Benjamin Wilbur, born respectively, July 21, 1905, and May 17, 1910. They reside on the home farm of the parents. Mr. Lochridge and his wife and daughter are all active members of the Presbyterian Church of Auburn, and Mrs. Lochridge belongs to the Ladies’ Aid Society. Mr. Lochridge is a staunch Republican and has always voted for the suppression of the liquor traffic. He has never used tobacco or liquor in any form and is a man of good principles and high character.

LOBB, William.—Springfield is proud of the fact that it is a musical center and that it appreciates the efforts of its musicians. One who has long been associated with musical matters in the Capital City and given of his best to its advancement and pleasure, is William Loeb, composer and organizer. He was born in Hemsbach, Baden, Germany, June 24, 1841, and, coming from the land of music, there is no wonder he excels in the family line. William Loeb, Sr., and his wife, Anna Katherine (Young) Loeb, both natives of Germany. The elder Mr. Loeb came to America in 1848, bringing his young son with him. The trip was made by way of New Orleans, whence the family came to Springfield, and there the father found ready employment as a blacksmith. He made that city his home until his death, which occurred in 1852, when he was in the midst of his career of useful endeavor. Short as was his time there, though, he helped to found the Lutheran Church, of which he was an earnest member.

William Loeb, Jr., was brought up in Springfield, learning his father's trade, at which he worked, but his musical genius soon began to express itself, and he abandoned his trade to teach music, making a specialty of the violin. His interpretations of the masters and of his own compositions on this instrument are truly remarkable.

On February 20, 1865, Mr. Loeb was united in marriage to Emelia Bock, a native of Saxony, Germany, daughter of Carl Frederick and Wilhelmina (Schmidt) Bock, who came from Germany to Wisconsin at so early a day that the Indians were still numerous there. There they followed farming with considerable profit. Thirteen children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Loeb, eight of whom survive and all of whom have more or less a musical talent: Adam Frederick, married; Henry; William; Mrs. Anna Judgens; Charles; Adolph married to Margaret R. H. Ziegler, daughter of William Ziegler, formerly of Lancaster, Pa., is a professor of music; Albert is married to Emma Thornburgh, daughter of J. W. Thornburgh; and Mrs. Clara Hartman. All are residents of Springfield and among the city's most highly esteemed people.

Mr. Loeb is a member of the order of Modern Woodmen of America. A Lutheran in religious faith, he belongs to the German Church of Springfield, and his work in connection with its music makes him especially valued there. He is a pleasant, kindly man, devoted to his profession, and with many warm, personal friends in the community who are attached to him, both because of his genius and on account of his many excellent qualities.

LOGAN, Rev. Thomas Dale.—The need of the age is a spiritual awakening, bringing with it a deeper religion, patriotism, honor, and a love of truth. Material possessions are very well in their place, but they should not be permitted to usurp the more important things of life. Character, truth, honor, justice, love, faith—these are the things of real worth beside which the value of the world's wealth fades into insignificance. The need of the hour is to get things in right proportion again, to cease permitting the material to crowd out the spiritual, but most useful, indeed, is the work of those who are trying to bring about such a change. Thomas Dale Logan, who has been pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Ill., for nearly a quarter of a century, is one who has labored long and faithfully in this great work. He was born January 20, 1831. In Pittsburg, Pa., a son of John T. and Henrietta L. (Bryan) Logan.

John Logan, the paternal grandfather of Dr. Logan, was born in County Armagh, Ireland, and died when John T. was but two years old. The paternal grandmother, Mary Kennedy, was the daughter of James and Jane (Maxwell) Kennedy, and a member of an influential family of Lancaster County, Pa. The maternal great-grandfather, George Bryan, was a member of the First Continental Congress in 1765, President of the Executive Council of Pennsylvania in 1778, Justice of its Supreme Court from 1780 to 1791, and the author of a law for the Abolition of Slavery in 1779. His son, also named George, was Secretary of State for Pennsylvania, and his wife, Maria Mayer Steinman, was descended from a prominent German Moravian family in Bavaria.

John T. Logan was born in Baltimore, Md., October 1, 1800, and in his youth learned the hardware business in Lancaster, Pa., whence he went to Pittsburg in 1829. He engaged in business there in 1831 under the firm name of Logan & Kennedy, and the firm still continues (in 1910) under the name of the Logan-Gregg Hardware Company. Mr. Logan was active in business and religious affairs in Pittsburg, and in that city his death occurred April 17, 1871. He was married March 5, 1852, to Penna. Mrs. R. Bryan, born at Harrisburg, Pa., July 5, 1814, and she died in Pittsburg, December 17, 1897.

The childhood of Thomas Dale Logan was passed at the family home in Allegheny (now a part of Pittsburg), Pa., and his preparatory schooling was secured in Newell Institute, a private school. He graduated from Lafayette College in 1869, at the age of eighteen years, and in 1874 graduated from the Western Theological Seminary. He taught school at the Newell Institute during 1872, and was licensed to preach the Gospel by the Presbytery of Allegheny of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., in April, 1875. On leaving the theological seminary in April, 1874, he supplied the Second Presbyterian Church of Meadville, Pa., for six months, and was called to the pastorate of that church and ordained by the Presbytery of Erie, January 20, 1875. He was released from that pastorate in September, 1888, and on October 7, 1888, began his labor in the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, where he was installed November 13, 1888. Dr. Logan was baptized and brought up in the faith of the Second Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, and united with the Branh-erd Presbyterian Church at Easton, Pa., in 1867, while attending college. He transferred his membership to the North Presbyterian Church of Allegheny until being ordained to the ministry. He was Clerk of the Presbytery of Springfield for thirteen years, Chairman of the Committee on Home Missions of the Presbyterian Synod for Illinois for twelve years, and a member of the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church of 1881, 1891, 1896 and 1906. He is a Republican in political views, but is bound by no party ties, being absolutely independent in his choice of a candidate. On graduating from LaFayette College, he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and three years later the degree of Master of Arts, and in 1894 he re-celved from the same college the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

On March 22, 1877, Dr. Logan was married at Meadville, Pa., to Caroline B. Mahoney, born at Meadville, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Harrison) Mahoney. Four children have been born to this union: Howard, Elizabeth Harrison, Marjorie Sylvia and Elsie Caroline.

LONERGAN, John (deceased), was a resident of Springfield, Ill., for many years. He was an upright and useful citizen, and interested in the progress and welfare of the city. He came to Springfield in 1854 and during his life there witnessed many changes and improvements. He was a devout member of St. Joseph's Catholic Church and in politics was a Democrat. He had formed many friendships and was genuinely mourned by his family and friends. He was born in County Kilkenny, Ireland, in 1823, and his parents died in Ireland. He was educated in his native country and worked on his father's farm as a boy, being occupied in farming until his migration to America in 1854. He spent ten weeks on the ocean voyage and landed in New York, where he remained but a short time before locating in Springfield, which was his home until his demise. He worked at various kinds of employment, but mostly at gardening, and his first employer was Judge Logan. He was a diligent and careful worker, and took pride in the excellence of the work he accomplished.

Mr. Lonergan was married in Springfield, at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, to Miss Margaret O'Grady, born in County Limrick, Ireland. Her parents died in Ireland, and when Mrs. Lonergan came to America she spent six weeks on the voyage. Five children were born to Mr. Lonergan and his wife: Bridget, wife of Thomas Finnegan, of Springfield; Anna died in 1906; Thomas, of Springfield, married Catherine Murray; Mary, unmarried; John W., of Chicago, Ill. Miss Mary Lonergan was born in Springfield, and has spent her entire life in that city. She now owns the home where she resides, at 222 Union Street. She is well known and has many friends.

LONG, Alexander P.—To look back over a long and useful career with the realization that the years have not been spent in vain, but have been productive of material and spiritual advancement, is a satisfaction to any man. Springfield has a number of reliable, worthy men, who, when their appointed tasks have been finished, have settled there to spend their money and give the city the benefit of their experience and foresight. Such a man is Alexander P. Long, whose residence in Springfield has identified him with many of its substantial interests. He was born in Huntington County, Pa., May 1, 1833, a son of John and Rebecca A. (Parks) Long, the former born in Adams County, Pa., in November, 1806, and the latter in New Jersey, in November, 1812. The father was a stone mason. The paternal grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812. John Long was married in Huntingdon County, Penn., where he resided until 1847, then moved to Bedford County, where he remained until his death, which occurred in 1868, when he was sixty-two years of age. His widow survived him until 1891, when she passed away in Erie, Pa. She and her husband had three sons and four daughters. Alexander P. Long attended the country schools of Bedford County, following which he farmed for ten years there, and then entered the employ of the Huntington & Broad Top Railroad, where he remained for seven years, becoming foreman. In 1892, however, he was badly injured, a locomotive blowing up, and for eight months was forced to remain away from work. After he recovered he was given a position as engineer of the same road, and filled it for two years, leaving to enter the employ of the Philadelphia & Erie Railroad Company as engineer. During the following sixteen years he acted as engineer for this road, but then removed to Springfield with his family, which has since been his home. There for four years he was engineer on the Wabash Railroad, then entered the Deffenbaugh Planing Mill. After four years there, as engineer, he became engineer for the Vreedenburgh Planing Mill, and acted in that capacity for ten years, when he retired. Mr. Long is a member of True Americans and the B. L. E., Lodge No. 117, of Erie, Pa. He is a member of the Methodist Church and is one of its liberal supporters.

On June 3, 1856, Mr. Long was married in Hollidaysburg, Pa., to Louisa Welsh, born in Baltimore, Md., July 21, 1834. Her parents moved from Baltimore to Franklin County, Pa., in 1841, and there remained until they died. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Long: James B., engineer for the Wabash Railroad, living in Springfield; Clara M., Superintendent of a refuge home in Honolulu; Lillian, wife of Samuel Young, of Syracuse, N. Y.; Mary E., wife of William Ammann, of Cordova, Ala.; George M., engineer inspector of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, living in Chicago; Ithta, living at home; Rebecca, wife of Ernest Talmage, of Syracuse, N. Y., and William E., deceased. There are fifteen grand-children and one great-grandchild in the family. Mr. Long is widely respected by the many friends he has made during his residence in Springfield. He has succeeded in his work and has influenced many for good during his association with men.

LONG, Fred W., a life-long resident of Springfield, Ill., is a self-made young man, who is well-known and popular throughout Sangamon County. He is active in the councils of the Democratic party. He has served in various public offices and has given the public efficient and satisfactory service in every case.
Mr. Long was born in Springfield, June 10, 1875, and is a son of Charles H. and Louisa Long, both natives of Germany, the former born December 25, 1838, and the latter November 23, 1840. The father engaged in business in Springfield as a grocer and seed-merchant, and built up a successful enterprise.

Fred W. Long passed his childhood in Springfield and attended Trinity Lutheran Parochial School, and Trapp Public School, and supplemented his education with a course in Springfield Business College. Upon leaving school he entered the employ of his father as clerk, later becoming bookkeeper for The John Bressnaer Company. He afterwards became a traveling salesman in the employ of Frank Wiedlocher, a wholesale flour merchant, and displayed considerable business ability and enterprise, winning the confidence and approval of his employers in each position and gaining valuable experience.

Mr. Long's public career began in December, 1898, when he became Deputy County Clerk, in which position he served eight years, and from December, 1906, to December, 1910, filled the office of Chief Deputy Sheriff. His prospects seem to be very bright, as he is held in high esteem wherever known and has had a very fair opportunity of proving his fitness. He has always discharged his various duties with conscientious precision and care, and his honesty and integrity are unquestioned. Since January 1, 1911, Mr. Long has been Claim Adjuster for the Springfield Consolidated Railway Company, the Springfield Gas Light Company, and the Springfield Light, Heat and Power Company. Mr. Long has always been a Democrat in politics, and is a member of Trinity Lutheran Church. He is a member of the Elks, Chamber of Commerce and Business Men's Association, and for five years served as Financial Secretary of the last-named organization. He also served at one time as Delegate from the Retail Clerks' Union to the Federation of Labor.

Mr. Long was married in Springfield, September 15, 1896, to Miss Clara B. Keller, born in Jersey County, daughter of Amos W. and Emma Keller. Four children have blessed this union: Clara Anna, born October 24, 1897; Emma Louisa, November 1, 1898; Erna Elizabeth, April 10, 1900; Catherine, August 30, 1904. Mr. Long owns some real estate in Springfield besides other property.

LOOMIS, WEBER E.—Forty-nine miles northeast of London, England, is the city of Braintree, and it has been the site successively of British and Roman people, laws, customs, religious orders. In the time of King John, Braintree had become a market place for woolen cloth. The early religious pilgrims halted there to rest. The persecuted Flemings, in the days of Queen Elizabeth, fled to and became residents of Braintree. Other people settled in the place; new ideas and thinkers developed, so that with the Reformation, Braintree became a hotbed of dissent and non-conformity. Burning at the stake was often used as an "argument" against the alleged heretics. Fox's "Book of Martyrs" tells of John Loomis (then spelled Lomas), with four women, being burned at the stake, on the same day, at Canterbury, "and who, while the fire was at their ears, did sing psalms, whereat the good Knight, Sir John Norton, being there present, wept bitterly at the sight thereof."

Joseph Loomis, who is believed to have been a grand-nephew or some near relative of the foregoing John Loomis, fearing a like fate for himself and kin, left Braintree with his family and those of his married sisters, for London, and from there, on April 11, 1638, they put to sea on the ship "Susan and Ellen," for North America, where they hoped to enjoy better religious freedom, and arriving at Boston on the 17th day of the following July. In 1639 Joseph Loomis moved with his family and settled on land that he bought February 2, 1639, known as an island during high water in the river at Windsor, Conn., and in the same year built on the land his dwelling house, which stands today as the oldest homestead in America in the perpetual possession of the descendants of its pioneer builders.

Joseph Loomis traced his ancestry back clearly to his great-grandfather, Thomas Lunnys, who is shown by the church records to have died at Thaxted, England, in 1551. The Loomis name and ancestry is traced back to Bolton, County Lancashire, prior to the Norman Conquest, and is of Anglo-Saxon origin. Joseph Loomis was the father of eight children, whose descendants, as contained and named in the latest genealogy of the family, are 13,000 different persons born a Loomis, besides 4,800 maternal ancestors were born of that name. Of these 1,000 had military records and many others were skillful scientists or professionals. In 1868 Dr. Mahlon Loomis invented a machine with which he sent wireless messages between stations eighteen miles apart, which involved the main principles later used by Marconi, and on which he secured a patent, July 30, 1872, but neither the United States Congress nor capitalists realized its utility and importance before his death.

Webner E. Loomis traces his ancestry to Joseph Loomis through his fourth child, John, who was for fourteen years a member of the General Court (or legislature) of Connecticut, and held other offices of public trust until his death September 1, 1888.

Among the descendants of the son of John Loomis, whose portraits appear in one of the illustrations of this volume, is the scientist, Prof. Elias Loomis (No. 244), graduate of Yale in 1830, its tutor in science 1833-55; professor in the Western Reserve College 1837-44, and of the University of New York, 1841-49; also employed by the United States Government 1840-45 in determining difference of longitude.
between New York City and other cities. He was the first to ascertain the velocity of electricity. Over 500,000 of his books were used in the schools and colleges of the United States and also translated and taught in other countries. By Prof. Loomis' continued effort he assisted in the establishment of the United States weather bureau, systematized its work and wrote its main guide book. His article on "Contributions to Meteorology," was published by the Government in 1886. He was professor of natural philosophy and astronomy of Yale College from 1860 to August 15, 1889, when he died, bequeathing $300,000 to promote astronomy.

John Mason Loomis (No. 245), Colonel of Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, commander of the Fourth Division, Fifteenth Army Corps, died in October, 1900, leaving upwards of $1,000,000, to which his sister added $500,000, to be applied in founding the "Loomis Institute" on the grounds of the old Loomis Homestead at Windsor, Conn. Dr. Alfred L. Loomis (No. 246) was the first to use open-air treatment for certain diseases, was a professor in the University of New York, and physician to Bellevue Hospital. Gen. Cyrus O. Loomis, was commander of the Loomis Battery in the War of 1861; Francis B. Loomis, was Assistant Secretary of War; James Loomis, were given medals by the United States Congress for heroism in the War of 1812; and Ichabod Loomis was a soldier in the War of the Revolution.

Another descendant of John Loomis was the Hon. A. Loomis (No. 243) of Little Falls, N. Y. He wrote a portion of the State Constitution of New York (1846), and assisted in the preparation of the Code of Procedure as adopted by the Legislature of New York in 1847. He originated and, after a struggle of thirty years, had adopted, an amendment to the New York Constitution requiring a vote of the people on expenditure of State moneys. He was Judge of different courts in New York, a member of the United States Congress, and filled with ability other offices of public concern. His brother, Horace Loomis, the grandfather of our subject, resided in Salisbury, Herkimer County, N. Y., where he married Julia Tuttle (No. 240), of which family are Bishop Tuttle of St. Louis, Mo., James Tuttle, D. D., deceased, for many years a pastor in Minneapolis, Minn., and others.

Horace Loomis moved from Salisbury, N. Y., in 1838, with his wife and children: Thaddeus Levi, William Burrill and Horace Julius. He purchased land and built his home in Section 1, Town 9 North, Range 3 West, which is about one and one-half miles east of the village of Chesterfield, Macoupin County, Ill., at the beginning of the south end of the then prairie, which extended from there, without the intervention of a tree or anything else other than the tall grasses in their season, to the present site of the city of Chicago. He pursued dairying, with 120 cows, and farming, hauling his products to St. Louis, Mo. He died December 20, 1850, his widow passing away in 1861; both he buried in the Loomis Cemetery on a part of the original home farm. William B. Loomis (No. 239), father of Webster E., was born in Salisbury, N. Y., April 28, 1829. He married Mary A. Eldred (No. 237), who died October 5, 1854, daughter of William and Ruth (Brace) Eldred (No. 241). Her father and mother came from Herkimer County, N. Y., in 1822, and bought and located on a farm two and three-fourths miles west of Carrolton, Ill. The Eldreds trace their ancestors back to one of the brothers of King Eldred, of England, who was known to be, successful in his battles against the Danish Intruders on English soil. The word Eldred means "terrible," and the part the members of the family have taken in the battles in England, in the Indian wars and the Wars of the Revolution, of 1812 and 1861-65, proves them to have been well named or properly defined. The Eldreds and Braces came from England about 1640.

The Braces are usually educators and public spirited men. Of John Brace of Litchfield, Conn., Harriet Beecher Stowe said: "He exceeded all teachers I ever knew in the faculty of reaching companionship: much of the inspiration and training of my early days consisted not in things I was supposed to be studying, but in hearing, while seated unnoticed at my desk, the conversation of Mr. Brace with the older classes." His son, Charles L. Brace, was celebrated for his great work of philanthropy among the children of the poor of New York City and in other countries, as well as a traveler and author of note. He died in Switzerland. The mother of Ruth (Brace) Eldred was a member of the Bushnell family, and a near relative of Horace Bushnell, the eminent theologian of Litchfield, Conn. It was in honor of this family that the city of Bushnell, Ill., was named.

To the marriage of William B. Loomis and Mary A. Eldred there were born: Mary Lucy, who died in infancy; Webner E., born November 11, 1851; and Leverett Wilbur, born February 8, 1853. (Illustration.) At the center of the top of the cut is the Coat of Arms of the Loomis family: joining it on its left side and lower corner is the dwelling house where the brothers, Webner E. and Leverett W., were born, together with the grounds and buildings, which was their and their father's home until leaving it in May, 1865, to reside in Minneapolis, Minn. Near above dwelling house was the mill (No. 21) in which were ground corn and wheat, and also logs sawed into lumber. No. 20 is the schoolhouse, as first attended by the brothers, on Section 6 of above township. The picture down to No. 85 tells much of what Leverett W. Loomis did to occupy his time from one year down and nine months old to about eighteen years of age. At five years of age he was his father's steam engineer of the mill while sawing logs, and, during that time, seeing that the expert engineer of the mill could not ascertain or repair an injury to the cylinder end of the piston, he pointed it out and directed its repair. About two weeks after he began to learn the jeweler's trade (1870) at Carlinville, Ill., perceiving that the proprietor of the store (a jeweler) was unable to construct a double-faced business clock for a customer, Leverett W. made the clock and it rendered satisfactory service for over twenty-five years before requiring repair. He then made the works of a small watch, but such work proving too simple to interest him, he took up the making and mounting of lenses, also electricity, chemistry and other scientific studies as suited his purpose. His first lens was the main one used in a transcript instrument of his own make (No. 95), followed by a telescope with a 2½-inch lens (No. 93), and then that of 6-inch objective of Pell material chromatic clock made (No. 98), valued at several thousand dollars, which he gave to Blackburn College, at Carlinville, Ill., in 1885. He then made the objective of two different microscopes, the second one (No. 100) of which, being borrowed by a friend, was exhibited unknown to Mr. Loomis, before several microscope bodies, including the National Micoscopic Society, in Syracuse, N. Y., in 1885, and where it received the highest praise of any exhibit there.

While a pupil in a country school, near Carrolton, L. W. Loomis began to make electric machines to help illustrate lessons in philosophy. During the remainder of his life he made many different machines of the electric class. He began business in 1874 as a jeweler in Carrolton, Ill., where he built up the largest business in that locality. A photograph of his store (1896) is No. 124 of the cut. He was a Democrat in politics and extremely liberal in religious views. He died April 6, 1896, leaving two daughters, Mabel (No. 233) and Myra (No. 239) as his only surviving children. His genius had been recognized in this country and in Europe, and it may be well said that his death was a loss to the whole world.

Webner E. Loomis at six years of age began to work in the garden, mill and on his father's farm, attending school in its terms, and continued until moving to Minneapolis, Minn. Upon the death of his father in June, 1867, he returned to and became a member of the family of his uncle, Horace J. Loomis, then residing on his farm about one mile southeast of Chesterfield. There Webner E. worked on the farm, attending the village schools during the fall and winter, and at every opportunity studied histories, special works, encyclopedias, periodicals, and the best in newspapers as found at his uncle's, the village library, and at the neighbors' houses. He became a student in Blackmun University (now College) in 1870, and by carrying on extra studies, succeeded in graduating in June, 1873, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, having earned his way by farm work and teaching. His uncles, Horace J. and Thaddeus L., persuaded him to study law, securing a place for him with the late U. S. Senator, John M. Palmer, whose office in Springfield, he entered in October, 1873, being admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court on January 8, 1876.

Mr. Loomis possesses unusual ability for discovering defects and construing the law or procedure that come under his investigation. He showed in a legal hearing for his client that the city of Springfield had been imprisoning, without legal right, violators of certain ordinances, and new ones had to be enacted to cure the defects. He showed that the form of notice making nonresident defendants to suits in chancery, as used in Sangamon County for some thirty-five years, was void, and his corrected form has been used ever since. He also discovered that the ordinances fixing and collecting water taxes or rates were illegal and they were amended. He put a stop to prosecutions without trial by a jury under the Vagabond Act. Upon the failure of the Springfield Savings Bank, the terms of the special charter of the bank proved a puzzle in a demurrer to a bill in chancery brought by its creditors against the corporation, and its members. Several members of the bar took part in the discussion. Mr. Loomis waited and made the last argument to the court in the matter, in which he was fully sustained in an appeal of the case to the Superior Court. One of the members of an able firm of lawyers in an adjoining county came into Mr. Loomis' office and laid down an abstract of title to 1400 acres of land in Missouri, saying that the best lawyers in Kansas City, St. Joseph and St. Louis, Mo., had examined the abstract and pronounced the title a good merchantable one, and that he agreed with them; but Mr. Loomis found over sixty material flaws in the title, some of which caused much time and expense to the laboring members of the bar.

Mr. Loomis, as a trial lawyer, has accomplished some remarkable successes, and is equally resourceful in the control of civil suits, but never takes his client's case into court if it can be by any manner be fairly adjusted without recourse to trial. Mr. Loomis has a large collection of works on parliamentary law, and, in a series of articles published in a periodical a few years ago, he gave definite and accurate definitions of "constitution," "by-laws," "regulations," "rules," and other words and phrases. Mr. Loomis has traveled extensively in this country and abroad, visiting England, Belgium, Luxemburg, Germany, Switzerland and France. His store of knowledge enables him to do much as a critic, with word and pen, concerning the works of the artist, teacher, law-writer and inventor. He steps higher, into the great problems of astronomy, and has written instructively on the subject. His article entitled "Big Thought Fields," as published in the "Illinois State Register," December 24, 1911, has at-LOPER, Harry T., a successful business man of Springfield, Ill., has been a resident of the city for the past thirty years and has been identified with various enterprises there. At present he is the owner and proprietor of the Lyric Moving Picture Theater, located at 223-225 South Fifth Street, and in this connection has built up a petitioal popularity. Mr. Loper was born in Greenfield, Greene County, Ill., September 24, 1860, son of John T. and Susan E. (McBride) Loper. The paternal ancestors were early settlers of Illinois and the father a well-known farmer of Macoupin County. The mother, a native of Illinois, descended from an old Kentucky family. Harry T. was the only child of John T. Loper and his wife. After receiving a good common school education in his native town, he learned the trade of painter, at which he worked for some time, and later became connected with preparing histories of various Illinois counties.

About 1880 Mr. Loper located in Springfield, where his first business enterprise was conducting a restaurant on Sixth Street, where the Postal-Telegraph Company's office is now located. He subsequently removed his business to East Washington, between Sixth and Seventh Streets, where he was located five years, then moved to Dwight, Ill., and became proprietor of the Hotel "Mozon." In 1893 Mr. Loper opened a restaurant at his present address, which enterprise proved successful and was continued until the restaurant was destroyed by riot August 14, 1908. When public sentiment was aroused against the colored prisoners, in 1908, lynching was agitated. The Sheriff increased his force of deputies, but excitement grew. He then called upon Mr. Loper as owner of a large touring car, deputizing him to take the prisoners out of the city, away from the excitement. As a loyal citizen, believing it was best to avoid mob law, Mr. Loper complied with the Sheriff's request. This infuriated the mob and rioting began. The mob first attacked Mr. Loper's place of business and then his automobile. The history of the events that followed is related in the general history of the county.

When Mr. Loper rebuilt his place he had it fitted suitably for a theater, having conducted the same since January, 1909. He has learned to understand what will please his patrons and has endeavored to give them the best value for their money he is able to secure. The productions given are among the best in the city and the manager has a reputation that is gratifying and wide-spread.

Mr. Loper was married in Springfield in 1886, to Mary J., daughter of Morris Power deceased. Four children have been born of this union, of whom three survive: Marle; Russell P. is in the employ of the Appleton Company of New York City and Henry A. Mr. Loper is much interested in public affairs and in the welfare of the community, and is considered an upright, useful citizen. He is a Republican in political views and fraternally is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and has belonged to the Illinois National Guard since 1888, now having rank of Major and Chief Commissary Second Brigade.

LORD, John Henry, a prominent citizen of Springfield, Ill., is well known in railroad circles, having worked thirty-one years in various lines of railroad work. He was born in Des Moines, Iowa, May 27, 1860, son of Philander Augusta and Margaret Ann (Olliver) Lord. The father was born in Bellefontaine, Ohio, and is now retired from active life. The mother was born in Mechanicsburg, Ill., March 1, 1832.

John H. Lord received his education in the public schools of Mt. Pulaski, Ill., and after leaving school engaged in mechanical work, which he continued three years, then began working for a railroad company and filled various positions before securing his present one, that of District Passenger Agent for the Illinois Central Company. He is well qualified for the work under his charge, having been so long engaged in similar occupations, and understands thoroughly every detail of it. He has always been enterprising, industrious and energetic, making his own way in the world by ability and ambition. He is a Republican in politics, and for the past twenty years has been a member of the Knights of Pythias. He is not a member of any church, although a frequent attendant, and his parents attended the Christian Church.

Mr. Lord was married, at Chestnut, Ill., July 28, 1881, to Miss Laura, daughter of George W. and Caroline (Skeene) Harcourt, who was born at Indianapolis, Ind., June 9, 1857. Two children have blessed this union: Clara Idola, born October 26, 1882, and Vernon Harcourt, born June 3, 1890. Mr. Lord owns the family home at 922 North Fourth street, Springfield, as well as property in the State of Mississippi.

LORTON, Albert Perry, one of Sangamon County's most distinguished citizens, who for many years has been prominently identified with the educational and official interests of the village of Auburn, Ill., is a member of an old and honored family and a direct descendant of a soldier of the Revolutionary War. His widow surviving him until August 15, 1838, and most of their children and grandchildren were at the bedside of each. Robert Lorton was one of the pioneers of this section of the State, suffering here when the land, the wild animals and the wild men were still unconquered, and doing his full share in building up his community and advancing the cause of civilization. Robert A. Lorton, the paternal grandfather of Albert Perry Lorton, was born in Henry County, Va., September 11, 1782, and as a young man came to Illinois in 1800, but returned to his native State soon afterwards, and from there enlisted for service in the War of 1812. Later he went to Kentucky, and emigrated thence to Illinois in 1821, settling in Greene County, where he built the second log cabin north of Apple Creek, on what is known as Lorton's Prairie, a mile south of Whitehall. His elder brother, John, had come to this section in the spring of 1821 and Robert A. followed him in the fall of the same year. He died at Mt. Auburn, Ill., in April, 1830. Mr. Lorton was married to Mary Johnson, who was born in Kentucky, and to them there were born the following children: John, William B., Thomas Johnson, James, Maria, Jackson, Rodgerick R. and Amelia, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of Thomas Johnson.

The maternal grandfather of Mr. Lorton, Jacob Crabtree, was born in Wilson County, Tenn., February 15, 1801, and there married Martha Bally, who was born in the same county May 22, 1804. They emigrated to Illinois in 1822, settling in Morgan County, but soon thereafter removed to a farm he had entered three miles west of Manchester, and there spent the remainder of their long and useful lives, the farm now being the property of their son, W. A. Crabtree. Both Mr. and Mrs. Crabtree were of old Revolutionary stock.

Thomas Johnson Lorton, father of Albert Perry Lorton, was born February 13, 1821, at Old Ripley, Bond County, Ill. In young manhood he engaged in farming and developed five farms from the raw prairie. In 1844 he went to Texas and voted for Polk and Dallas at Little Rock, Ark. He and his wife then settled at St. Louis, Mo., Mr. Lorton having attained the advanced age of ninety years. Thomas J. Lorton was married (first) to Mary Elizabeth Crabtree, who was born in Wilson County, Tenn., October 23, 1822, and to this union there were born children as follows: William Sylvester, born July 29, 1847, was a soldier of the Civil War, and died at St. Louis, Mo., March 15, 1906, and was buried in the Federal Cemetery Grave No. 32,653, his family now residing at Houston, Tex.; Albert Perry; James Jackson, born January 2, 1851, died at Harvel, Ill.; Jacob W. Wesley, born March 22, 1853, died at Mexico, Mo., January 16, 1893; Martha Jaue, born March 20, 1855, died March — , 1896, at Mt. Auburn, Ill.; Robert A., born February 2, 1856, died October 11, 1883, at Raymond, Ill.; John Oscar, born September 1, 1858, living at Roodhouse, Ill.; and Joseph, born August 10, 1860, died in September of the same year. The mother of the foregoing children died August 20, 1860, and on February 25, 1862, Mr. Lorton was married to Phoebe Hutton, by whom he had the following children: Sarah, born December 25, 1862, died May 25, 1863, at Highbee, Mo.; Thirsey Jane, born August 11, 1864, died February 9, 1892, at Honey Bend, Ill.; George Washington, born October 21, 1866, living in St. Louis, Mo.; Alice, born February 22, 1869, living at Carlton, Ill.; Edward, born January 16, 1872, died at Highbee Mo., October 18, 1880; Benjamin, born June 1, 1873, living in 111. Carlton. Ill.; Henry Otis, born January 3, 1877, died at Roodhouse, Ill., October 26, 1896; Grace, born May 3, 1881, living west of St. Louis, Mo.; Mary Emily, born September 16, 1883, died February 28, 1884, at Raymond, Ill.; Freddie, born August 16, 1885, died February 3, 1888, at Highbee, Mo.; and Thomas, born October 7, 1887, died July 13, 1887, at Raymond, Ill.

Albert Perry Lorton was two years of age when his parents removed to Mt. Auburn, Christian County, Ill., and he spent his early life on a farm, securing his education in the common schools. When twelve years of age he started to work out, receiving $12 per month, which at that time was considered very good wages for a boy. On February 22, 1888, he went to Auburn, where he has resided to the present time, at first engaging in the grocery business for a period extending over five years, and now being engaged in the insurance business. For twenty-four years he has been local correspondent for the "Virden Reporter," a local newspaper published at Virden, Ill. He has been closely connected with the official affairs of this section for an extensive period, having served as City Marshal of Auburn for four years. Superintendent of Streets for eight years, a like period as Police Magistrate. He represented Auburn Township on the Board of Supervisors and was Chairman of that body when the State Fair was located at Springfield, signing the deeds transferring the property of the county to the State and taking an active interest in all the work at that time. He has been a Justice of the Peace for nine years, is now serving his third term in that office, has been a Notary Public for the same length of time, and for many years was a member of the County and Senatorial Democratic Committees. In March, 1870, Mr. Lorton joined the Advent Christian Church, has since served as Sunday School Superintendent and Secretary, and is now Trustee of the Southern Illinois Advent Christian Conference and Trustee of Sanderlin Academy, a colored college located at White, Tenn. Mr. Lorton is well known in fraternal circles, having, December 27, 1871, joined the Ark and Anchor Lodge No. 354, A. F. & A. M., located at Auburn, Ill. He has served as Worshipful Master for several terms, has filled all the offices in the lodge except Tyler and Treasurer, and his present term as Secretary will round out thirty-four years in office in this lodge. He is now High Priest of Auburn Chapter, No. 92, R. A. M., and Thrice Illustrious Master of Auburn Council No. 90, R. S. M.

On September 29, 1874, Mr. Lorton was united in marriage with Rebecca Williamson, Rev. A. S. Celkins officiating. To this union two children were born: J. Crawford, born at the Williamson homestead May 15, 1876; and Floyd Orlando, born two miles south of Curran, Ill. J. Crawford Lorton was married April 19, 1890, at St. Louis, Mo., by Rev. W. W. King, to Delia Higgins, who was born December 8, 1877, at Fauquier, Ill. Floyd Orlando Lorton was married at Clinton, Ill., by Rev. Dr. Bickert, to Zola May Gates, who was born May 15, 1880, at Nilwood, Ill., and to this union there has been born one child: Albert Perry Lorton, Jr., who was born August 18, 1906, at the home of his grandfather in Auburn, Ill.

LOVING, John H., one of the most practical farmers and stock-raisers of Sangamon County, and owner of an excellent farm on Section 10, Chatham Township, was born in Missouri, June 5, 1874, son of Eli and Jane (Sullivan) Loving. The family history is given at some length in the sketch of the father, Eli Loving, which appears in a preceding section of this volume.

When about four years of age John H. Loving accompanied his parents to Illinois, and lived on a farm near Waverly, Morgan County, two years, after which the family removed to Sangamon and settled in Talkington Township. He spent his boyhood on a farm and attended the district schools, and at the age of sixteen years began working for neighboring farmers by the month. He has spent his life in agricultural pursuits, for which he has great liking and ability, and about 1898 rented a farm of eighty acres in Loami Township, where he remained one year, then rented another eighty-acre farm for a year, and in 1900 rented 120 acres of land of Peter C. Campbell, in Chatham Township. In 1904 he rented 100 acres on Section 10, Chatham Township, the following year operated 240 acres and in 1906 added 100 acres. For the past four or five years he has operated 400 acres of land on Section 10, putting in each year a large corn crop, to which purpose he devotes from 120 to 200 acres, averaging about 200 acres. In the year 1910 he planted 170 acres of corn, forty acres of oats and forty of wheat, and left 100 acres of pasture.

Mr. Loving has for years given special attention to raising hogs, and each years ships about five carloads of stock from his farm, selling his product direct to the markets in Chicago and St. Louis. In conducting the large acreage under his charge Mr. Loving has to keep all the details of the work thoroughly in mind and has made a special study of the best method of rotating crops in order to secure good results, the best kind of stock for dairy purposes and for the market, and other problems along agricultural lines. He is a successful farmer and a self-made man, beginning with a comparatively small farm and undertaking larger enterprises as he felt prepared to do so. He is a public-spirited citizen and always ready to lend his assistance in any project which has in view the betterment of the community. In politics he follows the fortunes of the Republican party, but, though frequently solicited to accept public office, steadily refuses to do so, leaving such matters in the hands of those who are willing to assume the responsibility, and voting for measures he considers will be of general benefit. Fraternally he is a member of the M. W. A. Camp, No. 845, of Loami, and in religious matters is a member of the Christian Church.

Mr. Loving was married, February 15, 1892, to Miss Minnie McLaughlin, who was born in Loami Township, August 17, 1876, daughter of Christopher McLaughlin, a native of Kentucky, who came to Sangamon County as a boy and became one of the prominent citizens in the county. He now resides in Springfield. Mr. and Mrs. Loving are parents of two sons: Earl, born December 15, 1892, at home, and Lloyd, born November 10, 1905.

LOVING, Levi.—The Loving family has been prominent and respected in Sangamon County, since some years prior to the middle of the nineteenth century, and the maternal grandfather of Levi Loving, was one of the earliest settlers of the county, having settled on Sugar Creek, Auburn Township, as early as 1818. Both families have furnished many useful and public-spirited citizens, who have always been ready to promote the best interests of their communities, and many of them still reside in the county, though a number have become successful in other States. Levi Loving is a native of Sangamon County, born east of the village of Auburn, in the township of that name, January 1, 1846, a son of George W. and Eliza (Wimer) Loving, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Illinois. As a young man George W. Loving moved to Kentucky and was there married, at Greensburg, his first wife dying in Kentucky, left three sons, of whom Wilson, born about 1830, lives in California.

George W. Loving emigrated from Kentucky to Sangamon County, and there married, as his second wife, Eliza Wimer, who bore him eight sons and two daughters: George, a farmer living near Sutton, Neb.; Levi, the second son; Christopher, of Davenport, Iowa; Andrew, a farmer living near Birmingham, Iowa; James, of Davenport; William, a farmer of Iowa; Albert, of Keokuk, Iowa; Ulysses, a farmer living in Loami Township, Sangamon County; Caroline, wife of Robert Glisco, the oldest child, now sixty-eight years of age, living in Keokuk, Iowa; and another daughter. The father of Mrs. Loving reached the venerable age of ninety-six years, dying in Auburn Township, where a large part of his life had been spent, as he came there about 1818, settling near Sugar Creek. G. W. Loving died at the age of seventy-eight years, as the result of an accident, in 1880. His father had been a drummer boy in the Revolutionary War and led the regiment after his right hand had been cut off at the wrist, being a brave and determined young man. This wound was bound up and eventually healed, and he died at the age of eighty-eight years, near Richmond, Va.

The boyhood of Levi Loving was spent in Auburn Township and he attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood. In those days it was a common thing for a person wishing to teach school to solicit pupils in a neighborhood, and, having the promise of enough to form several classes, taught in the primitive buildings then used for such purposes or at the homes of some of the pupils. When Mr. Loving was about fourteen years of age his parents moved to Morgan County, where he was married, December 7, 1896, and the following day started with his bride for Jefferson County, Mo., and lived several years about ten miles south of Fairfield, that county. In 1880, on account of having sustained a loss by fire, Mr. Loving returned to Illinois and took charge of a big flouring mill at Waverly for six years. In 1886 he moved to Lowder, Sangamon County, remaining there about twenty years. In 1906 he moved to Suduth Park, where he remained four years and carried on general farming with good results.

Mr. Loving was married, December 7, 1866, to Miss Jane Sullivan, who was born near White Hall, Ill., October 12, 1848, daughter of Jerry Sullivan, who was a native of Tennessee and in an early day settled in Illinois. Mr. Sullivan enlisted in the One Hundred Twenty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and died of mesies, at Eastport, Miss., in 1864. His remains were brought back to Illinois and buried in what is known as the Wimer Cemetery, at Auburn, which is located on the farm settled by Mr. Loving’s maternal grandfather. Besides Mrs. Loving the following children of Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan survive: Adam, a farmer of Jersey County, Ill.; Herbert, of Jacksonville; Winfield Scott, of Louisiana, Mo.; Mary, widow of Larkin Christman, living in Texas; America, wife of Francis Lomax. The mother of these children died January 12, 1872.

Mr. and Mrs. Loving became parents of the following children: two who died in infancy; Etna, wife of David Weems, living near Shelbyville, Mo., was born in Iowa, June 12, 1869;
Lilly, born March 30, 1872, married Lewis Birkle, and they live on a farm near Virden, Ill.; John H. a sketch of whom appears in this volume; Mary E. and John H. are twins, born June 5, 1875, the former the wife of Oscar Williams, living on a farm near Waverly; James M., born February 17, 1875, is in charge of the Suduth land interests, lives in Suduth Park and has full control of large stock and farming business.

Mr. Loving has for the past few years operated 400 acres of land on Section 11, Chatham Township. He has spent a large part of his life in the county and can well remember the time when his father's farm was largely covered with prairie grass, which grew as high as the head of a man on horseback. There were but few improvements in the neighboring country and he has witnessed the rapid development of fertile farms and the building up of important enterprises in Sangamon County with great interest and pleasure. He has voted the Republican ticket since attaining his majority and since 1861 has been an active member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Loving is well acquainted in Sangamon County and has many warm friends, among whom he is most popular.

LUCAS, George T. (deceased).—The Old Dominion furnished the very backbone of the nation, and her sons were among the hardest pioneers of the more western States. Illinois owes much to these men, who penetrated the fastnesses of the Prairie State and stumped upon its development those sturdy virtues which make for moral, as well as material, advancement. Among the men to whose energy and foresightfulness Sangamon County is indebted is the late George T. Lucas, for many years one of the substantial farmers of Cooper Township. He was born at Harper's Ferry, Va., July 7, 1835, a son of Henderson and Elizabeth (Buckley) Lucas, of Virginia. The parents were farming people, living and dying in Virginia. They had two daughters and one son, all now deceased.

George T. Lucas spent his boyhood days in Virginia, working on a farm and attending school. In 1853 Mr. Lucas came to Sangamon County, settling in Cooper Township, where he farmed until his death, May 6, 1906. During the great struggle between the North and South, he served according to his principles, and was a brave soldier and good man. The Methodist Church held his membership, and his widow also belongs to it. As a Democrat, he exerted considerable influence politically, but did not desire public office.

On August 22, 1865, he was married, in Sangamon County, to Sarah A. Miller, daughter of John Miller, born in Virginia, who married a Sangamon County girl. Mr. Miller died when Mrs. Lucas was a child, but her mother survives, at the age of eighty years, and makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Daniel Waters. There were four daughters and two sons in the Miller family: George, of Rochesters; Harriet, wife of Daniel Waters, a farmer of Sangamon County; Edward is a farmer; Mrs. Lucas; Eliza, wife of John Baldwin of Rochester, and Alice, wife of Samuel Prather, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Lucas became the parents of three children: John, at home; Mary, married, and Jessie, at home. Mr. Lucas owns a fine farm of fifty acres on Section 6, Cooper Township, and is in comfortable circumstances. The record made by Mr. Lucas was one of which his family may well be proud. Never one to thrust himself forward, he did his duty as he saw it, according to the creed he professed, and died as he had lived, a Christian gentleman.

LUCAS, Reuben, of an old and honorable English family, was born in Warwickshire, England, May 15, 1801, a son of Thomas and Eliza (Wilkinson) Lucas, both also natives of Warwickshire, the father born in 1803, and the mother in 1804. He died December 2, 1877, and she in 1880. The father was a gardener and he and his wife had five sons and five daughters, named: Abel was killed July 6, 1877, at the age of thirty-one years; Ann, widow of Joshua Perks, whose husband died recently, lives in Canada; Eliza, wife of Daniel Marshall, of England; Emma, widow of John Walker, of England; Charles, of England; Harriet, wife of David Weighan, of England, Joseph, also of England; Reuben Lucas, whose name heads this sketch; Thomas, a farmer of Wyoming; Hannah, wife of Henry Dunkley. The parents of these children spent their entire lives in England.

Mr. Lucas received a good education in the common schools of Warwickshire, and after leaving school worked for a time in a brick yard near his home. Later he engaged in mining and has been identified with mining interests, practically all his life. He came to America with his wife and children in 1830. He was married at Dawson, on September 3, of that year. In 1856, he took up his residence at Starne, where he remained until 1802, then accepted a position with the Jones & Adams Coal Company, taking up his residence in Springfield, where he purchased his present home.

He was married in the Episcopal church at Foshell, a small village near Warwickshire, England, by Rev. Harry Alfred Williams, November 13, 1851, to Sarah Elizabeth White, born at Black Horse Lake, England, May 30, 1863, daughter of Henry and Ann (Nickson) White, both natives of England, the father born at Black Horse Lake, January 6, 1836, and the mother July 19, 1841. Mr. White has been in mining business all his life, and in November, 1884, he brought his family, including his wife and Mrs. Lucas, to the United States. He first located at Dawson and in 1889 removed to Illyer, where he now lives retired, at the age of seventy-five years, his wife being seventy years old. Thirteen children were born to

Three children sur- vive of the five born to Mr. and Mrs. Lueck; Arthur R.; Albert F., an electrician, and Josephine, wife of William Schnapp, a shoe mer- chant of Springfield. Mr. Lueck is a Democrat, but has not been willing to allow his name to be used on the party ticket. For many years he has been one of the liberal supporters of Trinity German Lutheran Church, and is highly esteemed in it, as he is throughout Sangamon County.

Lupton, Julius W.—The Illinois farmer, be he enterprising and energetic, is usually loath to transfer the control of his operations to other hands, even when he has reached the age that men in other lines of endeavor would consider advanced years, but when he finally does relinquish his hold upon active labor and retires to his residence in the city, he makes one of the substantial, solid citizens of his new community, and as such is a welcome addition. Among the well-known retired agriculturists of Pawnee, Ill., is Julius W. Lupton, who for many years was engaged in tilling the soil of Sangamon County. He was born in Hampshire County, W. Va., February 6, 1849, a son of Jonah and Maria (George) Lupton.

Jonah Lupton was born January 3, 1805, and his wife May 15, 1807, both in Hampshire County, and were married in April, 1828. They remained there until October, 1854, when they removed to Ohio, later going to Indiana and finally to Illinois, settling in December, 1854, at the present site of New City, where for five years Mr. Lupton carried on operations on rented land. He then removed to a property one-half mile south of Pawnee, which is a part of the land owned at present by his son Julius, and there the couple lived until their deaths, that of the father occurring October 19, 1890, and that of the mother in December, 1902, and both are buried in Horse Creek Cemetery near Pawnee. The children of Jonah and Maria Lupton, all born in Hampshire County, W. Va., were as follows: Hannah, born December 13, 1829, died in Shelby County, Ill., August 26, 1906, married James J. Lupton, also deceased, by whom she had these children, of whom the first three survive—Ira J., Lucy, Walter F., Samuel Newton, Clara C., Tillibury; Jessie, and one who died in infancy; Rebecca, born September 11, 1831, died September 26, 1893, unmarried, in Sangamon County; Mercy, born January 5, 1833, died August 31, 1903, unmarried, in Shelby County; Job S., born November 11, 1841, died unmarried at Memphis, Tenn., of measles, while in the Union army, March 19, 1863; and Julius. Julius W. Lupton received his education in the public schools of Pawnee, Ill., and until 1888 resided on a farm adjoining the homestead. In that year he moved to the Seeley farm, which he operated until 1905, and then came to Pawnee to spend the remainder of his life in retire-
Mr. Lupton has been very successful in his agricultural efforts and owns the home farm of 197 acres, nine and one-half acres of land at the edge of Pawnee, and a section of land in Arkansas. He has always been a lover of home and family and is kind and generous in disposition, sharing his competence with those in want who have not been so successful as he. He is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his fraternal connections are with the Modern Woodmen and Loyal Americans. He has been prominent politically as an ardent supporter of Republican principles, and for many years has been serving in his present office of School Director.

Mr. Lupton was married in Pawnee, Ill., September 14, 1875, to Louisa Smith, who was born in Chatham, Ill., April 23, 1854, and died January 27, 1910, in Pawnee, being buried at Horse Creek Cemetery. Her father, Alexander Smith, was an early settler of Sangamon County, who came from Tennessee and engaged in farming. Leaving home one day to attend to a business matter, he did not return, and was never thereafter heard from. Mrs. Lupton's mother was a Miss Locust, who died in Chatham, Illinois.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lupton, of whom Bessie G., born November 28, 1889, near Pawnee, died September 11, 1901; Cora Irene, born near Pawnee, March 20, 1877, married William R. McTaggard, December 28, 1900, and now lives in Pawnee, having two children; Irene, born March 31, 1902, and Esther, born September 8, 1904; and Amos Sherman, born April 12, 1881, now engaged in the hardware business in Pawnee, married Maud Hen- shie, and has one child, Glenn, born February 4, 1906.

LUTRICKS, John, Jr. (deceased)—The loss of a dear one is hard to bear, but when he is snatched away in the very prime of life, it is sometimes difficult to understand why the best are taken. In his earnest, steadfast life, which, short as it was, was filled with good deeds and kindly impulses, the late John Lutricks Jr. taught a lesson of honest living, and left behind a memory tenderly cherished by his family. He was born in Germany, March 9, 1885, and inherited many of the sterling virtues of his countrymen. He was a son of John Sr. and Kate Lutricks, natives of Germany, where they carried on farming.

John Lutricks Jr. went to school in Germany and there learned the carpenter's trade, later coming to the United States. Upon arrival in Springfield, he immediately secured employment as a carpenter, and so efficient did he prove that he soon began to take contracts for himself, eventually becoming well known as a contractor. He was a Catholic and in political convictions was a Democrat, but his ideas did not run in the direction of political preferment.

Mr. Lutricks was married in Springfield. Mrs. Lutricks has lived in Springfield for the past thirty years, and all her interests are centered there. Mr. and Mrs. Lutricks became the parents of the following children: Elizabeth, Eva, Eddie and Elmer. Mr. Lutricks died at the family residence No. 821 South Eleventh Street, in February, 1900. His remains were tenderly laid in rest in Calvary Cemetery. The family is highly respected in Springfield, and Mrs. Mary Lutricks owns considerable property in the neighborhood in which she resides.

LUTYENS, Henry, M. D.—Probably there is no profession that has advanced so rapidly in the last several decades as that of medicine; many discoveries have been made, new appliances have been invented, and many theories long honored as correct have been found wrong; and the doctor of today who would keep abreast of the times must be in constant touch with the pulse of the medical world. Henry Lutyens, M. D., a successful physician and surgeon of Sangamon County, Ill., whose chosen field of practice is the city of Farmingdale, was born in Gardner Township, Sangamon County, March 26, 1876, a son of Herman and Margaret (Raman) Lut- yens, natives of Germany. Herman Lutyens came to America in 1866, settling first near Tul- lula, Menard County, Ill., where he was married about 1869, and began farming near that town. His death occurred near Peoria, Ill., in 1908.

Henry Lutyens attended the district schools of Gardner Township and remained on his father's farm until he was eighteen years of age, when he began teaching school at Old Berlin. For two years he served as Assistant Principal there, and in 1890 entered the Dixon Business College, after leaving which he returned to the home farm and remained until 1901, when he entered the Valparaiso College of Pharmacy. Graduating in the class of 1902, he in that year entered the American College of Medicine and Surgery, at Chicago, where he took a full three years' course and graduated with the class of 1905. On June 29th of that year he was given a certificate by the State Board, and at once established himself in practice at Farmingdale, Ill. During the year 1909 he took a post-graduate course, and also spent one year as intern at St. Augustine Hospital, in Chicago. The Doctor has a fully equipped office, fitted up with all the newest and most modern appliances, and also has a large laboratory, where he compounds all of his own prescriptions. He is a careful student, a kind and gentle physician and steady-handed surgeon, and his subscription to all the leading medical journals keeps him well versed in the inventions and discoveries of the day. By strict attention to his practice, willingness to answer calls at all hours and in whatever weather, and unbounded skill, he has won the confidence and esteem of the people with whom he has been associated, and his practice is correspondingly large and pleasant.

On June 21, 1910, Dr. Lutyens was married to Miss Jessie Norfleet, who was born in Sangamon County, Ill., the daughter of T. M. Nor-LYON, Euclid F.—The farming interests of Sangamon County are of sufficient importance to engross the attention of the energetic and value of agriculture. Some of these modern farmers are becoming wealthy from the land, and deserve such a reward for their years of hard work and untiring devotion to their property. One of these men is Euclid F. Lyon, of Hillopolis Township, born in Springfield Township, November 19, 1848, a son of Harrison D. Lyon. The latter was born in Shelby County, Ky., in 1815, but came to Sangamon County, in 1834. His father was Hanson Lyon, born in Loudoun County, Va., July 28, 1789, a son of Zachariah Lyon, a soldier under General Wayne during the American Revolution, who was wounded in the Battle of the Burning Springs. Zachariah Lyon was born April 10, 1748, a son of John Lyon, born in Connecticut about 1690. The latter moved to Maryland about 1720. He was a descendant of John Lyon, who came from England in 1663, with several other members of the family. They chartered a vessel when they came over and named it the "Lyon," as all on board were of that family. Harrison D. Lyon married Mary E. Hickman, born in Shelby County, Ky., May 13, 1823, and brought to Sangamon County by her father in 1833. They settled in Mechanicsburg, where the father, William Hickman, lived for many years. He was born in Virginia, a son of James Hickman, a Revolutionary soldier, who participated in the Siege of Yorktown, and was one of those who escorted Cornwallis to Richmond. As far back as has been traced the Lyons and Hickmans were farmers.

Euclid F. Lyon is a very successful farmer and has resided on his present place for thirty-three years, now owning 330 acres in Hillopolis Township, five miles southwest of the city of that name. There is a comfortable ten-room house, fitted up with modern conveniences which is the family residence, surrounded by a well kept lawn filled with pines. Mr. Lyon has an excellent orchard of fourteen acres, devoted to apple trees. He specializes in raising blooded Shorthorn cattle, and takes great pride in his strain. His farming has been successful because he has known how to conduct it.

Mr. Lyon was married February 20, 1878, to Henrietta Mester, born in St. Louis, February 20, 1856, daughter of Herman Mester. Mr. Mester was born in Germany, September 5, 1828, and died July 28, 1894, while his wife was born in the same country in 1836. He came to America in 1849, settling in St. Louis, and he and his wife, who had come to that city in 1855, were married in that year and the following year came to Sangamon County. Mr. and Mrs. Lyon are the parents of children as follows: Mary, born January 13, 1879, married William Mair, February 7, 1904; James H., born October 2, 1880; Homer died in infancy; Annie D. born June 6, 1885, married William Ford, February 25, 1906, and has two children—Henrietta, born August 4, 1908, and Willard, born April 17, 1911; Henry W. born April 27, 1887, married July 27, 1910, Mary Kinnahan; and, Herman, born August 7, 1901.

Mr. Lyon has been a Mason for twenty years, and belongs to the Methodist Church, while his wife is a Lutheran and belongs to the Court of Honor. In past years he was a strong Democrat and served as School Director for nearly thirty years. During the Centennial year (1876) he served as guard at the exposition in Philadelphia. An excellent farmer, a good business man, and one who understands existing conditions and how to take advantage of opportunities, Mr. Lyon has established himself as a man of ability, and at the same time has made his influence felt as an upright, honorable Christian, whose word is as good as his bond.

MACDONALD, John.—Fortunate indeed is the man who can trace his family history down through a long line of honorable ancestors, and one in Springfield who is proud of this record is John MacDonald, engineer and machinist. He was born in Perry County, Ill., December 14, 1857, a son of Hugh and Mary Ellen (Mulkey) MacDonald, both of Warren County, Ky. On the paternal side of the house, Mr. MacDonald's ancestors came from Scotland, as the name indicates, settling in Virginia. Later they removed to Kentucky. Francis MacDonald, an early ancestor, was a companion of Daniel Boone, and one of the latter's gifts to him now lies in the possession of John H. MacDonald, is a canoe made by Mr. Boone from the horn of a deer killed by him. Francis MacDonald, great-great-grandfather of John H. MacDonald, settled in the blue grass region of Kentucky. His son, Ward MacDonald, went to Warren County, Ky., south of Bowling Green, and there Hugh MacDonald was born.

The ancestor on the maternal side, Eric Malaka, came to America from Sweden in 1650, settlement being first made in Pennsylvania. Later removal was made to Virginia, then to Tennessee, and finally to Kentucky. Representatives of the Mulkey family held the lessor offices in their communities, and were hardworking, industrious people. Members of this family were in the Revolutionary War. Philip Malaka preached George Washington's funeral sermon. At that time he, his son and grandson were clergymen, and preached on the same day from the same pulpit. The name has been gradually changed to its present form. Hugh MacMulkey and Mary Ellen Mulkey were married in Warren County, Ky., later moved to Perry County, making the trip in 1850, and this was the date of the family settlement in Illinois. Afterwards they returned to Kentucky, where Mrs. MacDonald died, being buried in the family graveyard now the site of the county poor farm. After the death of his wife Mr. MacDonald returned to Illinois, later going to Missouri, and dying at Cape Girardeau, in 1867.

Mr. MacDonald is particularly proud of the fact that his mother's family was connected with the ministry from the seventeenth century. His maternal grandfather, Rev. John Newton Mulkey, was born near Tompkinsville, Ky., and commenced preaching at the very early age of sixteen years, continuing in the ministry until his death, in 1806, he preached about 10,000 sermons and baptized about that number of persons into the faith of the Methodist Church. At present his two sons, Rev. W. S. Mulkey, of Kansas, and Rev. E. E. Mulkey, of Vermont, have been sustained in the family reputation for preaching sermons.

At the time of his father's death Mr. MacDonald was left alone, and being only ten years old, his struggle was a difficult one. He always had an ambition to study, and in the intervals of earning his living attended school. In his district, they went first to Vermont High School, and finally to Eureka College. After finishing he taught school for one term. His inclinations, however, led him to enter the employ of a railroad as fireman, becoming an engineer. Coming thus into direct contact with his fellow employees, he saw the necessity of concerted action. Leaving the railroad for the mines, in 1882, he organized the Brotherhood of Holsting Engineers, and for three years was national chief. He has been identified with a number of labor movements, and has always had the interests of his fellow workmen at heart. In 1881 he came to Springfield, and left there to go to East St. Louis, in 1892, but returned to Springfield in 1896, and in 1899 he went to Athens, Ill., thence to Taylorville, in 1903, but in 1909 returned to Springfield where he is now residing. Fraternally he belongs to the Maccabees, Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias. The First Methodist Church, of Springfield, holds his membership. In politics he is a strong Republican.

Mr. MacDonald was married at Pinckneyville, Ill., October 3, 1878, to Sadie Farmer, daughter of James F. and Temperance (Judd) Farmer, pioneers of Illinois. The grandfather was a hero of the Mexican War. Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald have had children as follows: Orna Blanche, born November 26, 1879; Frank Ronald, thence to 27, 1883; Temperance Vance, born July 8, 1889, and James Hugh, born August 16, 1897. Although occupied with his work and the cares attendant upon his exertions with reference to labor movements Mr. MacDonald has found time to make an exhaustive study and ancient history, until he has become an authority upon the subject, and is frequently called upon to settle vexed matters relating to it. He is broad-gauged, keen-minded and energetic, and has the welfare of the common people at heart. Such a man, descended from heroes and ministers of earlier days, is destined to be a leader of his kind, from the dangers and oppressions which now harass them.

MAGGENTI, Joseph (deceased).—As long as the State House at Springfield stands the name of Joseph Maggenti will be preserved by the people of Illinois, for it is to his artistic skill that credit is due for the statues which adorn this building. Mr. Maggenti was an artist of more than ordinary ability, and his work is an excellent monument to his genius. He was born in Italy, January 30, 1845, and received his education in both business and art in his native country, which he left about 1865, coming to the United States in that year. For one year he resided at New York City, and then, learning of the opportunity offered in Springfield, he became a resident there, arriving in 1866. From that date until his demise, August 13, 1908, that city was his home.

After finishing his work on the State House, he established himself in a fruit and confectionery business, and for years his store received a liberal patronage from the people of Springfield. He was a reliable, honorable business man, and one who endeavored to give fair and honest returns for the custom given him. His business cares, however, did not blunt his artistic perceptions, which found expression in the beautiful family residence at No. 325 West Washington Street.

Mr. Maggenti was married in Springfield to Mary Lillian Lucchesi, daughter of John and Catherine Dorsey Lucchesi. Like Mr. Maggenti he was employed on the State house, having done some of the finest of the stone cutting work. Mr. and Mrs. Maggenti became the parents of three children. The eldest, Mary, married Frank P. Scalzo and their daughter, Mary E., married Anna Ryan, who died December 28, 1905, leaving one daughter Mary Catherine, and he is in the health department of Springfield, under Dr. George M. Palmer; and William A., who was in business with his father, resides at home with his widowed mother.

Mr. Maggenti was a Woodman. In religious faith he was a Catholic and was a member of St. Agnes' Church, as are all the family. His political convictions made him a Democrat. The family are all artistically inclined, and their home shows evidences of their refinement and good taste. Mr. Maggenti is deeply mourned not only by his immediate family, but also by the many friends who knew and appreciated his many virtues.

Mrs. Maggenti's parents were born in Europe, the father in Tuscany and the mother in Ireland. Both came to America when they were children. He learned the art of sculpture in Italy and assisted Mr. Maggenti in his work on the state capitol. He worked on a great many large buildings in the United States, first in New York, then in other states. He spent five years on the State House of Illinois, then went to Iowa, where he spent three years on that State Capitol Building, then went to Chicago, where he retired and lived there until his death April 21, 1891. His widow died July 14, 1906. He was a Democrat, and belonged to the Roman Catholic Church as did his family. By this union there were eleven children, six daughters and five sons, and those living are three sons and five daughters.

MAHER, William James (deceased).—Illinois for years has been regarded as the Mecca for those who long to wrest from its fertile soil the wealth lying dormant there. People flock there from all over the country and from foreign lands, and if they but exert themselves, the Prairie State does not fail them. One of the stalwart, reliable, substantial farmers of this Commonwealth, now passed to his last reward, was the late William James Mahler, for years a farmer of La Salle County. He was born in Ireland, April 10, 1826, and was there reared to manhood. There his parents made their home, passing away firm in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church. The ambitions young Irishman, however, was not content with duties in his native land, and in young manhood emigrated to the land beyond the sea, where he found a temporary home at Searsmont, Maine. There he found employment as a tanner and lived until he came to La Salle County, where he bought a farm. This was his home until the time of his death on July 21, 1889. At this time he was recognized as one of the most prosperous farmers of his township, and although he did not care for public office, he was an influential Democrat. Reared in the Catholic Church, he gave to it his service and support, and died in its faith, being buried in the Catholic Cemetery in Ottawa, his widow heiress of his manhood.

On September 20, 1860, Mr. Maher was married in Searsmont, Maine, to Catherine Kyle, born in Sligo County, Ireland, September 12, 1836, daughter of Patrick Brown and Mary O. (Donall) Kyle. The following children were born to William Maher and wife: Agnes, born May 15, 1864; Dora, born June 15, 1868; Catherine, born May 4, 1868, and William, born April 26, 1870. Mrs. Maher died April 16, 1910, at the home of her daughter Miss Agnes Maher, No. 312 East North Grand Avenue, Springfield.

During his long life Mr. Maher showed forth in his daily actions the effect of honest living and religious training, and exerted a powerful influence for good in his community. While not himself a resident of Springfield, for years his widow lived there and won warm personal friends for her kindly Christian disposition and kindly manner. Miss Agnes Maher is a most estimable lady, whose standing in the community is well known.

MAHONEY, James Anthony, chief train dispatcher of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad, at Springfield, which position he has held since the spring of 1910, has been connected with this road for a decade, beginning as a helper on section work. From that humble position he has risen to his present one through faithfulness and shrewd ability. He was born at Clarksdale, Christian County, Ill., September 26, 1881. Attending the public schools of his native place until he was eight years old, his studies were interrupted by the family removal to Streator, Ill., where he finished them, leaving school at fifteen years of age. At this tender age he went to work in the Peoria and Streator Lumber Company, and then engaged in the jewelry business with my brother, Mr. J. A. Mahoney. He was arrested for the charge of forgery, but was acquitted.

At the end of ten months he went to work with George W. Chatterton, proprietor of a jewelry establishment and opera house. However, Mr. Mahoney felt he was better fitted for railroad work, so returned to the employ of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Road as train dispatcher, and received a deserved promotion to his present responsible position.

Mr. Mahoney is a son of the late Thomas Mahoney, born in Ireland, who came to the United States in young manhood. Landing in New York City, he came direct from there to Springfield and helped in building the Wabash Railroad and the Chicago & Alton Railroad. Locating in Springfield, he was connected with railroad work until his marriage.

He married Johanna Lynch, born in Ireland, who came to Litchfield, Ill., where she lived until her marriage. There were nine children in the family, six of whom survive: Della, Mrs. J. M. Anderson, of St. Louis; Mary, Ella, Edward; Agnes, Mrs. N. E. Mann, deceased; Thomas, of Streator, married Effie Shieff; James A., and two died in infancy, Margaret and Ellen.

Mr. Mahoney was married in Springfield, June 21, 1908, to Florence Courtney, of Waverly, Ill., daughter of Carl C. Courtney. Mr and Mrs. Mahoney are members of the Church of the Immaculate Conception. In politics he is a Democrat, and fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Columbus.

Mr. Mahoney is a young man, whose ambitions have always guided him to strive for higher places, and he has never failed to meet the expectations of his employers.

MAHR, John (deceased).—The late Henry Mahr, who was a prominent farmer of Cotton
Hill Township, Sangamon County, left an honorable record as a citizen, and had a number of friends who sincerely mourned his loss. He endeavored to do his full duty in every relation of life and was well known as a man of industry and integrity. He was a native of Germany, born November 13, 1845, a son of John Mahr and wife, who spent their entire lives in his and their native land. After receiving an education, he followed the usual custom of his country and began learning a trade. He became an expert carpenter and worked at this trade until coming to America in 1871. He continued at his former occupation after reaching the United States, spending the first twelve years in Connecticut. About 1883 he came to Sangamon County, having decided to engage in farming, and purchased thirty-five acres of land in Section 8, Cotton Hill Township, which is now the property of his widow. He improved his farm in various ways and operated it the remainder of his life. He was a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. Mahr was married in Connecticut, April 12, 1857, to Minnie Garlo, a native of Germany, born August 10, 1856, daughter of August and Elizabeth Garlo. She was brought to America by her parents, who eventually settled in Sangamon County and engaged in farming, and both are now deceased. They had five daughters and one son, all of whom still survive. Six children were born to Mr. Mahr and wife, all of whom survive, namely: Ida, the oldest, wife of Herman Koontz, a farmer of Cooper Township; Louis, Henry, Elizabeth, Lena and Mary, all at home. Mrs. Mahr is a member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Mahr died February 1, 1907, and his widow has since then devoted her time and attention to the care of her children and the management of the farm, in which tasks she has proven herself a good mother and an excellent business woman.

MAISEL, John, now living retired from active life in Springfield, III., is one of that city's useful and well-known German-American citizens. Mr. Maisel has lived since 1881 at 1301 Monument Avenue and has been retired for several years. He was born in Bavaria, July 13, 1846, son of George and Margaret (Muller) Maisel, both natives of Germany, the latter born in 1809. The father was a farmer and he and his wife spent their entire lives in Germany. They were parents of five children, of whom one survives besides John, Margaret, wife of John Glass, a shoemaker living at College and Edwards Streets, Springfield. John Maisel was reared on a farm and worked for his father until he was eighteen years old, receiving his education in subscription schools. He then learned the trade of stone-cutter, at which he worked seven years.

In 1870 John Maisel set sail for the United States, landing in New York in June. He came direct to Springfield, Ill., and worked a short time at gardening, then entered the employ of George M. Brinkerhof, for whom he drove a team thirty-five years. He then worked two years for the Oak Ridge Cemetery Company. He lived for a time on Reynolds Street, moved from there to Elliott Avenue, and then located at his present home, where he has lived thirty years. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church and in politics is a Republican. He is a man of friendly disposition and gentle manner and has many acquaintances and friends. He belongs to Capital Tent No. 1, Knights of The Macciabees.

Mr. Maisel was married, in Springfield, May 11, 1876, to Miss Amelia R. Zimmer, who was born April 29, 1851, daughter of Peter and Rosa Zimmer. The mother died when Mrs. Maisel was but two weeks old. Her parents had ten children of whom three are living, those besides Mrs. Maisel being: Rosa, Mrs. Harrison, of Nebraska, and Charles, living on a farm northwest of Springfield. Eleven children were born to Mr. Maisel and his wife, of whom the following survive: George, a teamster; Lizzie, married Max Ahnert, a florist of Springfield; Carrie, married W. S. Dwyer, a polisher for Racine-Sattley Company; Mary, wife of Arthur Hirschele, a druggist at Sixth and Monroe Streets; Charles, a cigar-maker employed at the Julius Master factory at Ninth and Washington Streets; Fred, and William, employed at the Illinois Watch Company factory. Mr. Maisel and his wife have two grandchildren, Ruth Maisel, born in 1901, and Hilda Maisel, born in 1906.

MAISENBAECHER, John Fred.—German stock has furnished a great bulk of immigration to America, and owing to their family kinship with us, they have been readily assimilated. These immigrants possess unusual economic virtues that lend themselves readily to merging into the American stock. We need their labor, their economic endowments of industry, thrift and skill, and it is safe to say that without them this land never would have developed as it has. Their children, born with the parents' virtues and fostered and expanded under more favorable conditions, are to be found occupying positions of trust and responsibility in both public and business life. One of the essentially self-made men of Springfield, and one who is an excellent exponent of the second generation of German-Americans, is John Fred Maisenbacher, born in that city, March 18, 1858, a son of Mathias and Margarete (Myers) Maisenbacher, natives of Wurttemberg, Germany. After marriage the parents came to the United States, in 1845, landing in Philadelphia. From there they came that same year to Springfield, and there the father obtained employment in the railroad shops of the Wabash Company, continuing thus for twenty-three years. He then embarked in business for himself, but later retired, dying in 1884, while his widow survived him until 1903. There were ten children in the MAJOR, George.—So many of the veterans of the Civil War have passed over to the other side to answer to the last roll call, that those surviving are held in special veneration by those who now enjoy the results of the patriotism of “The Boys in Blue.” Nowhere do these relics of a great struggle enjoy more honor than in Sangamon County, and among them is George John Major of Clear Lake Township, residing near Riverton.

In 1860, George Major came to Sangamon County, and soon thereafter sent for his father and mother, who located in Clear Lake township, dying there. He was very poor, arriving with but twenty-five cents in his pocket, after having walked a part of the way. Upon his arrival in Springfield he had the good fortune to meet a man who said that his name was Todd, and that he was the father-in-law of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Todd was very kind, giving Mr. Major employment in his mill, and paying him the first wages he earned in Sangamon County. Later he was employed in a mill at Osbernville, and also at the old Hickox Mill in Springfield, while just previous to the outbreak of the war, he was conducting a mill on the river near his present home. In close sympathy with the Union cause, Mr. Major felt that his place was at the front, enlisting in 1862, in Company C, One Hundred Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving with it one year, when he was transferred to Battery A, First Illinois Artillery. After he had served with the latter organization a year, it was captured, and he was transferred back to his old regiment. Being taken sick, he was in Jefferson hospital for eight months, then was placed on guard duty. Among other engagements, he participated in the Siege of Vicksburg and Battle of Corinth, as well as many others of importance. He was a gunner in the battery and Corporal in the infantry, and was mustered out at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., in 1865.

At the close of the war Mr. Major returned home and resumed milling, thus continuing about three years, when he purchased a farm of sixty acres, since which time he has been a farmer and a buyer and shipper of cattle and hogs. His farm now consists of eighty acres, which is in excellent condition, and he has refused fancy prices for it. Some of this land is comprised in the original entry made by him soon after coming to the county, and its remarkable increase in value is largely due to his work upon it. In addition to his farm he owns several lots in Riverton.

Mr. Major was married in Springfield, in 1868, to Phoebe (Boyd) Major, she having married brothers, the first of whom died in Andersonville Prison. She was born in Indiana and her parents went to Kansas and died there. She was the widow of Mr. Major’s brother at the time of her marriage to him. By her first marriage Mrs. Major had one son, Harvey Major, who now is operating the farm for his step-father. By the second marriage of Mrs. Major there were three children: Carrie, wife of James Hoyland of Danville; Jessie at home, and Lila, wife of Lillard Pemberton, of Riverton.

In politics Mr. Major is a Democrat. He remembers Abraham Lincoln very well, and often conversed with him. While advanced in years, this energetic farmer takes an active interest in local affairs, superintends his farm, and oversees his business matters. Having done his full duty, both as a soldier and a private citizen, and having been an excellent son, a kind husband and devoted father, he realizes that he has rounded out a successful life, and is content with what he has accomplished.

MALONEY, Jerry James, a successful merchant of Springfield, is a native of the city and belongs to a family that has been prominent in Sangamon County for many years. He was born March 20, 1870, and is the son of William and Mary Elizabeth (McGillick) Maloney, the former born in Troy, N. Y., December 28, 1852, and the latter in Ireland, December 17, 1853. William Maloney was for ten years connected with the County Sheriff’s office, and served ten years as Chief of Police of Springfield. He was a well-known and influential citizen and had many warm personal friends. His death occurred in MALONEY, John Douglas.—The agricultural interests of Illinois are represented by men whose progressive ideas and advanced methods have placed them in the front rank and helped to make the State of Illinois the best in the Union. What is true of the State in this regard, holds good in Sangamon County, the center of the Great Corn Belt of the World, and among the men who have there attained an enviable success is John Douglas Maloney, who resides on Section 11 of Woodside Township. He was born in Morgan County, Ill., June 2, 1861, a son of John and Catherine (Ryan) Maloney, both natives of County Tipperary, Ireland, who emigrated to America, landing in New York, whence they came to Morgan County. A few years later they removed to Logan County, and both died in Lincoln, the father in 1869, and the mother in 1871. They were parents of several children, of whom the following survive: Jerry V. and Michael, of Lincoln; Margaret, of Springfield, and John Douglas.

The subject of this review was called upon to mourn the loss of his mother at the age of ten years, his father having died two years prior, and when left an orphan made his home with his uncle, Patrick Ryan, in Morgan County. His educational advantages were limited and his school days were spent at Little Hope School near his uncle's home. His grandparents all died in Ireland except his Grandmother Ryan, who died near Berlin, Ill. The young man was employed on the farm for his uncle until he was nineteen years of age, then decided to embark on life's voyage on his own account and "paddle his own canoe," coming to Sangamon County and finding employment near Chatham.

In 1884, Mr. Maloney decided to give up farming and embark in the arena of mercantile life, establishing a grocery store at Chatham, which he conducted two years, then moving to Glenarm, where he established the first grocery and general store. However, Mr. Maloney did not like the indoor life and in February, 1888, he sold his business and again took up agricultural pursuits, in which he has since been engaged.

Mr. Maloney was married in St. Bernard's Catholic Church, at Auburn, Ill., Rev. Father Flannegan performing the ceremony, November 17, 1886, to Miss Margaret Gorey, a native of Sangamon County, born March 22, 1867, daughter of Patrick and Margaret (Casey) Gorey, both natives of Ireland. Mr. and Miss Gorey came to America at different times, and she first located at Bloomington, Ill., and later came to Springfield, where they met. Their marriage occurred at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, at Springfield, June 8, 1863, after which they moved to Mechanicsburg, thence to Auburn and finally to Chatham, where they lived until the death of Mr. Gorey which occurred February 26, 1808. He was a farmer by occupation and his widow now resides with a son at Chatham. They were parents of five daughters and four sons, all born in Sangamon County, as follows: John P., Thomas J., James, William P., Margaret, Mary, Ellen, Alice and Sarah.

To Mr. and Mrs. Maloney have been born the following children: John P., born April 4, 1868; Charles E., September 29, 1869; Leo Francis, September 3, 1871; Marguerite C., July 10, 1893; Thomas A. May 24, 1899, all unmarried and living at home. The family are devout members of St. Patrick's Catholic Church, of Springfield. Mrs. Maloney is a member of Court No. 68, Catholic Order of Foresters and also of the Ladies' Benevolent Association No. 967, and Mr. Maloney belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. He has always staunchly supported the principles of the Democratic party in national interests, but in local affairs votes for the men and measures he believes will further the best interests of the people. He served during 1908-09, as Assessor of Woodside Township. Kindly, energetic, progressive, a good business man and a far-sighted farmer, Mr. Maloney is a man of whom his county may well be proud. He has already accomplished much in his active life and looks forward to doing a great deal more, for he is in the very prime of manhood. He has a most comfortable home, owns eighty acres of land in Rochester township, and besides this, farms 290 acres which he rents, the latter being located in Woodshire Township. Mr. Maloney operates a dairy, keeping a herd of sixteen cows, and is extensively engaged in raising Percheron horses.

MALONEY, William (deceased).—In the death of William Maloney, which occurred March 21, 1909, Springfield, Ill., lost one of its prominent citizens, a man who always had the city's welfare in mind, and held various public positions through a long and useful career. He was a native of Troy, N. Y., where his birth occurred December 27, 1852, a son of Jeremiah and Mary (Allen) Maloney, the former a contractor by occupation.

William Maloney was brought to Springfield by his parents when but one year old, and there the remainder of his life was spent. His education was secured in St. Mary's Catholic School, and he was reared by his parents to principles of honor and integrity. As a youth he went to work as a brick molder, also becoming a brick mason by trade, and these were his chief occupations in an industrial line throughout his life. He was a Democrat in politics. Even as a young man his ability was recognized and at different times during his long residence in the Capital City he served as Jailer, Turnkey, City Marshal and Chief of Police, displaying much ability in tracking criminals and preventing crime. He died in the faith of the Catholic Church, which he had attended all his life. In fraternal affiliations he was connected with the Woodmen and the Catholic Order of Foresters. Mr. Maloney was known throughout Springfield, and wherever known was most highly esteemed.

On May 25, 1873, Mr. Maloney was married to Mary E. McGillick, and to this union there were born seven children, as follows: Mrs. Margaret Handly, of Bloomington; Jerry, living at home with his mother; Mrs. Catherine Mambach, of Memorial Home, Rockford; Mrs. Anna Massing, living in Jersey City; Mrs. Ruby Rollinger, living in Springfield; and Mrs. Ethel Maloney, living in Springfield. The family are all members of the Immaculate Conception Catholic Church, of Springfield.

MAMBACH, William, a retired tailor of Springfield, was born in Cologne, on the Rhine River, Prussia, Germany, August 22, 1843, son of Joseph and Katrina (Hein) Mambach, natives of Germany. The father was a painter and decorator, and both he and his wife spent their entire lives in Germany. He served in the Franco-Prussian War. William Mambach was educated in the public schools of his native country, and after leaving school learned the trade of tailor, which he followed from the age of fourteen years until three years ago, when he retired.

November 8, 1866, Mr. Mambach landed in New York City, and soon after located in Chicago, where he worked two years at his trade. He then came to Springfield and worked three years for Messrs. Weldon & Wilkinson, tailors, after which he embarked in business for himself, being successful in this venture, which he carried on from 1871 until 1881. In the latter year he spent four months on a trip to his native country and on his return to Springfield began working for B. A. Zang, of whom he remained twenty years. In 1897 he gave up his position with Mr. Zang, and is now enjoying a life of quiet and ease in his beautiful home at 1514 South Eighth Street.

Mr. Mambach is a Democrat in politics and in 1908 served as a judge at the city election. He is a devout Catholic and a member of Sacred Heart Church. He was married in Springfield, November 5, 1870, to Miss Elizabeth Ganther, who was born in Germany, September 5, 1839, daughter of Henry Ganther, who came to America in 1855. Mr. Ganther died in New Jersey, in 1897, and his wife died in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Mambach died in Springfield, May 31, 1907, and are buried in Calvary Cemetery. She was a devoted wife and mother and was mourned by many friends. Mr. Mambach and his wife were parents of six children, of whom three survive: Mary, wife of Martin Rollinger, in cement business in Springfield; Anna, at home; William, a carpenter. Mr. Rollinger and his wife have two children, Carlotta, born March 5, 1907, and Ronald, February 20, 1909. Mr. Mambach is well known in Springfield as an industrious man, a skillful tailor and a good business manager, of strict honesty and integrity, and is highly esteemed by his many friends.

MANN, Henry T.—Among the names of the brave young men from Sangamon County who responded to their country's call when it was in dire need, occurs that of Henry T. Mann, now a farmer residing in the county, which has been his home for many years. This too brief biography will not fittingly testify to the honor in which he, as well as his associates in that mighty struggle, are held by their fellow countrymen. A grateful government does what it can, and the people, individually do the rest. Veterans are everywhere shown appreciation, and wherever they are found they make good citizens. The hard lessons of discipline inculcated in camp and on a battle field were not learned in vain. The returning soldiers applied them in civic life with most excellent results.

Henry T. Mann was born in Clear Lake Township, December 10, 1843, a son of Christopher and Anna R. (King) Mann, natives of Kentucky, born in 1816 and 1827, respectively. The father was a farmer, and came to Sangamon County somewhat later than his wife, who arrived the year of the big snow, in 1831. They met and were married, first settling on a farm owned by them, east of Riverton but several years later moved to Mt. Pulaski.

After a boyhood spent on the farm, during which time he attended school held in the primitive log building in his neighborhood, Mr. Mann was forced into early maturity by the outbreak of the war. When still a lad, he enlisted, June 1, 1861, in Company E, Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Carl Hecker. The regiment went into camp at Springfield, where it was sent to Chicago, and was mustered into service at Alton. After participating in several skirmishes, Mr. Mann took part in the terrible battle at Perryville. Several more skirmishes intervened between that and the battle of Stone River, where there was a five days' fight. For the following six months the regiment was in camp, then was engaged in the bloody battle of Chickamauga, and fell back to Chattanooga, where breastworks were thrown up. Mr. Mann was also in the engagements at Missionary Ridge and Kennesaw Mountain, at Buzzard's Roost and Resaca. The regiment served under Generals Grant, Sherman and Thomas. Mr. Mann was finally mustered out August 17, 1864, after a long and hard service. Returning home, he began farming, and for the past thirty-two years has been at his present location, where he owns forty acres of very valuable land, devoting it to general farming.

Mr. Mann was united in marriage at Springfield, January 30, 1868, with Jenette Snodgrass, daughter of William and Rachel Snodgrass. Mrs. Mann's parents came from Indiana and Kentucky, locating in Sangamon County at an early day. Mr. and Mrs. Mann became the parents of three children: Mrs. Albert Bashaw, whose husband engaged with the Franklin Life Insurance Company at Springfield; Marietta, wife of Crow Grubb, employed at the city water works of Springfield; Charles, employed by a telephone company, working all over the State.

In politics, Mr. Mann is a strong Republican, but has never been willing to go before the public as a candidate for office. He is a fine man in every respect and commands the warm appreciation and firm confidence of all with whom he has been brought into contact. His pleasant home is presided over by Mrs. Mann, a charming lady, who has been her husband's inspiration and efficient assistant for over forty years. The young people have grown up to be a credit to their parents, and wherever the name of Mann is found it represents solidity and up-right living.

MANN, John H.—Many of the younger men of Sangamon County are content to devote themselves to farming, realizing the money to be made from specializing along agricultural lines. The days are past when a farmer worked merely for a living, inasmuch as much business is done as the grocer or banker, and the country is much more heavily obligated to him than to the others mentioned. One of the younger men of Sangamon County who are representative of the farming interests, is John H. Mann, residing on a fine twenty-acre truck farm on Section 29, Capital Township. He was born in Mcalfe County, Ky., February 14, 1870, a son of James and Mary E. (Goodman) Mann, both natives of Kentucky born in 1841 and 1849, respectively.

James Mann was a farmer in Kentucky, where he remained until 1883, when he moved to Ashland, Ill., locating on a farm, which continued to be his home until 1903. In that year he came to Sangamon County, making his home with his son until his death, May 28, 1905. His widow survives, and lives at Oakland, Cal., with her son Charles. There were eight sons and one daughter in the family, six of whom survive: John H.; Charles, of Oakland, Cal.; George, Frank, Daniel; Mary, wife of Arthur Pringle, of Oakland. Two other sons Edward and Will, died recently. Two brothers of the father, Marion and Jorney Mann, were soldiers in the Civil War. The Mann family is one of the old ones of Kentucky and its members have been connected with its history since early days.

The education of John H. Mann was secured in Ashland, where he attended the public schools. Later he alternated farming with learning the trade of printer. He never worked long at his trade, however, but as a young man was for a year in an office in Ashland, then operated a farm in the vicinity. He came to Sangamon County in 1890, being engaged in business in Springfield for ten years, but in 1900, the call of the soil became too strong for him and he came to live in his present home. He rents twenty acres, which he devotes to gardening, and his success has been remarkable, his product meeting with a ready sale.

Mr. Mann was married in Jacksonville, Ill., October 18, 1891, when he was united with Anna Ellen Martin, born near that city, in Morgan County, October 18, 1866 a daughter of Frank Martin, who was one of the pioneers of Morgan County. He carried on farming there until his death in 1890, his wife having died in 1891. Mr. and Mrs. Martin had nine children, seven of whom are now living. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mann. They are consistent members of the Presbyterian Church, to which Mr. Mann is a liberal contributor. In politics he is a Republican, but his business cares have been too heavy for him to devote much attention to public matters. However, he is always abreast of the times, well informed on current affairs, and votes intelligently and faithfully.

Having devoted so much time to his work, Mr. Mann understands it thoroughly and follows it scientifically. He leaves nothing to chance in his operations, but carries out certain definite rules, and the results prove the wisdom of his actions. Shrewd, keen and enterprising, he is an excellent business man, while his sterling honesty and uprightness of character have impressed themselves upon his associates and won him many warm, personal friends, whom he retains. His home is skillfully presided over by his wife, and their many friends always find a cordial welcome when they enter its hospitable doors.

MANN, Samuel A., a useful and industrious citizen of Springfield, Ill., was born in Monroe County, W. Va., May 15, 1837, and is a son of Alexander and Isabelle (Stevenson) Mann, both born in Monroe County, he December 13, 1802, and she in 1810. The father was a farmer and spent his entire life in his native State, as did his parents and those of his wife. He was a carpenter, as well as a farmer, and after leaving school his son Samuel worked at that trade with his father until the war. At the age of twenty-one years Samuel A. Mann enlisted in Colonel King's Battalion of Artillery, June 2, 1861, at Monroe County, Va., and served in the Confederate Army to the close of the war, entering under Captain Lowery. He took part in the Battles of Winchester, Fisher Hill, Strasburg, Fayetteville, Charleston, Deep Creek, Berryville (Va.), Shenandoah Valley, and many others. He did his full duty as a soldier in the cause he then believed to be just, but in the light of later events and his more mature judgment, now feels deep regret that he was not fighting for the other side.

Mr. Mann was married, in Indiana, November 28, 1872, to Miss Sarah Jester, who was born in Iowa, October 2, 1849, daughter of John Jester, a native of Delaware, who moved to Iowa when a boy, and is now living in Indiana. His wife died in Ohio, many years ago. Mrs. Mann's grandparents were natives of Delaware and Iowa and became prominent in the localities where they lived.

Mr. Mann has lived in Sangamon County, Ill., since 1866, and at first worked at nursery business. He is esteemed by his associates and has a good reputation in the community. For several years past he has been employed in the trade of carpenter, at which he is a skillful workman. He is industrious and thrifty and has accumulated some property. He belongs to the Missionary Baptist Church and to a temperance society. He has always taken an active interest in public affairs and in politics is a Democrat. He and his wife became parents of six children: Ella, Daisy, Edgar and Frankie, deceased; Eva May, born in Indiana, August 14, 1873, married Richard Ashcroft, of Riverton, and they have three children, all living—Richard, Stacey and Jessie; Lulu, born in Illinois, August 24, 1882, married Fred Painter, of Springfield, and they have three children—Hazel, Maude and Merrill. The family home is 413 South Thirteenth Street.

MARLOWE, William, Jr., Secretary, Treasurer and Manager of the E. & W. Clothing Company, of Springfield, and one of the most enterprising business men of the city, was born there September 9, 1877, being a son of William and Henrietta (Smith) Marlowe, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Marlowe attended the public schools of Springfield until he was fourteen years old, when he began doing odd jobs, being anxious to prove his worth. When he was seventeen years old he entered the employ of J. Price, of Springfield, and for eight years continued with him, gradually being advanced until he spent a portion of his time representing the house on the road and the remainder as a cutter. Following this, he went with Capps & Son, of Jacksonville, as a cutter, and, later, to the employment of theenterprise his brother-in-law, and responsible positions with them. In December, 1903, he commenced work with the present firm. On March 20, 1906, the business was incorporated, with Mr. Marlowe as a stockholder, and he was elected to his present position February 1, 1909. He is essentially a self-made man and deserves much credit for what he has accomplished.

On June 14, 1904, Mr. Marlowe was married in Springfield, to Ida Hehn of that city, daughter of Hugo and Emma Hehn. Mr. and Mrs. Marlowe are the parents of two children: Velma, born May 29, 1905, and Dorothy, born December 31, 1909. He belongs to the Odd Fellows and enjoys his fraternal connections. The appreciation of the young business men of today is appreciated by those older in the trade and their services are eagerly sought, so that those who had formerly relied upon Mr. Marlowe were sorry to lose him, although they rejoiced over his success. The firm of which he is so efficient a representative is rapidly forging to the front and controls a large trade, not only in Springfield, but in a wide territory contiguous to that city.

MARLOWE, William, custodian of the Supreme Court Building of Springfield, who resides in his own home at No. 1114 Rutledge Street, is one of the best known men in that city. He was born in Salt Hill Village, three miles from Windsor Castle and twenty miles from London, October 11, 1835, and is proud of his English birth. His grandfather, Thomas Marlowe, was a shoemaker of Eton, England, who made a specialty of boots for position. His wife was Ann Cole, and both died in England. They had three sons: William, George and James.

William Marlowe, Sr., was born at Eton, England, June 19, 1803, and became a gardener. He married Maria Sadler, of Cookham, Berks County. One day he, his father and his brothers, were standing on the banks of the Thames River, when they saw George's private boats moored at a little fishing place called Black Potts, marked "For sale." They bought it and turned it into a house, adding a couple of rooms, and made it their home for years, and in it William Marlowe, Jr., was born. Here both the father and mother died, about 1846, when William Marlowe, Jr., was a small boy. There were two sisters of this marriage: Verney and Nancy.

When this little family was left without parents, relatives took them until something could be done for them. A little later, William became a page in the home of the rector, Rev. John Septimus Grover, who was made Vice President of Eton College. Although he did not go to school, William Marlowe, being an ambitious boy, studied at night, continuing as page in several homes, until 1862, when he started for America, landing in New York City. His destination was British Columbia, but after some time had been reached St. Paul he decided to go to work in a harvest field, and later on a railroad, and saw the first train that entered St. Anthony. Still later, he went to East St. Louis to work in the Eads gun-boat yards, and then was on a steamboat running between St. Louis and St. Paul. He then worked for the Government at Leavenworth for a year, whence he came to Alma, Ill., to go into the Gastrodos Coal Company's mines. After a few years there, he went to Du Quoin to work in the mines. On April 10, 1868, he arrived in Springfield, and for a time worked in the mines. In February, 1881, Attorney General James McCartney appointed him janitor of his office, and in September, 1882, he was given his present responsible position. Owing to it he has had the honor of forming the acquaintance of many noted men, and, as he is very attentive and affable, has made many friends.

In September, 1872, Mr. Marlowe was married to Henrietta Smith, of Springfield, daughter of Samuel and Julia Grace Smith, and they have the following children: George W., died at the age of nineteen months; William of this story, married Ida Holm and they have two children, Velma and Dorothy; James S., of Indianapolis, married Jessie Allison, two children, James D. and Marjory. Mr. Marlowe belongs to the Church of England, while his wife is a Presbyterian. He is a staunch Republican and fraternally is a Mason. Few men are better known than he, and he is regarded with affectionate friendship by men all over the State who have benefited by his kindly consideration.

MARSH, Frank Hewett, yard master of the Wabash Railroad Company is a man who has proven his worth, and is regarded by the company as one of the most efficient and capable men in their employ. He was born in Bloomington, Ill., December 22, 1866, son of Henry S., and Theresa (Bahr) Marsh. The father was born in Wheeling, W. Va., and there spent the first eighteen years of his life. He then came to Springfield, where he lived for forty years, thirty-five of which he was passenger engineer on the Wabash Railroad. Following this, he was in the round house of that road for several years. His death occurred in 1892. In politics he was independent. His wife was a native of Germany, who came to the United States when thirteen years old, and she died in Springfield when fifty-six years old. She and her husband had children as follows: Eva married J. L. Horgett; Frank; Obert; Cora married Arthur Mitchell, all of this city. The Marsh family originated in England, but many years ago located in the southern States, where they became wealthy planters. John Bahr, an uncle of Frank Marsh, acted as a substitute for his brother-in-law, Henry S. Marsh, during the Civil War, enlisting under General John McNulty and serving from 1861 to 1865.

Frank Marsh attended the public schools of Springfield from the time he was ten years old. Entering the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company, he was first engine caller, later telegrapher, and in 1898 was made yard master, and has held that responsible position ever since.

On August 26, 1886, he was married, at Urbana, Ill., to Miss Sophia Wallert, of that place, daughter of Christ Wallert, deceased. They belong to the First Christian Church. Fraternally Mr. Marsh is a Knight of Pythias and a Modern Woodman. He is active in politics, being a Republican, and is ever ready to lend his support to all measures looking towards the advancement of the county.

MARSHALL, Andrew J.—An example of what a young man may accomplish by economy, thrift, persistent effort and wise business judgment, may be found in the case of Andrew J. Marshall, a successful business man of Springfield, Ill., who has made himself substantial through exercising these characteristics and now maintains a reputation for substantiality gained through years of hard work. Mr. Marshall was born on a farm three and one-half miles southwest of Pawnee, Ill., June 30, 1807, a son of John J. and Margaret (Lord) Marshall, who now reside in Oklahoma, where Mr. Marshall is engaged in farming and cattle-raising.

Andrew J. Marshall was but eight years of age when he became self-supporting, starting to work at that age for J. F. Lord, an uncle, who was engaged in farming near Glenarm, Ill., and received four dollars per month for his services, his duties allowing him a little time to attend school under teachers McIwaine and Crowder. On coming to Springfield, at the age of seventeen years, he became a delivery boy for John Brewster, at twenty dollars per month, and attended school for some time in the city, and eventually was left his one-third share of a farm of eighty acres by his grandfather, Cy Lord, his sisters having an equal share in the property with him. By the strictest economy young Marshall had saved $1,000 by this time and took this money to purchase the interests of his sisters, and later sold the farm to invest his money in property at the corner of Eleventh and South Grand Avenue, in Springfield, on which he located an old frame building. He first started a butcher shop in this building, and now rents it. A new structure was erected in 1890, and is used as a barber shop. From time to time he has invested his holdings in real estate and now owns seven valuable store buildings in the capital city, and other valuable property, in addition to his modern home, at 1500 South Eighth Street, which he remodeled in the fall of 1910.

Mr. Marshall was married October 1, 1880, in Springfield, to Miss Lucy B. Rose, the daughter of Henry B. and Mary Rose, and one son has been born to this union, Robert, born in 1890, who is now attending school. The family are members of the First Presbyterian Church, and in political views Mr. Marshall is a staunch Republican.

MARSHALL, Elizabeth Viola.—It is truly said that the good mother lives again in her children for there are thousands of women all over the United States who are devoting themselves to their children. Not only is this true of those who have helpless little ones depending upon them, but also of those who have already seen their offspring grow to maturity. One of these excellent mothers who is setting an example younger women may well follow to their profit, is Mrs. Elizabeth Violn (Romtree) Marshall, of Springfield. She was born in Perry County, Ill., April 12, 1855, a daughter of Turner and Temperance Romtree, natives of Washington County, Ill. The father was a farmer in Perry County, Ill., where he took an active part in politics, always casting his vote and influence in favor of the Democratic candidates. Mrs. Romtree died July 10, 1889, while Mr. Romtree died February 28, 1904, and their remains are interred in Oak Ridge Cemetery.
Mrs. Marshall was educated in the schools of Perry County, and remained at home, assisting her mother in the household tasks until her marriage, which occurred April 12, 1858, in Piockneyville, the county seat of Perry County, Ill., to Mr. Marshall. Two sons were born of this marriage: Claud Lionel Marshall, born August 14, 1854, and Lloyd Chester Marshall, born February 9, 1856, both born in Perry County. The elder son is an electrician, while the younger is a traveling salesman for the Springfield Woolen Mills. Mrs. Marshall is a devout member of Stuart Street Christian Church, and is active in promoting its good works. She is proud of the fact that her grandfather, Allen Ronn, was a gallant soldier in the War of 1812. Mrs. Marshall has resided in Springfield many years and has made many warm friends there.

MARTHA, Samuel Henry, a retired hotel man of Springfield, was connected with the old Central Line, of which he was the owner, of which he conducted for many years under the name of the American House. When he was its host, it was a general stopping place for the noted statesmen who flocked to Springfield, making this hostelry their headquarters. Mr. Marshall was born September 13, 1846, at Abbottstown, York County, Pa., son of Henry Marshall, also a native of Pennsylvania, born about 1821, and died in 1901. He bought 140 acres in York County, Pa., near the Adams County line, and there his death occurred. His wife bore the maiden name of Mary Farland, also of Pennsylvania. Her death occurred on the home farm in 1857, when she was seventy-two years old. She and her husband were Lutherans and he was a Republican. The children born to them were: Martha married Nathaniel Burkheimer and died three months after marriage on the home farm; Samuel Henry; Amelia, wife of George Dull, of Thomasville, York County, Pa.; Anna; Rush; a farmer of Iowa; Herman died in 1902, in York County; Alice, of York County; and Henry, of Hanover. The family is of German origin, the Grandfather Marshall having been a native of that country.

Samuel Henry Marshall was a year old when his father moved to York County, and grew up on the farm there, attending the country school a portion of the year until he was sixteen years old. Until he attained his majority he remained upon the farm, but then went to York, where for two years he was interested in a bakery. Selling this, he bought a livery business and operated it for two years more. In 1876 he again sold, and for a short time bought horses for the market. Coming to Springfield at the close of that year, he entered the produce business on East Adams Street, but two years later moved to North Sixth Street. In 1879 he became proprietor of the Central House, operating it until the building was sold to make way for the present imposing business block which was erected on its historic site. Mr. Marshall then operated the Corrigan House on East Adams Street for nine years, changing its name to Marshall House. After he disposed of it, in April, 1900, the name was changed to the Brunswick House. Following this sale, Mr. Marshall returned to Pennsylvania for a visit. Upon his return he purchased his present home, and has since lived retired, having been thirty years in the hotel business, twenty years of which was spent in one place. He is a Lutheran in religious faith. Active in political affairs, he served as Alderman from the Seventh Ward during 1854 and 1855, and was efficient in that office.

Mr. Marshall was married in York, Pa., in 1876, to Miss Elizabeth Shellenberger, of York County, a daughter of Joseph Shellenberger. They had one daughter, Jessie, who died at the age of twenty-five years.

MARTIN, George B.—Sangamon County is noted not only for its agricultural interests, but also as the scene of varied mining activities, and some of the most prosperous of its citizens have devoted themselves to this branch of business. A representative man of Divernon, George B. Martin has achieved a wellmerited success. He was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, September 11, 1828, a son of John and Jeanette (Banks) Martin, natives of Glasgow and Ayrshire, the father born in 1811 and the mother in 1815. The father was killed by a locomotive just as he was leaving home to claim a fortune left him in the West Indies, in 1800. His widow survived him until 1869, when she, too, passed away in Scotland.

From the time he was eight years old, Mr. Martin has earned his own living, but remained at home until twenty-six years old, when he came to the United States, landing in Portland, Me., April 8, 1865. After that he made a number of changes, going to Maryland and Virginia, where he lived for fourteen years. He then lived at Astoria, Fulton County, Ill., for two years, locating in La Salle in 1880. He spent some time in Wyoming, but in 1901 came to Divernon, which has continued his home ever since. All his life he has been interested in mining operations, and is markedly successful.

While he has given attention to his business, Mr. Martin has not neglected the religious side of his nature, but has sought to lead others into what he believes is the right path, and has preached in every place in which he has lived. While in Wyoming he built a stone church for the Congregationalists, but is now a member of the Presbyterian Church. While independent in politics, he is a strong Prohibitionist, and has done effective work for the cause. Fraternally he is a member of the order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, being the oldest member of that lodge in Divernon, having joined it in 1873, passed through all of its chairs and served as its Representative to the Grand Lodge.
many times. He is also a member of the order of Red Men and is much interested in fraternal work.

Mr. Martin was married in Scotland, to Margaret McGee, on January 20, 1890. She was born in Ireland, August 9, 1839, a daughter of Michael and Mary (Cunningham) McGee, natives of County Down, Ireland. The father died in 1849, but the mother came to the United States in 1870, returning to Scotland in 1872, and dying in Ayrshire in 1874. The grandparents were all natives of Ireland, and there died, but Mr. and Mrs. McGee moved to Ayrshire in 1847. Mr. and Mrs. Martin became the parents of fourteen children, six of whom are dead. Hugh, born in Scotland in November, 1863, married Mary Hard of Illinois, children—George, Annie (deceased), James, Joseph, Margaret, Alice, Mary, Harry and Hugh; James, born in Maryland, April 5, 1866, unmarried, has been a resident of California for five years, Mary, born in West Virginia, May 28, 1869, is a nurse and resides in California; George, a clergyman, born in West Virginia, June 17, 1871, married Mary Anderson, a native of Denmark, three living children—Donald, Harry and Ellen; Jeanette, born in Maryland, March 24, 1873, married Robert S. Simpson, of Scotland, now lives in Farmersville, Ill., where he is a mine superintendent, five living children—George, Ruth, Jeanette, Ottie and Charles; Charles, in the cement business in Davenport, born in Maryland, December 8, 1877, married and has one child, Annie Bell; John, born in Illinois, April 2, 1883, unmarried and living in North Dakota; Margaret, born in La Salle, Ill., September 15, 1889, married Victor Mercer, of Lamoille, and lives in North Dakota, where Mr. Mercer owns three-quarters of a section of land.

Mr. Martin is much respected in his community, where he owns considerable property, and has earned the confidence of his neighbors. He is proud of his family, as he has every reason to be, and of the progress he has made during his long and happy life.

MARTIN, Green W. (deceased), formerly one of the prosperous farmers of Cartwright Township, whose finely developed farm on Section 16, serves as a model for his neighbors, was born in Robinson County, near Springfield, Tenn., September 29, 1845, a son of Thomas and Martha (Glaser) Martin, both natives of Springfield, Tenn. There they grew up, were educated and eventually married. Four of their seven children were born in that city. These children were: Fannie, first wife of Dick Crenshaw of Pleasant Plains; Green W.; William who died about 1900; Nancy, wife of A. B. Purvines, a prosperous farmer of Cartwright Township; Molly, deceased; Azare of Coffeyville, Kas., and Isaac, who died in infancy.

About 1851, the parents with the four children already born, came to Cartwright Township, renting a farm owned by Peter Cartwright, the famous circuit-riding preacher, and they lived.

At that time, all of the timber land had been secured, and Mr. Martin not having faith in the prairie land would not invest in it, although at that time he could have purchased it for three dollars per acre. About 1858, he moved to Schuyler County, and in 1869, was killed by the premature explosion of a twelve-pound cannon that was fired off to celebrate Fourth of July, when Abraham Lincoln was candidate for the presidency. His widow went to Sedgwick County, Kas., where she passed away, September 28, 1871.

Green W. Martin was only six years old when he was brought to Cartwright Township, and although taken away when his father died, he came back to Pleasant Plains and began working on the farm of Augustus W. Hayes, continuing with him for two years, and rendering very efficient service. In 1870, he went west, stopping in Kansas to visit his mother. From there he went to Colorado Springs, and thence to Cripple Creek, where he mined with his brother William. They located the Summit mine, in what they named Globe Hill. Here they sunk a shaft 240 feet, striking rich pay ore, and then Mr. Martin sold his share for $41,000 spot cash to W. S. Stratton, who later became one of the wealthiest mine owners of Cripple Creek, the Summit mine proving to be one of the best opened up in that locality. Still later he went to Jasper County, Mo., settling there in 1879, near Carthage. Finally he returned to Pleasant Plains, and bought 160 acres on Section 16, Cartwright Township, settling down upon it. In 1876, Mr. Martin married Ollie Sampson, but she died in Jasper County, Mo., leaving one son, Thomas L., who is married, having two sons and two daughters, and is now residing near his father in Cartwright Township. The other two children of this first marriage of Mr. Martin's died in infancy. On December 10, 1892, Mr. Martin married in Cripple Creek, Emma Pleines, born in St. Louis, Mo., December 14, 1874, a daughter of Conrad and Emma (Muller) Pleines. These parents went to Denver in 1879, prior to the time when any trains ran to Leadville, so as that place was their destination, the trip had to be made by wagon. They remained in Leadville, a short time, but moved about, the father trying to locate a paying mine. Finally removal was made to Colorado Springs, and there the father died, December 10, 1899. His widow still resides in Colorado Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin settled down on their farm home, and began making the many improvements which now add to its value, including a very comfortable twelve-room house, substantial barns and necessary outbuildings. They became the parents of seven children: Mary O., born June 30, 1894; Mary E., born June 7, 1897; Effie Lena, born January 9, 1899; Lula Bell born April 1, 1901; Ruth C., born December 31, 1905; Emma L., born December 9, 1904; Alice Green, born June 6, 1907, and Frank Conrad, born September 23, 1910.
Mr. Martin was very successful in his farming, and added to his holdings, buying in 1808, eighty acres on Section 17, Cartwright Township, on which he erected a good house and put in a good orchard. He was perfectly satisfied with his achievements, for he carried out the dearest wishes of his boyhood and young manhood becoming the owner of a farm in his chosen locality. He was a Democrat, politically, and fraternally was connected with the Masonic fraternity, Lodge No. 700, and the Odd Fellows of Pleasant Plains. He stood very high in the community, and was regarded as a representative farmer of the best class. Mr. Martin died February 12, 1911.

MARTIN, John Herbert, of Springfield, is a typical British-American citizen. Interested in the advancement and progress of his community and doing his full duty as a member of society. Although not active in public affairs he is well informed on the issues of the day and especially as a student of the history of Sangamon County, he is a native of Devonshire, England, born September 21, 1871, son of Samuel and Mary Rebecca (Rawlings) Martin, both also natives of Devonshire, the father born May 1, 1833, and the mother in June, 1835. Her parents died when she was a small child, and she was reared by an aunt in the city of London. Samuel Martin was engaged in copper mining and both he and his wife spent their entire lives in England, where he died in July, 1891, and his widow a few years later. They were parents of the following children: William, who was drowned; Elizabeth, wife of Jim Stickler, of England; John Herbert, of this notice; Charles Andrew, deceased; Sophia, deceased; William Edward, of England; Mary Ann and Emma, twins, the former wife of Jack Righton and the latter the wife of Joseph Armstrong, both of England; Annie M., wife of Ralph Righton; Jessie, wife of William Wilkenson; Ellen, wife of John Graham. The father of these children served for two years in Mounted Artillery H. Ninety-fifth Regiment of the English Army.

Mr. Martin received his education in the schools of Devonshire and Durham County, and learned gardening. He came to the United States and located in Springfield. He is a Democrat in politics and an Episcopalian in religious belief. For many years before leaving England he was prominent as a gardener and horticulturist, and held office from April 10, 1893, to October, 1897, as Secretary of the Gerrow-Hebburn-Monkton and Hedworth Society, which corresponds to the agricultural societies of our own country. He has held the offices of Secretary and Treasurer, Vice President and President of the U. M. W. A., and is also a member of the I. O. O. F. and Men's Agricultural Organizations.

Mr. Martin was married in St. Anthony Roman Catholic Church, Durham, England, by Rev. Father P. M. Clark, in 1890, to Anna Cherry, who was born in Newfield, Durham, England, June 22, 1865, daughter of William and Isabel (Dickson) Cherry, the father born in Durham County, in July, 1820, and the mother born December 9, 1826. The father died in July, 1904, and the mother still survives. There were five children born to Mr. Cherry and wife, namely: William, Edward, George; Isabel, wife of Luke Foster, and Anna, Mrs. Martin. Five children were born to Mr. Martin and wife, only one of whom now survives, William Edward, born June 12, 1894, employed as foreman at the Illinois Watch Company plant.

MARTIN, Joseph W. (deceased), for many years a resident of Springfield, was born in Ohio County, Ky., not far from Oneweboro (Daviess County), November 16, 1838, and was left an orphan at an early age. When nine years of age he came to Sangamon County, with an uncle, James Lynn. He attended the public schools of Ohio County, Ky., and Sangamon County, Ill., and was reared to farming, which he followed until he retired from active life and moved to Springfield. After his marriage he began farming on his own account, purchasing ninety acres of land in Buffalo Township, Sangamon County, where he became successful and held various public and private offices of trust. He served on Grand and Petit Jury for years, and acted as guardian for several persons. He was a prominent and highly esteemed citizen and a liberal contributor to several churches. He was not a member of any church, but had a leaning toward Methodism. After locating in Springfield he attended the Presbyterian Church. He was public-spirited and enterprising, and in politics was a strong Republican.

Mr. Martin was married (first), September 11, 1864, to Miss Mary Jane Robison, daughter of John W. Robison, who died on the home farm July 8, 1888. He was married (second), September 11, 1895, to Mrs. Mary E. (Glose) Davis, daughter of Martin Glose, who was a well-known farmer of Logan County, Ill., and by his second marriage had two children. Mr. Martin moved with his family to Springfield, in 1884. By his first marriage his children were: Jesse, deceased; William H., Robert, James M., Ernest A. By his second marriage his children were: Alvine McKinley, died at the age of five years; George D., died at the age of eight years.

Mrs. Martin was born in Fulton County, Ind., October 12, 1857, and when a babe moved with her parents to Ohio. Latter they came back to Indiana and, when she was eleven years old, to Sangamon County, Ill. She was married (first), at Lincoln, Ill., July 4, 1878, to James T. Davis, who was born east of Elkhart, Ill., and there reared to manhood. His father, Cyrus Davis, was wounded at Shiloh and died from the effects of the wound before reaching home. He was also a veteran of the Mexican War. James T. Davis died at Mt. Pulaski, Ill., November 24, 1890. He and his wife had four children: Maud, Mrs. Ralph McIlvaine, of Topeka, Kan.; Bessie, Mrs. Sidney Reid, of Springfield; Lois Nancy, Mrs. Clarence Unbee, of Springfield; one child died in infancy.
MARTINAITS, George.—A number of the residents of Springfield have been attracted there by the coal mines, which yield profitable employment to those willing to run the risks and endure the hardships of the work. One of the men thus engaged is George Martinaits, an excellent citizen, living at No. 1212 North Eighteenth Street. He was born in Russia, December 26, 1836, son of Dzmgrnoiit and Anna (Pasloes) Martinaits, both born in Russia, he in 1834 and she in 1854. The father was a farmer who died in his native land in 1863, where his wife still lives, aged fifty-seven years. There were six children in the family: Charles, Mary, Martin, Elizabeth, Anna and Wilenease.

Mr. Martinaits was educated in the schools of his native place, and from childhood assisted his father on the farm. In 1867 he came to the United States, landing at Philadelphia. For three months he was at Bethlehem, Pa., and then traveled over the country looking for a place that suited him. Finally, in 1908, he settled in Springfield, and this has since continued to be his home. He went to work at once in the mines. In religious faith he is a Catholic and politically a Republican. Mr. Martinaits has had the advantage of extended travel. Like so many of his countrymen, he speaks other languages, in addition to Russian and English, and is ambitious to advance still more. It is remarkable that these strangers from a foreign shore can come here and in so short a time become men of standing in their community.

MARX, Jacob.—In reviewing a city like Springfield, located in the center of the fertile Middle States, it is astonishing how many of its most prosperous men are of German birth. Coming here when the city, and even the State, was in the thinning out of these frugal, industrious, well-trained Germans became excellent Americans, and to them is due much of the present prosperity. One of these representative German-Americans is Jacob Marx, now retired, residing in his own home at No. 1015 South Twelfth Street. He was born in Treis, Germany, April 22, 1852, being a son of Jacob and Gertrude (Sanger) Marx, farming people of Germany, who never left their native land. They had nine children, four of whom survive. The father served bravely as a German soldier.

Brought up in his native land Jacob Marx served for nearly a year in the German Army. His father was taken sick, and to enable him to take care of the farm and family, the king gave him an honorable discharge. He decided that there was more opportunity for him in America, so sailed on May 9, 1855, landing at Quebec, whence he came direct to Springfield and went to work in a stone quarry, where he remained for a number of years, in the employ of Blains Stone Quarry. For two years he was in the employ of Simpledding Murray as a nurseryman and following this, was a gardener for some years. Then for eighteen years he acted as janitor of the Court House. The next ten years were spent by him in the Wabash shops, but a few years ago he retired to enjoy a well-earned rest.

On November 22, 1859, Mr. Marx was united in marriage at Springfield, with Margaret Plauer, born in Germany, December 25, 1840. Her parents did not leave Germany, dying there. Mrs. Marx died March 22, 1892, having had fourteen children, six of whom survive: Margaret, wife of Adam Layendecker, of Springfield, she having died March 17, 1911; Joseph, foreman of the Schnepp & Barnes Printing Company; Veronica, wife of Jacob Layendecker; Catherine, wife of Henry Schmeller, a miner of Springfield; John, in the employ of the Illinois Watch Company; Pauline, at home, her father's housekeeper; Thomas, employed in the Wabash shops. There are twenty-five grandchildren in the family. Mr. Marx owns his beautiful home, as well as other property in Springfield, and is in comfortable circumstances. He belongs to the Church of the Sacred Heart, being a devout Roman Catholic. In politics he is a Democrat, but has never sought public honors. He is a staunch, loyal, true-hearted man, whose life has been spent in doing his duty, and he stands high in the estimation of his fellow men. Mr. Marx was personally acquainted with the great Abraham Lincoln.

MASON, Harry Howland; publisher of the "Pawnee Herald," one of the leading newspaper men of Sangamon County, has been instrumental in molding public opinion for many years, and is now numbered among the brilliant exponents of his profession in his part of the State. Mr. Mason was born near Saybrook, McLean County, Ill., December 18, 1874, a son of James Alfred and Lovenia Florence (McCollister) Mason. The father was born in Swansea, Mass., in 1836, and the mother in Ohio in 1850. The father was long prominent in the affairs of Tazewell County, having come west as a boy and worked his way up, and eventually became a prosperous grain merchant, but is now living retired in Delavan. He was a leader in the Democratic party for many years, and held many local and some county offices. Mrs. Mason comes of good old Presbyterian stock. She is a woman of rare executive ability and superior intelligence. The Masons figured in New England history from its earliest settlement. The grandfather on the paternal side was an officer in the War of 1812 and his wife wore distinction by carrying a message on horseback, through storms and darkness, from the American Commanders, she being part of the time under fire.

Harry Howland Mason was educated in the public schools of Delavan, Ill., and was brought up with his four sisters, being the only son. His childhood was uneventful save as to incidents which might mark an active boy. From childhood he showed pronounced mechanical skill. Being apprenticed in a newspaper office, he worked as printer and reporter until 1903, when he engaged in the publication of the "Pawnee Herald," and is still its publisher.

For fourteen years Mr. Mason served in Company K, Fifth Infantry, Illinois National Guard, passing from rank of private through all the non-commissioned grades, and finally being commissioned First Lieutenant by the late Gov. J. B. Stuart of Illinois. While in the field he was on active service in many tours of strike duty in the troublous times of the early 'nineties. In politics Mr. Mason is a Democrat. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and has held various camp offices. As yet he is unmarried.

A conservative man, Mr. Mason is slow to make friends and has few confidants, finding much pleasure in his books and writings. When he does admit anyone to his confidence, he retains such friendship indefinitely. For some years he has been recognized as a successful newspaper writer on daily papers and weeklies, and is particularly strong in his writing of prose letters. While not a partisan writer, he is a conservative. Through his paper Mr. Mason has made a name for himself in Sangamon County, where his ability is recognized and appreciated.

MASSEY, John, one of Sangamon County's oldest and best-known citizens, and an honored veteran of the Civil War, now lives at his comfortable residence at 302 Logan Avenue, Springfield, Ill. Mr. Massey was born in Morgan County, Ill., December 25, 1844, son of Jenkins and Susan (Morgan) Massey, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Wells County, Ind. The parents were farmers and moved to Sangamon County when John was young, remaining there the remainder of their lives. They had seven children.

John Massey received his education in the public schools of Sangamon County, and has been a resident of that county since childhood, except for eight years spent in Logan County, when a young man. He was reared on a farm and lived with his parents until he reached manhood. He enlisted, April 29, 1864, in Sangamon County, in Company E, Fifty-seventh Illinois Infantry, under Captain Kenyon, serving to the close of the war. He was mustered out in Chicago, Ill., July, 1865, having never been captured, but having had many narrow escapes and having seen some very hard fighting. Mr. Massey participated in the Battle and campaign of Atlanta, in the Battle of Chattanooga, Sherman's March to the Sea, the Battle of Allatoona, and skirmished to Savannah, Ga., where he received a gun shot wound in the right wrist. He was with the re-enforcements for Grant at Richmond, where there was hard fighting, and was present at the burning of Columbus, S. C. He took part in the Grand Review at Washington, and had an excellent record as a brave and faithful soldier, ready to give his best for his country. He narrowly escaped capture at Allatoona, where his brother was wounded. He is a prominent member of the local G. A. R.

At the close of the war Mr. Massey returned to Sangamon County and engaged in farming, in which he became very successful, and in 1899 retired from more active labors. He is a devout member of the Methodist Church and in politics is a Republican. He is an enterprising and representative citizen, ready to forward any public movement he believes is for the general welfare, and actively interested in public affairs, although he does not care for public office. He is justly proud of his record as a soldier and his many friends appreciate his sterling qualities of mind and heart and his high character. He owns the home where the family reside, where they have lived since 1860.

Mr. Massey was married, at Lincoln, Ill., in 1870, to Sarah A. Johnson, born in Nicholas County, Ky., March 5, 1839, daughter of John T. and Sarah E. (Ham) Johnson, both natives of Kentucky. One child has been born of this union, James R. Massey, born April 24, 1876, who received his education in the public schools of Springfield, taught school for several years, and is now connected with the Hoeng Electric Company, one of the largest electrical contracting firms of Springfield or Central Illinois.

MATHENY, Charles R.—Among the substantial farmers who crossed the Alleghenies from the Shenandoah Valley through Cumberland Gap, were James Matheny and his wife, Diana, and their children. One of these, Charles Reynolds Matheny, in early manhood was licensed in the Methodist ministry. He was located for a time at the ancient settlement of Harrodsburg in Kentucky, but about the year 1805 was sent as a missionary to the Illinois Country. He located at Lebanon, in what is now St. Clair County, the future site of McKendree College, where his elder children were born.

His wife, Jemina Ogle, was a daughter of Captain Joseph Ogle, who was notable among the settlers in the Ohio Valley as a militant Christian of the most aggressive type, a force in the religious life of the scattered settlement and a strenuous Indian fighter as well. Captain Ogle was commissioned by Governor Patrick Henry on the 2nd day of June, 1776. He was in command in vigorous fighting against the British and Indians at Fort Henry (Wheeling), W. Va., in 1777. He soon after removed to the west and, in the words of one of the early histories, was "one of its bravest defenders," and Ogle County, Ill., was named in his honor.

The organization of civil and educational affairs in the new communities was a matter of much interest to Charles R. Matheny and he developed much aptitude for them. He was a member of the last Territorial Legislature at Kaskaskia (1817), and Representative from St. Clair County in the Second General Assembly after the adoption of the Constitution in 1818. In 1821 the seat of government for Sangamon County was established at Springfield and the County was organized, and he returned to Springfield to assist in these matters. He also served on the County Court from the organization of the County until his death, which occurred in 1839. For some years he was also Clerk of the Circuit Court. He was active in the organization of the Village of Springfield and was President of the Board of Trustees from 1832 to 1859, with the exception of the year 1834. Among his associates on the Board of Trustees were Stephen T. Logan, the most distinguished lawyer of his day in Illinois; Samuel H. Trent, afterward Judge of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois and later Judge of the United States Courts for the Southern District of Illinois, and Abraham Lincoln.

Charles R. Matheny was a strong advocate of higher education at the time when popular sentiment was strongly opposed to it, and was one of the Trustees of McKendree College in its early years.

Of the children of Charles R. Matheny, five sons grew to manhood. One, Dr. Lorenzo Dow Matheny, a physician of much promise, died at the beginning of his career. The other four, Noah W. Matheny, James H. Matheny, Charles W. Matheny and Elijah Cook Matheny, had a large part in the political, professional and business affairs of Springfield and Sangamon County for nearly half a century, during the period of most active development.

MATHENY, Noah W., eldest son of Charles R. Matheny, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., July 31, 1815, and succeeding his father as Clerk of the Sangamon County Court, by successive re-elections remained in office for thirty-four years, retiring in 1873. He was a man of great popularity and executive ability. His methods in the filing and preservation of papers and records have been largely followed to the present day. He acquired great familiarity with the matter of probate law and the settlement of estates, and this, with his sound judgment and strength of character, made him for a generation the arbiter of family disputes, and adviser of the public and often of the Bar, in the matter of probate law and practice.

He accepted many trusts of much importance and executed them with fidelity and success. He was a Director of the First National Bank of Springfield for many years, and soon after his retirement from office in 1873 became its President. From this time during the remainder of his life he devoted his time and efforts closely to the business of the bank and contributed largely to its progress and success.

Like his father, Noah W. Matheny was active in religious and educational affairs. For some years he was an earnest member of the City Board of Education. He was also active in the work of the First Methodist Church of Springfield, in its old building at Fifth and Monroe Streets. When the need of a Methodist Church in the north part of the city became felt, he took an active part in the organization of the Second Methodist Church (now the Kumbler Methodist Church). He transferred his membership and support to the new and feeble organization and was a regular attendant during the remainder of his life.

He was married to Miss Elizabeth Stamper, daughter of the Rev. Jonathan Stamper, of Decatur. He died at his home in Springfield on the 50th day of April, 1877. His widow, a daughter, and two grandsons still reside at the family home.

In recognition of his services to the First National Bank the Board of Directors have quite recently placed his portrait in the Directors' Room. An upright and model citizen, he enjoyed the respect of the entire community.

MATHENY, James H., was born at Lebanon, St. Clair County, Ill., in 1818, the year of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union. When about two years old his father moved to Springfield. He attended the village schools and at the age he would commence to assist his father in the work of the Courts. When he was a young man he became an ardent political of the Whig School and an enthusiastic admirer of Henry Clay. In 1840 he was one of a party of nine young men from Sangamon County who went over-land to Nashville, Tennessee, to hear clay at a great meeting, in the Harrison-Tyler Presidential Campaign. This pilgrimage attracted much attention. They were received with great honor in some localities and with much opposition in others.

For the next thirty years—the Golden Age of political oratory in America—James H. Matheny was an active and effective political speaker in every campaign and an earnest student of public questions. In recognition of this, in 1847 he was elected as a member of the Convention that formed the Constitution of 1848 of the State of Illinois.

He was admitted to the Bar when a young man and until he retired in 1873 was active in the Courts of Sangamon and adjoining counties, particularly Menard, Logan and Christian. In a sketch of "The Springfield Bar in the Seventies," published a few years ago, there occurs the following description of him:

"James H. Matheny was among the most interesting figures in the Courts at this time. He had come out of the army in 1814 and from that time till elected Judge of the County Court in 1873 he appeared in a great number of causes. Like Robinson, his specialty was to address the jury. He left the preparation of the case to his associates and except when circumstances made it absolutely necessary he did not examine witnesses nor argue points of law. In a long trial he would sit patiently taking no note, but fixing in his memory the very words of every vital point of testimony and the manner and appearance of every important witness. He was short and portly, with a dignified and most expressive face. When fully aroused, as he always was in addressing a jury, his eloquence and magnetic power were remarkable. Out of court he was one of the most genial of men, but a trial seemed to transform him, and his arguments were characterized by the deepest earnestness, and when the case called for it, by bitter and most effective denunciation. He was especially strong in homicide cases, for active last ten years of his practice he appeared in nearly all cases of that class that were tried in Sangamon County.

In early life he was a close personal friend of Abraham Lincoln and was groomsmen at Lincoln's marriage.

In 1853 he was commissioned Lieutenant Colonel of One Hundred Thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry and went to the front. He was in active service until after the Siege of Vicksburg, when he was made Judge Advocate, and held military courts until late in 1864. In that year his regiment and another were consolidated and he resigned and returned to Springfield.

In 1873 he was elected County Judge of Sangamon County by a majority then unprecedented and until his death in 1890 he held the office by successive re-elections, generally without opposition from either party.

He was married to Maria L. Lee, daughter of Samuel Lee of Callowayville Ill. Mr. Lee was a relative of the Lee family of Virginia and is said to have had the first collection of law books in Illinois worthy of the name of library.

On taking the office of County Judge in 1873 Col. Matheny retired from the practice of law and from political life. This was a sacrifice of his abilities as an advocate, but it gave opportunity for wider development in other lines. His popularity was unbounded. His position as Judge of the Court of Probate Jurisdiction made him the sympathetic adviser of great numbers in recent affliction.

The position gave leisure for active participation in the work of all the more prominent fraternal orders. He was a recognized leader in the Grand Army of the Republic and made many addresses at its reunions, both in Illinois and other States.

From 1859 until his death he was active in the organization known as Early Settlers of Sangamon County. He was the orator at its first meeting in 1859 and his address on that occasion is a classic. For many years before his death he was President of the association. In those gatherings and others of every kind he was a constant speaker. He was at once forceful, eloquent and magnetic.

He died September 7, 1890, after an illness of two days, when apparently in the height of his powers. His funeral is said to have been the largest held in Springfield up to that time, excepting only that of President Lincoln. Of his children Edward Dow Matheny died in March, 1902. His son, Dr. R. C. Matheny, resides at Galesburg, Ill., and his other sons, Lee Matheny, physician, H. Matheny, and the daughter, reside in Springfield. His widow died on the 3rd day of December, 1909.

MATHENY, Charles W., was born in St. Clair County, Ill., on September 27, 1829. He was educated in the village schools of Springfield and at an early age entered mercantile life as Clerk in the store of B. C. Webster and Company. His rise was rapid, and after being a member of several partnerships, in 1851 he established the firm of C. W. Matheny & Company, dealers in dry goods and general merchandise, purchasing and occupying the well known Matheny Building, at the southwest corner of Sixth and Adams Streets, Springfield. His partners in this venture were his brothers-in-law, B. C. McQuesten and John Bressmer.

The conditions of business differed widely from those existing at the present time. The stores were smaller and much inferior in appearance, but the volume of trade was very large and profits were large. Springfield was then small and not particularly pleasing in appearance, but it drew its retail trade from a wide range of rapidly developing country. The early settlers required long credits, generally closing accounts at the end of the year. The goods were bought in the East, and semi-annual journeys made by the local merchants for that purpose. Capital was scarce and banking accommodations were very limited. Accordingly, the merchant of the 'fifties and 'sixties was of necessity a man of character and foresight. In 1866 the firm was dissolved, Mr. McQuesten removing to Kansas, Mr. Matheny retiring from mercantile lines, and Mr. Bressmer continued the business.

Mr. Matheny then engaged successfully in the buying and selling of lands and in large contract work, chiefly in railway construction. With various associates he built large parts of several of the more important railroads in central and eastern Illinois.

He was a keen judge of men and this is illustrated in the choice of his associates. They included Mr. Bressmer, whose career as a merchant has been most distinguished; R. D. Lawrence, afterwards President of the State National Bank of Springfield; and Isaac Keys, founder of the Farmers National Bank of Springfield, and for many years its Vice President.

Charles W. Matheny was for many years a Director of the First National Bank of Springfield, and upon the death of his brother, Noah W. Matheny, he became President and devoted himself to the banking business, when his health would permit, until his death, which occurred April 16, 1870.

He was one of the commissioners who established and put in operation the Springfield Water Works System, but otherwise held no public office.

He was married to Margaret Coudell, who survived him and died September 25, 1889. His two sons, Charles O. Matheny, of Springfield, Ill., and George H. Matheny, of Sarasota, Fla., are still living.

Mr. Matheny was a man of large business interests and accumulated a handsome fortune for those times. He was a man of liberal and charitable spirit and broad business views. He was prominently identified with the First Methodist Church of Springfield.

Matheny, Elijah Cook, the son of Charles R. Matheny, was born in Springfield, June 13, 1820, and lived in Springfield practically all his life. At the breaking out of the gold fever in California, in 1849, he crossed the plains by wagon to the Pacific coast and stayed there until 1854. He did not come back to Illinois overland, but sailed from San Francisco for Panama and thence to New York. He stayed in Panama for some eight months near where the Canal is now being constructed.

He was married February 3, 1857, in Springfield, to Alletta L. Van Norstrand, and they had two children, John R. and Louisa I., both of whom are now living in Chicago. Mrs. Matheny died in June, 1894, and the subject of this sketch was admitted to Mrs. Naomi L. Rittenhouse, whose family came from Pennsylvania and whose maiden name was Schroyer. Mrs. Matheny had two children, Charles E., of Springfield, and Louis P. Rittenhouse, of Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Matheny had three other children: Mima, who is now the wife of George H. Simpson, of Decatur, Ill.; Ada L. Matheny, who is now the wife of George Whitting, of Chicago, and Phillips G. Matheny, Manager of the Barclay Coal and Mining Company, of Springfield.

Elijah Cook Matheny was Deputy United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois for nine years and it is said that during that time he sold two million dollars' worth of confiscated property in Cairo. He died on the 13th of December, 1905. He was a man of unusual information and at the time of his death there was probably no man more familiar with the early history of the county. He had a remarkable memory and was a man of wide reading, and up to the time of his death kept himself fully informed regarding the public and local matters. He had been a member of Masonic fraternities for many years.

Matheny, James H., Jr., son of Judge James H. Matheny, was born April 4, 1856, at the family home in Springfield, Ill. He was admitted to the Bar in 1877, and has continuously practiced his profession. From 1895 to 1906 he devoted much attention to the affairs of the Illinois State Bar Association, being Secretary and Treasurer from 1895 to 1906, Vice-President for the year 1906-07 and President for the year 1907-08.

Matheny, Edward Dow, (deceased).—The profession of law in Springfield has been one of the dignities of which there has always been rigidly upheld by its members, many of whom have served in official capacities in the city and aided in fashioning laws for the advancement of the State's capital. One who was for many years an honor to the profession and was widely known as lawyer, official and statesman, was the late Edward Dow Matheny, who was born December 4, 1847, in Springfield and there resided until his death, which occurred March 18, 1902.

Mr. Matheny was a son of County Judge James Harvey Matheny, of St. Clair County, and Maria (Lee) Matheny, of Greene County, Ill., and the family has for many years been known as one of the most prominent and highly honored in the city.

Mr. Matheny's education was begun in the public and high schools of Springfield, and he began studying law with McGuire & Matheny, his father's firm. For a short period he was engaged in school teaching in Sangamon and Sangamon County, and became well and favorably known as an educator. On being admitted to the Bar, Mr. Matheny started on the practice of his profession and, his ability becoming recognized, he was soon appointed Deputy County Clerk, and later Circuit Clerk of Sangamon County. A Democrat in political matters, he always took a prominent part in Democratic affairs. His fraternal connection was with the Woodmen and the Red Men of Springfield, while his religious affiliation was with the First Christian Church.

On January 29, 1880, Mr. Matheny was married to Miss E. Cadle Priest, who was born in Greeneville, Ind., a daughter of William N. and Mary A. Priest, who came from Kentucky to St. Louis, Mo., and thence to Springfield in 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Matheny had no children.

To profound learning Mr. Matheny united a high standard of professional honor of which many are incapable. No client, no matter how powerful he might be, political or otherwise, who came to him with a case without merit could have his services. He would defend no cause where he did not believe he was on the right side. The same inflexible honesty and independence characterized him in all the relations of life. In all his official capacities he served the community so well as to deserve and receive its thanks, and his place will be hard to fill.

Mathery, Thomas. (Vol. I, p. 356.)

Matthew, Luther F.—The Matthew family was one of the earliest to locate in Sangamon County, and its members have always been good citizens, ready to do their share to promote the general welfare and progress of the county. Luther F. Matthew is a native of the county, born September 28, 1865, and is a son of Thomas Matthew, also a native of Sangamon County, where he has always lived, and now a successful farmer. The father of Thomas Matthew was born in Franklin County, Ohio, and came to Sangamon County as a young man. Thomas Matthew married Adelade Clayton, also a native of Sangamon County. Her father, a native of Kentucky, came to Sangamon County and located on a farm, where he spent the remainder of his life.

The education of Luther F. Matthew was acquired in the country schools of Sangamon County and he worked on his father's farm until reaching his majority, then began farming on his own account. He rented land three years, then purchased twenty-seven acres, to which he added until he owned seventy-two acres, and carried on operations there until 1909, when he purchased his present fine farm of 215 acres on Section 28, Bull Township. Mr. Matthew is an enterprising and progressive farmer and is successful in a gratifying degree. He stands high in the community, being always ready to support any measure he believes will be of general benefit. He is an intelligent and public-spirited citizen and actively interested in public matters. He is a Democrat in politics and is now serving in the office of School Director.

Mr. Matthew was married, north of Pawnee, Ill., Feb. 1888, by Rev. D. B. Wiley, to Maggie Hall, who was born in Montgomery County, Ill., December 13, 1868, whose old home was the camping ground of the Pawnee Indians in former times. Mrs. Matthew is a daughter of James and Sarah (Williams) Hall, who were born in Knox County, Tenn., died in Sangamon County, March 1, 1893, and the latter, also a native of Knox County came to Macoupin County, Ill., when thirteen years of age and now resides in Springfield. James Hall was a farmer by occupation and his father came to Sangamon County from Tennessee with a wagon, in pioneer days. Mr. Matthew and his wife have three children: Luther S., born August 2, 1880; Charles Everett, September 2, 1893, and Thomas, February 19, 1902, all born in Sangamon County. Mr. Matthew is a member of the Baptist church, but his wife is not a member of any religious denomination. He belongs to Glenarm Camp, No. 808, Modern Woodmen, and to Lodge No. 523, A. F. & A. M., at Chatham. He has the esteem of his neighbors and is popular with his many friends. He has an excellent farm and is proud of his success and of his pleasant home and fine family, as he has every reason to be.

MAXCY, James R.—The same spirit that prompted the hardy dwellers of eastern States to brave the hardships of the unknown, and penetrate into the Indian-infested region of what later became the State of Kentucky, burned in those of a later date, pushing them westward to found new homes in Illinois. Those who selected the latter region made no mistake, for its development has been phenomenal. Associated with its onward progress are certain names; some of these are blazoned upon the pages of history, while others are simply recorded in the annals of everyday life, but the owners of all bore their part in the great work.

James R. Maxcy is a native of Springfield, but Kentucky blood flows in his veins. He was born December 29, 1839, a son of John C. and Vanatta (Lloyd) Maxcy, natives of Bowling Green, Ky., where he was born in 1812 and his wife in 1810. A short time prior to the birth of James R. Maxcy, the parents came to Springfield, where the remainder of their lives was spent, the father engaging in a general business. The ancestors of the Maxcy family had located in Kentucky in pioneer days. They were prominent there, as John C. Maxcy became in Springfield, holding all of the local offices of any importance and became one of its representative citizens.

James R. Maxcy spent his boyhood in Springfield, being fond of all outdoor sports, and attended the city schools, Illinois. His experience was gained as a clerk in his father's store, where he remained from 1856 to 1860. With the exception of four years, during which he was working in the Chicago Post Office, Mr. Maxcy's life has been spent in Springfield. It was during his residence in Chicago that the great fire of 1871 occurred, and he recalls many thrilling experiences of it. After returning to Springfield he became an auctioneer, and is still thus engaged, being one of the most popular in Sangamon County.

While residing in Chicago, on May 23, 1865, occurred the marriage of Mr. Maxcy and Harriet A. Dickson, born in Jacksonville, Ill., in 1853. Her father was United States Marshal of the Southern District of Illinois, and a prominent man of his day. Mr. and Mrs. Maxcy became the parents of the following children: Matilda B., S. C., Mary D., Margaret L. and Feretta. In politics Mr. Maxcy is a Democrat, and he has held several local offices. While not active in public life, he has always been interested in securing good schools and a liberal government, and has exerted himself to secure both. For years he has been a loyal and liberal member of the Christian Church, where he is appreciated. Mr. Maxcy is one of the oldest business men of Springfield, and some of his associations date back many years. Genial in disposition, he is a favorite socially, and has many friends throughout his part of the State.

MAY, Ethan Palmer, (deceased).—One of the men who have been closely associated with the growth and development of Sangamon County, and one who could always be depended upon to do his full duty in every position in which he found himself, was Ethan Palmer May, now deceased. He was born near Dayton, Ohio, June 12, 1829. After attending the public schools of his neighborhood, Mr. May worked with his parents on their farm, and was taught those homely virtues which ever marked all his later actions. In 1848 Mr. May came to Illinois, and at first operated a large amount of land, from that going into the lumber business, which he carried on very profitably for a number of years.

In April, 1850, Mr. May was united in marriage with Elizabeth J. Elder, born on a farm near Lexington, Ky. She was a daughter of Samuel and Pheobe (Clinkenbeard) Elder, farming people. Mr. and Mrs. May had the following children: Mary E., Sarah E., Fannie A., and Martha A., deceased; Charles W.; Harriet J., deceased; Laura E.; George W., deceased; Flora and James, deceased; Samuel L., Augusta and Frederick Tracy.

In politics Mr. May was a Democrat, and he held the office of School Director for many years. He was a Mason, but was not connected with any religious organization. The death of this most excellent man occurred in Rochester, Ill., June 27, 1886, when he was sixty-seven years and fifteen days old. His widow survived him until July 18, 1903, when she, too, passed away at Rochester, at the age of seventy-one years. Both are interred in the cemetery at Rochester. Mrs. May was a lady of lovely, true Christian character, who made a most excellent wife and mother, and who is sincerely mourned by her family. Mr. May was very highly esteemed among his neighbors and friends, and he was one in whom implicit trust could always be placed. His business honor was never questioned, and he always stood for what was best and truest in his community.

MAY, William (deceased), for many years a resident of Springfield, was born near East St. Louis, Ill., May 15, 1812, son of George and Mary (Turner) May, natives of Ohio. The father was a farmer in Ohio and served three years in the Civil War. He located in Illinois and there carried on farming until his death. William May spent his boyhood on his father's farm, attending the public schools and helping with the farm work. He chose work on the railroad as an occupation after reaching manhood, and first entered the employ of the Iron Mountain Railroad Company, for whom he became a foreman, and remained in their employ many years. Later he began working for the Chicago & Alton Company and became a bridge worker, also being promoted to the position of foreman for this company. He could he trusted to perform well any work assigned to him and won the confidence of his employers and associates.

Mr. May was married, at Pittsfield, Pike County, Ill., August 24, 1851, to Miss Mary E. Bowen, who was born in Pike County, October 13, 1832, daughter of Billingsley and Sarah (Brocket) Bowen, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Winchester, Ill. Mr. Bowen emigrated to Illinois from Ohio as a young man and for many years lived on a farm near Winchester. One son was born to Mr. May and his wife, Leslie E., born May 11, 1883, is un

MAY, William I. (Vol. I, p. 357.)

MAYER, Jacob (deceased), who for many years carried on farming in Sangamon County, was well known as a public-spirited German-American citizen, industrious and enterprising in business, and ready to do his share to promote the general welfare and prosperity. He was a devout Catholic and endowed in his daily life to adhere closely to the principles of his religion. He was born in Germany, July 17, 1830, his parents being natives of that country, where they spent their entire lives. The father was a cooper by trade.

Mr. Mayer was educated in Germany and lived there until coming to America in 1857. He located first at Decatur, Ill., and several years later came to Illiopolis, where he was employed by the Wabash Railroad Company for thirteen years. He gave up railroad work in later life and came to the farm on Section 24, Illiopolis Township, south of the village, where he spent the remainder of his life. He purchased this farm and operated it successfully the remainder of his active life, and his family still make it their home. Both he and his wife were members of the Catholic Church and in politics he was a Democrat.

Mr. Mayer's marriage occurred in Decatur, Ill., in June, 1878, when he was united with Mary (Matthews) Gilmore, who was born in Chatham, Sangamon County, daughter of William and Christina Matthews, the father a native of England and the mother of Ohio. Mr. Matthews was a millwright by occupation and was a very early settler of Chatham, where he erected a mill and conducted it for several years, until he retired and moved to Illiopolis, where both he and his wife died. Mary Matthews was married (first) to James Gilmore, in 1853. He was born in Ireland and came to the United States as a young man, locating near Springfield. He was a farmer by occupation and carried on farming in Sangamon County until his death, which occurred at Illiopolis, then his home. He served in the Civil War, enlisting from Springfield in the Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and serving to the end of the war. He was wounded at the Battle of Memphis. To Mr. and Mrs. Gilmore eight children were born and five are now surviving, namely: Elizabeth, wife of John Mead, of Mattoon, Ill.; George, of Lanesville;
Mary, of Warrensburg, Ill.; Anna, wife of Patrick Norris, of Kansas; Maggie, wife of Joseph Myers, of North Dakota. Three grandchildren have been born in this family. To Jacob Mayer and wife three children were born; Joseph, of Lincoln, Ill.; John, a resident of Illiopolis; Charles, living near Mt. Auburn. To this marriage there are four grandchildren. The death of Mr. Mayer occurred in 1897 and Mrs. Mayer owns the home farm.

McCALISTER, James, a veteran of the Civil War, now living retired from active life and residing in Mechanicsburg, Ill., was born in Ross County, Ohio, August 1, 1841, a son of Gordon and Mary (Shooldgrass) McCalister, the former a native of Ireland. The father came to Ohio as a young man and located on a farm in Ross County, where he lived until 1844, then went to California on a prospecting tour. He was successful in his quest for gold, but two years later was killed by robbers for his gold and money, and was buried in California. His wife died in Ohio in 1846. They were parents of two sons and two daughters, of whom the only survivor is James.

As a boy James McCalister attended school in Huntington Township, Ross County, then worked on a farm until learning the cooper’s trade. In 1861 he enlisted in Company C, Eighty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, under command of Capt. R. B. Adams, of Waverly, Ohio, Col. Thomas Morton and Gen. Sherman, being with the latter on the famous March to the Sea. He served four years, taking part in fifteen battles, among which were those of Shiloh, Corinth, Bear Creek, and Atlanta, and being flag-bearer part of the time. He was mustered on at Louisville, Ky., in July; 1865, having performed efficient service and made an excellent record as a soldier. He is affiliated with Stephenson Post No. 30 G. A. R., of Springfield.

At the close of the war Mr. McCalister spent two years at his trade in Ross County and later worked at farming until his removal to Illinois in 1874. He located at Mechanicsburg and carried on farming in that locality until a few years ago, when he retired from active life. He was an industrious farmer and successful in his operations. He now owns a comfortable home at Mechanicsburg and other property in the vicinity. He is a member of the Christian Church, as is his wife, and both are ready to help any worthy object. Mr. McCalister served one year as Road Commissioner while living in Ohio, but has never taken a very active part in public affairs in Sangamon County, although interested in the general welfare and the duties of good citizenship.

Mr. McCalister was married in Ross County, February 21, 1864, to Mary E. Ross, a native of that county, born July 1, 1846, daughter of Duncan Ross, a native of the same State. Mr. Ross carried on farming there until 1875, when he brought his family to Mechanicsburg Township, Sangamon County, and there carried on farming the remainder of his life. He served during the Civil War as private in the Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He and his wife had seven children, of whom the following five now survive: Mrs. McCalister; Isaac, of Chicago; Jasper, of Redbank, Cal.; David and Newton, of Mechanicsburg.

Ten children were born to Mr. McCalister and wife, of whom eight are now living; Lillian, wife of James C. Cook, of Sherman, Ill.; Sheridan, living with his parents; Lydia married Benjamin Cribb and they reside near Roby, Ill.; Major A., of Springfield; Ida M. married Allen Humphrey and they live at Mechanicsburg; George, of Missouri; Sophia, wife of Michael Fennells, of Mechanicsburg; Nellie, wife of Edward Akins, of Lanesville, Ill. Mr. McCalister and wife have twenty-two grandchildren.

McCALISTER, Scott.—Some men, through a pleasing personality, strict integrity and industrious habits, are able to forge to the front, in spite of early disadvantages, and at the same time make and retain friends. This is true in the case of Scott McCalister, of Springfield, one of the most popular men of the city. He was born in Ross County, Ohio, September 20, 1870, a son of James and Mary Ellen (Ross) McCalister, natives of Ohio and Sangamon County, Ill., respectively. The father has now retired from agricultural life, and is living with his wife at Mechanicsburg, Ill. He is a Republican, whose duty as a citizen has been confined to private life. His religious affiliations are with the Baptist Church, of which he is a consistent member.

Scott McCalister went to the district school near Mechanicsburg, leaving when sixteen years old to farm for five years. Following this he was a miner in the Springfield coal mines, until January 13, 1910, when he embarked in his present enterprise, which he has already put into an excellent condition. This business is not his only investment, for he owns considerable city realty, and has great faith that it will rapidly increase in value. He is a Republican and liberal in his religious views.

On May 20, 1896, Mr. McCalister was united in marriage with Minnie Ross, born in Sangamon County, Ill., daughter of Isaac and Minnie (Stogdall) Ross, the former of whom lives in Chicago, but the mother died in 1880. Mrs. McCalister was one of a family of two sons and one daughter, all of whom survive. Mr. and Mrs. McCalister have two children, Mabel and James, both of whom are attending school, and are bright young people.

McCART, Thomas.—Agricultural conditions in Sangamon County have changed to such an extent during the past several decades that the enterprising farmer has been compelled to change to a large degree his methods of treating the soil. Discoveries have been made, powerful machinery has been invented and innovations introduced, and he who would reap the most beneficial results from his property must be conversant with the change of the times. Among the representative agriculturists of Sangamon County is Thomas Mccart, now living retired in his handsome residence in Pawnee, Ill., who for many years carried on farming, and now owns an excellent tract of 300 acres, which is operated by his son. Mr. Mccart is a native of the Emerald Isle, born April 15, 1835, in County Fermanagh, a son of Patrick and Annie (Kelly) Mccart, natives of the same county, where they spent their lives and died, as did also their parents before them. There were ten children in the family of Patrick and Annie Mccart, namely: John, James, Michael, Mary, Ellen, Anna, Patrick, Thomas, Catherine and Bridget, of whom Michael, Elizabeth, Patrick, Thomas and Bridget came to the United States (Thomas being the only survivor), while Mary, Anna, and Catherine live in the old country.

Thomas Mccart's education was secured in Ireland and he remained in that country until twenty-five years of age, working on the home farm and finding his recreation in hunting and out-of-door sports, of which he was and always has been exceedingly fond. He left Ireland in September, 1859, and went to Quebec, but shortly afterward made his way to Boston, Mass., where for two years he was employed in a soap factory. In September, 1862, he came to Illinois, and for one year worked on a farm in Scott County, and from 1864 until 1866 he was similarly engaged in Sangamon County. In 1866 he removed to Christian County, where for one year he rented a farm, then purchased a tract of forty acres, to which he added from year to year, toiling ceaselessly and endeavoring earnestly to succeed, and by his perseverance in his labor and his knowledge of agriculture in all its branches, at the time of his retirement, had accumulated an excellent tract of 300 acres, situated on the corners of Sections 14, 22, 23 and 35. On concluding to retire from active labor, Mr. Mccart placed the farm in the hands of his son, and since that time has lived in Pawnee, enjoying the fruits of his years of industry.

Mr. Mccart has always been a staunch Democrat in political allegiance, and during a long period served as Justice of the Peace in Christian County, a position which he now holds in Pawnee, in addition to being School Director and Road Overseer. He is a consistent member of the Catholic Church, and as a man and a public-spirited citizen has always been held in the highest esteem.

On November 1, 1853, Mr. Mccart was united in marriage, at Virden, Ill., with Margaret Cashen, who was born in County Cork, Ireland, daughter of Peter and Margaret (Harrington) Cashen, the former of whom died in Ireland, while the latter came with five children to the United States, landing at New Orleans and removing thence to Jacksonville, Ill., and later to Christian County, where Mrs. Cashen died. Besides Mrs. Mccart the only survivor of this family is Elizabeth, who married Michael Brogan and now lives in Salina, Kans. To Mr. and Mrs. Mccart there have been born five children, all of whom are living; James, born February 2, 1868, has been living in the West for several years; Edward Thomas, born April 16, 1871, and now residing in Christian County, was married in October, 1903, at Assumption, Ill., to Mary Daxy; John J., born March 14, 1873, and now engaged in farming in Christian County, married Susie Buckles and has three children: Francis R., Mary J. and Margaret D.; Margaret A., born August 29, 1875, now resides with her parents; and Francis, born January 6, 1879, is single and resides in Oklahoma.

Mccart, James.—Experience ripens a man and teaches him the necessary lessons of life. It is impossible for the inexperienced business man to succeed as does the one who has learned how to regulate supply and demand, control trade and meet existing conditions expeditiously and efficiently. For this reason the people of Springfield are fortunate in having among their business representatives many who have already passed through their preliminary experiences and are prepared to meet all requirements. One of the veterans in the grocery business is James Mccart, who has been connected with this branch of merchandising for a number of years, his field of operations extending over a part of the State. He was born at Clinton, Ill., July 27, 1867, a son of Patrick and Catherine (Mulvile) Mccart. The father was born in Ireland in 1834 and the mother was a native of the same country. Her death occurred at Pana, Ill., about ten years ago. Coming to Pana, when eighteen years of age, Patrick Mccart entered the employ of the Illinois Central Railroad Co., and for forty-six years has remained with it, giving a faithful service that has resulted in his appointment as supervisor of a large division. He owns considerable property in Pana and vicinity, and is one of the solid men of his locality.

James Mccart grew up in Pana, attending grammar and high schools, leaving school, he first worked in a grocery store, later embarking in the same business for himself. His business grew until at one time he operated four large grocery houses at Pana, as well as others throughout central Illinois, selling these properties, in 1906, he went to Decatur, where he again engaged in the same line, but three years later sold, and moving to Peoria became manager of the Consolidated Grocery Company there and also managed stores in Galesburg and other cities. About two years ago he severed his other connections to come to Springfield and launch his present enterprise, which is in a flourishing condition, owing to his thorough comprehension of the business.

Mr. Mccart was married, January 9, 1888, at Pana, Ill., to Clara D. Shiley. Her parents are residents of Springfield her father having

The Black Hawk War (1832) found young McClernard occupied in the study and practice of law in Shawneetown, Ill., but with the instincts of a born soldier, and with a patriotism that burned fiercely until the hour of his death, he volunteered for this Indian war, which meant so much to the safety of the pioneers and to the progress of Illinois. This service brought him a well-earned reputation for energy, fearlessness and skill, and cultivated a natural aggressive-ness, which later became so strikingly prominent in his career in the Civil War.

Appointed a Brigadier General, while serving as a Representative in Congress, he took the field for the Union at Cairo, Ill. In September, 1861, and under Grant bore the principal subordinate part at the battle of Belmont in the following November. Here his coolness under fire, the resourcefulness of his active and aggressive mind in combating and overcoming seemingly insurmountable obstacles, and his marked ability to inspire and combine the troops under his command for the victory where others saw only defeat, gained for him the loyalty and confidence of his soldiers that he ever afterwards maintained, and which served him and his cause such signal service on many a hard-fought field to follow.

Advanced to the command of a division, McClernard led in the attacks upon Forts Henry and Donelson in February, 1862, and beyond question largely contributed to those decisive victories. His skill in posting his troops on February 13 and 14 in front of the enemy's trenchmements at Donelson, and the desperation with which he fought his command on the 15th prevented the Confederates, who had massed practically their entire force against the Union right, commanded by McClernard, from cutting their way out and escaping. During the sanguinary conflict that occurred at this time an unfortunate combination of circumstances came near depriving the Army and Naval Commanders, Grant and Foote, of the full fruits of their well-planned campaign.

His army being in position, Grant left the field to consult with Foote on the latter's gunboat. Not foreseeing that the enemy would attempt to force his way out, he gave orders to part of the line, at least, and certainly to Smith, who commanded his left division, not to bring on an engagement without further orders. Doubtless he contemplated arranging with Foote for a combined and simultaneous attack by land and river, and assuming that the enemy had remained on the defensive, the measures adopted would seem to have been wise, but the enemy did not remain on the defensive; on the contrary he hurled nearly his entire force on McClernand's Division; hence its desperate fighting, while other parts of the Union line, with minor exceptions, stood looking on. As events developed, the order referred to was unfortunate, costly, and nearly enabled the Confederates to escape. On General Grant's return he ordered Smith to assault. This, of course, relieved the pressure on McClernand and, indeed, united victory to the Northern standards. If this battle had been fought later in the war, probably neither Smith nor Wallace, commanding left and center, able and gallant soldiers, would have hesitated to set aside orders given to cover conditions that no longer existed, and at once moved to the assault when the roar of the battle on their right reached them.

The battle of Shiloh, April 6 and 7, 1862, one of the most desperately fought of the war, and, indeed, of all times, came near being a great Southern victory. That it was not is due wholly to the stubborn gallantry on the first day of the better elements of the Army of the Tennessee. As the enemy advanced on the 6th under the able leadership of Albert Sidney Johnston, surprise and terror passed rapidly through the Union ranks, and swept a great mass of panic-stricken men back to the vicinity of the steamboat landing. Many were seized with terror who, on previous and later battlefields, fought with courage to the last. It was the first time in the war that Northern troops were driven from position to position, and when those who appreciated the situation prayed for Buell or night, none fought harder, with death and paucity surrounding them on all sides, than McClernand and the greater part of his gallant division. These are facts, and are susceptible of proof to any lover of the truth who will put aside a lot of trash written under the name of history, and turn to the Rebellion Records, officially published by the Government. An intelligent and diligent reader will have little difficulty in sifting the wheat from the chaff if he will read those "Records," where the documents, orders and reports of the war are found verbatim, with the comments and criticisms they called forth at the time by men who were actually participating in the great drama. Nearly twenty years later General Buell told a son of General McClernand that, when he arrived on the field in person on the evening of the 6th, McClernand's Division was the only one with any fair organization left.

With Grant and Sherman, and other officers of high rank who were present, McClernand must share the just criticism of permitting the Army to be surprised; but his share is materially less than that of the two named, because Grant commanded and it was his bounden duty to prevent surprise, which could have been done, and Sherman's division being nearer the enemy, the importance of proper reconnoissance and outpost by his division was more evident.

In September, 1862, McClernand submitted to the President and Secretary of War a plan to capture Vicksburg from the rear, by ascending the Yazoo, and thus open the Mississippi, and later to cut the Confederacy in two parts by advancing from the Mississippi River eastward, and from Mobile, which he would seize, toward Opelika, and in this way permanently break the only rail communications left open between the eastern and western States of the Confederacy. The Vicksburg proposition, at least, was favorably considered, and McClernand was ordered to Illinois to raise the necessary troops therefor. He raised and forwarded, principally from Illinois, Indiana, and Iowa, some forty thousand. He expected to command this expedition, and a pursuit of the official records will show he was fully justified in this assumption. However, in the end he did not.

McClernand assumed command at Milliken's Bend, La., January 4, 1863. The troops there had a few days before been repulsed under Sherman at Chickasaw Bayou, in an attempt to take Vicksburg from the rear. In order to encourage the beleaguered troops and deal the enemy a heavy blow, McClernand moved the Army against Fort Hindman, a strongly fortified position on the Arkansas River, more generally known as Arkansas Post. Here, on the 11th, he met with complete success, capturing the fort with five thousand prisoners, a number of cannon, small arms, and munitions of war. President Lincoln congratulated the successful General and his troops for the victory gained at a time when "disaster after disaster was befalling our arms." Governor Yates, of Illinois wrote, "Your success on the Arkansas was both brilliant and valuable, and is fully appreciated by the country and the Government."

Subsequently McClernand returned to the Mississippi and was assigned to the Thirteenth Army Corps, under Grant, who assumed immediate command of all the forces operating against Vicksburg. The time until March 29 was mainly spent in digging a canal in the attempt to deflect the Mississippi away from Vicksburg, but without any success. On the 29th Grant decided to run the batteries at Vicksburg with sufficient vessels to cross his Army to the east bank of the river, below the enemy's stronghold. The Thirteenth Corps initiated the movement across the peninsula from Milliken's Bend to New Carthage. Many obstacles, with considerable fighting, were met and overcome. The Army was finally landed on the east bank of the Mississippi, and the struggle for Vicksburg commenced in terrible earnestness. This is generally and justly considered Grant's most brilliant campaign. All the honors that pertain to the position of the General-in-Chief are his, and they are great, but the responsibility for any failures that followed honest, skilful and gallant attempts to execute his orders is likewise his, and must he so assigned.

In the marches and battles that followed the crossing of the Mississippi, McClernand and his corps (Thirteenth) did their full duty and did it well. The long list of honored dead, the testimony of many eye-witnesses, and the official "Rebellion Records" all attest this. Port Gibson, fought mainly by the Thirteenth Corps, was skillfully won, and caused the enemy to evacuate Grand Gulf, and retire upon Vicksburg and Edward's Station.
When the objective point of Grant's army was changed May 12, from Edward's Station to Jackson, Miss., to beat back the Confederates in that direction before closing in on Vicksburg, McClerand's Corps, facing the enemy at Edward's Station, had to be withdrawn with great care. Grant states that McClerand accomplished this delicate movement with skill. On May 15, McClerand's and McPherson's Corps won an important battle at Champion Hill, and on the following day the Thirteenth Corps beat the enemy at the Big Black River, capturing some 1500 prisoners and 18 cannon, with a loss of only 375 killed, wounded and missing.
After brilliantly driving the foe within his intrenchments at Vicksburg, Grant thought to carry that stronghold by assault. With this view in mind, orders were issued to extend the line along the line, the first on the 19th and the second on the 22nd. Both failed, with heavy losses. The first assault was ordered before the army had gained a favorable position from which to make it.
On the evening of the 21st Grant notified Mc-Clernand that "a simultaneous attack will be made to-morrow, at ten o'clock a.m., by the army corps of this Army." It was made, as ordered, and gallantly made too. Had success been achieved the laurels would have justly belonged to Grant. It failed, and no amount of argument can shift the responsibility from his shoulders. In his memoirs he expresses a re-great regret at his failure. When the assault failed, the Thirteenth Corps came nearer gaining success than any other. McClerand's men carried the ditch and slope of a heavy earth-work, and planted their colors on the latter. The enemy began concentrating against them to check their advance, and the battle there raged with great fury. At noon McClerand notified the Commanding General that he was in partial possession of two forts. Re-enforcements were ordered to him, but did not arrive in time to be useful. Upon receiving McClerand's reports, Grant ordered the assault to be renewed along other parts of the line, but nothing substantial was gained.
Viewing the conflict in the calmness that comes with passing years, it appears that Mc-Clernand should have been promptly and heavily re-enforced, or that Gen. Grant should have suspended operations along his entire line. That McClerand did make a considerable impression on the enemy's position is am established fact. Maj. Ruford Wilson, who first carried the news of this success to the Corps Commander, still lives, and is an honored and respected citizen of Springfield, Ill., and one of that city's foremost men.

A controversy later arose about the amount of the success gained by McClerand, and as to whether or not the renewal of the assault along other parts of the line should have been ordered. In this connection it is important to bear in mind that Grant himself ordered the renewed assault; he commanded, and the responsibility is his. It is also important to note that he states that, from his position, he thought he could observe the action along McClerand's front as well as that Corps Commander. Nevertheless, he ordered the renewed assault, the responsibility for which cannot be shifted to another.
It was also claimed that the contents of Mc-Clernand's congratulatory order to his Corps, or the fact that a copy was not sent to Army Headquarters, was sufficiently explained by an order from him to his command on June 18. An oversight of his Adjutant General explains the fact that a copy of the order was not sent to Gen. Grant's Headquarters. As to the congratulatory order itself, it can be found in the Rebellion Records, and will bear favorable comparison with many other such orders found there.
McClerand's Corps lost in killed, wounded, and missing before Vicksburg, 1487 men. Of the missing there were but few. To say that that Corps and its Commander did not do their whole duty intelligently, manfully, and nobly, is a direct contradiction of historical facts.
McClerand was born in Texas along the Rio Grande, observing the French occupation of Mexico. He also served under Banks in the expedition against the Confederates on the Red River, where he became dangerously ill, and was sent North to recuperate. No further opportunity offered for him to continue his valuable military services to his country.
The lustre of his fame will continue to brighten as the impartial historian seeks for facts to replace the prejudices that usually accompany contemporary history.

McClintonck, William Jay, M. D.—The medical men of to-day in Illinois form a body which will compare favorably with any other gathering of physicians to be found in the country, and from their ranks have been chosen representatives to some of the greatest medical conferences the world has ever known. They are well represented and among its able physicians may be mentioned William Jay McClintonck, who specializes in women's and children's diseases. Dr. McClintonck was born June 20, 1858, in Morrisson, Whiteside County, Ill., and is a son of John and Rachel (Teachout) McClintonck.
Dr. McClintonck's education began in the public schools of Morrison, which he attended from 1863 until 1868, and from 1869 until 1873 he was in attendance at the public schools of Ill-

ford, Ill., and then began clerking in a drug store. In 1878 he bought out a drug store at Illiopolis, continued there until 1886, and in 1887 went to Johnson City, Kan., where he started a drug store with Dr. John P. Cowdin, his brother-in-law. He removed from Johnson City to Salt Lake City, Utah. In 1889, but in 1890 returned to Illiopolis, and during the year following started a drug business which he continued to conduct until 1894. In 1898, having decided to take up the practice of medicine as a profession, Dr. McClintock entered Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., and graduated from the medical department with the class of 1902, successfully passing the State Board Examination during June of the same year. He commenced practice in Illiopolis during July, but removed to Springfield April 1, 1904, where his practice has steadily increased until at the present time he has the largest practice in women's and children's diseases in the city. It is the doctor's intention to give his entire attention to this class of work in the near future. He is known as a careful student and a steady-handed surgeon, and his offices at No. 422½ East Monroe Street, where he also makes his home, are equipped with all the appliances and accessories necessary to carrying on his profession.

On December 24, 1878, Dr. McClintock was married to Miss Sarah J. Hampton, at Illiopolis, Ill. They have no children. In political belief the Doctor is a Republican, but his professional duties keep him so busily employed that he has little time to engage in matters political. His religious belief is that of the Christian Church. The Doctor is well known in fraternal circles, being a popular member of the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen, the Tribe of Ben Hur, the Order of the Eastern Star and the Owls. His father having died while a private in the Union army, during the Civil War, Dr. McClintock is naturally much interested in the old veterans belonging to the Grand Army of the Republic.

McClure, John W.—Pawnee, Ill., has many citizens now living retired after long years spent in business activity, one of the best known of these is John W. McClure, who for an extensive period was engaged in a mercantile business here. He is a native of White County, Ind., born November 29, 1837, a son of James and Nancy (Humes) McClure. His paternal grandfather was a native of Ohio who died in Indiana, and his grandfather on the maternal side came from Pennsylvania and also died in Indiana. James McClure was born in Scioto Bottoms, Ohio, July 24, 1815, and died February 18, 1857. In Pawnee, where he had come after the death of his wife, December 13, 1823, she having been born in 1816. They were the parents of nine children; John W., Elizabeth J., Isabelle, Sarah B., James, Drusilla, Eliza, David H. and George, the last four named being deceased.

John W. McClure worked in the harvest fields in order to secure the necessary money to obtain an education in the subscription schools of Delphi, Ind., and remained at home until twenty-four years of age, working on the farm and spending his spare time in indulging in out-door sports, notably swimming, of which he has always been very fond. On August 22, 1862, he became a member of Company F, Ninety-ninth Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Capt. George H. Gwinn, enlisting at Brookston, Ind. He served throughout the war, being mustered out at Washington and receiving his final honorable discharge at Indianapolis, Ind. He rose to the rank of Sergeant, and belonged to the Fifteenth Army Corps, which saw some of the fiercest and bloodiest fighting engaged in by the Union Army. Always a faithful and hard-fighting soldier, Mr. McClure cheerfully accompanied his regiment in its many marches, encouraged his men in the skirmishes and vicious battles, and, all in all, made for himself a most creditable war record. His regiment marched 230 miles, fought near 185 miles and was carried by railroads 716 miles, making the enormous total of 6,231 miles. He participated in the battles of Jackson, Vicksburg, Black River, Chattanooga, Rocky Face Ridge, Tunnel Hill, Mill Creek, Buzzard's Roost, Snake Creep Gap, Dalton, Resaca, Adairville, Rome, Cassville, Dykesville, Pumpkin Vine Creek, Kennesaw Mountain, Marietta, Big Shanty, Nickjack, Chattahoochee River, Peach Tree Creek, Ezra Chapel, Siege of Atlanta, Jonesboro, Fort McAllister and many other skirmishes. On the march from Kennesaw Mountain to Marietta Mr. McClure suffered a sun stroke and was left on the road for dead, but soon recovered and rejoined his regiment.

After the war Mr. McClure went to his parents' home in Lafayette, Ind., where he remained until 1870, working as a collector for a marble firm, but in that year went to Montgomery County, Ill., to operate a hay-press, and so continued until 1879. He then located in Pawnee and the next fourteen years of his life were spent in clerking, after which he engaged in a mercantile business of his own account and was thus occupied until his retirement from active life in 1895. Mr. McClure is a Republican in politics, and for six years was Postmaster of Pawnee, also serving as Justice of the Peace. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of American Camp No. 418 and A. J. Weber Post No. 421, Grand Army of the Republic. His religious connection is with the Methodist Church.

Mr. McClure was married July 26, 1871, at Hillsboro, Ill., to Mina P. Harper, who was born in Harpersfield, Ohio, October 4, 1846. Her father, Henry Harper, was born in Harpersfield, March 10, 1813, and her mother, who bore the maiden name of Candice P. Wright, was born in New York, July 19, 1813. They were married in Wisconsin, having formed an acquaintance on a boat while going to that State, and after marriage went back to Ohio, where they lived two years, then removed to Wisconsin. Twenty years later they came to Illinois, settling at Butler, Montgomery County, where Mrs. Harper died October 28, 1879, and Mr. Harper came to Pawnee, where his death occurred May 8, 1892.

Mrs. McClure has a brother, Wright H. Harper, born in Wisconsin, May 26, 1848, who now lives in Pawnee, single.

Mr. and Mrs. McClure have had seven children: Minnie B., born in Butler, Ill., October 16, 1872, married Harry Furry, a clerk of Lawton, Okla., and has three children, John K., Robert D. and Harry W.; Baja, born in Pawnee, Ill., November 5, 1874, married John J. Johnson, of Auburn, Ill., a farmer, and has two children, John A. and Walter R.; Walter T., born December 3, 1877, single and living near Douglas, Wyo.; James and Henry, twins, born June 11, 1881, the former of whom, now a resident of South Dakota, married Angelina Leiztheiser and has two children, Otho and Beatrice T., while the latter married Nora L. Owens, has one child, Grace, and lives at Mill Springs, Mo.; and Roy and Ralph, twins, born December 10, 1886, the former living in Illinois, the latter having died in infancy.

McCONNELL, Edward.—Springfield is the center of many and varied interests, but perhaps none command the attention and energy of more men than that represented by the working of the coal mines in the vicinity. Not only are hundreds employed in the actual work of mining, but the shipment of the coal, the use of machinery, and providing for the wants of those thus engaged, create immense demands. One of those interested in mining and kindred lines is Edward McConnell, who, as his name indicates, is a native of Scotland, having been born at Stirling, July 17, 1872. He is a son of Edward and Elizabeth (Hickey) McConnell, natives of Ireland and Scotland. The father was also a miner, who came from Scotland to Lexington, Mo., in 1881, and has made that locality his home ever since.

Edward McConnell was brought up in Lexington, where he learned to work in the mines. Whenever he discovered opportunity and could afford time, he eagerly indulged in outdoor sports, but was early forced to earn his own living. In 1900 he left Lexington, coming to Springfield, which place has since been his home.

Mr. McConnell has six brothers and sisters: Willie, John, Patrick, Letitia, Mary and Sarah, and one of the brothers served in the Spanish-American War. Since he cast his first vote, Mr. McConnell has been a Democrat, and has always tried to advance the interests of his home town, but otherwise has not identified himself with public affairs. In religious faith, he is a Catholic. He is unmarried. He is regarded as an upright, honorable young man, whose word can always be relied upon. He belongs to the Order of Red Men, the Hibernians and United Mine Workers, and is active in these societies, where he is deservedly popular.

McCONNELL, Robert Simpson.—The call of patriotism echoed in many a loyal heart during the mighty struggle of the early sixties, and resulted in a chain of hardly contested battles that marked a crimson mourning belt over North and South. Many of the participants in those remarkable campaigns have passed away, but fortunately many are left to us, to be held in venerated honor for what they have undergone. No man endured hardships of the Civil War and came out unscathed, although the enemy's shot and shell may have spared him. Every old soldier, whether living north or south of the Mason and Dixon line, has good and sufficient cause, in physical disabilities, to remember painfully what the Union cost him. One thus bravely and uncomplainingly suffering is Robert Simpson McConnell, of Springfield. He was born in Washington County, Pa., May 23, 1830, being a son of a veteran of the War of 1812, Captain Robert McConnell, and his faithful wife, Elizabeth (Hamilton) McConnell. Captain McConnell was born in Washington County, December 20, 1794, while his wife was born December 16, 1802. Both spent their lives in Pennsylvania, the father passing away in 1853, and the mother in 1884. During the War of 1812 Captain McConnell served under the redoubtable General Jackson and participated in all his campaigns.

Robert S. McConnell went to school in Pennsylvania, and his first business enterprise was working on a farm. For three years he operated a separator and thrasher in Pennsylvania. Then for three years he bought and sold stock. In 1860 he came to Indiana, living for two years in Attica, Fountain County, where he engaged in a grocery business. From there he came to Decatur, Ill., to work at the carpenter trade, but about 1866, located in Springfield, and engaged in contracting and building, and that city has since continued to be his home. He secured the contract for repairing the governor's mansion under Governor Shelby M. Cullom. In 1883 he enlisted in the Seventy-eighth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. In a sixty-day service, Mr. McConnell was taken prisoner by Gen. Johnson at Unlontown, Ky. After his exchange he went back to Indianapolis, where he was mustered out. For sixteen years he was Deacon and Treasurer of the Seventh Day Adventists Church, and he and his wife are still members of the church.

On February 6, 1862, Mr. McConnell was married to Mary May, born in Indiana, March 29, 1842, a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Van Gundy) May. Her parents operated a hotel at Attica, Ind., for a number of years. Her father died in 1857 and her mother, November 3, 1882. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McConnell: Charles W., who died in Spokane, Wash., March 14, 1907; Frank, a jeweler at 927 South Third Street, Springfield, Ill.; and a daughter who died in infancy. Mr. McConnell has a brother who resides in Allegheny, Pa.
In addition to his home at No. 1004 South Pasfield Avenue, Mr. McConnell owns other valuable city realty in which he has invested to a considerable extent, thus proving his confidence in Springfield's future.

In 1874 a teachers' and pupils' collection of pennies was taken up for the purpose of erecting a memorial in the shape of a museum at Boston, to Louis Agassiz, in honor of his birthday, May 28. Young Charles McConnell, not having secured a penny at home, picked up a copper pen on the street and requested that be his donation, which was granted. It was sent to Boston, and was sold for $23.00.

A receipt for the amount of the donation, with a photo and autograph of L. Agassiz, was returned to the boy and is in possession of the family now. This pen was sent by the teacher to Dr. Newton Bateman, editor of this State History and then State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

McCormack, John.—Many of the bravest soldiers of the Civil War, when the struggle was over, went to farming, and spent the remainder of their useful lives engaged in tilling the soil and reaping crops from the fertile acres their thrift had accumulated. One of the men who for years was thus engaged, and whose war record shows he was a brave soldier, is John McCormack, of Springfield. He was born in Ireland, June 22, 1839, a son of Michael and Margaret (Connelly) McCormack, natives of Ireland. The father was a merchant, who moved from Ireland to Montreal, Canada, and there spent the remainder of his life.

John McCormack went to West Virginia upon his arrival in this country from Ireland, where he had grown up as any country boy. He served in the First West Virginia Cavalry for three years, participating in the hard-fought battles of Winchester, Gettysburg, and Harper's Ferry, as well as others of less importance, and being mustered out in 1865. Following his return home, he decided to seek new surroundings in a western State, selecting Illinois as his objective point. Locating in Sangamon County, he developed a fine farm, and in conjunction with his farming conducted a blacksmith shop. Finally he retired, coming to Springfield, where he is now living retired from active pursuits.

On April 20, 1865, Mr. McCormack was united in marriage at Cincinnati, Ohio, to Johanna Hefferman, born in Ireland. Three children were born to them, namely: Margaret, born in 1868; Joseph H., born in 1872, and Jennie, born in 1882. Mr. McCormack is a Republican, but other than doing his duty as a good citizen, has never participated in public matters. He belongs to the Western Catholic Union and to St. Michael's Post, G. A. R., of Springfield. His religious faith is Catholic. For years Mr. McCormack has been recognized as one of the substantial men of Sangamon County, and he has many friends who appreciate his worth.

McCoy, Joseph C. (deceased).—If it had not been that in the past there were men brave enough to risk their all to develop new lands, and found homes for their loved ones, and prepare for old age, many places now occupied by flourishing communities would still be covered with virgin forests and the present rich farm lands would lie fallow. One who gave up his life to farming activities and found an abundant reward in the valuable lands which he developed was the late Joseph C. McCoy, for many years a farmer in the vicinity of Taylorville, Ill. He was born in Tennessee about 1828, a son of Morton M. McCoy, a native of South Carolina. Coming to Tennessee in young manhood, Morton M. McCoy met and married Rachel Wilson of Tennessee. Both came of good Revolutionary stock and were filled with a desire to do the best they could for the children who came to them. Feeling that there were more opportunities in Illinois, they made the then long trip to that State in 1852, locating on Sugar Creek, near what is now the village of Auburn. The father was a carpenter by trade and found plenty of work in Springfield and vicinity. There he had the misfortune to lose his wife. He later married Ellen Laswell, who made his declining years happy. He died when over seventy-five years old.

Joseph C. McCoy was the eldest of the three children born to his parents, and being but four years old when the family came to Illinois, had little recollection of any life outside this State. Brought up on the farm, he adopted that work and was a farmer all his life. His education was somewhat limited, being confined to the schools of his vicinity, but he made the most of what he had learned and was well informed. The marriage of Mr. McCoy took place in Springfield on January 26, 1854, when he was married to Miss Ellen Davis, of Sangamon County, Illinois. They had three children, John, now a resident of Hillboro, Ill., who married Alice Russell. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy located on the farm on Sugar Creek after their marriage, and there Mr. McCoy spent the remainder of his well-ordered life, his death occurring in 1880. He was a staunch Democrat, but never desired office.

After the death of her father, the family moved to Springfield to the house in which Mrs. McCoy now lives, and where Mr. Davis died August 1, 1900. Mrs. McCoy has lived in her present home in Springfield, at No. 1200 South Spring Street, for eighteen years, and has made it one of the most comfortable in the city. She is a most estimable lady, whose activities in charitable work make her beloved, although with true modesty she allows but little of them to be known to the public.

McCoy, Sylvester J.—The pioneer history of Sangamon County contains accounts of the wonderful work accomplished by those brave frontiersmen who, coming from more eastern States, settled there in the midst of the Indians and wild animals. The wide expanse of prairie did not know the touch of a plow, when many came there, and along the water courses thick timber shielded dangerous wild animals. There were no railroads and, in many instances, no roads: Indian trails leading from one point to another took the place of them. Schools, churches, towns, and conveniences, all lay in the future. The McCoy family is one of the oldest in the county, and is ably represented in Rochester by Sylvester J. McCoy, a wealthy retired farmer of that locality.

The birth of Sylvester J. McCoy took place in Rochester Township, May 3, 1849, he being a son of Milton D. and Malachia (Cooper) McCoy. John McCoy, the grandfather of Milton D. McCoy, was born July 11, 1763, and died October 24, 1823. He had a large family: Jane, Polly, died October 3, 1855; Elizabeth, born November 3, 1785; Joseph E., born October 5, 1797; John A., born September 13, 1799, died July 14, 1835; Nancy, born November 16, 1801; Prudence, born March 10, 1804; Zillah, born March 5, 1806; Sophia, October 5, 1809; Andrew T., November 26, 1811, and Jessie C., October 9, 1815.

James McCoy, son of John McCoy, was married in Nicholas County, Ky., to Jane Murphy, of German parentage. He served in the War of 1812, under Col. Johnson, long before his marriage. His wife was born in Kentucky, March 29, 1794, and lived there until her marriage. Two of their ten children were born in Kentucky, before 1818, when they came by wagon to Sangamon County, locating there. They came with Levi W. Goodwin, his wife and two children. In 1818 six women came to Sangamon County. In 1819 Mr. McCoy moved to Rochester Township, and he bought the first sack of salt sold in Sangamon County, paying for it with a coon skins which represented a year's hunting.

James McCoy became a prominent man, holding many offices, and had numerous dealings with the Indians during those early days. He used to take his corn to a grist-mill to be ground, the journey being of several days' duration, as the wagon was drawn by an ox. He was of age before he owned a "store-made" coat, and always had a preference for clothing made at home. His son Joseph was the first child born in the county.

Milton D. McCoy was born in Rochester Township, October 16, 1825, and his wife was born four miles south of Rochester November 22, 1830. The McCoy family was originated in this country by three brothers, who emigrated from Scotland. Two of the brothers settled in the south, and one in Pennsylvania. It is from the latter that the Sangamon County branch of the McCoy family descends. Milton D. McCoy spent his life in farming, and lived to be Chairman of the Sangamon County Old Settlers' Committee, serving in that capacity for several years. His death occurred October 15, 1908, and he is buried in Rochester Cemetery. It is interesting to note that he died on the farm on which he was born, and the old homestead is still standing. While of a modest, retiring disposition, Milton D. McCoy won men and kept their friendship, and was much respected in his community. Four children of the family survive: Sylvester J.; Jesse K. in a real estate and insurance business in San Antonio, Texas; Mrs. Mary Puffenburger, of Rochester, and Mrs. Lilly Wright.

Sylvester J. McCoy secured his education in the schools of Rochester Township, making the most of the advantages offered him. He also attended the parish school, but had to help his father in working the farm. He now owns the homestead of 106 acres in Rochester Township, on which both he and his father were born, and which has been in the family for so many years. It is now one of the most valuable farms in Sangamon County.

The marriage of Mr. McCoy occurred in Rochester, the Rev. Albert Hale, of Springfield, officiating, when he was united with Pauline Abel, born in Germany, December 3, 1852. The father dying in Germany, the mother came to America, but being unable to provide for her large family, several people took the children, and Mrs. McCoy was adopted by the Abel family, her foster-father being Roswell P. Abel, who married Margaretta Luce. They were residing in Springfield at the time they adopted Mrs. McCoy, and moved to Wichita, Kan., in 1883. There Mr. Abel died in 1887, and his wife in 1893. The real mother of Mrs. McCoy lived until the latter was twenty-five years old, when she died in St. Louis. Roswell Abel, the foster-grandfather of Mrs. McCoy, was born July 13, 1875, on Sharon Mountain, Litchfield, Conn., and was ninety-eight years and twenty-eight days old at the time of his death. He married Betsy Mason, on October 22, 1807. She was born October 22, 1790, at Fort Ann, Washington County, N.Y., her father having been a Revolutionary soldier. They removed to Springfield, July 15, 1836, and there the wife died in 1876, at the advance age of eighty-four years. Mr. Abel was a volunteer in the militia during the War of 1812, marching with his company from Granville to Whitehall, N.Y., and was in the Battle of Plattsburg. The trip from New York to Sangamon County was a long and weary one, being made in a prairie schooner. At this time Chicago was a town of 2,500, with streets full of Indians, and mud so deep wagons mired continually, and the Abel party were stuck several times. They followed the old stage road from Chicago to Springfield, and, after the many adventures of their trip, arrived in good health and spirits. Mr. Abel had a son and a daughter: Mrs. John Armstrong, and Roswell P., who survived him. Another daughter, Mrs. Calvin Peabody, probably lived at Farmington, Mich.

Mr. and Mrs. McCoy have had children as follows: Milton B., born November 8, 1874, died August 12, 1876; Walter J., born March 6, 1876, married Alice Keys, two children. Hester M. and Marilla J.; Edward O., born December 29, 1878, is a grocer of Springfield in partnership. with Walter J., married Edna Hays, one son, Milton F.; Mary Nian, born December 19, 1850, married Charles Franey, a bookkeeper of Rochester, one child, Mary Pauline; Eva, born March 16, 1883, is at home; Cleveland L., born December 16, 1884, married Maune Pearson and resides in Rochester; Elmer C., born January 28, 1888; Lora L., born March 14, 1891; and Howard S., born June 8, 1892, the last three being at home.

Mr. McCoy is a Democrat and has served as School Director of Rochester Township for two terms, and for the same length of time was a member of the Board of Trustees. He inherits his Democratic principles from his father, who was stanch in his support of that party. While Mr. McCoy is not a member of any religious body, he believes in the church and inclines towards the Methodist denomination, his mother and father having belonged to it. Fraternally Mr. McCoy belongs to the Court of Honor. Several years ago he severed his connection with the Knights of Pythias. He is energetic and progressive, and has accomplished much during his useful life. His property has increased materially in value since he took charge of it, and his success is well merited. He has reared a nice family to do him honor and take their places in the several communities in which they reside. The family occupy a prominent position socially, in Rochester, and their many friends are always welcome in their pleasant home.

McCoy, William Franklin.—The service the breeders of blooded stock have rendered Sangamon County cannot be lightly estimated, nor will their names be easily forgotten. One of the men who for years have been intimately connected with this important branch of agricultural life is William Franklin McCoy of Section 11, Cartwright Township. He was born June 24, 1844, in Oldham County, Ky., son of Andrew Jackson and Ann (Carder) McCoy. The father was a native of Virginia, while the mother was born in Kentucky, in 1820. The father had been taken to Oldham County, Ky., by his parents, when a lad, and there grew up and married. His wife died when William Franklin McCoy was but four years old, in 1848. In 1858, the father again married and by the second marriage had two children: Millburn of Kansas City, Mo., and Ellen who lives in Emporia, Kas. William Franklin McCoy had an own sister, Mary Celesta, who married William F. Phillips, but later died, leaving three daughters, Ida, Eva and Bozza, all now of Plainfield, Ind.

In 1850, Andrew Jackson McCoy brought his family to Morgan County, Ind., where he carried on a building and contracting business, later becoming a merchant. His death occurred at Hall, Ind., December 24, 1863. William Franklin McCoy attended school in Morgan County, entering the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., after he had served his country as a soldier. He located at Rome, Jefferson County, Ill., in 1866, and on August 29, 1867, he married Amanda Melvina Beesley, born in Hickory County, Mo., November 20, 1847, a daughter of Robert D. Beesley and Icenhena (Madison) Beesley, natives of Kentucky, who emigrated to Missouri and for a time lived in Hickory County, where the mother died in 1852. In 1882, the father removed to Rome, Ill., and there again to Missouri, where he sold his farm and removed to Texas, dying there September 6, 1890. They had five children, of whom Mrs. McCoy was the youngest, two others surviving: Albert H., of Fayette County, Ill., and Eleanor J., widow of Elisha Harlow.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. McCoy located on a farm in Fayette County, Ill., where they farmcd, and from the first Mr. McCoy began buying stock for the market. In 1873, he came to Sangamon County, locating on a farm near Lanesville, where he rented 100 acres for a year, then rented 410 acres where he began breeding Clydesdale horses, commencing from a grade foundation, steadily building up to the present state of excellence for which he is now so famous. He has been very successful in his farm and stock raising. In 1904, he moved to Section 11, Cartwright Township, where he is operating 287 acres. During 1910, one field yielded 110 bushels of corn to the acre, and his other crops were equally good. He is now carrying thirty-two pure bred Clydesdale horses and colts. In 1906, four of his fillies took several prizes at the International stock show at Chicago. His stock has taken forty-seven premiums at the Illinois State fair in 1906 and 1907. He exhibits every year, and his product receives prizes wherever shown. Graham Bros. of Toronto, Canada had hard work to beat Mr. McCoy's horses. His success is all the more remarkable as he has worked up the produce from a grade foundation. His horses always bring the highest prices. In addition to his horses, Mr. McCoy breeds about fifty head of the best blooded Berkshire hogs each year, and his product ranks with the best in the country.

Mr. and Mrs. McCoy have had eight children, seven of whom survive: Charles E., born in Fayette County, October 23, 1869, married Mable Schry; Albert Franklin, born August 29, 1871, a carpenter and builder of Springfield, married Gertrude Benedict, and they have three children,—Robert F., J. Floyd and Amos L. Rie; Lodena, born in Fayette County, October 17, 1873, deceased wife of Christian Kautz, dying April 22, 1908, leaving two children,—Catherine Amanda, who makes her home with her grandparents, and James McCoy Kautz, who lives with his uncle, Henry Kautz; Walter Clifton, born April 15, 1875, a farmer residing near Athens, Ill., married Jane Snow,—issue, Ora, Hazel and Lodena; William Robert, born November 1, 1878, married Mae Forsyth.—issue, William R.; James H., born November 20, 1882, a school teacher of Idaho; Floyd Whittemore, born July 13, 1888, and Mary Pearl, born March 24, 1891, both at home. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy have given their children good educational advantages. They are active members of the Christian Church. Mr. McCoy belongs to the Masonic Lodge No. 533, Tyrnan Lodge, the G. A. R. Post at Buffalo, Ill., the National Clydesdale Association and the National Berkshire Hog Association.

Mr. McCoy's war record is one of interest, he enlisting August 15, 1861, in Company A, Thirty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered in September 15, 1861, for three years' service or until the close of the war. He was with his regiment, participating in the battle of Thompson Station, March 5, 1863, when he was wounded in the right leg and being captured, was sent to Libby Prison, where for a month he endured untold hardships, but fortunately was then exchanged, and went home on May 8, 1863. He then returned to his regiment and participated in Sherman's March to the Sea, was in front of Atlanta, and was wounded at the battle of Peach Tree Creek in the right arm. He was then sent to Indianapolis. He was honorably discharged March 14, 1865. His regiment was in eighteen hard-fought battles, traveled by rail and on foot 7,462 miles, 2,917 miles being covered on foot. His regiment lost more men in battle than any other in Sherman's Army, the total enlistment having been 2,267. The total number who died of disease 156, killed sixty-one, died of wounds forty-seven, total death rate from all causes, 271, wounded, 263, total loss 540. After the expiration of his first enlistment, Mr. McCoy re-enlisted, and received, his final discharge, March 14, 1863, after nearly four years of hard soldiering. He made a remarkable record while in service for in spite of the temptations of his surroundings, he never used either tobacco or liquor.

Coming of Scotch ancestry, Mr McCoy has inherited much of the stubborn tenacity of his race, and has never given up, once he commenced to do anything, and as a result he has succeeded far beyond his fondest hopes. His association with the stock breeding interests of Sangamon County, is so well known as to require no further mention here.

McDOLE, John (deceased), for years living retired from active life in his comfortable residence at 919 East Lawrence Street, Springfield, was one of the city's substantial and public-spirited citizens, although prevented by failing health from taking an active part in affairs. Mr. McDoile was a native of Buffalo, N. Y., born April 3, 1832, son of Adam and Barbara (Casper) McDoile, who were natives of Germany, and emigrated to the United States in young man and womanhood. The mother died when John was but four years of age and his father died in 1865, both passing away in Buffalo. The father carried on farming all his life.

The education of John McDoile was acquired in the public schools of Buffalo, and after leaving school, he learned the trade of machinist, at which he worked a short time in Buffalo. He moved to Fort Wayne, Ind., and took a position in the shops of the Pittsburg & Fort Wayne Railroad Company, where he remained fifteen years, then became engineer for the same company, running an engine two years. In 1871, Mr. McDole located in Springfield, accepting a position as machinist in the shops of the Wabash Railroad Company, and later taking charge of an engine for them. He continued in the latter position, until a few years ago, when falling health compelled him to resign his position and retire from active life. He was industrious and thrifty in conducting his affairs, and accumulated several pieces of property in Springfield, including his late residence.

Mr. McDole was married in Fort Wayne, Ind., October 6, 1856, to Miss Jane Fenimore, who was born in Peru, Ind., September 20, 1833, daughter of Ebenezer and Rachel (Gard) Fenimore, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of Portsmouth, Ohio. Mr. Fenimore was a tailor and conducted an establishment of his own at Portsmouth, Ohio. He died in California about 1861. Two sons and one daughter were born to Mr. McDoile and his wife, all of whom are deceased. They had six grandchildren, two of whom live in Springfield, Frank McDoile and Ada Jane, wife of Arthur Lucky. They also had three great-grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. McDoile joined the Methodist Church and he was affiliated with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. In politics he was a Republican. He was one of the most trusted and reliable men employed by the railroad company, and stood well with his associates. He was well known in Springfield, where he had many warm friends. His death occurred April 22, 1911.

McELFRESH, Charles Henry, M. D.—The medical fraternity is represented in Sangamon County by physicians of experience, whose records are second to none in the country. They have been carefully trained and show in their practice the effects of modern progress. Many of them secured their medical education through their own efforts, laboring hard to earn money for their courses, and their after lives show that they appreciate the responsibilities of their profession lays upon their shoulders. One of the most efficient of these practitioners in Springfield is Dr. Charles Henry McElfresh. He was born in Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, July 28, 1844, being a son of John Thomas and Angic (McDule) McElfresh, the former born near Baltimore, Md., July 20, 1815, and the latter in Clear Lake Township, July 9, 1841. The father was a carpenter and contractor, who came with his parents to Illinois about 1833, settling at Ebenezer, three miles southwest of Jacksonville, in Morgan County. Later he moved to Springfield, where he worked at his trade nearly sixty years. In 1861 he enlisted in Company A, Seventy-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but after a year of service was discharged on account of disability.

Dr. McElfresh was educated in the rural schools, and later taught in them for nine years. When he completed his medical course, at the age of thirty-three years, he had spent twenty-seven years of his life in the schoolroom, as pupil and teacher. During the time he was growing up he had a fondness for all outdoor sports, including hunting, fishing and baseball. For the first two years of his life the family lived on a farm two and one-half miles south-west of Dawson, the next four years they were at Illiopolis, then three years were spent at Decatur and eighteen at Farmingdale, when removal was made to Springfield, where Dr. McElfresh has since resided. He practiced one year in St. Louis, three years at Dawson, and after that located in Springfield, where for seven years he has been in a general practice.

On July 11, 1901, Dr. McElfresh married Dora Bennett, who was born at Winchester, Ill. She is the only daughter of Rev. Perry and Amanda Bennett, who had been for a number of years a teacher in the Springfield schools, and is a most cultivated, charming lady. There is no issue of this marriage. Dr. McElfresh has been a member of the Odd Fellows since 1899, and of the B. P. O. E. since 1907. He has been examining physician of many of the fraternal organizations here. In early life Dr. McElfresh united with the Presbyterian Church, but when he moved to Springfield he transferred his membership to the First Methodist Church of the city. Like his father before him, Dr. McElfresh is a stanch Republican. He is a close student and careful practitioner, whose skill has gained him a wide-spread reputation. Earnest, steadfast, conscientious, he has been more than usually successful in his practice, and has gained the friendship and gratitude of his patients.

McELROY, Rev. William N., D. D.—The annals of the Methodist Episcopal Church contain the names of many men who have unselfishly devoted the best years of their lives to the advancement of the cause of Christianity, and have put personal interests and preferences aside, to give their full time and gifts to what they believe to be their highest duty. One of the well-known members of the Illinois Conference of that church is Rev. William N. McElroy, D. D., who has for many years made his home in Springfield. He has served as pastor of numerous churches, and has been associated with large fields of labor. He served as Presiding Elder of the Bloomington District, Champaign District, and has held a similar post in the Springfield District and the Jacksonville District. He has been a member of six General Conferences of the M. E. Church and was a Delegate to the first Ecumenical Conference of that Church held in London, England, in 1881, in which year the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by the Wesleyan Illinois University at Bloomington. He has been a resident of Springfield over a quarter of a century and pastor of several churches during that time. He has devoted a large amount of time to the interests of Christianity in that city, and to the education of the people along the lines of right living, and right thinking, by various methods, and has always taken an interest in the welfare of the people of the city. Mr. McElroy was for four years editor of the Illinois Methodist Journal (now out of existence), and for many years has been a contributor to various religious papers and magazines. He spent several years as a teacher before entering the ministry, and is well fitted to reach the hearts and interests of all classes, and ages of people, investing his message with meaning for all.

Mr. McElroy is of Scotch Irish descent through both paternal and maternal ancestors, and was born in Harrison County, Ohio, June 10, 1832. He is a son of Robert and Mary (McFadden) McElroy, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Belmont County, Ohio. Robert McElroy, his father, was a grandson of the emigrant ancestor of the family, who came to America in 1760, followed in 1761 by the father of Robert McElroy, who located in Huntington County, Pa., where Robert was born, four years later. Robert McElroy died in 1851, and his wife, who was born in 1801, survived him until 1890. Her parents were originally from Maryland, but settled in Ohio at an early day. Rev. W. N. McElroy was one of ten children, being the third son.

The boyhood of Mr. McElroy was spent on his father's farm, and he received his early education in the country schools of Illinois, to which State his parents removed when he was a child. He was naturally studious, and fond of scientific research, and by private study and extensive reading, added to his store of knowledge, becoming a man of broad education. He engaged in teaching school for several years in Illinois, interrupting this work by a trip to California, where he spent two years, then returned to his former occupation. A few years after his marriage he decided to devote his future life to the ministry of his church, and in 1861 became a member of the Illinois Conference. Besides serving as pastor of several churches, he has traveled extensively in the interests of the church as a district superintendent, and wherever he went was successful to a gratifying degree, forming warm friends not only for himself, but for the cause in which he labored. He has a convincing and eloquent manner, showing a quick understanding of his audience and a close sympathy with all classes of men, that is invaluable in his field of labor. He served twice as pastor in Bloomington, twice in Champaign, has been pastor at Shelbyville, at the First Methodist Church at Danville, the First Church at Decatur, the Grace Methodist Church at Jacksonville and of the First, Kumlner, and Laurel Churches in Springfield.

Mr. McElroy was married, October 5, 1856, to Miss Stastra M. Pasteur, daughter of Wesley and Mary (McElroy) Pasteur, who is of French and Scotch descent, on her father's side, a near relative of Prof. Louis Pasteur, the French scientist. Mrs. McElroy was born in Jefferson County, Ohio, and was born July 6, 1836, and reared in Illinois, where she received her education, attending the ladies' academy at Griggsville, Ill., for some time. Five children were born of this marriage: Charles G., who married Miss Inez Martin and lives in Springfield; Robert W., a stenographer and clerk for the Wabash Railroad in Springfield; Mary, the eldest child, married Thomas Crowner and died in 1896, aged about thirty-seven years; one daughter Martha who died in infancy, and one daughter, Alice, who died at the age of eight years. Mr. McElroy has been prominent in several fraternal organizations, having been affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Odd Fellers, the Union League, the Temple of Honor and the Sons of Temperance. He is a man of high intellectual gifts, honored not only by people of his own faith, but by all who know him.

Mr. McElroy, by request of his conference, has just finished writing the History of Methodism in Illinois, in three volumes, covering the years from its beginning to the year 1900. The work will be not only a valuable contribution to the history of the Methodist Church, but of the development of the State of Illinois, as well. It is written in narrative form and is of thrilling interest.

McEWEN, Jacob H., now retired from active life and occupying his comfortable home at 517 Ridgley Avenue, Springfield, Ill., spent a short time farming in Sangamon County, and later was engaged in railroad contracting in various western States, until a few years since. He was born in Seneca County, Ohio, February 8, 1858, a son of George and Ellen (Measel) McEwen, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Maryland. The father was a carpenter, who moved from his native State of Ohio as a young man and followed his trade many years. He died there, in 1856 and his widow survived until 1877. Her father was a soldier in the War of 1812. George McEwen and wife had nine children, two of whom died in infancy, and the following four now survive: George, of Allen County, Ohio; Mrs. Priscilla Jordan, of Republic, Ohio; Mrs. Mary E. Baker, of Cleveland, and Jacob H. Since 1893, the family have held annual reunions on the last Thursday in August, and they have been attended by from seventy-five to 150 members. Jacob H. McEwen has attended nine of the eighteen celebrations, which are held at Bascom, Ohio.

Mr. McEwen was educated in his native county, and in boyhood worked on his father's farm, which he continued until coming to Shelby County, Ill., in 1859. He worked there one year and then came to Sangamon County, spending one year at farm work, after which he engaged in work at the trade of carpenter and followed it a few years in Springfield. He has continued to make Springfield his home since that time, although for many years he was engaged in contracting for railroad excavation in the eight States of Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Colorado and Wyoming. He has lived retired for several years past and has confined his attention to looking after his personal affairs and property. He has been a witness of the great growth and development which has taken place in Springfield during the past half century and knew many of its early citizens. He was a personal friend and admirer of Abraham Lincoln and attended his funeral.

December 31, 1863, Mr. McEwen married Sarah Howard, who was born in Tennessee, November 29, 1855, and was a widow at the time of her marriage to him. Her father, Joseph Howard, was a native of North Carolina, and was also his wife. He was a shoemaker and in 1852 moved to Missouri, where he worked at his trade until his death, at Middletown. He and his wife were parents of two sons and two daughters, of whom Mrs. McEwen is the only survivor. Five children were born to Mr. McEwen and wife, of whom none now survive. Mr. McEwen attends the United Brethren Church of which his mother was a member, and his wife belongs to the Christian Church, and both are interested in church work and other good causes. He is a Republican in politics, and fraternally is a member of the A. O. U. W. He is well known in Springfield, and has a wide circle of friends, by whom he is most highly esteemed.

McFARLAND, Dr. John D., a veterinary surgeon and substantial citizen of New Berlin, Ill., is one of the men who has contributed largely towards the development and advancement of the stock-raising business in his community, through his professional services. He was born in the village of Fowler, Trumbull County, Ohio, October 1, 1854, being a son of Arthur J. and Mary A. (Baldwin) McFarland. The father was of Irish extraction, his father having come from the north of Ireland to settle in Ohio, where there were a large number of the McFarlands. Arthur J. McFarland was reared on a farm, but later in life took up railroad work at Fowler, with the Lake Shore Railroad Company. He became an expert telegrapher, and still later went to California, becoming the first operator at Oakland, that State, for a new railroad. So efficient was he, that promotion followed rapidly and he was second in line for the office of General Passenger Agent of the road, when his father's poor health made him return to Fowler to take up the management of the home farm. Here he lived until 1896, when he went to Cortal, Ohio, to embark in the poultry business. He is now handling over a thousand White Leghorn hens and making a success of it, as he has always done of any calling he has followed. Hard work and thrift have resulted very satisfactorily in his case. Always a Republican, he has been identified with the several communities in which he has resided, and for a number of years has served as a member of the School Board. For some years Mr. McFarland has been a Christian Scientist. Fraternally he is a Mason. He and his wife were the parents of two children, Dr. McFarland and Roy, the latter a court reporter of Chicago, with brilliant prospects.

After attending the district schools of Fowler until he was twelve years old, Dr. McFarland had the advantage of going to school in Courtland. In 1900 he went to Chicago to enter the employ of Swift & Company, later going with the Oliver Typewriter Company, as a mechanic, thus continuing until 1904, when he entered the Chicago Veterinary College, taking a full three years' course and graduating in the Class of 1907. He earned his way through college by working during his vacations with the Oliver people. After graduating he located at Athens, Ill., going in October of that same year to Clinton County, and establishing himself there, even buying a home, but his wife's health failing, he sold his home and practice and came to New Berlin in October, 1909. His success has been remarkable and through his skill many valuable animals have been saved. Expert knowledge like his lessens the risks in handling stock and induces farmers to invest in high-grade breeds. His office and laboratory are fitted with all modern appliances known to his profession, and no veterinary in the county is better equipped to care for suffering and sick animals placed in his charge.

Dr. McFarland was married June 10, 1908, to Ethel B. Cantrall, of Athens, Ill., a daughter of Jasper Cantrall, one of the leading men of Athens. Dr. McFarland is a Republican and has not gone before the public for office. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to Loami Lodge, No. 450, and to the Modern Woodmen of America of New Berlin. In addition to his professional interests Dr. McFarland owns 240 acres of land in Arkansas, and is a stockholder and promoter of the New Berlin Driving Association. Energetic and enthusiastic, he is devoted to his work and has a large practice throughout Sangamon and Morgan Counties. He is well-read, owning a large library and subscribing for many magazines, some of a professional nature, and enjoys their contents. He and his wife have a number of warm personal friends and stand high in their community.

McGILLICK, John.—Sangamon County appreciates without stint the many excellent qualities of the sons of Erin who find there more congenial surroundings than in their own oppressed country, dear as it is to them. Many reliable and representative citizens of the county were born in Ireland, and among them is John McGillick, of Section 25, Woodside Township, owner of a good farm. He was born June 22, 1821, a son of James and Mary (Riley) McGillick, natives of Ireland. In 1852 the parents came to Springfield, where they spent the remainder of their lives, dying there years ago. The limited educational advantages afforded Mr. McGillick were obtained in Ireland, and from the time he was a mere child he had to work hard.

As he grew up, he realized that Ireland was no place for ambitious young men, and in 1855 he came to Canada, where for seven years he was a landscape gardener and farmer. But not finding there exactly the conditions he wanted, he came in 1852 to Springfield, which has been his home city ever since, although for some years past he has lived in Woodside Township. His farm of thirty-four acres represents years of toil. Buying it at a low figure, years ago, he has developed it until it is now a valuable property. On it his children were born and reared to useful maturity, and he and his wife are there spending their declining years.

Mr. McGillick was married in Canada, in February, 1867, to Margaret Flinnigan, a native of Glasgow, Scotland, daughter of Michael and Mary Flinnigan, natives of Ireland and Glasgow, Scotland, respectively. Mr. Flinnigan lived to be ninety-five years of age, spending the last fifteen years of his life in Springfield, where he died. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. McGillick were as follows: Rose E., born November 10, 1868; Thomas and Sarah, twins, born September 30, 1884, and Margaret, born November 10, 1886, and three daughters and one son who are deceased. Being now advanced in years, Mr. McGillick does little of the actual work of the farm, which is under the efficient charge of his son. He is a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church, and has been from boyhood. His vote is always cast for the candidates of the Democratic party, and he gives them his hearty support in other ways. Genial and kind-hearted, this excellent old gentleman has many friends and holds the esteem of all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

McGINNIS, Mrs. Bridget, of Springfield, Ill., was born in County Sligo, Ireland, in July, 1847, daughter of John and Anna (Toher) Meer, both also natives of that county, the father born in 1821 and the mother in 1822. He died in 1897 and she died at age of ninety-three years. Neither of them left their native land. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom Bridget was the second in order of birth. They are: Mary, wife of Michael McLaughlin, living in Ireland; John, of John Joyce of Philadelphia, Pa.; Thomas, also of Philadelphia; Michael, of Ireland; Sarah died in Ireland, at a tender age; John, of Ireland; Katherine, wife of John Kelly, of Ireland; Nellie, wife of John Walsh, of Ireland; Betty died young; Patrick lives in Michigan.

Bridget Meer was married in the Catholic Church in Mahanoy, Pa., by Rev. Father McAvoy, in August of the year following the assassination of President Lincoln, to John McGlinnis, who was born in County Sligo, Ireland, in 1829, and died September 12, 1903. The records of his family have been lost and his widow is unable to give the names of his ancestors or data relative to them. Mr. McGlinnis came to America as a boy and located first at Scranton, Pa., and later moved to Mahanoy. He and his wife came to Dixon, Ill., and thence to LaSalle, and later lived for a time at Streator, Braidwood, and Kankakey, and finally located in Springfield, where they located permanently. He followed mining all his active life and was an industrious, reliable citizen. He had a sister Bridget, who married Patrick Eagen and lives in Nebraska.

Five children were born to Mr. McGlinnis and wife, of whom all are deceased except one. They were three daughters and two sons, namely: Anna, born in May 1866, died in June, 1903; John, a coal miner, born in 1869, died April 19, 1896; Katherine, born in September, 1872, died in 1894; Patrick, born in 1878, a coal miner, died in February, 1908; Mary, born June 2, 1876, lives at home with her mother. Mary McGlinnis is most devoted to her mother's comfort and welfare and has given up all her personal tastes and ambitions to administer to her parent in the latter's old age. Both are members of St. Joseph's Catholic Church and are earnest workers in its cause. They are refined, cultured women and have many personal friends. The husband and father died at his home in Springfield and Mrs. and Miss McGlinnis now reside at 1824 North Ninth Street.

McGIVNEY, Michael (deceased).—A good man's influence is felt long after his mortal body has crumpled into the dust from which it was raised. The best citizens of a city are not always found in the highest positions; wealth and power do not necessarily bring happiness, for it is among those who each day do the duty assigned them, giving a fair service, that real contentment and plect are found. The life of the late Michael McGivney was an excellent example of this, and his memory is tenderly cherished by those who knew his real worth. Mr. McGivney was born in Ireland about 1840. Losing his parents when he was a small lad, he was cared for by an uncle, who brought his young charge and his two sisters, Annie and another to the United States. Soon after their arrival in New York City the uncle died, and the young people found their way to Cincinnati, O., where they had a cousin, The two sisters married and now reside in Arkansas.

The cousin was in a tailing business, and Michael found employment with him. Later he embarked in a tailing business in Aberdeen, O., but in 1887 he moved to Springfield, where he entered the employ of the electric light plant, continuing with this concern for eighteen years, or until his death. While residing in Aberdeen, Mr. McGivney was united in marriage with Hannah Downs, born in the vicinity of Maysville, Ky., a daughter of John and Margaret (Hennessey) Downs. The children born to them were: John, who died at the age of thirty-five years in Springfield, married a Miss Sexton; William, died at the age of twenty-five years; James, deceased; Frank, also deceased; Edward, of Chicago, and Mary, at home. Mr. McGivney died July 7, 1908, a faithful member of the Roman Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception. In politics he was a Democrat, but never aspiried to office, confining his attention to his work.

McGOVERN, John James (deceased), who was prominent in labor circles in Springfield, Ill., had the best interests of his community at heart and was recognized as a public-spirited, useful citizen. He was born at Newcastle, Del., February 2, 1855, a son of Patrick and Elizabeth (Sheridan) McGovern. He was a native of Ireland and came to America as a young man. After living several years in Delaware, he went to Weir City, Kan., locating on a farm nearby. The mother was also a native of Ireland and they had five children, as follows: Edward, Eugene, Henry, Owen, John J. Mr. McGovern was educated in the parochial schools of Farnam- dale, Ill., and his first active work was performed on his father's farm. Later he engaged in mining operations, first as a laborer and eventually as a foreman. He took great interest in the welfare of his fellow-workmen and in labor conditions and was popular with his associates. He became connected with the Workman's Legal Insurance Company, of Chicago. He retired from active life in 1897 and spent his last days in ease and quiet in his home at Springfield.

Mr. McGovern's marriage occurred at Petersburg, Ill., April 20, 1881, when he was united with Ellen Brazle, the ceremony being performed by Patrick O'Hara. He was a member of the Catholic Church of that place. Miss Brazle was born at LaSalle, Ill., July 20, 1862, daughter of Thomas and Anna (Farrell) Brazle, both natives of Ireland, the father born in December, 1834 and the mother, May 15, 1837. The Brazle family came to America and located on a farm near Ashland, Ill., where the father's death occurred February 29, 1906. Mrs. Brazle still resides at Ashland. They were parents of nine children, as follows: Edward, Ellen (Mrs. McGovern), Mary (wife of John Sehy); Bridget, James, Michael and Anna, all deceased; Alice, wife of Simon Whalen.

Mr. McGovern and wife became parents of ten children: Elizabeth, born February 18, 1881, wife of Charles Gallager; Edward, born October 29, 1883; Mary L., born October 18, 1885, wife of William Galgannon of Ohio; Thomas P., born February 28, 1887, a florist at the Bell-Miller Green House Co, and living at home; Eugene P., a minor born December 12, 1888, lives at home; Frances, born, January 6, 1891, died September 5, 1896; Frank, born October 21, 1893, at home; Robert, born March, 9, 1895, lives at home and is a florist in the employ of A. C. Brown Company; Alice, born January 16, 1898; Stella, born April 25, 1900. There are ten grandchildren in the family.

Mr. McGovern belonged to the Royal Circle, which is now known as the Royal Americans, and was a member of St. Agnes Roman Catholic Church. He was active and prominent in political affairs and cast his influence with the Democratic party. His death was keenly felt in many circles and was sincerely mourned by a wide circle of friends. He passed away at his Springfield home February 2, 1904, and his widow still resides there, surrounded by her children and many friends.

McGOWAN, Frank M.—The wool industry of the United States is one of the country's important enterprises, and in all of its various branches controls immense sums of money and gives employment to large numbers of men. Those who are engaged in this business as dealers have a finger at the country's pulse, as wool being a necessary article the scale of its demand indicates the nation's prosperity. Frank M. McGowan, a prominent business man of Springfield, Ill., is engaged in dealing in wool, as well as in hides and tallow, in partnership with his father and governing one of the successful business ventures of its kind in this part of the country. Mr. McGowan is a native of Springfield, born here January 14, 1873, a son of John and Eliza (Ryan) McGowan. Michael McGowan was born in the North of Ireland, and on settling in Albany County, N. Y., after coming to this country, he secured employment as a wool-sorter, and subsequently was employed in the same capacity at Hartford, Conn. In 1867 he came as a Journeyman to Springfield, where he entered the employ of the Springfield Woolen Mills, with which firm he continued thirty years, first having charge of the sorting and later becoming buyer for the company, but is now engaged in business with his son. Mc McGowan was married in Decatur, Ill., in 1867, to Eliza Ryan, who was born in the eastern part of Ireland, but her name was taken by her parents to Hartford, Conn. Mr. and Mrs. McGowan had these children: Margaret, the wife of N. J. Hamilton, of Springfield; Sarah, wife of James Cochran, of St. Louis, Mo.; Frank M.; Daniel J., deceased; John J., who married Eva Silvy, and had seven children; Elizabeth, at home; and Christopher, who took his preparatory studies in the Springfield High School and is now studying medicine in the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons at Indianapolis, Ind.

Frank M. McGowan received his education in the public schools of Springfield and later spent one year in a business college. He began sorting wool in the Springfield Woolen Mills, working under his father's direction, afterwards spending six or seven years in a similar business in Ohio. In 1893 he engaged in the wool trade at Havana, Ill., where he remained one year, then returned to Springfield where he embarked in his present business, being later joined by his father. They have handled millions of pounds of wool and also deal in hides and tallow. Mr. McGowan is a stockholder and director in the "Springfield Record" Publishing Company, and he and his father own considerable desirable real estate in the city.

In September, 1894, Mr. McGowan was united in marriage with Miss Stacia A. Connolly, who was born in Chatham, Ill., and educated in the schools of Sangamon County, where her parents resided for many years. Children have been born to this union, as follows: Loraine, Helen, Margaret, Frances, Bernadine and Frank M. Jr.

Mr. McGowan is a member of the Knights of Columbus and of the Order of Elks; is also a communicant of the St. Agnes Catholic Church, and a liberal donator to church and charitable work. His political faith is that of the Democratic party, and besides taking quite an active part in local matters, is always found at the head of any movement which he believes will help in promoting the city's best interests.

McGRATH, Thomas C. (deceased), who served ten years as a member of the police force of Springfield, Ill., was well known as a useful and public-spirited citizen. Mr. McGrath was born in Tamaqua, Schuylkill County, Pa., April 8, 1836, a son of Terrence and Nellie (Cuneford) McGrath, the 90. John and Jane McGrath, formerly of Ireland. The father was a foreman in the coal mines of Pennsylvania. He and his wife had seven children.

The education of Thomas C. McGrath was acquired in his native State, and after leaving school he began driving in the coal mines. In 1859 he moved to LaSalle County, Ill., where he lived about twelve years and employed as a miner. In 1857 he located in Springfield, where he secured a position on the police force, under the administration of Mayor Hay, and served ten years under three different Mayors. He left the force in 1866 and his death occurred at his home, 1527 East Washington Street, Springfield, July 25, 1906, at the age of seventy years. He was buried in Calvary Cemetery. He was a good officer and had considerable experience in mining, having been employed many years as inspector and foreman for the Capital Coal Company. He was a member of the Catholic Church and affiliated with the Catholic Order of Foresters, of Springfield. He took an active part in local affairs, and in political views was a Democrat. He was devoted to his home, a kind husband and father, and had many warm personal friends, being a man of social instincts and genial disposition.

Mr. McGrath was married, in LaSalle County, Ill., February 19, 1860, to Miss Mary Calbert, who was born in Columbia, Lancaster County, Pa., May 17, 1857, a daughter of Michael and Johanna (O'Connell) Calbert, both born in County Cork, Ireland. Twelve children were born to Mr. McGrath and his wife, namely:
Josie, unmarried, living with her mother; Thomas J., unmarried and living at home; William E., a mine worker, married and living in Springfield; Margaret, married Patrick J. Whalen, a bartender living in Springfield; Anna, married Joseph Hoh, clerk in a shoe store in Springfield; Nellie and Matthew, unmarried. David J., Terrence, Michael, Alice and Helen are deceased.

McGRAW, Daniel, now living retired from active life in his comfortable home at 2026 East Capitol Avenue, Springfield, Ill., has spent most of his life in Sangamon County. He was born in County Limerick, Ireland, in 1840, a son of Patrick and Mary (Cahill) McGraw, who brought him to America as a small boy. The parents spent two years in Toronto, Canada, then came to Springfield, where both of them spent a few years later. Daniel McGraw received his education in Quebec, Canada, and upon leaving school secured a position on a steamboat plying on the Mississippi between St. Louis and New Orleans, spending three years in this way. He then located in Springfield, where he worked a few years as gardener and then purchased stock in the Old East Mine, of which he still owns some shares. He entered the employ of the company and remained with them until he retired from active life, a few years since. He owns his present residence, which is very pleasantly located, and has a large number of friends in the city.

Mr. McGraw was married in Springfield, in 1880, to Miss Mary Welsh, a native of Ireland, whose parents spent their entire lives in that country, and four sons and three daughters were born of this union. The four surviving children are: Patrick, of Omaha, Neb.; Daniel, of Springfield; Nora, wife of Matt Cullen, an employe of the Springfield Fire Department; and Nellie, of Springfield. There is but one grandchild in the family. Mr. McGraw is a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church, belonging to the Immaculate Conception Parish, and in politics is a Democrat. He has a reputation for honesty and integrity and is regarded as a useful, upright citizen. He was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, of whom he has many pleasant memories.

McGRUE, Harry O., a representative and successful business man of Springfield, has spent his entire life in that city, where he was born in June, 1860. The enterprise, known as the Capital Planing Mill, of which he is now the head, was started by his father, Thomas A. McGue, in 1876, and has had a steady and continuous growth since that time. Thomas A. McGue was born in Ohio, and in youth learned the trade of carpenter. In June, 1858, he was married to Miss Mary Cummins, who passed away in November, 1896. Mr. McGue became a resident of Springfield in 1856, where he died in 1890.

The education of Harry O. McGue was acquired in the public schools of his native city, and at an early age he left school to assist his father in business, and attended night school for some years later. He learned the full details of the enterprise by practical experience, and at his father's death succeeded to the business. The Planing Mill is equipped with high-grade machinery of late pattern, and is prepared to furnish a complete line of inside and outside builders' finishing material. It now occupies a two-story plant, 90x157 feet at Ninth and Adams Streets, where about fifty men are employed throughout the entire year. The product is shipped to different parts of central Illinois, and supplies an excellent trade in Sangamon County. Mr. McGue is well fitted for the struggle engendered by competition, and is always wide awake and ready to take advantage of his opportunities. The business has been conducted for the past thirty years at the present location, but on account of the growing business and crowded condition, Mr. McGue is now completing a new mill, with increased capacity and additional space. The building and ground occupy an entire block of property in Harvard Park, from Seventh to Eighth Street on Princetown Avenue. This will enable him to handle a greater volume of business and larger contracts to much better advantage.

Mr. McGue was married, in 1881, to Julia G., daughter of William and Hattie (Morse) Church, a native of Springfield, where she was reared. Mrs. McGue passed away October 30, 1911. By this marriage five children were born: Edna A. (widow of Edward B. Greene), now residing at home; Harry R., who died November 4, 1911; Robert, James and William.

Mr. McGue is prominent in political circles in Springfield, and is a staunch Republican in his views. He served twelve years as alderman from the Fifth ward, and was true to the interests of the city.

He is a member of Springfield Lodge No. 4, A. F. & A. M., and Springfield Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Elwood Commandery, K. T., No. 6. He also belongs to Capital Lodge No. 14, K. P., and Sangamon Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F.

McGRUE, Oliver, a prominent citizen of Springfield and a veteran of the Civil War, is still actively engaged in working at his trade of carpenter, though rather advanced in years. Mr. McGue is a member of a family that has been prominent in Ohio for many generations, and his paternal grandfather, who was a soldier in the Mexican War, was a native of Ohio and died on his farm in that State, at the age of eighty years. Mr. McGue was born in Clermont County, Ohio, October 30, 1833, son of Andrew and Mary (Oliver) McGue, the former a preacher, who died when his son Oliver was but six months old. His widow, a native of New Jersey, had come to Ohio when sixteen years of age, and after the death of Mr. McGue she married (second) Adam Bowly, and they lived in Williams County, Ohio, then a wilderness, where a scant education was received by Oliver McGrue. When eighteen years of age Oliver McGrue left the home of his mother and step-father and went to Cincinnati, where he learned the trade of carpenter, being a resident of Ohio until 1857. He then moved to Independence, Kan., lived there three years and in 1889 moved to Springfield, which has since been his home, and there he has continued working at his trade.

Mr. McGrue enlisted, in February, 1862, at Batavia, Clermont County, Ohio, in Company F, Fifty-ninth Ohio Infantry and after serving but part of his term of enlistment was sent home on account of sickness. He was afterward sent to Camp Dennison and worked there as carpenter until the close of the war. After leaving the army he resumed work at his trade, and since 1862 has been employed at the Vredenburg Planing Mill, at Springfield. He has been fairly successful in financial affairs, has saved and his widow has been well provided for. He is a member of the Campbellite Church and was formerly a Democrat, but now is Independent in politics. He served several years as Councilman while living in Ohio.

Mr. McGrue was married in Batavia, Ohio, March 17, 1859, to Miss Missouri L. Hopkins, a native of Batavia, born September 21, 1830. She is a daughter of Benjamin R. and Mary J. (Deagler) Hopkins, both natives of Virginia, who moved to Ohio by wagon at an early day. The family was an old one in Virginia, well known and highly respected there. Mr. Hopkins became a pork packer and both he and his wife died in Clermont County, Ohio, he at the age of eighty-seven and his wife at the age of ninety-two years. The father of Mr. Hopkins spent his entire life in Virginia and the father of his wife, also a native of Virginia, owned a ship and was drowned in a storm at sea. Five children were born to Oliver McGrue and his wife, of whom two survive, namely: Nellie B., born in Batavia, Ohio, October 27, 1862, now Mrs. Albert P. Lyon of Springfield; Percy Oliver, born in Batavia, August 12, 1876, a telegraph operator in the Capitol Building at Springfield; Harry C., born in December, 1864, deceased; Dale Owen, born in Ohio, July 21, 1874, died in Springfield October 25, 1886; William A. born in Ohio, December 17, 1860, died August 17, 1861.

The second oldest child of Mr. McGrue, his only daughter, Nellie B., married (first) Frank W. Markley, of Hamilton County, Ohio, where he worked at photography, and there he died, leaving one daughter, Irene B., born in Hamilton County, June 15, 1851, who married Charles S. Adams, of Galesburg, Ill., employed in the office of Mr. Lyon in his transfer business, in Springfield, and they have no children. Mrs. Markley married (second) Albert P. Lyon, owner of the largest transfer and bus line in Springfield, and has no children by her second marriage. Percy Oliver McGrue married Elsie O'Neill of Jacksonville, Ill., and they have no children. Harry C. McGrue was at one time employed in the Commercial Bank, at Independence, Kan., and after working there six years resigned and started a bank in Colfax, Wash. He took a severe cold while skating and this, affecting his heart and afterwards his lungs, caused his death, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, after he had started for home. Dale Owen McGrue left a widow and one child, having been married to Lizzie Pitzer, of Athens, Ill., now a resident of Springfield, and their daughter Helen was born in Athens.

Mrs. McGrue is a woman of intelligence and culture, much interested in church work and active in many worthy causes in the community.

McGUIRE, Judge Robert L., a valued citizen of Springfield, Ill., and at one time Mayor of the city, has been one of the prominent lawyers of Sangamon County since 1865, when he first established an office in Springfield for the practice of his profession. Judge McGuire was born in Boone County, Mo., a son of Levi and Susan McGuire, and in boyhood worked on his father's small farm until he was seventeen years of age. Levi McGuire was a minister as well as a farmer, and a man of good education, so that the son early learned habits of right thinking and correct expression. He received a good education near his home and at the age of seventeen years left home to engage in teaching school, thus earning the money with which he attended Missouri University, at Columbia, Mo., from which he graduated in the Class of 1857. He afterwards taught at Mexico and Greenfield, Mo., and, at Rushville and Springfield, Ill., meantime having prepared himself for admission to the bar. He soon established a good legal practice and became interested in various financial enterprises in Springfield and vicinity, in all of which he has met with gratifying success. He has been retained in many important cases and has always taken an active interest in the progress and growth of the city. His fellow-citizens have vested confidence in his ability and good faith by electing him to the office of Mayor, which he held in 1879-80, and administered affairs in a manner highly creditable to himself and to the public. He is a stanch Republican in political belief and active in the interests of his party. He served several years as a member of the city School Board and in 1880 was elected to the office of County Judge. Judge McGuire represents the highest type of citizen, ready to put the interest of his city, county or State above his own, and has never been an office-seeker.

December 22, 1875, Judge McGuire was married at Champaign, III., to Sadie Leaverton, daughter of Wilson and Jennett Leaverton, both now deceased. One child was born of this union. Susan Jeanette, who was married, in October, 1903, to John Sydney Burnett, of Chicago, Judge McGuire is prominent in Masonic circles, having belonged to the order nearly half a century and for most of that time has served as Treasurer of his lodge. He is a Knight Templar and has taken the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite. He has been an Odd Fellow nearly forty years, is also a Knight of Pythias, and a member of the Elks Lodge.
He belongs also to the Sangamo, the Illini, Country and Mercantile Club of Springfield. He is a man of pleasant, genial manner and kind heart and is popular with his many friends.
He and his wife are interested in church and benevolent work, both belonging to the First Presbyterian Church. Judge McGuire has at times invested in real estate and has been fortunate in his dealings in this line.

McINTIRE, James W. — Farming in Sangamon County has always been profitable, but never more so than now, when there are so many appliances to assist the agriculturist in his work.
James W. McIntire, on Section 5, Cooper Township, was born in Mechanicsburg, April 6, 1836, a son of Sanford and Theodora D. (Maddox) McIntire, the former born in Scott County, Ky., in 1802, and the latter in Owen County, Ky., May 4, 1834. The parents came to Illinois in 1847, settling in Mechanicsburg, where they lived until 1865, when they moved to the farm where James W. McIntire now lives. There the father died July 25, 1888, but his widow survives, making her home in Kansas. The father bought a soldier's claim on the present site of the city of Bloomington.

Mr. McIntire early commenced working in a brick yard for his father, thus continuing until he was twenty-two years old. He then started farming, and has continued in that line ever since. He owns a portion of the old homestead, comprising nineteen acres of land, and has lived on it nearly a quarter of a century.

On November 29, 1883, Mr. McIntire was mar-rried in Springfield to Mary Haumann, born December 15, 1864, daughter of Chris. and Lonise (Stuhlman) Haumann. The parents came to America from Germany, in 1859, and spent two years in Springfield, after which they went to Clear Lake Township, settling on a farm, which continued the family home until the death of the father, April 21, 1908. The mother passed away thirty-four years ago. Mrs. McIntire has a sister living six miles east of Springfield, but her brother, F. W., is deceased. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McIntire: Christian II., of Buffalo; Anna F., wife of Forest Gabbert, living in Mechanicsburg; Clara Inez.

McKee, Charles C. — A number of the responsible residents of Springfield have found an outlet for their energies in working for the various railroads which center there. They have proven worthy of the trust reposed in them, and have borne their part in the growth of these systems.
One of the men now holding a very responsible position with the Illinois Central Railroad Company, is Charles C. McKee, foreman of the roundhouse, now residing at No. 700 North Fourteenth Street. He was born on a farm at Salisbury, Sangamon County, December 29, 1869, a son of John and Mary McKee. The latter was born in Kentucky, in 1830, and was brought to Sangamon County when very young by his parents. They located on 40 acres of land, on which the house is still standing in which they made their first home. There John McKee grew to manhood, becoming a sturdy farmer's son.
Later the family moved to the vicinity of Salisbury, where John McKee became the driver of a stage-coach, running between Springfield and St. Louis, and carried many passengers who later became celebrated in the country's history.
After several years in this work, he acted as engineer in a saw-mill, still later resuming his farming and locating in DeWitt County. In 1891 he went to Waverly, Morgan County, dying there in 1893. While not a member of any religion denomination, he inclined towards the teachings of the Methodist Churches in particular he was a firm Democrat. His widow is still living, aged seventy-four years. She and her husband had children as follows: Samuel, at home; George, of Waverly; Albert, of Clinton, Ill.; Charles C.; James, of Waverly; John, at home.

Charles C. McKee attended school in Sangam-ou and DeWitt Counties, until he was fifteen years old, at the same time learning to be a farmer. When he was twenty-one years old he entered the employ of the Illinois Central Railroad Company as wiper, working his way up through various positions in their employ for fifteen years, when he left to engage with the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Company, returning to the Illinois Central Railroad later. The best proof of his efficiency is the fact that he rose from the position of wiper, at $1.10 per day to the important one he now holds.

The marriage of Mr. McKee took place at Clinton, Ill., July 20, 1887, to Miss Florence Gillard, of Clinton, daughter of Charles and Eliza Gillard. Mr. and Mrs. McKee became the parents of two children: Vera, born August 2, 1900, and Merma, born August 26, 1905.

Fraternally Mr. McKee is a member of the Masonic Order, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Court of Honor. In politics he is a Republican, but his time has been so occupied with his business cares that he has never come before the public for office. Faithful and conscientious, thoroughly versed in all the details of his work and recognizing the responsibilites of his position, Mr. McKee is one of the most efficient men in the employ of the Illinois Central Company. His services are apprecated at their true value, and not only is he trusted by those in authority, but he is liked by his men, who know he is their friend, trying to help them in every way that will not conflict with his duty to the road.

The home life of the McKee family is very pleasant, both Mr. and Mrs. McKee having many friends in Springfield. Their hospitable home is presided over by Mrs. McKee with true housewifely skill, and she makes welcome all who come within its doors.

McKee, George W.—Farming as a business is something that pays in these days of scientific agriculture. The days when the farmer worked early and late for merely enough to eat and a roof over his head are past, for the agriculturalist of the present time is too well informed to allow opportunities to escape him. He takes advantage of governmental experiments, makes experiments of his own, and deduces inferences from the operations of others. He is not content to go on raising, year after year, the same crops, but tries new ones until he is satisfied that his land is bringing forth the best results. His buildings are of the best, and his stock of high-grade—this farmer of today. No one is a better representative of this modern farmer than George McKee of Section 14, Cotton Hill Township, where he was born May 7, 1881, a son of the old pioneer, the late James L. McKee, and his wife, Mrs. Levinia (Snodgrass) McKee, whose lives are taken up separately in this work.

Attending the New City public school, Mr. McKee acquired a practical education, but his real training came from the farm. With the exception of some traveling for recreation, Mr. McKee has spent his life in Sangamon County engaged in farming, and the results he has accomplished show that he chose his occupation wisely. A strong Democrat, he has served since 1860 as Town Clerk. Liberal in his religious views, he contributes to the support of the Christian Church of Rochester, to which his wife belongs.

Mr. McKee was married in Springfield, Ill., by Judge Murray, on November 27, 1904, to Lillie May Burt, who was born in Rochester, Sangamon County, March 24, 1858, a daughter of Alfred H. and Margaret Burt. Mr. Burt was born in Sangamon County, March 9, 1857, and his wife in Fairfax County, Va., in 1854. Both are now living retired in Rochester. Besides one child who died in infancy, three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McKee, who survive, namely: Ruth V., born October 24, 1906, Ethel May, born April 20, 1909, and George Lemuel, born February 8, 1911.

McKee, James Lemuel (deceased), an early settler of Sangamon County, where for more than half a century he was engaged in farming, was a useful, enterprising citizen, always ready to promote the public welfare and prosperity of his community. Mr. McKee was born in West Virginia, November 13, 1831, a son of James W. and Anna McKee, both natives of the same State. The father died in West Virginia, and his widow died while on a visit to her son James Lemuel McKee, and was buried in Zion Cemetery in Cotton Hill Township. The father of James L. McKee was a well-known farmer of Virginia, spending his entire life there.

James L. McKee received a somewhat meagre education, in his native State, and as a young man was very fond of hunting and fishing. He worked on his father's farm until coming to Illinois in 1855, when he located in Cotton Hill Township, where at the time of his death, he owned a farm of 104 acres, on Section 11, which is now the home of his widow. Mr. McKee was a member of the Methodist Church, and superintendent of the Sunday school. In politics, he was a Democrat. He belonged to the Anti-Horse Thief Association for several years, and served four years as Justice of the Peace in Cotton Hill Township, taking an active interest in public affairs. A representative of the best interests of his community, Mr. McKee exercised a beneficent influence, and his family still sustain the reputation for probity and uprightness of purpose established by him.

Mr. McKee was married in Springfield, Ill., October 18, 1856, Rev. Cooper officiating, to Miss Levinia Snodgrass, a native of Sangamon County, born October 16, 1838, a daughter of James and Nancy (Moon) Snodgrass. Her father, a native of Tennessee, was a captain in the War of 1812, and died in Sangamon County; her mother, a native of Kentucky, also died in this county, both being buried in Zion Cemetery. Twelve children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McKee, five of whom are deceased, they being: Nancy, born September 28, 1857, married Joseph Delay of Sangamon County, and died June 9, 1879; James W., born August 8, 1859, died May 10, 1887; Reuben, born October 18, 1861, died in 1888; Josiah, born May 10, 1863, died in 1874; Moulton, born March 4, 1871, was killed by the kick of a horse in 1875. James W. was killed by lightning while on horseback on his way to a fishing expedition. The seven children who survive are: Charles, born March 21, 1865, married Winnifred Sabine, lives in Sangamon County; four children—March, Maggie, Lena and Grace; Jennie, born September 12, 1867, married Thomas Hunt, three daughters—Allie, Lottie and Edna; Noah, born November 10, 1862, is unmarried and resides with his mother, a further sketch of his life being given elsewhere in this volume; Sallie, born September 14, 1873, married Samuel Shoup, two children—Henry and Ruth; Dufey, born March 13, 1877, married Charles W. Jones of Christian County, five children.—Elta, James, Charles, Harry and Leroy (twins); and Leta Lorena, born March 7, 1879, whose biography also appears elsewhere in this work—one daughter, Bernice Helen; George W., born May 7, 1881, married Lillian Burt, lives on the home farm, three children.—Ruth, Ethel and George Lemuel, and is written up at length elsewhere in this record. All of the surviving children are residents of Sangamon County except Mrs. Jones. Mr. McKee died at his home January 13, 1908, and his remains were tenderly laid to rest in Zion Cemetery in Cotton Hill Township where repose the ashes of so many of Sangamon County's beloved dead.
McKee, Leta Lorena, is a daughter of the late James Lennel McKee and his wife, Mrs. Levinia (Snodgrass) McKee, whose biographies appear elsewhere in this work.

Miss McKee was born on the home farm, March 7, 1879, and grew up under a careful mother's supervision, being early taught housekeeping and sewing. She attended school at New City, Ill., and was also given good opportunities for training the undoubted musical talent she possesses. Since her father's death, Miss McKee has been her mother's companion, and the two are inseparably united. She has always taken a pride in her beautiful needlework, while her fame as a cook extends beyond the confines of her township. While cultivating her mind, she has not forgotten to perfect herself in other ways, and is well trained in practical affairs.

McKee, Noah.—The younger generation of agriculturists in Sangamon County are proving the value of scientific farming. Under the management of some of the efficient young farmers of this part of the State, because of the advancement made in the adoption of modern methods and the use of improved machinery, farm lands have advanced to prices that would have been deemed impossible even a decade ago. One of those who have devoted their lives to the perfecting of their agricultural knowledge and the development of choice farms, is Noah McKee who belongs to the old and representative McKee family, than which there is no better within the confines of Illinois.

Noah McKee was born November 19, 1852, on the McKee home farm in Cotton Hill Township, a son of the late lamented James Lennel McKee and his wife, Mrs. Levinia (Snodgrass) McKee, whose lives are treated of elsewhere in this volume. Growing up amid healthy country conditions, Mr. McKee attended the New City school, and carefully learned farming from the beginning. With the exception of a short time spent in Kansas, he has lived on the homestead which he is now operating for his mother. To her he is a great comfort, and she rejoices in his companionship and that of Miss Leta McKee, her unmarried daughter. While not a member of any religious denomination, Mr. McKee recognizes the good accomplished by churches, and is very liberal in his views, only asking to be allowed to retain his own ideas. As an advocate of Democratic principles, Mr. McKee is active and never neglects the opportunity to maintain his views and support measures which he believes to be for public advantage. Like his sister, he is very popular and, with her and his mother, enjoys a delightful home life.

McKenzie, Joseph (deceased).—In all the pioneering that won Illinois to the Union, personal, physical heroism combined with the desire for opportunity to acquire landed possessions, played a very large part. Among those who helped in the early days to redeem our Commonwealth from the wilderness, is the late Joseph McKenzie, for many years a resident of Sangamon County. He was born in Lancaster, Pa., near Little York, August 14, 1816, and as his parents died when he was very young, he never knew much about them. He had a brother and sister, but they with him have passed away.

When he was only seventeen years old, Mr. McKenzie was brought to Sangamon County by a man named Crowl, who entered land from the government. Mr. McKenzie remained with him for a time, then came to Springfield where he learned engineering, first working for the Woolen Mills, but after five years went with a leading flour mill, and then to Schuck & Baker, proprietors of a planing mill. Here Mr. McKenzie remained as engineer until his retirement, in 1881. From then, until his death, which occurred April 4, 1901, he resided in Springfield, and was an active man in spite of his eighty-five years. He was a consistent member of the Christian Church, but his wife and family early united with Grace Luthenran Church. In politics, he was a Republican.

On July 22, 1855, Mr. McKenzie was married in Springfield to Mary Jane Boggs, born in Beaver County, Penn., July 14, 1837. Her parents were both natives of Pennsylvania and early settlers of Sangamon County, where they died. Mr. and Mrs. McKenzie had three children, two of whom survive: George W. and Aurelia McKenzie, who keeps house for her mother. Mrs. McKenzie owns her home at No. 2223 East Spruce street, as well as other valuable property in Springfield.

George W. McKenzie, son of the above, is a contractor and builder of Springfield, who married Rose Moore of this city, and they have eight children: Clara, at home; Louis a cigar maker of Decatur; Charles of Springfield, married Miss Maggie Colburn of Springfield, three children.—Charles, George and Margaret; May wife of Ollie Jackson, one son.—Harry; Florence, Harry and George, Jr., at home. Mrs. George W. McKenzie died July 20, 1908.

During the many years he lived in this city, Mr. McKenzie held the esteem of his neighbors, and always did his duty as a Christian man and loyal citizen. Never striving for public notice, he went his way, working hard, saving so as to provide for his family, giving generously to his church. Such men as he are always missed when death claims them, and their places are difficult to fill.

McKinney, Hugh, a well-known citizen of Springfield, Ill., now living in retirement from business life, is highly regarded as a man of uprightness and probity. He is a native of Hamilton, Scotland, born January 3, 1845, a son of Bernard and Mary (Casey) McKinney, natives of Ireland, and the father a miner by occupation. The father went to Scotland from Ireland and engaged in mining in the vicinity of Hamilton, where he spent the remainder of his life. The mother also died there. They were parents of two daughters and four sons, of whom all save one are now living: Mrs. Mary Fleming, of Jackson, Mich.; James and Francis, of Scotland; Mrs. Sarah Mundy, of Scotland; John (deceased) and Hugh.

Mr. McKinney received his education in his native place, and entered the mines there at the age of nine years, continuing in this occupation until coming to America. He landed at New York City, March 14, 1881, proceeded thence to Pottsville, Pa., and soon afterward went to Panhandle in the same State. He resided successively at Cornuma and Jackson, Mich., and after remaining for some time at the latter place, spent five years at Lucas, Iowa, where he was engaged in mining. He later moved to Mendota, Mo., and soon afterward came to Belleville, Ill., where he lived until 1891. He then came to Springfield, which has since been his home. He has held various positions and was for sometime mine examiner in various mines in the vicinity of Springfield, being connected with the Woodside Mine, Klondike, and others. He owns a comfortable home and several lots in the vicinity of 1926 South Sixth Street, and has many friends in the neighborhood.

On October 6, 1873, Mr. McKinney married Rose A. McGrath, a native of County Donegal, Ireland, born April 15, 1850, whose parents spent their entire lives in Ireland. This union took place in Hamilton, Scotland, and part of their children were born there. Their children were as follows: Albert, of Butte, Mont.; Hugh and John, of Springfield; Joseph (deceased); Francis, at home; and James (deceased). There are three grandchildren in the family. Mr. McKinney is a member of the Roman Catholic Church and belongs to the Church of the Immaculate Conception Parish. He is a Democrat and takes a commendable interest in public affairs. Mr. McKinney worked at mining from childhood until recently and was connected with many different mines. He worked under varying conditions and learned the full details of management in various parts of the United States, becoming an expert in various lines. He won a reputation as mine examiner that was well earned and he was considered one of the ablest men in his line in Sangamon County. He has lived retired since 1910. He has always been greatly interested in the kind of work in which his entire active life was spent, and made a careful study of methods and conditions under his observation from early youth.

McLACHLAN, John, who has lived retired from active pursuits for the past eight years, is a useful and well-known citizen of Springfield, III., and one of the few natives of Scotland who have come to the United States after having passed middle life. Mr. McLachlan was born in Glasgow, Scotland, August 14, 1837, son of Jeremiah and Mary (O’Neill) McLachlan, the father born in Tobermory, Isle of Mull, off the western coast of Scotland, and the latter a native of Arbo, Conny Tyrono, Ireland. The father was born in December, 1811, and the mother July 27, 1813, and he served in the war between China and Great Britain, after which he engaged in whale fishing. During his military service he was cook on a war vessel, and was a man of ability in many lines. He and his wife were married in Glasgow and there spent the remainder of their lives, he serving many years as Sheriff’s officer.

The ancestors of John McLachlan were honest hard-working people. His grandfather, William McLachlan, was a fisherman and lived at Tobermory, and the great-grandfather, also a fisherman, was a native of Scotland. The maternal grandfather, Paul O’Neill, was a farmer in Ireland, where he lived to be one hundred and three years of age, and as far back as the family can be traced, its members were natives of Ireland.

The boyhood of John McLachlan was spent in his native place and he lived with his parents until eleven years of age, then left home and made his own way in the world. He sold matches and worked for four dollars and a half this time associated with the lowest class of people in the city, eating and sleeping wherever necessity required. He then worked eighteen months as messenger boy in a store, after which time his employer procured for him a position as a cook’s assistant on board the Irish boat “Thistle,” which plied between Glasgow and Ireland. He afterwards worked a year and a half for a bottling concern and, when seventeen years of age, began working with a surveying party, going with them to the Province of Connaught in Ireland. Returning to Glasgow, he signed for a position on the ship “Black Eagle,” which sailed between Scotland and Melbourne, Victoria, Australia, but his father prevented his going, and the ship was afterwards lost at sea with all on board. Mr. McLachlan then engaged in mining in Scotland and since that time has spent his active life in that occupation.

In 1854 Mr. McLachlan emigrated to the United States but returned the same year and worked at his trade. In 1862 he returned to America bringing his two sons with him, and later sent for his two daughters; he has since made his permanent home in Springfield. He enjoys excellent health and has won many friends. He is a member of the British-American Society of Springfield, and in politics is a Republican. He belongs to St. Patrick’s Catholic Church.

Mr. McLachlan was married in Dalry, Ayrshire, Scotland, April 9, 1852, to Miss Mary Johnston, a native of that place, born November 21, 1842, daughter of Alexander and Ollie (Reid) Johnston, the former also a native of Dalry. The father was a miner by occupation and he and his wife came to the United States in 1856, where they remained but a short time, then returning to Ayrshire, where both died. He was of English descent and son of a merchaut of Manchester, England. The grandfather Johnston was a master quarryman and died in England. Mrs. Johnston was a daughter of James Reid, a tailor of Cookstown, Ireland, who died in Scotland.

Eight children were born to Mr. McLachlan and his wife, of whom four survive, namely: Jennette, born in Scotland, in 1860, married in Black Ridge, Scotland, Patrick Duffy, a native of Ireland, and they now live in Springfield and have four children—Martin, Mary, Joseph and Pani; Alexander, born in Scotland, April 10, 1874, a miner now living in Springfield, there married Grace Graham, a native of Scotland, and they have one daughter, Mary, born in Springfield; John, born in Scotland, September 6, 1878, is now a police officer of Springfield, there married Elizabeth Owens, a native of England, and they have no children; and Mary wife of John McGinns, a coal miner of Springfield, and they have nine children—Hugh, John, James, Alexander, Esther, Martha, Patrick and two deceased.

Mr. McLachlan resides at 1407 East Ash Street, Springfield, and owns some city property. He has had much experience in the line of mining and, while carrying on his work in the mountains of Scotland, took part in many dangerous tasks and saw many accidents. He has worked hard during his entire active life, and is now enjoying the rest he has so well earned and deserved.

McLAUGHLIN, Christopher (deceased), formerly a retired farmer and gardener living in the vicinity of the State Fair Grounds, northeast of Springfield, had been a resident of Sangamon County since about 1853. He was born at Stanton, Powell County, Ky., February 10, 1846, a son of David and Elizabeth (Morris) McLaughlin, both natives of Kentucky, the father born August 26, 1800, and the mother August 4, 1804. David McLaughlin was the son of a Revolutionary soldier who had emigrated to America from Ireland. The father had proved himself a most patriotic and faithful soldier and was greatly esteemed by all who knew him. The parents of Christopher McLaughlin emigrated to Morgan County, Ill., in 1852, settling near the town of Winchester, Scott County, and one year later came to Sangamon County, where the father died January 25, 1857, the mother dying September 7, 1853. They were the parents of ten children, of whom Christopher was the youngest. He received his education in the early subscription schools of his day and worked on the farm with his father until he was eighteen years of age.

In 1864, being then but eighteen years of age, Christopher McLaughlin, in the McLean Machine Company A. One Hundred and Sixth Illinois, being mustered in February 22 under Provost Marshal Isaac Keys. They spent some time at Camp Yates, and their first skirmish was at Clarendon, Ark., after which they camped at Pine Bluff, Ark., marched for three weeks, returned to Pine Bluff and spent the remainder of the winter there. During the summer of 1865 they were sent back to Springfield, were there discharged and paid off at the Revere Hotel. He had good reason to feel proud of his war record, and became a prominent member of the Stephenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R. In political views he was always a Republican, casting his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, in 1864, and his second vote for U. S. Grant. He was converted to belief in this party, and was eighteen years of age, during Lincoln's first campaign for the presidency.

Mr. McLaughlin served three years as Tax Collector of Loami Township, two years as Road Commissioner and two years as School Director. He was appointed Supervisor in 1908 and elected to the same office in 1910. He was a man of integrity and stability of character, and highly respected by his neighbors and associates. He owned 120 acres of land near Loami. This he sold and later rented land and was active as a farmer up to the time of his death, September 12, 1910.

Mr. McLaughlin was married in Loami, Ill., February 11, 1850, to Miss Fannie Colburn, who was born September 9, 1852, and died August 28, 1904, a daughter of Daniel and Cindy (Hoffmaster) Colburn, who came to Sangamon County soon after the Civil War. The mother now lives at Loami, having reached an advanced age. Five children were born to Mr. McLaughlin and wife, namely: Minnie, born August 14, 1850, and married John Loving, a farmer in Sangamon County; Andrew, born April 20, 1853, is a farmer and lives near Springfield; Lena, born June 17, 1875, married Isaac Workman, a farmer living twenty-five miles southwest of Springfield; and Glen and Gertie (twins), who died in infancy. Seven grandchildren were born to Mr. McLaughlin, namely: Elsa McLaughlin, June 2, 1898; Alma McLaughlin, November 10, 1902; Earl Loving and Loyd Loving, and three deceased, who were the children of Andrew McLaughlin.

McLEAN, A. H.—Many leading corporations of the country owe their present prosperity to their travelling men, without whom it would be impossible for them to do business. These live, energetic men, traveling from place to place, keep thoroughly abreast of the times and of the demands of the trade, and, while placing orders, keep their home offices fully informed of the current of affairs. One of the best representatives of the up-to-date commercial traveler of today is A. H. McLean, of Springfield, one of the efficient representatives of the Singer Sewing Machine Company. He was born in West Virginia, December 15, 1855, a son of Alexander and Sarah (Miller) McLean. Alexander McLean was born in Scotland, but his wife was born in Pennsylvania. In 1856 he came to the United States, locating in Virginia, where he embarked in a lumber business, successfully prosecuting it until his demise in 1865. He had the misfortune to lose his wife in 1862.

A. H. McLean was brought up in Pennsylvania, and received his education in the city of Pittsburgh. Leaving school, he entered the factory of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, and four years later was put on the road to represent the corporation, since which time he has been their faithful exponent. For some time he lived with Mr. Ill., his home, but later came to Springfield, where he has since resided.

On April 6, 1903, occurred the marriage of Mr. McLean, in Springfield, with Lilly Meser, who was born in 1868. In 1908 Mr. Meser was killed, at the age of seventy-one years, His widow passed away the following year, aged sixty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. McLean are the parents of three children. Mr. McLean is a member of the N. P. L. and is in good standing with this order, which he joined three years ago. In religious faith he is a Catholic. His political sentiments make him a Republican, but he is not active in party affairs. He inherits all the excellent traits of his Scotch father and his holding is frugal and industrious. His house places implicit faith in him and his representations, as do his customers, and he is esteemed over the wide territory which he covers.

McMURRAY, Thomas B., a highly esteemed citizen of Divernon Township, Sangamon County, we are pleased to announce that the John Egan farm of 100 acres, located on Section 14, two miles east of the Divernon Postoffice, was born in Springfield, III., January 19, 1857, a son of Joseph E. and Nancy C. (Parks) McMurray.

Joseph E. McMurray was born in Sweetwater Valley, Tenn., and early in life decided to become a minister, but owing to parental objection, had to work his way through Lane's Seminary, in Ohio, by doing chores and housekeeping. After graduating he came direct to Mulberry Grove, Ill., where he followed preaching until 1850 and in that year removed to Hardin, Ill. Later he went to Iowa, but eventually returned to Illinois, and while in Springfield was forced to give up preaching on account of throat ailment, and subsequently became ticket agent of the Wabash Railroad Company at Cerro Gordo, Ill., remaining there twelve years and dying January 27, 1868. He was married January 28, 1852, in Springfield, Ill., to Nancy C. Parks, who was born in Middlebury, Vt., February 2, 1852, daughter of Beamont and Nancy C. Parks, and she died May 24, 1850, at Auburn, Ill. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McMurray: Alice B., born November 9, 1852, at Springfield, is unmarried and now lives at Pontiac; Edward P., born August 12, 1855, is a music dealer at Pontiac; Thomas B.; and Walter S., born February 18, 1850, died at the age of three years.

Thomas B. McMurray was educated in the public school of Auburn, Ill., and later taught two terms in the country schools, paying for his books by working on farms after school and on Saturday. In 1881, he went to the normal school, from which he graduated June 25, 1885, and once more took up teaching, working until 1891, and in addition teaching music during his spare hours. In 1891 he started clerking in a dry-goods store, but in 1892, after his marriage, he moved to a farm in Sangamon County, carrying on agricultural pursuits and teaching a district school for three years. At the end of this time he located on the farm which he now cultivates, the John Egan farm of 100 acres, which he has made one of the best in his part of the township. Mr. McMurray is an Elder in the Presbyterian Church at Divernon. He has always been a Republican, but during the great Temperance campaign that recently swept Illinois, cast all his influence with the ticket of that party, as he has always been a great foe to the liquor traffic.

On August 3, 1892, Mr. McMurray was married in Divernon, Ill., to Fannie Esther Haire, who was born April 26, 1866, in Sangamon County, the daughter of Johnson and Margaret (Lindsey) Haire. Mr. Haire died March 22, 1893, and is buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery, at Springfield, the McMurray-Haire-Aldrich monument being near the John R. Tanner mausoleum there. To Mr. and Mrs. McMurray there were born two children: Fannie Marie, born January 15, 1897; and Heywood Thomas, born February 10, 1901.

McMURRAY, Thomas.—Agricultural conditions in Sangamon County have changed to such an extent during the past few decades that the enterprising farmer has been compelled to change to a large degree his methods of treating the soil. New discoveries have been made, powerful machinery invented and innovations introduced, and he who would reap the most beneficial results from his property must keep in touch with the changes of the times. Thomas McMurray, for many years a scientific farmer west of Springfield, and one of the "Snow Birds," but now living retired in the Capital City, was born in County Mayo, Ireland, in 1833, a son of Michael and Nora (Fitzgerald) McMurry, both natives of the same county.

Michael McMurry came to America June 10, 1852, his wife having died in 1848, and went first to Jacksonville, Ill., where the rest of his life was spent in agricultural pursuits. Thomas McMurry was educated in the schools of his native country and at Jacksonville, Ill., and until reaching his majority he worked on his father's farm. In company with two brothers, he engaged in farming in Morgan County, eleven miles southeast of Jacksonville, which they continued until 1860, when they moved to Sangamon County and there farmed together until 1880, when Mr. McMurry retired from business activities and purchased his present home in Springfield, at No. 921 West Lawrence Avenue, although he still retains an interest in the land. He is a faithful member of St. Agnes parish of the Roman Catholic Church, and as a citizen ranks high in his community. He is an independent in politics.

On June 16, 1867, in Petersburg, Menard County, Ill., Mr. McMurry was united in marriage with Catherine Kelly, who was born in that place, December 13, 1850, a daughter of Michael and Mary (Hogun) Kelly, both natives of Ireland, the former born in County Roscommon and the latter in County Kilkenny. Her father came to America in 1848, settling in Menard County, Ill., and died July 6, 1906, the mother having passed away November 4, 1905. They were both members of the Roman Catholic Church, and were married by Rev. Father Conlon in the first Catholic Church erected in Springfield. Mrs. McMurry was the oldest of a family of thirteen children, of whom nine are still living.

There were sixteen children born to Mr. and Mrs. McMurry and of these the following survive: Michael J., retired, living at No. 225 West Grand Avenue; James P., living in Freeport, Ill., Mrs. McMurry and of these the following survive: Michael J., retired, living at No. 225 West Grand Avenue, an engineer on the Illinois Central Railroad; John A., who also is an engineer on the same railroad; Frank A., a conductor on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad, residing in Springfield; Nicholas E., a teacher in the Wright School at Riverton; Richard H., a brakeman on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad; Mary W., a teacher in Sangamon County public schools, and Agnes, living at home with their parents. Both of the daughters were educated in the Catholic convents in Springfield, Miss Mary graduating from the Dominican Convent with the class of 1904.

McPherson, Mrs. Georgiana.—Some of the wealthiest property owners of Springfield are women who have inherited their fortunes from father or husband, and are now administering affairs with ability and foresight. One of these is Mrs. Georgiana McPherson. She was born in Illinois, April 28, 1857, a daughter of Jeremiah and Sarah Jane (McConklin) Masterson. The father was born in Louisville, Ky., while the mother was born in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, February 2, 1833. The father died February 21, 1906, but the mother survives, active at the age of seventy-seven years. Mrs. McPherson has a brother and sister who reside on a farm at Bluffs, Ill. All his life Mr. Masterson was a farmer, and succeeded very well in his work.

Mrs. McPherson was educated in Morgan County, and was reared on a farm there, remaining at home until she married George McPherson, August 20, 1883. Until 1898 she resided on a farm, but that year came to Springfield, which is still her home. Mr. McPherson was a prominent farmer. He was a Republican, but Mrs. McPherson was brought up in a Democratic household, her father espousing the principles of that party. Mr. McPherson died firm in the faith of the First Methodist Church. Mrs. McPherson has connected herself with the First Methodist Church of Springfield, and gives it generous support. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McPherson, Lilly, born May 17, 1884, married Sylvester Bethard, merchant and postmaster of Wrightsville; Elizabeth, born May 22, 1887, married Ray Myers, a farmer; Jeremiah B. is connected with a railroad in Oklahoma; Nellie, born June 2, 1889, married Joseph Lago, a machinist. All of the children have done well, and Mrs. McPherson has every reason to feel proud of them. She commands universal respect and has many friends in Springfield, as well as in her old home.

McTaggart, A. T.—The Scotch people have always been noted for their frugality and industrious habits, and those coming from Old Scotia have transmitted to their children the same characteristics which have made for their own success. The McTaggart family comes of Scotch ancestry, and one of its leading representatives in Sangamon County is A. T. McTaggart, a prosperous farmer, residing three and one-half miles south of Pawnee, on Section 19 in the township of that name. He was born on the farm where he now resides, July 15, 1878, a son of Robert and Jane (Carswell) McTaggart, natives of Scotland. Robert McTaggart is now living retired, but for many years was a farmer and stock-raiser of this county. A somewhat unusual feature in the McTaggart family is that three McTaggart brothers married three Carswell sisters, Robert McTaggart being one of these brothers.

A. T. McTaggart attended the schools of Pawnee Township, and was brought up sensibly and quietly, although he enjoyed the pleasures incident to farm life. Although engaged in farming, Mr. McTaggart planned to engage in other lines. For three years he was in the regular army, enlisting in 1890 and serving until 1902, two and one-half years in the Philippines, and participated in four battles while there.

On February 14, 1900, Mr. McTaggart married Edith L. Fahlenstein, born in Springfield, March 8, 1885, daughter of German-born parents. Mrs. McTaggart's father is dead, but her mother resides in Peoria. Mr. and Mrs. McTaggart have two daughters: Martha Louise, born February 23, 1907, and Hellen Margaret, born March 20, 1910. Mr. McTaggart joined the Modern Woodmen of America in July, 1906, and the Royal Neighbors in 1909. He is a Methodist, but his wife is a Presbyterian. In politics, he is a Republican.

An excellent farmer and good citizen, broadened by his years in the possessions of the United States in the Pacific, he commands the confidence of his neighbors, and is a man who is worthy of respect. Never shirking his duty, he has faithfully discharged it both as a soldier and private citizen, and has a pleasant home on his father's farm.

County, and its representatives are to be found residing upon valuable farms in different portions of this region, where they have become leaders in agricultural matters. One of these who is a first-class farmer and business man is Charles D. McTaggart, born on his present farm, December 1, 1872, a son of Duncan and Mary (Carswell) McTaggart. The parents came from Scotland to this country and Duncan McTaggart was one of three brothers who married the three Carswell sisters. He and his wife farmed and became prosperous, bringing up their large family in the fear of the Lord and appreciation of the value of hard work, so that none of them have failed to achieve success in life. Charles D. McTaggart attended the schools of his township, and growing to manhood quietly, has learned to take his pleasure in his home. He has been remarkably successful as a breeder of fine stock, and his farm reflects the prosperity that has been his; for it is exceedingly well-kept.

The marriage of Mr. McTaggart occurred three miles south of Pawnee to Eva Matthew, born in Sangamon County, February 28, 1878. Mr. and Mrs. McTaggart have three fine sons: Leonard, born December 19, 1900; Charles Stanley, born September 1, 1902; and Harlan Deeneen, born February 11, 1904. Always a Republican, Mr. McTaggart has given his party a hearty support, but his close attention to his business has prevented his holding office. For five years he has been a member of the Woodmen of America. The Methodist Church holds his membership, and receives from him a generous support. Mr. McTaggart owns 160 acres of rich farming land, and his wife owns 160 acres more in Christian County. They are excellent people, kind-hearted, generous, and hospitable, and stand high in the estimation of their neighbors. They have three children of whom they have every reason to be proud, and their home is one of the most comfortable in Pawnee Township. It is conveniently located three miles south of Pawnee, on Section 24, where they welcome their many friends upon every occasion.

McTAGGART, Walter Neil.—Farming is the oldest business in the world, and since the creation of man, mortals have been forced to depend upon the soil for sustenance. Aggregations of people may build cities; inventive genius may manufacture many articles, but without the skill and patience of the agriculturist, the world cannot exist. One of the substantial young farmers of Sangamon County, who is fully alive to the responsibilities and possibilities of the twentieth century agriculturist, is Walter Neil McTaggart, of Section 30, Pawnee Township. He was born on his present farm, January 27, 1872, a son of Robert and Jane (Carswell) McTaggart, both natives of Scotland who came to Sangamon County in pioneer days. Robert McTaggart had a twin brother named Duncan and both were farmers.

Walter Neil McTaggart attended the common schools of his township, assisted in farming, and, with the exception of six months, has always lived on his present farm. On January 14, 1897, he was married, in Cotton Hill Township, to Ethel Sarah Funderburk, a daughter of David and Sarah A. (Torry) Funderburk, the former born in Sangamon County, the latter in New Jersey. Mrs. McTaggart was born April 38, 1876. There were two children by this marriage: Ray, born December 7, 1899; and Freddie, born June 26, 1901, died four months later and was buried in Zion Cemetery.

Mr. McTaggart has been a member of the Court of Honor for eight years, and of the Modern Woodmen for five years, while Mrs. McTaggart is a member of the Court of Honor and Royal Neighbors. Since casting his first vote, Mr. McTaggart has been a Republican and he and his family are members of the Methodist Church. In addition to his large holdings in farm land, he is a stockholder in the Pawnee State Bank. By pursuing industrious and economical business methods, Mr. McTaggart has established for himself a sound financial reputation and has a right to be proud of what he has accomplished. He understands farming thoroughly, and is regarded as an authority on agricultural matters.

MEACHAM, John H., who for the past thirty-six years has been a prominent agriculturist of Christian County, III., and prior to that time was for a long period engaged in the same pursuits in Sangamon County, is a native of the latter county, born near New Berlin, February 12, 1834, son of Joseph K. and Ann (Hodgerson) Meacham. Joseph K. Meacham was born in Kentucky and his wife in Virginia, and after their marriage they came to Sangamon County, in 1829, settling at New Berlin and entering land from the Government. There they spent the remainder of their lives, the father dying in 1858 and the mother surviving until April 12, 1865, dying the day of President Lincoln's assassination. Both were buried at the old home place. They were the parents of three boys and one girl, but John H. is the only survivor of this family.

Mr. Meacham secured his education in an old log schoolhouse near New Berlin, and worked on the home farm for his mother until he reached the age of seventeen years, at which time he commenced teaching school, and continued as an educator for two years and one-half in Sangamon County. He then took up farming as his life work, and continued operations in Sangamon County until 1875, in which year he removed to his present fine property in Christian County, where he has become well known as an agriculturist. He is a Democrat in politics. He was well acquainted with President Lincoln and often visited the latter's offices when he was but a struggling Illinois lawyer. Mr. Meacham was a School Director for nine years in the Hudson district in Sangamon County, and for a like period since coming to Christian County, as well as Assessor of Mt. Auburn, for three terms. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for a number of years served as church trustee.

On January 4, 1861, Mr. Meacham was married in Sangamon County, Ill., to Leah Jarrett, who was born August 18, 1842, near New Berlin, Ill., daughter of William and Jane Jarrett. The parents had twelve children, of whom the following survive: Eli, living near Girard, Ill.; Irwin, a resident of Nebraska; George R., living near Modesto; Wellington, of New Berlin; Mrs. Nancy Huggins, of Loami, Ill.; Mrs. Harriet Hill, living at New Berlin; John, of New Berlin; and Mrs. Meacham.

Mr. and Mrs. Meacham, who have celebrated their Golden Wedding anniversary, have had nine children, of whom the following are living: James, who lives at Roby, Ill.; Lou Weber, of Astoria, Ill.; Ada, who married a Mr. Belt, merchant at Buckhart, Ill.; Hattie, who married Perry Peal, a member of the Springfield police force; Mrs. Jennie Troxwell, of Bates County, Missouri; and John T., also a resident of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Meacham have nine grandchildren.

MEISENBACKER, John, a retired merchant of Springfield, Ill., is highly esteemed by all who know him and has been identified with the best interests of his community since locating there. He was born in Baden, Germany, April 7, 1843, and his parents and grandparents were all natives of Baden. He is a son of Adam and Catherine (Miller) Meisenbacher, who came to New-ark, N. J., when John was fifteen years of age, and died there. John Meisenbacher received his early education in his native country, and supplemented the same by a course in the public schools of Newark, where he lived from 1858 until 1864, there learning the trade of butcher. In March, 1865, he came to Springfield and began working at his trade, which he continued until 1869, when he embarked in business on his own account, conducting a shop of his own until 1890 with fair success and winning the confidence of his patrons by honest dealing and good service.

From 1902 until 1906 Mr. Meisenbacher was employed by the City of Springfield. He is a member of the Lutheran Church and has always taken an active interest in public affairs, in politics being a Democrat. He belongs to the Crystal Light and the Royal Circle. He owns a comfortable home at 130 West Miller Street, Springfield, where he has resided for the last eight years. He has witnessed many changes in Springfield during the time it has been his home and has formed many strong friendships.

Mr. Meisenbacher was married, in Springfield, January 21, 1868, to Miss Mary Ramsteader, who was born in Belleville, Ill., in 1850, a daughter of Lawrence and Catherine (Shink) Ramsteader, both natives of Bavaria, where their parents were also born, and early settlers in Illinois. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Meisenbacher, viz.: Catherine, born in Springfield, November 1, 1869, married Ora Quiley, is proprietor of a livery stable in Springfield, and they have two children—Ora and Mary; Margaret, born in Springfield, November 29, 1871, is unmarried and living at home; John, born in Springfield, August 22, 1873, married Daisy Baker of Springfield, and they live in Talsa, Oklahoma; Dora, born in Springfield, January 20, 1877, is unmarried and living at home; Leo F., born in Springfield, July 29, 1891, lives at home; Lawrence, born in Springfield, in 1881, died in 1894.

MEREDITH, Clarence B., an energetic and successful business man of Springfield, is a native of Sangamon County, born at Cotton Hill, March 6, 1879. He is a son of Luther O. and Amanda (Popinberger) Meredith, the former also a native of the county, born in 1851. The father of Luther O. Davis Meredith, was one of the early settlers of Sangamon County and died in 1897. Luther O. Meredith was formerly engaged in the grocery business at Cotton Hill, but in 1897 retired from active life and moved to Springfield. He has lived in the county all his life and is well known in business circles.

The boyhood of Clarence F. Meredith was spent at Cotton Hill and he was educated in the country schools. He was reared on a farm and after leaving school worked in the grocery business with his father about three years, then began to work at the trade of carpenter. Some three years ago he began contracting on his own account and has been so successful in this line that he has also been dealing in real estate to a considerable extent. He is a young man of good reputation, upright and industrious, and has been prosperous in all his enterprises.

Mr. Meredith is unmarried and lives with his parents. He is helpful with the care and education of his younger brothers and sisters. He is well known as a hustler and one who carries out whatever he undertakes. He has accumulated considerable city property. In politics he is a Republican and he is an active member of the First Christian Church.

MERKLIN, Charles, one of Springfield's well-known business men, conducting a grocery and provision store at No. 312 Herndon Street, has been a resident of Springfield since 1858. Mr. Merklin is a native of Baden, Germany, where he was born December 21, 1844, a son of Jacob and Julia (Wehrle) Merklin.

Jacob Merklin was a weaver by trade in Germany, but believing there was a brighter future for himself and his children in the United States, with his family embarked at Havre for New Orleans on a three-masted sailing vessel, the voyage occupying sixty days. From New Orleans they went to Louisville, Ky., where the father was employed as a laborer until 1858, when he came to Springfield and followed the same kind of work, but later entered into the dairy business, continuing therein until 1856, when he retired, dying January 6, 1857, his wife having passed away October 14, 1872. They were members of the SS. Peter and Paul Roman Catholic Church. Their children were as follows: Charles; Lambert, who died in Springfield in 1855; Fred, of Chicago, who married a Miss Burlingham; and Mary, who died in infancy.

Charles Merklin went to school in Baden, Germany, until reaching the age of ten years, at which time his parents brought him to the United States, and later completed his school training in the parochial schools of Louisville Ky., and the Springfield public schools. He went to work carrying bricks in the brick-yard of John Bretz, and two years later engaged in the cooper trade under Edward Saner, following that vocation for three years, but later being employed in various occupations for several years. He began his business ventures on his own account in 1862, when he became a baker and confectioner on Monroe between Fifth and Sixth Streets. Three or four years later he abandoned this business and went to clerking in a grocery store until 1857, at which time he embarked in his present business at his present stand, the old homestead built by his father in 1864.

On September 28, 1868, Mr. Merklin was married in Springfield to Miss Eva Mueller, of St. Louis, a daughter of the late Lawrence Mueller of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Merklin had these children: Mary, who married Patrick Shay of Springfield; Lizzie, who married Edward G. Bannan, a druggist of Springfield; Sister Constant of the Ursuline Convent at Alton; Lena, at home; Sister Louise, and Sister Hildegarde, of the Ursuline Convent, Alton; Eva, who married Joseph Schaefer, of Springfield; and Frances, at home. Mr. Merklin is a Democrat in political matters and is fraternity connected with the Western Catholic Union, the Loyal Americans and the Widows and Orphans Insurance Company. The family attend SS. Peter and Paul's Roman Catholic Church.

MERRITT, William A., now living in retirement from active business life, at his home, situated at 800 South College Street, Springfield, Ill., is a veteran of the Civil War and prominent in business circles. He is highly esteemed as an honest and upright citizen, who discharged his full duty as a soldier and, in times of peace, held himself in readiness to further any movement which he felt would be of general benefit. He was born in Martin County, N. C., August 2, 1842, and reared on a farm. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bennifred (Col.) Merritt, were both natives of Martin County. The father was a sailor and was lost at sea when his son William was young, being never heard from after he left home on his last voyage. His home was always at Williamston, N. C. The mother moved to West Virginia, thence to Tennessee and finally to Indiana in 1856, where she died. The Merritt family, so far as can be traced back, were residents of North Carolina.

In his boyhood William A. Merritt received no educational advantages, and learned all he knows in this line through his own efforts, mostly while serving in the army. He has learned much in the school of experience and has acquired a broad outlook upon life in general. He was always fond of outdoor sports and reached a rugged, healthy manhood. Mr. Merritt moved from Indiana to Arkansas at the time there was such a boom in emigrations to the latter State, and thence came to Sangamon County, Ill., in 1865, and has been a resident of the county ever since. He spent his active life in various occupations in which he was generally successful, and was able to retire about five years ago. He has gained many friends in Springfield and has always taken an interest in public enterprises. He has so lived as to make no enemies and is fond of the society of his friends and acquaintances, being of a genial, kindly nature. He is a true gentleman in qualifications and actions, and his sterling traits are well known to all who have had dealings with him.

Mr. Merritt has a war record of which he may well be proud. He enlisted, August 15, 1861, at New Albany, Ind., in the Thirty-eighth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and on October 8th of that year participated in a battle at Petersburg, Ky., where he was shot in the right hand and right side of the head, so that he was sent to a hospital until his recovery. He then rejoined his regiment and took part in engagements at Stone River, Murfreesboro, Hoover's Gap, Nashville, Cblekananga, Missionary Ridge and Chattanooga. In 1863 his term of enlistment expired and he re-enlisted for three years, running out thirty days at home with his mother, rejoining his regiment February 13, 1864. He participated in the battle at Resaca, Ga., May 25, 1864. At one time he and his comrades were very hungry and Mr. Merritt captured a fat young pig and procured some sweet potatoes, and they had a royal feast, June 24, 1864. They encountered heavy fighting at Baldwin Knob, in which many were killed and wounded, and Mr. Merritt went again to the hospital July 20, 1864, on account of sickness, rejoining his regiment on the 25th of the same month. They participated in the siege of Atlanta, in which they met with heavy losses, and in the battle of Jonesborough, Ga. After the capitulation of Atlanta the enemy left the mass of ruins August 30. Mr. Merritt participated with his regiment in the battles at Nashville and Savannah, and joining Sherman December 21, 1864, participated in the battle of Bentonville, N. C., March 19, 1865, and after the surrender of General Lee to General Grant at Appomattox, took part in the Grand Review at Washington, which was over July 15, 1865, when they received their final discharge. Mr. Merritt had served four years and during that time was never taken prisoner. He participated in some of the most important battles of the war and proved himself to be a brave and zealous soldier, ready to do his duty and never shirking a responsibility, undergoing his hardships uncomplainingly and trying to keep up the spirits of his comrades. We quote the following from his pen:

"I have had corns and bunions, which were caused by army shoes.
And I have had the military itch.
And suffered with the blisters.
And every place a bullet hit it left a pain or bruise.
As we went marching on."

"When we stood amid shot and shell
That crashed around our head,
Where many of our brave comrades fell
And sleep among the dead."

February 2, 1864, Mr. Merritt was married, in Orange County, Ind., to Fannie C. Morgan, a native of Orange County, who was born December 10, 1847, a daughter of Samuel G. and Mary (Taylor) Morgan, the former born in North Carolina and the latter in England. Mr. Morgan served in the Thirty-first Indiana Regiment through the Civil War. Six children were born to Mr. Merritt and wife, namely: Mariette E., July 2, 1866; Eliza C., February 4, 1868; Sherman, August 2, 1873; Sarah Belle, December 25, 1876; Logan, March 19, 1885; Rittle D., December 29, 1869. Mr. Merritt is a member of the Methodist Church and in politics is a Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is affiliated with Stevenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R.

MESTER, Henry Herman.—To discharge faithfully the duties pertaining to the office of Sheriff of a county as important as Sangamon, requires more than ordinary ability. Not only is it a large and important county, but in it is located the State capital, consequently, affairs pertaining to it are closely related to what affects the State itself. The present incumbent of this office, Hon. Henry Mester, is a man of clear-headed sagacity, whose courage and probity are unquestioned. He is a son of the city, having been born there. His father was a brick manufacturer, and Henry H. Mester was brought up to know hard work in his father's yards. During his boyhood he attended Springfield schools, thereby gaining a good, practical education. His first residence was on Peoria Road, from whence he went to No. 1601 Perry Avenue, thence to No. 1611 Perry Avenue, and now resides at No. 120 North Seventh Street.

Early in his career, Sheriff Mester became prominent in Republican politics, and was an efficient member of the County Board of Supervisors, displaying his ability to such an extent in that office that he was his party's logical candidate for Sheriff, and was elected by a large majority. Under his care the county institutions are in excellent condition, and malcontents recognize his integrity and fearlessness. Grace Lutheran Church holds his membership, and profits by his generosity.

On February 9, 1894, Sheriff Mester was married, in St. Louis, to Annie Delaney, of Springfield. Their children are: Margaret, Henrietta, Elmer, Willard, Dorothy and Edna.

MESTER, Julius F.—Earnest effort to act according to the dictates of conscience, and never to swerve from what he felt to be right, has been the plan of life with Julius F. Mester, one of Springfield's representative cigar manufacturers. He was born in Germany, August 3, 1850, a son of Henry and Marie (Fulhner) Mester, both natives of Germany. The father was a laborer, and brought up his children to work and earn their living. Although Julius F. Mester began working at a tender age, learning the trade of cigar-making when fourteen years old, he secured a good, comfortable home at St. Louis, to which the family moved, and grew up self-reliant and self-supporting. His tasks prevented him from engaging in the usual childish sports of his age, but he laid the foundations for a useful life. For thirty-five years he has resided in Springfield, moving twice, his present home being at No. 820 West Jefferson Street.

On May 1, 1873, Mr. Mester was married, in St. Louis, Mo., to Fredericka Hohnbrock, daughter of Anton and Hannah Hohnbrock, natives of Germany. The following children have been born of this marriage: Mrs. Johanna Wirth, Mrs. Lula Phelps, Alfred J., Charles F., and Orrin D. Mr. Mester belongs to several fraternal organizations, having joined the Masons in 1893, the Modern Woodmen in 1897, the Maccabees, of which he is a charter member; is also a member of the Loyal Americans, and the Court of Honor, No. 20. In politics he is a Republican, but does not aspire to public office. The Episcopal Church holds his membership, and owes to him a cordial and generous support. In addition to his residence, Mr. Mester owns two store buildings at Nos. 825 and 827 East Washington Street, in the latter of which he conducts his cigar factory. He manufactures several special brands, which are favorites, and insures cleanly, expert work and the use of good material. Upright and honorable, Mr. Mester has steadily advanced, and is recognized as one of the sound business men of this locality.

METCALF, Edward P.—The undertakers of today are intelligent men who have been carefully trained in their chosen profession. Not only this, but they must be tactful and possessed of a sympathetic nature which enables them to give to the afflicted, in time of sorrow, the consolation so sorely needed. One of the men who are engaged in this line of work is Edward P. Metcalf. He was born in Macoupin County, Ill., a son of James L. and Elizabeth (Peters) Metcalf, natives of England and Tennessee, respectively.

In 1904, Mr. Metcalf came to Springfield to embark in his present business, and has continued in it ever since. He is prominent in the Masonic order, belonging to St. Paul's Lodge No. 500, A. F. & A. M., Springfield Chapter R. A. M., Elwood Commandery K. T., Sangamon Lodge of Perfection K. of P., Springfield Lodge No. 158, Elks, M. W. of A. No. 1418, and the Court of Honor No. 20. He belongs to the Methodist Church, of which he is an official.

Mr. Metcalf has many friends in Springfield, where his services are so often required by those who have met with the heaviest loss life can bring. His equipment is complete in every detail, and he is prepared to furnish everything connected with the last sad services. His tactful, sympathetic manner, and kindly words of condolence have lightened the load of sorrow in many a household, and when he is no longer required in a professional capacity, the family remember him as a highly esteemed friend.

Metcalf, Samuel T., who is serving for a second time as Superintendent of the Sangamon County Poor Farm, in Sangamon County, Ill., has been a resident of this State for thirty-nine years, and during this period has quietly advanced his own fortunes through his industry along agricultural lines, while, at the same time, his qualities of good citizenship have been frequently recognized by his election to offices of public responsibility. Mr. Metcalf was born at Poolsville, Montgomery County, Md., February 10, 1872, a son of Samuel E. and Martha J. (King) Metcalf. As far back as Mr. Metcalf's recollection reaches, the family has been an agricultural one, originating in one of the eastern States.

Samuel T. Metcalf attended the county schools in Lanesville Township, near his father's home in the earlier years of his school period, and then enjoyed rather better advantages for two winters at the Berry Station school. As his father needed his aid on the farm, he remained at home and assisted in the farm work until he was twenty years of age, the family having come to Illinois in 1872. Stockraising engaged his father's attention, and on many occasions, the elder Mr. Metcalf and his brother drove cattle for market from Sangamon County to St. Louis, Mo. At that time there was much enjoyment to be found in hunting, and Mr. Metcalf was considered a fine shot and had some reason to feel proud of his marksmanship. Then, as in later life, all the clean, wholesome, outdoor sports attracted him and, possibly, engaging in these to a reasonable extent, assisted in his robust physical development and continued fine health.

After leaving home, Mr. Metcalf rented a farm for himself, in Buffalo Township, which he operated for one year, when he moved on a rented farm in Lanesville Township, where he remained for four years, afterward returning to Buffalo Township for two more years. About this time he became interested at Lanesville, where he ran the elevator for nine years, after which, although still maintaining his home at Lanesville, he was employed at the city of Springfield for two and one-half years by the Sattely Flow Company, where he learned the trade of flow fitter.

In the spring of 1904 Mr. Metcalf was elected Superintendent of the Sangamon County Poor Farm, and during his four-years term there changed the whole aspect of the place. It was during this first administration that he succeeded in having the necessary utilities introduced—a water system and improvements in the light plant—all this being accomplished without undue pressure being felt by the tax payers. After retiring from the office of Superintendent of the Poor Farm Mr. Metcalf resumed his agricultural activities, renting a farm for one year, near Mechanicsburg, and later the Phensant farm, in Buffalo Township, on which he resided for three years. In the meanwhile Mr. Metcalf had been active in local politics and elected to minor offices, serving as town clerk and tax collector of Lanesville Township. As a brave and courageous man, determined at all hazards to do his duty, Mr. Metcalf was brought prominently before the public during the riot at Springfield, in 1908, when, as a special deputy of Sheriff Mester, he brought to bay the negro, Taylor, alias Jones, who had killed four negroes at Sheffield, Ala., and also killed a negro named Poynard, near Buffalo, Ill. Not only was Mr. Metcalf exonerated from all blame regarding the death of this evil doer, but the jury made special mention of the personal bravery he had displayed on this occasion. On December 13, 1913, Mr. Metcalf was a second time elected, by the Board of Supervisors of Sangamon County, Superintendent of the Poor Farm, receiving thirty-two votes to twelve votes for his opponent, and he assumed his old duties again on March 1, 1912. It is very generally acknowledged that the condition of this farm, along every line, is superior, under his efficient methods and administration, to any other in the State. He has always been able to maintain cordial relations with the Board of Supervisors, who have not been slow to recognize his practical and efficient methods and his good judgment in making use of the public funds in the interest of both his charges and the tax payers. At a banquet which he tendered the Board of Supervisors at the close of his first administration, proof of the above friendly appreciation was shown in the presentation by the Board of a Masonic ring, set with diamonds and emblematic of Masonic rites between the 14th and 32nd Degrees of Masonry. Mr. Metcalf is a 32nd Degree Mason and is identified with Philopolis Lodge, No. 321, A. F. and A. M., Kedron Chapter, No. 138, R. A. M., Springfield Council, No. 2, R. and S. M., Elwood Commandery, No. 6, K. T. and Oriental Consistory, Chicago, Ill. He also belongs to Globe Lodge, No. 323, I. O. O. F., Mechanicsburg, and to the M. W. A., No. 1522, at Lanesville. He founded the first organization of Superintendents and Matrons of County Poor Houses, and in 1900 served as President of the Illinois Association, being first elected to this office at Jacksonville, Ill., and later was reelected at Chicago. Mr. Metz became recognized as a broad-minded, far-seeing man and he is working for better conditions wherever they are needed.

At Decatur, Ill., on January 5, 1878, Mr. Metcalf was married, by Rev. Richardson, to Miss Hattie Holmes, a daughter of James and Sarah (Kelly) Holmes. Mr. Holmes died at Mechanicsburg, Ill., and subsequently Mrs. Holmes married Wesley Baldwin and they reside at Mechanicsburg; Mr. and Mrs. Metcalf have two children: Elmer, who was born in Buffalo, Ill., October 10, 1890; and Lucilla, who was born at Buffalo, June 11, 1892. Both son and daughter attended the Millikin University, at Decatur, Ill. Mrs. Metcalf is a member of the Christian Church, Buffalo, Ill., and although Mr. Metcalf is not connected with any denomination, he nevertheless contributes liberally to the support of all churches and church work, irrespective of creed, his one aim and desire being to benefit his fellow men, with the belief that in so doing, he is following the Master's footsteps and teachings.

METZ, Irving Wagner, M. D., a successful surgeon of Springfield, has been a resident of the city since 1903. His private work is devoted to surgery, in which branch of medical science he takes great interest. Dr. Metz was born in Whitley County, Indiana, where his parents lived on a farm, September 5, 1872, and is a son of Ozias and Nancy (Wagner) Metz. The father was born in Canton, Ohio, December 29, 1833, and died April 26, 1901, and the mother, who was born in Huntington, Ind., August 14, 1843, died July 15, 1880. Ozias Metz was a local minister of the German Baptist (Dunkard) Church, of which family were devout members. His education was mostly what he acquired through reading the newspapers and for more than forty years he was a subscriber to the New York Tribune. He was a liberal contributor to several colleges established by the German Lutheran Church and was opposed to speculation, investing his savings in farm land. He became a staunch Republican after the organization of that party. The Metz family originally emigrated to America from Metz, Germany, and were early settlers in the vicinity of Harrisburg, Pa., and Hagerstown, Md.

In boyhood Dr. I. W. Metz attended the common schools and South Whitley High School. At the age of fourteen years, he was placed in charge of the homestead, a farm of 250 acres, and while there accumulated money with which he afterward acquired his medical education. He was graduated from the Indiana State University in 1895, with the degree of A. B., returned home, served two years as Principal of the South Whitley High School, and became a candidate for the office of County Superintendent of Schools, but was defeated. He then resumed his original purpose of entering medical college, and in 1900, graduated with the degree of M. D. from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of Chicago. Dr. Metz served as house surgeon of the Wabash Hospital at Peru, Ind., in 1900-01, then was promoted to Division Surgeon of the Wabash Railroad, and stationed at Ashland, Ind., where he remained from 1901-03, was transferred to Springfield and has since served in a similar capacity. In 1908, he was appointed medical referee of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York. He owns a well-appointed home at 624 South Walnut Street, Springfield.

September 20, 1906, Dr. Metz was married, at Havana, Ill., to Miss Edith Mabel Thorp, who was born in Havana, June 8, 1876, daughter of Orlando B. and Catherine Ann (Wagner) Thorp. Mr. Thorp was born in Canton, Ill., February 27, 1850, and his wife was born in Havana, August 29, 1857. For a number of years Mr. Thorp was President of the Havana Metal Wheel Company, and in 1904, resigned this position to assume the Presidency of the Crescent Forge & Shovel Company, of Havana. He is a well-known manufacturer. Mrs. Metz received her education in Havana public schools and St. Mary's School at Knoxville, Ill. Three children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Metz, namely: two boys, born June 26, 1907, of whom one died in infancy and the other, Orlando Thorp, survives; one daughter, Catherine Ann, born October 14, 1909. The family attend the Episcopal Church and are members of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, of Springfield. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally a member of the A. F. & A. M., having taken the degree of Knight Templar, September 5, 1902. While attending college, he was a member of the Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity. He has won a good standing in his profession and in the estimation of his fellow-citizens, who have high regard for his ability and skill, as well as his character and disposition.

METZGER, Christian Ernst Julius.—It is to the banking institutions of the country that we must look for the financial stability which is absolutely necessary to the prosperity of any community, without which progressiveness or endeavor for advancement would count for nothing, and therefore it is desirable that the men who have in their charge the affairs of these institutions shall be types of the highest integrity, men in whom the people can place the utmost confidence. The First State Bank of New Berlin, Ill., is one of the most stable financial institutions of Sangamon County, and the amount of business handled by it yearly speaks well for the officials who control its transactions. Christian Ernst Julius Metzger, who is the Cashier of this institution, was born March 14, 1862, in Nuertlingen, Kingdom of Wuerttemberg, Germany, and is a son of

Johannes Metzger was a civil engineer by profession, and much of his work consisted in the laying out of streets, grading of land and beautifying in many ways the thoroughfares of his home city Tuebingen. After a long and useful career along these lines, he retired at the age of fifty-five years, at which time he was elected a member of the City Council, and so served until his death, October 23, 1897, his good wife having passed away October 9th of the same year.Both were faithful members of the Lutheran Church, and were the parents of the following children: Johannes, a civil engineer, who died in Germany at the age of thirty-eight years; Mrs. Rosee Goehner; Mrs. Pauline Frasch; Julia, who became the wife of Dr. Thillipsen, a leading physician of Hanover Prussia; Emma, who became the wife of C. Schnebelin Post Verwalter; and Christian E. J. Christian E. J. Metzger, who is perhaps better known as E. C. Metzger, in which manner he always signs his name, was started to school at the age of five years and his educational training continued until he was sixteen years old, including a course of study at the high school and at a college where the languages taught equalled the tuition to be found at any of our leading American educational institutions. He then entered a wholesale mercantile establishment, starting at the bottom and working the first three years without reimbursement, making his way throughout all the departments of the large establishment and learning the work in each thoroughly. The army headquarters were situated near his home, and the treatment he saw given to the soldiers bred in him a feeling of dislike for army service, and as a consequence, having given much thought to the New World, in March, 1882, he started for America, going to East Atchison, Mo., where he expected to find a cousin. He went on to Crawfordsville, and later to Knox City, Mo., but subsequently traveled to Jones County, Tex., where he spent some time in visiting and sight-seeing. Having by this time learned to speak the English language, he went to Quincy, Ill., in 1884, finding employment with a cousin who was superintendent of the construction work on the cottages of the Soldiers' Home, and was thus engaged until 1888, when he returned to Texas and there engaged in breeding Norman Draft horses. In this he was very successful until the financial distress of 1890-91 struck the country, and the value of horses dropped to such an extent that animals for which Mr. Metzger had paid $80 cash he was compelled to sell for $15. Having disposed of all of his stock, and nothing dunned by his ill fortune, in 1891 Mr. Metzger returned to Quincy, Ill., where he found employment as a street-car conductor, and spent six years in this position, coming to New Berlin in 1897 to open a paint store. One year later he purchased the stock of Henry Grandjian, and in a short time had built up a business of a few hundred dollars to one that averaged $20,000 annually. In June, 1906, on account of ill health he sold out his business to J. T. Wilcox.

When the First State Bank of New Berlin was organized in 1908, Mr. Metzger purchased a large block of stock, and he became a director and Vice President of the institution. In July, 1906, he resigned the vice-presidency to become cashier, a position in which he has proven himself an able financier. Under his direction the bank has steadily added to its dividends and the number of depositors has increased phenomenally. Throughout the State the bank holds the highest reputation, and its cashier shares this reputation as a safe, sane and able banker. Mr. Metzger is a member of the German Lutheran Church, while his wife is an active worker in the Baptist denomination. He is a staunch Democrat in political matters, but has never sought nor desired public office. A courteous and obliging official, he has made friends wherever he has been, and this is no doubt a valuable asset to the business of the institution which he so ably represents.

On May 21, 1895, in New Berlin, Ill., Mr. Metzger was married to Miss Adie M. Grandjian, daughter of Henry Grandjian, one of the pioneers of Sangamon County, and for many years a leading merchant of New Berlin, which town he helped in developing, and where he died in 1905.

METZKE, William, was born in Germany, February 2, 1854, son of Henry and Louisa (Stricker) Metzke, both natives of Germany, who died there. The father was a blacksmith and he and his wife had children as follows: Caroline, married John Goppigh and lives in Germany; Amelia is married and lives in Germany; August, of Riverton, Ill.; William. William Metzke attended school in his native country until fourteen years of age, then served three years as an apprentice to a blacksmith, after which he worked in the coal mines until he entered the German army. He served three years and two months, then worked two years and a half for a wholesale grocer.

In 1881 Mr. Metzke sailed from Amsterdam, on the ship "Queen," landing in New York April 18. He proceeded to St. Charles, Mo., where he worked for a time in the car shops, then worked for a short time in the coal mines in Indian Territory, after which he moved to Belleville, Ill., and worked at mining, his occupation since. He came to Springfield in 1884 and was employed in the old North Shaft, later working in various other mines. He is an industrious and faithful worker and has made many friends. He erected his present home at 615 West North Grand Avenue in 1904, and owns 160 feet frontage and 175 feet in depth.

Mr. Metzke was married, in Springfield, October 1, 1885, to Miss Caroline Hoffer, who was born in Germany, April 16, 1868, and came to the United States with her parents when twenty-two years old. She was a daughter of Karl and Louisa Hoffe, and died November 6, 1906. Mrs. Metzke was a member of St. John's Lutheran Church, as are the other members of the family, and was a devoted wife and mother. She was buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery and was mourned by many friends. Mr. Metzke is a staunch Democrat and actively interested in the welfare of his community. He and his wife had two children: Edith Julia, born July 27, 1886, married Alfred Relsch and they live with her father, having two children—Marie C. and Adolph W. C.; Fred William, born May 24, 1888, living at home.

MEYER, Gottlieb.—In naming the representative citizens of any community, we invariably find that among the most prominent are men who started in life with little or no advantages, either of an educational or financial nature, and worked their way to the top through their own industry and perseverance. These characteristics, together with intelligence, energy and a thorough knowledge of soil conditions are necessary in this day of advanced farming, and one of the self-made men of Sangamon County, who treats his vocation more as a profession than as a trade, is Gottlieb Meyer, of Section 4, Loami Township. Mr. Meyer was born July 15, 1855, in Preuss-Minden, Germany, a son of Frederick Meyer, the owner of a 100-acre tract in the Fatherland.

Gottlieb Meyer was reared on the home farm in his native country, and his education was secured in the schools of that country. In 1873, having heard of the opportunities offered to young, energetic men who were not afraid of hard work, he bade good-bye to his parents and with his brother, Henry C., started for the United States, the voyage consuming about seventeen days. On reaching this country Mr. Meyer came to Litchfield, Ill., and went to work for a friend whom he had known in Germany, a Mr. Whitehouse, who had located in America some years before. His first wages were $140 per year, out of which he managed to save $110, and the second year, out of $170 he saved $120. By the third year he had begun to learn the English language and went to work for Abraham Brokaw, who paid him $17 per month and allowed him to attend the district school during one winter near Litchfield. During the one year and nine months while he was in Mr. Brokaw's employ, he saved $250 out of $348 wages, and in 1877 he went to work for Henry Whitehouse near Litchfield, receiving $200 per year and saved $900 of the $400 thus received in two years. In 1879 he entered the employ of John Nienmann, at $200 per year, and after two years had saved $225 of his wages, making in the eight years that he had worked $1,000 that he had accumulated. Mr. Meyer then engaged with Charles Whitehouse at $200 per year and remaining two years, saved the entire $400 thus earned and on March 1, 1883, came to Sangamon County, and again hired out at farming at $20 per month, with William Scheele, in Berlin Township. Continuing here some months, he again added $200 to his capital, and then he and his brother Henry located in Loami Township, and here Gottlieb purchased 160 acres of land in Section 4, under agreement to pay $54.50 per acre for it. His parents in Germany were well-to-do and advanced him $1,000, and with this he purchased horses, a wagon and farming implements and prepared to clear up for himself a good farm from the wild and uncultivated property before him. It took long years of hard work before the heavy timber was cleared off the land, the low lands tilled and the tract properly fenced, but this has been accomplished and now Mr. Meyer can look with pardonable pride over one of the best farms in Sangamon County. His first home, to which he brought his bride, was a small one-story building of four rooms, but this has since been added to from time to time, and is now finished and well furnished, surrounded by shade and fruit trees, well-kept hedges and beautiful lawns. The small barn, corn-crib and other outbuildings have given place to more ample structures, and the farm, as a whole, bears little resemblance to the conditions of less than thirty years ago. Mr. Meyer has been successful not only in farming but in stock-raising as well, and now owns many finely bred horses, cattle and hogs.

On August 5, 1884, Mr. Meyer was united in marriage to Mary Scheele, who was born in St. Louis, Mo., a daughter of Bernard Scheele, a native of Germany. To Mr. and Mrs. Meyer three children were born: Emma, born August 21, 1886; Gottlieb H. C., born July 30, 1888, but died in March, 1889, at the age of four years, eight months, eleven days, after an illness of but three days; and Mary, who is better known as Mannie, born October 22, 1894. Mr. Meyer has given his children excellent educational advantages, and Miss Emma is a musician of no mean ability. She is also well versed in the domestic sciences, and since the death of her beloved mother she has taken her place as nearly as she could, managing her father's household affairs and caring for her younger sister. The mother died in the faith of the Lutheran Church, August 31, 1904, after an illness lasting two years, during which time her Christian patience and sweetness of character was exemplified to the fullest degree. Medical talent was secured from all over this part of the country, but neither this nor the loving attention of husband or children could do aught to relieve her suffering, and she finally passed away. She was laid to rest in Oak Ridge Cemetery, which she had chosen as her last resting-place, and the little boy was taken and laid beside her.

Mr. Meyer is a member of the Lutheran Church, is a Democrat in politics and, for six years, has served his Township as School Director. As a man and a citizen he is highly esteemed throughout his community and his friends and acquaintances are numerous.

MEYER, Henry C.—Sangamon County is fortunate in numbering so many native-born Germans among its population, for there are no better citizens to be found anywhere than those who come from the Fatherland. One of these excellent men who have set a good example of industry and thrift wherever found, is Henry C. Meyer, a general farmer and stock-raiser residing on Section 4, Loami Township. He was born in Westphalia, Germany, February 17, 1848, a son of Frederick and Louisa (Werkmeister) Meyer. Frederick Meyer was considered an extensive farmer in the locality where he lived and died, for he owned 300 acres of land, and raised grains and a common grade of stock. In his younger days, he served his regular term in the German army, and in his native country was an excellent and representative citizen. His death occurred about 1850, his widow surviving him until 1905, when she died aged eighty-four years. Nine children were born to them, all of whom attained maturity: August, died about 1857; William, lives in Germany; Charlotte, widow of Fred Kruckmeyer, also resides in Germany; Louis is a farmer of Berlin Township; Carl is a farmer in Germany; Gottlieb is written of elsewhere in this work; Caroline married a Mr. Koch and resides near her birthplace; Fredericka, married a Mr. Leumann and remained in Germany, and Henry C.

Henry C. Meyer was brought up in his native land in the thorough German way, being prepared for whatever work might fall to his share. In 1873, he with his brother Gottlieb, came to America to join an old friend, a Mr. Whitehouse, a farmer in the vicinity of Lithfield, Ill. The young men reached their destination October 3, 1873, receiving a warm welcome and employment by their host to repay his services. Henry Meyer received $170 per year, and saved nearly all of this money. The following year he went to Morgan County, working there on a farm until 1880, when he bought eighty acres of land, paying $36 per acre for it. Still saving as much as possible, in 1884, with his brother Gottlieb, he was able to buy 220 acres in Loami Township, located on Section 4. Henry Meyer trading his eighty acres in Morgan County as part payment for his new purchase. There was a frame house in process of erection on the land, into which the Meyers moved. They immediately began the cultivation and improvement of the land and later a division was made of his property, so that Henry, Med. Fr. Meyer, owns 195 acres, 160 acres of which cost $54 per acre, but now estimated as worth $200 per acre, being devoted to general farming and stockraising. In politics, Mr. Meyer is a Democrat but does not seek office.

On December 14, 1882, Mr. Meyer was married to Caroline Hardt, born in Jacksonville, Ill., a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Wunderlich) Hardt, natives of Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Hardt came to America in 1850, locating on a farm in Maxwell Township, where the former died March 26, 1904, and the latter, July 20, 1907. Their two sons, George and Christ, make the bond with Mrs. Meyer. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer had children as follows: Elizabeth, born June 26, 1884, on the present farm; Louise, born August 26, 1885, married Charles W. Jacobs of Dawson, Ill., and have one daughter—Earnell Naomi; Bertha, born August 11, 1888; Henry, born September 6, 1890; Carl, born April 29, 1893; Albert, born January 20, 1897, and Gottlieb, born October 10, 1899. These children were all carefully educated in the common schools, and given additional advantages. Miss Elizabeth received her education in music from Miss Mildred Parkin of Loami, and for four years gave instruction in piano music. When Mrs. Meyer passed away, February 9, 1910, Miss Elizabeth bravely renounced her ambitions along musical lines, to assume the cares of the household. The family were members of the Lutheran Church and the dear mother was laid to rest in the Lutheran Cemetery near New Berlin. Miss Bertha is a graduate of the Gem City Business College, Quincy, Ill., and is fitted to be a stenographer for the J. C. Pierl Jewelry Company of Springfield, but she, too, left her life work to assist in caring for the family her mother left behind her. These young ladies are charming in manner and fitted to adorn any circle, and their unselfishness is beautiful to witness.

Mr. Meyer is a man who stands high in the estimation of his neighbors, and his family is one of whom any father may well be proud.

MEYER, James, a retired farmer now living in Springfield, Ill., a veteran of the Civil War and an honored and useful citizen, was born between Moscow and Warsaw, Russia, October 16, 1834, a son of Henrik and Caroline (Engel) Meyer, both natives of Berlin, Germany. The father was a weaver and merchant, and he and his wife spent most of their lives in Germany, where he died in 1868 and his wife in 1865. They were parents of two sons and three daughters, all of whom are deceased except James. One son served in the Twenty-third German Infantry during the Franco-Prussian war. James Meyer passed his childhood in Germany, to which place he was taken by his parents when about six years old. After leaving school he worked at the trade of baker, which he followed until 1853, when he sailed for America, landing in New York, Ind., and spending a short time in Philadelphia, went on to Pittsburg, Pa., where he remained one year. From Pittsburgh he went to Cincinnati, thence to Lawrenceburg, Ind., and after spending about a year at the lastnamed city, in October, 1855, came to Springfield. He worked one year on a farm in Sangamon County, then went to Kansas, but soon returned to Springfield and worked for

Thomas Dennis, then a farmer, who was serving as Mayor of Springfield at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln. From 1858 to the breaking out of the war Mr. Meyer worked at teaming.

July 15, 1862, Mr. Meyer enlisted in Company A, Third Illinois Light Artillery, under Captain T. F. Vaughn, and served one year under General Grant, participating in the battles of Little Rock, Jenkins Ferry, and many other important engagements. He served until July 3, 1863, on which date he was mustered out, at Springfield, and this city has since been his home. He has been retired from active life the past twelve years, and owns a nice home at 521 West Reynolds Street, besides other city property. He is a member of the Lutheran Church and in politics a Republican, having cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Meyer was married, in Springfield, March 20, 1858, to Miss Sarah Henderson, who was born in Richland, Sangamon County, Ill., October 9, 1838, a daughter of Luke and Julia (Hubbard) Henderson, who came to Sangamon County overland from Trenton, N. J., and settled on a farm near Richland. They afterward moved to Springfield, where their last days were spent. They were parents of four sons and eight daughters, and of their family only four survive: Mrs. Meyer, a son John; William Henderson, of Springfield; and Edward. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer became the parents of five children, three daughters and two sons, and four of these children are now living, namely: Oscar, living on a farm in Sangamon County; Amelia, wife of Sylvester Castlebinder, a cabinet-maker, of Shreveport, La.; Louisa, wife of Edward French, of East St. Louis, Ill.; and Nettie, wife of James Carey, on a farm at New City, Sangamon County. Mr. Meyer has thirteen grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. He is well known in the city and is highly respected by all who have been associated with him in business or social relations for his sterling qualities and high character. Mrs. Meyer, as a young woman, worked one year for Abraham Lincoln, and her husband was also acquainted with Mr. Lincoln.

MEYER, Louis—The Meyer family is one which is closely identified with agricultural history in Sangamon County, and its representatives are today numbered among the best farmers the locality possesses. One of them is Louis Meyer, an excellent farmer and stock raiser of Section 33, Berlin Township, who was born in Germany, January 26, 1852, son of Frederick Meyer.

Louis Meyer was educated in the district schools of his native place and learned to work on the farm his father owned. Until 1881 he remained at home, but in that year left for the United States, to which his brothers, Henry and Gottlieb, had come in 1873. Upon his arrival, Louis Meyer secured employment at Litchfield, Ill., working by the month, with a friend of the family, a Mr. Whitehouse, receiving eleven dollars per month for his services. For two years he continued to work in the vicinity of Litchfield, but in 1883 came to Sangamon County to work on a farm. He carefully saved his money, and in 1887 was able to buy 100 acres of land on Section 13, in Berlin Township. On it was a small house and an old barn, and he moved on his property in 1888, boarding with his brother Gottlieb. His next purchase was four horses, and gradually he made improvements, and now has one of the best farms in the county, which cost him $50 per acre, but which he would not sell now for $225 per acre.

On April 26, 1889, Mr. Meyer married Lina Grank, born in Germany, daughter of Carl and Minnie (Meyer) Grank. Mr. Grank was a farmer in Germany, but was not satisfied with conditions there, so in 1870 started for the United States, only to fall sick and be sent to the hospital. Upon his recovery he went to Morgan County, Ill., and while there sent for his family, who arrived in June, 1873. Purchasing a farm in Morgan County, he resided on it for a time, but sold and bought another farm in Maconpin County, where he became well-to-do and influential. There he died, in June, 1884, leaving a widow and the following children: Mrs. Meyer, with whom the mother now resides, having attained the age of seventy-five years; Bertha, born in 1868, wife of Albert Krugler, a farmer near Morris, Okla., nine children; August married Susie Eads of Kentucky, and a resident of Leroy, Ill., six children; and two who died in infancy.

Mr. and Mrs. Meyer have had seven children, one of whom died in infancy, the others being: Henry L., born March 1, 1890, operating a part of the home farm; Pauline Bertha, born September 28, 1892, keeping house for her brother Henry; Minnie, born March 31, 1894, at home; Clara, born November 7, 1898; John, born March 29, 1901; Lilly, born September 15, 1904. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer are endeavoring to give their children every advantage within their power. The parents and those of the children who are old enough, are members of the German Lutheran Church.

The record of Mr. Meyer is an interesting one, for it proves what anyone can accomplish who is industrious and thrifty. His fine farm of 215 acres is extremely valuable. His residence, erected in 1905, contains nine rooms, is two stories in height, and is finished in modern style. He carries a good grade of stock and his farm is up-to-date in every respect, yet all of this has been earned since 1851, when he came to the country, ignorant of its language and customs. Mr. Meyer plants about 125 acres in corn and thirty-two acres in oats. For some time he has served as School Director of the Patton District, and believes in securing good educational advantages for the children. All his life in his adopted country he has been a Democrat. For twenty-nine years he has been a resident of the United States, and for twenty-six years has lived in Berlin Township, and no German-Americ-ian is prouder of his adopted country than Mr. Meyer.

MILLAR, William Johnston, who has been closely identified with the material interests of Sangamon County for many years, both as a banker and attorney-at-law, is now somewhat retired from the activities of life, spending his declining years in Springfield. He was born at Paxinos, Northumberland County, Pa., September 8, 1838, son of George and Polly (Stetsler) Millar, of Huguenot ancestry and one of a family of eleven children.

Mr. Millar attended the country school in his native county, but in 1850 went to California, where he went to school and later became a teacher. Still later he entered the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and graduated from the law department of that institution in 1873, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Following this Mr. Millar taught school in Sangamon County, imitating the example of many of his family. One brother, John, became a professor in an Iowa university. In 1874, responding to the needs of his community, Mr. Millar established the banking business at Illiopolis, and built it up to solid proportions, continuing therein until ill health compelled him to retire. Meanwhile he had invested in farming land, and still retains large properties. One of the several fine farms now in his possession is the famous Bennett Mills farm of 120 acres, adjoining Springfield.

In 1876 Mr. Millar was united in marriage with Miss Louise Singleton, and they have had four children, as follows: Paul Johnston, deceased; Ruby Geraldine; Genevieve, deceased; William J. Jr., a graduate of Springfield High School in the Class of 1900 and at present a student in the law department of the University of Michigan. Mrs. Millar was born in Springfield and, after completing the course of study afforded by the schools in that city, taught in Sangamon County three years. Her father, James Hunter Singleton, was born in Hardin County, Ky., in 1820, but went to Illinois when young, and there married Jemima Mauzy, a native of the latter State, born February 13, 1825, and still living, residing in Excelsior, Minn. They came to Springfield, where they reared their family and made their home for many years, and the father died there in November, 1887. He and his wife had children as follows: Thomas, deceased; John, died young; George, deceased; James A. died in 1570; Mrs. Millar; Mary Agnes, widow of Harry Monk, of Excelsior; and Mrs. Samuel Wilson, of Minneapolis, Minn. William J. Singleton, the grandfather of Mrs. William J. Millar, was a native of Kentucky, came to Illinois at an early day, and established the first oil mill in the State and a hominy mill.

He married Nancy Hunter, of Kentucky. Mrs. James H. Singleton, was born at Paris, Edgar County, Ill., and her father, John Mauzy, was born in Virginia, May 4, 1776, while his wife Nancy Agnes Mauzy, was born in the same State, January 20, 1782. He was a son of Peter Mauzy, a soldier in Captain Brown's company, recruited from Virginia during the Revolution, and which participated in the siege of Yorktown; he was one of those sent by Gen. Anthony Wayne to clear the road for the mounted troops for the advance on that town. John Mauzy's death occurred in Springfield, Ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Millar are Episcopalians. He is a Democrat in political faith and has served in many official positions, while for thirty years a resident of Illiopolis. An enthusiastic member of Illiopolis Lodge No. 521, A. F. and A. M., and of Kadron Chapter No. 138, R. A. M., he has taken the thirty-second degree and is a Knight Templar, belonging to Elwood Commandery No. 6, at Springfield. Conservative, reserved and responsible, Mr. Millar has always been an important factor in every community in which he has made his home, and his influence is powerful in whatever direction he exerts it. He has been for more than thirty years a member of the Masonic Lodge at Illiopolis and helped to build the first Masonic Temple at that place in 1874, using part of the building as a bank until he retired from business and invested largely in farms and real estate. This building was laid waste by fire. He afterwards assisted in erecting the present temple, which is the home of Masonic bodies of that village. During these many years he has assisted in conferring Masonic Degrees upon many persons and has helped materially in building up the local organizations. The family have a pleasant home on North Walnut Street.

MILLER, Francis M.—The rich farm land of Sangamon County yields handsome return to those who till it, and a number have accumulated fortunes from their property there. One of the substantial farmers of Curran Township is Francis M. Miller, residing on Section 24. He is a native son of the county, having been born in Chatham Township, February 11, 1836. His father was Jacob Miller, a native of Kentucky, while his mother bore the maiden name of Lucinda Potts and was born in Virginia. The parents were married in Kentucky, where they resided for some time, coming to Illinois in 1824, locating in Chatham Township, where the father entered 120 acres from the Government, dying upon his property in 1850, after a life devoted to farming. His wife died fifteen years later, aged eighty-six years. The paternal grandfather came from Germany, while the maternal grandfather was born in England. Jacob Millar served in the War of 1812, while a son, William, was a soldier in the Civil War. There were thirteen children in the family of Jacob Miller, three of whom were born in Kentucky. Francis M. Miller attended school in the little log building in his neighborhood, where he sat on slab benches, and at other times gave his boyish help on the farm. He was born in Chatham Township, and has been engaged in farming, spending thirty-seven years in Chatham Township, thirteen years in Auburn Township, and eleven years in Looml Township, and in 1902 bought 120 acres in Curran Township, which continues to be his home.

On October 7, 1858, occurred the marriage of Mr. Miller and Eliza J. Trimble, born in Curran Township, March 28, 1840. Her parents were born in Kentucky and married there. They had six children, two of whom survive, one son, James A. Trimble, residing in Springfield. The Trimbles came to Illinois at an early day, locating first in Morgan County, but later coming to Sangamon County, where the father died January 21, 1900, the mother having passed away December 9, 1866.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller became the parents of ten children, two sons and eight daughters, one of whom is deceased, Myrtle Alice, born July 7, 1882, died February 21, 1883. Those living are Fred A., born February 17, 1860; Sadie F., wife of John Miller, living on a farm near Auburn, was born October 9, 1865; Mary F., wife of Oscar Patterson, living on a farm, was born August 27, 1865; Lily, wife of Harry Miner, living near Alberta, Canada, was born June 8, 1868; Luella, born July 17, 1870, at home; Mrs. Georgia E. Bascom, a widow, born February 25, 1873, is a school teacher in the Sangamon County schools; Lydia Belle, born September 23, 1875, wife of Miles Fanham, lives on a farm in Auburn Township; William H., born January 26, 1877, lives in Chatham Township; John A., born October 30, 1879, lives with his father. There are sixteen grandchildren and one great-grandchild, all of whom are living. The seventh of October, 1906, the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Miller was celebrated, all of the children and grandchildren being present, as well as 185 other guests. Both Mr. and Mrs. Miller enjoy excellent health. They own their farm of 120 acres, which is in fine condition. Mr. Miller cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, who was a warm, personal friend of his, and he has ever since continued faithful to the party the great man helped to found. He is a member of the Christian Church, as is his wife, and both enjoy their religious privileges. He has served as School Director in the several townships in which he has made his home, and where he is pleasantly remembered not only as an official, but also as a capable and successful farmer.

MILLER, Fred H.—The younger generation of farmers in Sangamon County are profiting from the experiments made by the government and the experience of those who have gone before them, and are operating their land along scientific lines with results often surpassing those of former years. One of these progressive young men who has done much to advance the cause of agriculture in his county, is Fred H. Miller, of Sections 32 and 33, Maxwell Township. He was born in Chatham Township, April 7, 1884, a son of Thomas J. and Amanda (Jacobs) Miller. The Jacobs family are mentioned elsewhere in this work.

Thomas J. Miller was a son of James Miller, and grandson of James F. Miller, brother of William G. Miller, whose family history is treated of at considerable length elsewhere. Thomas J. was born in Sangamon County and followed the calling of a farmer in Chatham Township. He married in Chatham Township, was a man of quiet, domestic tastes, and for many years served as School Director and Road Commissioner, being elected on the Democratic ticket. This most excellent man was killed on March 10, 1910, from falling into a tile ditch in such a manner as to break both legs. The injuries were so serious as to lead to internal complications, and he finally passed away, aged fifty-four years, leaving a widow and three children to mourn his untimely taking away. His children are: Iva May, wife of Fred Butler, a farmer in Chatham Township; Otie C., operating the homestead in Chatham Township, and Fred H. The father was a man who carried out the Golden Rule in his everyday life. Always willing to assist others in time of need, he often left his own work to attend to theirs. Both he and his wife early joined the Christian Church. Fred H. Miller attended the district school of Chatham Township, and was brought up to hard work on the farm, remaining at home until he was twenty-two years old. On March 7, 1906, he was married to Bertha E. Workman, who was born in Looml Township, January 18, 1886, a daughter of Stephen Workman (deceased), who is mentioned elsewhere. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have three children: Edith, born March 2, 1907, Lois, born June 18, 1908, and one son, James Thomas, born August 2, 1910.

After their marriage this young couple rented land in Looml Township for two years, operating sixty acres. In February, 1908, they moved to their present 120-acre farm on Sections 32 and 33, which they own, although Mr. Miller operates 240 acres in the township. He is a practical farmer, fully appreciating the wisdom of rotating his crops and using improved methods and machinery in his work. His farming operations require seven horses and five mules, the former being mares of high-grade Percheron stock. He also makes a specialty of raising Poland-China hogs. It is his aim to feed a carload of hogs each year, and his product is so good that he receives for them the highest market price. He plants from 130 to 140 acres in corn, besides raising both wheat and oats, his corn averaging from fifty to sixty-six bushels per acre. Mr. Miller has always voted the Republican ticket, and both he and his wife are consistent members of the Christian Church. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F., No. 901 of Louai. Providing for the future of his family, Mr. Miller carries insurance in the Franklin Life Insurance Company and the Bankers Life Insurance Association of Des Moines, Iowa. A man of energy, progressive and public-spirited, Mr. Miller has a bright future before him, and is destined to accumulate a handsome competency through his own intelligently directed efforts.

MILLER, Henry.—When the alarm of fire is sounded, those in danger begin to appreciate the value of an efficient fire department, and show their gratitude to the brave men who risk their lives in defense of property. Henry Miller, captain of Chemical Engine No. 1, Springfield, is an experienced fire fighter and a man of unquestioned bravery and resource. He was born in St. Louis, Mo., April 6, 1841, a son of John Henry and Catherine (Zehe) Miller, both natives of Germany. The father was a cloth cutter, and came to America at a very early day, settling in St. Louis where he met and married Catherine Zehe. Here the father followed his trade until he came to Springfield, Ill., in 1852, and settling in this city, resumed his work, continuing thus engaged for many years. He was successful in a business way, and left a valuable property, dying in 1879, at the age of sixty-two years, six months and eleven days. He had three sons and two daughters, all born in St. Louis, but only Mr. Miller and a sister, Mrs. Louisa Opel, of Springfield, survive.

Mr. Miller went to school in St. Louis and Springfield before the present school houses were erected. As a boy he resided in building the houses used in building the first two public schools here. After finishing school and working in a country store for two years, Mr. Miller found employment in a department store in Springfield. In January, 1861, he began learning the carpenter’s trade with A. Morris, which he followed for many years. On October 17, 1885, he joined the volunteer fire department. In May, 1868, the Volunteer Fire Department was converted into a paid Fire Department. At this time there were only two engine houses with three full paid and four extra hose men. The extra men worked at their trades receiving pay for service at each fire. Mr. Miller serving as one of the extra hose men, in 1872, he became regularly employed on the ladder truck, and from that up, he has held every position except that of driver in his department, acting many times as chief during the absence of the regular officer. In 1871, during the great Chicago fire, he was sent with a crew of five men to that city. On April 17, 1887, he was made captain of the chemical engine, which was then stationed at No. 2 Engine House, but on March 14, 1890, the chemical engine was moved to its present quarters on Fourth Street, where Captain Miller still remains in active service. He is not only one of the oldest fire fighters in the State, but also one of the oldest in the country, and as a seasoned veteran, is one of the most efficient officers in this line.

On June 19, 1868, Mr. Miller was married in Springfield to Angeline Morris, born in Ohio, May 4, 1848, a daughter of Alexander Morris. The latter was a carpenter and contractor who brought his family to Springfield at an early date. Here he followed his trade for a number of years, later moving to Topeka, Kan., but is now deceased. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: Otto G., born August 11, 1871, a commercial salesman of Springfield; William Clint, born September 3, 1878, is in the employ of the Illinois Watch Company; and Mary A., born October 23, 1883, now the wife of Walter O. Brown. There are two grandchildren in the family, sons of Otto G. and Ada (Hallowell) Miller: Kenneth H., born January 7, 1900, and Russell H. Miller, born June 5, 1903. The family residence at No. 522 South Eleventh Street is owned by Captain Miller, who also owns other city real estate.

In politics Captain Miller is a Republican. He belongs to Court Camp No. 400, Modern Woodmen of America. He takes a good deal of pride in the fact that he was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, and is happy to belong to the political party he helped to found. There are few men who are more pleasant to meet than the genial veteran, whose courage and fearlessness have saved countless lives and kept from destruction millions of dollars worth of property.

MILLER, Joseph R. (deceased).—All the soldiers of the Civil War were not killed on battle fields nor died in the hospitals that day, yet many only survived to pass away later on, but before their time, because of injuries received or disabilities contracted while serving their country. Sangamon County sent into the field as fine a lot of men as any section of Illinois, and is proud of her veterans. Too many, though, have answered to the last roll call, and their decorated graves on Memorial Day, serve to remind the present generation of the cost of the preservation of the Union. One of the men who was thus representative of the best class of soldiers and citizens this county has ever known, was the late Joseph R. Miller, formerly a resident of Williamsville.

Mr. Miller was born in Franklin County, Pa., March 3, 1828, a son of Joseph Miller, also a native of the Keystone State. Both parents of Mr. Miller died in their native State, having attained a ripe old age. Their lives were peacefully spent, and their upright characters set a good example for their children.

After attending school in Pennsylvania, Mr. Miller learned the trade of blacksmith, but feeling that he could secure larger opportunities in a newer State, he came west to Illinois. At that time everything was unsettled, and a good blacksmith found no trouble in securing employment. Eventually he settled in Williamsville, set up a shop, and operated it to the time of his death, which occurred August 30, 1893.

In May, 1864, he enlisted in the One Hundred and Thirty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for 100 days' service, and the regiment was on duty most of the time guarding rebel prisoners at Rock Island and Camp Butler until its discharge, September 4, 1865.

The maiden name of Mrs. Miller was Nancy Harris. She was born in Ohio, December 22, 1827, being a daughter of John and Rebecca (Wiley) Harris, natives of Virginia. The Harris family migrated at an early day to Ohio, where the father died, but his widow survived to die in Illinois. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller, two of whom survive: Mary, born January 6, 1859, married Edward Miller, a blacksmith, and three children were born to them; and Amule, born January 22, 1861, married Charles N. Selby, and they have three children. Mrs. Joseph R. Miller resides in the family home on Church Street, which belongs to her. Advanced in years, she still takes an interest in church matters and is a very lovable lady, and has been a kind neighbor through all her useful life. Mr. Miller was a member of the Christian Church, and took his religion with him into everyday life. He regulated his business according to the Golden Rule, and was accounted one of the best at his trade in Sangamon County. His political opinions made him a Republican, and he always voted the ticket of his party.

No history of Sangamon County would be complete without a record of Mr. Miller's life, although unfortunately he left behind so little authentic data relative to himself and his family. However, in his own life he displayed the effects of careful, Christian training, and proved that he was capable of properly. His widow and daughters treasure his memory, and he is very kindly remembered by a wide circle of friends and those with whom he was associated in business dealings. The G. A. R. had in him a faithful and devoted member and he enjoyed meeting with old associates and living over again those exciting events when "The Boys in Blue" took so important a part in preserving a nation's glory and perpetuating its existence.

MILLER, Michael Clifton, well known throughout Sangamon County, Ill., as a breeder of fine horses and mules, also conducting a lively business and assisting in the management of a farm, has lived several years in the village of Chatham, where he has erected a handsome residence, and is one of the highly respected men in his community. He was born on the line of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, south of Louisville, near Elizabethtown, Hardin County, Ky., November 12, 1838, a son of Thomas and Rhoda (Walker) Miller, both natives of that county. Thomas Miller was a son of Michael Miller, who was also born in Hardin County, where he spent his entire life. The Miller family were well known in Kentucky and among the old settlers of Hardin County.

Thomas Miller and his wife remained in their native State until 1890, then moved to Columbus, Ind., where in 1904, both passed away. Mr. Miller was a farmer by occupation and an active member of the Baptist Church, while his wife belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a quiet, home-loving man, and spent his latter years in retirement from active life, having located in Columbus when seventy-five years old, his wife then being sixty-eight years old and there she passed away in October and he in December, 1904. Eight sons and three daughters were born to them and of these eight children are now living. The oldest, Mary Bell, became the wife of Wesley Shively, and died about 1894. In Pueblo, Colo., where she was buried. She left one son, Norman, now residing in Hardin County, Ky., where another son is a large stockman and operator of a famous gold mine, being successful in all his enterprises. Of the other children of Thomas Miller and wife, Lulu married Charles Durall, a merchant residing in Springfield; William T., a large farmer living near Newkirk, Okla.; Michael Clifton, is the subject of this sketch; John C. is a retired farmer living in Williamsville, Ill.; Edward is a resident of Columbus, Ind.; Whitty and James are merchants of Columbus, Ind.; Benjamin, also of Columbus; Amule, living with her brothers in Columbus.

Michael C. Miller spent his boyhood days in Hardin County, Ky., and attended the public schools of his native State, remaining there until 1879, when he left home and went to Welf City, Kan., there engaged in mining until 1880, went to Lincoln, Neb., in the latter year and accepted a position on the new railroad being built through that section. In 1883 he returned to Sangamon County, first working by the month on a farm in Auburn Township, continuing this occupation about eight years. In 1889 he rented a farm near Cotton Hill, where he carried on farming operations successfully until 1901, when he rented a larger farm, remaining here until 1907, when, on March 25th, he purchased his present place, and embarked in the lively business and the breeding of horses and mules. Being a native of Kentucky, he has the love of fine horses born in him and his judgment on such matters is taken as authority. He had a farm of 120 acres under his supervision and later one of 290 acres, and at the time of his retirement from farming was one of the most successful renters in the county. Since embarking in his present business he has been as successful, and has built up a very satisfactory business.

Mr. Miller was united in marriage, February 7, 1850, to Miss Johanna Skees, a native of Hardin County, Ky., born April 22, 1830, a daughter of Phillips and Margaret (Pierce)
Skees, the farmer born January 12, 1834, and the latter November 27, 1838, and both died and were buried in Hardin County. Mr. Skees died February 15, 1901, and his widow April 11, 1903. Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: Philip Samuel, born in Hardin County, Ky., March 9, 1838, now operating a 200-acre farm in Ball Township, Sangamon County, married Helen Nettel, a native of Sangamon County, and they have on child, Hazel; William Thomas, born November 3, 1864, between 1910, with whose plant his son is now bookkeeper in the Caldwell State Bank of Chatham; Emery, born August 8, 1894, lives in Woodside Township; the oldest child, Lillie Dell, died in infancy.

Mr. Miller has two and three-quarters acres of land and a large and well regulated barn. Among his fine horses are a full-blooded Percheron stallion, "Mennem," a roadster, "Linton," of the old Linton stock famous in Missouri; and an Arabian stallion Jim.

Mr. Miller and his wife are good examples of the many hardy natives of Kentucky who have settled in the State of Illinois and have achieved gratifying success. Both have worked hard and are now reaping the reward of their labor. Besides his livery business, Mr. Miller assists his son Phillips in operating 200 acres of land in Ball Township, and under their able management excellent crops are obtained each year. Mr. Miller is a Democrat in politics and since locating in Chatham, has held various local offices, including that of Justice of the Peace. He also served as Highway Commissioner while a resident of Ball Township. He and his wife are devout members of the Auburn Catholic Church. In all public matters he has always stood ready to perform his full share and has the confidence of his neighbors and associates. He erected his present home at a cost of $4,000, fitting it with many modern comforts and conveniences which are not found in the ordinary country home. He owns two other fine residences and other city real estate.

MILLER, William Gibson, for many years identified with the agricultural interests of Sangamon County, Ill., is also well known in banking circles and public life, and is a revered and honored veteran of the Civil War. Mr. Miller was born in Chatham Township, Sangamon County, February 3, 1838, a son of Jacob and Lucina (Patz) Miller.

Jacob Miller was born in Kentucky, married in that State, and came to Illinois in 1824, locating in what is now Chatham Township. At the outbreak of the Black Hawk War, he enlisted to defend the homes of the white settlers against the ravages of the Indians and did valiant service. After the war he returned to his home, where he resumed farming and stockraising and became one of the leading men of his community. Jacob Miller had left his native State on account of slavery, and there is no doubt that he would have enlisted for service in the Union army during the Civil War had not his age prevented. He always taught his sons to abhor even the thought of slavery, and instilled in them the love of country that they always evidenced in their after lives. Mr. Miller was a stanch Whig in early days, and later became a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, in whose office he became acquainted with the Great Martyr. Mr. Miller passed to his final rest July 27, 1802, his wife following him to the grave November 2, 1877, both dying in the faith of the Hard Shell Baptist Church. They were the parents of thirteen children, as follows: three who died in infancy; William Gibson; James F., living with his son near Springfield; Francis Marlon, farming in Curran Township; Eliza, who married John Greenwood, both being now deceased; Emily, the second wife of John Greenwood, deceased; Enulea, who married John Foster, both deceased; Matilda, who married David E. McGinnis; Jasper D.; Robert; Pernelsia; and Sarah, who married William Scott, both being deceased.

William Gibson Miller was reared on the farm in Chatham Township and attended the subscription schools of his time, offering upon his duties on the home farm as soon as he was tall enough to reach the plow handles. He remained on the home farm until 1850, when he was married to Nancy Baker, who was born in Loami Township, the daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Robertson) Baker, pioneer farming people of Sangamon County who are now deceased. After his marriage, Mr. Miller located in Loami Township, where he took possession of sixty-three acres of prairie land. Mr. Miller had been raised in the timber and, as the year 1850 was a very wet one and his crops failed, he became discouraged and finally returned to the place of his birth to take charge of the home farm of his father, who was becoming old and feeble. Here he remained until August 9, 1802, when the patriotic speeches, the waving of the flag and the rattle of drums brought vivdly before him all of the teachings of his father, and so enthused him that he offered his services and was accepted as a member of Company I, Seventy-third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being mustered in at Camp Butler. In a few days the regiment was ordered to the front, direct to Louisville, Ky., and thence to Covington. On October 8, 1862, the regiment participated in the battle of Perryville; on December 21, came the battle of Stone River; on September 19 and 20, 1863, Chickamauga; Missionary Ridge November 24 and 25, and Rocky Face May 9, 1864. Between all these great struggles there had been battles of minor importance, skirmishes and marches, in which Mr. Miller had served faithfully with his comrades, and at Chickamauga he received a wound in the head. He declined admission to the hospital after this wound, but at Mis-
MILLIGAN, Clarence Wilbur, M. D.—During the past decade there have been so many changes and discoveries in medicine and surgery that the physician and surgeon of today faces an entirely different situation than did his predecessors when they commenced practice. Even the courses, by means of which the present physician fits himself for his life work are entirely different and much more exacting, and when he enters upon his practice he has already an experience which took the older physician years to acquire. Springfield is the home of some of the representative medical men of the day, and one who has already made himself felt as a careful, conscientious and skilled practitioner is Dr. Clarence Wilbur Milligan, whose office and residence is at 724 East Capital Avenue.

Dr. Milligan was born at Edinburg, Ill., December 29, 1885, a son of George W. and Eliza M. (Firey) Milligan. He attended the public school of Edinburg, Ill., where his parents resided, including the high school, and when he decided upon a medical career, entered the medical department of the St. Louis University, from which he graduated in May, 1908. In June of that year he located at Springfield, as an intern at St. John's Hospital, where he remained one year, then began the general practice of his profession. He belongs to the regular school of medicine, and although as yet he has not specialized, he is much interested in several diseases, which he is carefully studying. He is a member of the Sangamon County Medical Society, the Illinois State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and also belongs to the Chamber of Commerce of Springfield, fraternally is connected with the Masonic Order and the Knights of Pythias, and in religious faith is a Methodist.

On November 17, 1900, Dr. Milligan married Miss Katherine W. Becker, their union taking place at Springfield. He belongs to the younger generation of medical men, not only because of his youth, but also on account of his training, and is regarded as one of the most reliable, as well as skilled physicians and surgeons of Sangamon County.

MILLS, Charles Francis, editor. Springfield, Ill., was born in Montrose, Pa., May 29, 1843, a son of Bartlet Hinds and Della (Halsey) Mills, was educated at Shurtleff College, Alton, Ill., and entered the Union Army during his Senior year before graduation, as a private in Company C, One Hundred and Twenty-Fourth Illinois Volunteers, but in 1863 was promoted to Hospital Steward, U. S. A., which office he held until the end of the war. After the war he became a student in Bryant & Stratton Commercial College, Chicago, also studied medicine (allopathic) and practiced in the army to a limited extent. May 26, 1869, he was married near the city of Springfield, to Miss Mary Elizabeth Bennett (now deceased). He later became a farmer and breeder of improved stock, and has been 'editor and publisher of "The Farm Home," an agricultural weekly, at Springfield, since 1890. He has also been prominently identified with agricultural affairs, having served as Secretary of the Sangamon County Fair; Chief Clerk, Assistant Secretary and Secretary of the Illinois State Fair; Secretary of the American Live Stock Association and the American Fat Stock Show; Secretary of the Illinois Department of Agriculture; chief clerk for the Secretary of the Live Stock Show, Columbian Exposition, Chicago, 1893; Secretary for Chief, Department of the Live Stock Universal Exposition at St. Louis, 1904; Secretary and President of the American Berkshire Association; Secretary of the American Clydesdale Association; President of the American Ancestral Association; Secretary of the American Association; one of the Live-Stock Herd-Book Secretaries; member of the American Breeders' Association, the American Short Horn Association, and the American Shire Horse Association; Secretary of the American Berkshire Congress, etc. Mr. Mills drafted and secured the passage of the bill creating the Illinois Farmers' Institute and was State Secretary of same for several year; and was organizer and Secretary of the Commission of the Illinois Farmers' Hall of Fame. He has served in the Illinois National Guard, as Captain and Adjutant Fifth Infantry, Major and Quartermaster of the Second Brigade, Colonel and Assistant Adjutant General. His religious relations are with the Presbyterian church, and in politics he is a Republican. As editor he has been associated with the publication of the Year Books of the American Clydesdale Association (8 vols.), the American Berkshire Association (10 vols.), Illinois Department of Agriculture (4 vols.), Reports of other societies and of Live Stock Shows of World's Fairs (1893 and 1904). His home is at 322 South Second Street, and his office at 508-510 East Monroe Street, Springfield, Ill. From this record it will be seen that there are few men who have been as busy as has been Col. Mills.

MINER, Lewis Henry, editor of the Illinois State Journal, Springfield, Ill., was born in that city January 31, 1820, a son of Orlin Henry and Ellen Maria (Smith) Miner, the former a native of Vermont. born May 13, 1825. After spending some sixteen years in the State of Ohio, in 1851 Orlin H. Miner came to the city of Chicago and there engaged in the watchmaking business, later engaging in the same business in the City of Springfield. In 1857 after the election of Jesse K. Dubois as State Auditor on the first Republican State ticket, Mr. Miner was appointed Chief Clerk in the Auditor's office, a position which he retained until December, 1864, when on the retirement of Mr. Dubois by resignation, he succeeded to the office of Auditor to which he had been elected at the November election, thus serving more than a full term. After retirement from office, Mr. Orlin H. Miner became a stockholder and Director of the Springfield Iron Company, but died May 27, 1880. His widow still survives and is a resident of Springfield.

Lewis H. Miner received his early mental training in the Springfield city schools, following the Civil War, and naturally imbibed the patriotic principles of the Republican party which had inspired his father, as a fellow citizen of Abraham Lincoln, during the most dramatic period of the Nation's history. Mr. Miner was appointed postmaster of Springfield, July 1, 1869, by President McKinley, and served one term.

On August 8, 1890, Mr. Miner married Georgia May Watson, a daughter of Charles F. and Samantha A. Watson, and they have had three children, two sons and one daughter, namely: Orlin Watson Miner, deceased, Theron Bushnell Miner and Alice Stokes Miner, the two last named still living.

MINER, Smith.—Pawnee is the home of a number of men who have retired from the duties which once engaged them, and who are enjoying a rest well-earned by their labors of the past. One of these is Smith Miner, born in Jersey County, March 2, 1849, a son of Smith and Patty Miner, the former born in Virginia. The parents married in that State, moving to Jersey County in 1820, and there the father died. In 1849. Later, the mother married and moved to Morgan County, Ill., where she died, in June, 1862. There were three children in the Miner family, one dying in infancy, and the others being: Benjamin, born in Jersey County, died in Memphis, Tenn., while in the army, and Smith. There were no children by the second marriage of the mother. Both the Miner and Davis families were old ones in Virginia, the former originating in Germany.

When he was only twelve years old, Smith Miner left home, finding employment with various farmers in Sangamon County, and attending the Hopewell school. In 1870 he rented a farm, continuing to operate it for four years, following which he was engaged in various lines of work until 1890, when he entered the employ of the Pawnee Railroad Company at Pawnee, continuing thus for fifteen years, when in 1905 he retired. In national affairs he votes the straight Democratic ticket, but in local matters supports the man best fitted for the office. While living in Madison County, he served six consecutive years as Collector, and has held the same office for two terms in Pawnee. For thirty-five years he has been a member of the I. O. O. F. Mrs. Miner is a Methodist, while Mr. Miner carries out the Golden Rule in his dealings with his fellow men.

The marriage of Mr. Miner occurred in Madison County, November 28, 1830, to Clara C. Jones, born in that county, May 20, 1849, a daughter of Martin and Elizabeth Jones. Both were natives of Madison County and there died. There were seven children born to the first marriage of Mr. Jones: Charles, Marinda, and Mrs. Miner, living; Norcross, Palestine and Margaret, deceased, and one who died in infancy. Later he married Eliza Kirkendall, but she bore him no children. The Jones family settled in Madison County, Ill., at an early date, and participated in the stirring events of that day. When a girl, Mrs. Jones' grandmother started home with a neighbor girl to pay a visit, but changed her mind and came back. The other, going on her way, was killed by the Indians. He was her mother, and this would have been the fate of Mrs. Jones' grandmother, had she not altered her plans.

Mr. and Mrs. Miner have had three children: Daisy, born in Sangamon County, October 25, 1871, married F. M. Masters, resides in Fort Smith, Ark., three children—Glenn, Clara and Morrell; Tele K., born in Madison County, May 30, 1876, is in the employ of the Clayton Dry Goods store and lives at home; and Benjamin H., born in Madison County, April 3, 1886, lives at home, being in the employ of the Chicago & Great Western Railroad Company as a surveyor.

During the many years he has been a resident of Pawnee, Mr. Miner has made many friends, and is numbered among the most esteemed of its citizens, and one who can always be depended upon to give public-spirited support to all measures looking toward securing good government.

MITCHELL, John F., a veteran of the Civil War and for many years foreman in the rolling mills at Springfield, has lived retired for the past eight years. He occupies the comfortable home at 1505 North Eighth Street which was built thirty-eight years ago, and besides this property owns various city lots. He was born near Youngstown, Westmoreland County, Pa., February 2, 1845, son of John and Eliza Mitchell. The father was born in Pennsylvania, in 1819, and was a son of Rev. Mitchell, who came to America from Ireland and married a lady of German extraction. After the death of his parents George Mitchell accompanied his brother James to Westmoreland County and there worked at his trade of blacksmith, which he had previously learned. He also learned the trade of tanner, but did not follow that to any extent. He moved to Johnstown, Pa., and there for some years followed his trade, continuing same for a few years after his location in Springfield in 1873. Later he worked at the rolling mill under the supervision of his son John F., then a foreman. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was a Democrat, and while living in his native State held various county offices. He died in 1897 in Springfield, where his wife also passed away. Their children were as follows: Isabelle died at the age of twenty-four years; John F.; Ellen, Mrs. August Andre, of Pennsylvania; Thomas, of Madison, Ill.; Mary Ann, wife of John Barron, of Springfield; Sue, Mrs. Harry Price, of Colorado; George, of Chicago; Lou, Mrs. Robert Williams, of Colorado; James, of Springfield; Joseph, in the West; Phronia, Mrs. Seymour, of Los Angeles, Calif.

After receiving his education in the schools of Johnstown, Pa., John E. Mitchell learned the trade of blacksmith with his father, and was employed in this capacity by the Cambria Iron Works, remaining in their employ several years. On August 12, 1862, he enlisted at Harrisburg as a private in Company B, One Hundred Thirty-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Butler and Col. Speelman. The regiment was assigned to the Fifth Army Corps and participated in the Battles of Antietam, South Mountain, Fredericksburg, and minor engagements, being mustered out at Harrisburg at the expiration of nine months, in 1863. Mr. Mitchell returned home and for a few months resumed his former occupation, then entered the employ of the Government in the rolling mills at Chattanooga, where he remained until the close of the war. He went to Pittsburg, worked two years at his trade, and there in 1867 married Miss Margaret Elizabeth Crumb, who was born in Richland County, Ohio, February 8, 1849, daughter of Nicholas Crumb. Her mother died when she was an infant and she was reared by her grandparents, David and Mary (Catts) Early, farmers of Columbiana County, Ohio. David Early was a soldier in the War of 1812, and his wife, who died as the result of a severe fall, at the age of ninety-three years, was well and strong up to that time.

After his marriage Mr. Mitchell worked five years in Baltimore and one year in St. Louis, then came to Springfield and soon found employment in the rolling mills, where he was soon promoted to the position of foreman. He kept this position for a period of twenty years, and at the time of retiring from active life in 1903 was one of the most trusted employees of the company. He was always most carefully and painstakingly in the discharge of his duties and the work which was done in his department was of the best. He is a life-long Democrat and is a member of Stephenson Post G. A. R. While not a member of any religious organization, he frequently attends the Third Presbyterian Church, to which his wife belongs, and is a generous supporter in its good cause.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Mitchell and wife: Frank died at the age of two years; George L., at home; John Elmier, also at home; Walter R., of Springfield; Arthur H., Eugene, Leroy, of Springfield; Ralph, of Los Angeles, Calif. Mr. Mitchell's successful career was largely directed by enterprising men, who understand their work in all its details. A prosperous merchant of Springfield, who conducted a large trade, Edward Grant Mitts, of No. 1128 South First Street, was born in Dawson, Ill., April 12, 1870, a son of John and Nancy Ellen (Myers) Mitts, the former born in Richmond, Va., June 26, 1834, and the latter in Chillicothe, Ohio, August 15, 1840. The father (a farmer by occupation) was personally acquainted with John Brown, of Harper's Ferry fame, and took part in the notable incidents of that period. He was one of the early settlers in Sangamon County and held many offices in his community.

After attending local schools Edward Grant Mitts went to Illinois College at Jacksonville. He grew up on a farm, learning habits of thrift and economy which were to assist him materially later in life. Upon leaving college he entered the government service as railroad mail clerk, and later began manufacturing stock and poultry food. Still later he took up general publicity and commission advertising. He eventually established himself in his present business and is now handling a general line of merchandise.

Mr. Mitts is a Methodist and has always been a steadfast Republican. When he was twenty-one years old he joined the Masonic fraternity and he has taken the degrees up to and including the Thirty-second. Always true and loyal, Mr. Mitts believes that true friendship is one of the most valuable things on earth. Benevolent, although not ostentatiously so, the recipient of his generosity often does not know the donor of the gift, Mr. Mitts is a man whose friends are many, and who is rightly numbered among the solid citizens of the Capital City.

MORRIS, Anthony.—The farming interests of Sangamon County are in the hands of men who have made the business of farming a life study, and to this fact may be credited, to a large degree, the flourishing conditions to be found there. Anthony Mohr, who, with his sister Francisca, lives on his excellent tract of eighty-seven acres of land on Sections 14 and 15, Woodside Township, is one of the scientific agriculturists of Sangamon County. He was born in this township, December 30, 1861, a son of William A. Sr. and Maria Ann (Bultman) Mohr.

William A. Mohr, Sr. was born in Wevelsburgh, Westphalia, Germany, in which place both his parents spent their entire lives, and (as is the custom in that country) he served his time, two years and seven months, as a soldier in the Prussian Army. After receiving his honorable discharge in 1855, he emigrated to America, and came by way of New Orleans to St. Louis, Mo., and thence to Springfield, Ill. He located near the village of Pleasant Plains and married Elisabeth Hines, of Nassau, Germany. To them were born two sons: one, born August 2, 1857, died September 7, 1857, and the other, Frederick, born January 11, 1859, died February 15, 1859. The mother of these children died on March 14, 1859. All were buried near Springfield, in what was formerly known as the Hutchinson Cemetery. Mr. Mohr then left for St. Louis, Mo., where he soon formed the acquaintance of Miss Maria Ann Buittman, whom he married at Springfield, Ill., in the former St. John's Catholic Church, then located on East Adams Street, by the Rev. J. Jansen. He immediately found employment with Washington Iles Sr., by the mouth, and continued four years in that position, until he accumulated enough to purchase a five-acre tract from his employer, on South Eleventh Street, between Laurel and Ash, which was sold when he settled on Sections 14 and 15 in Woodside Township, the present home of his son and daughter, Anthony Mohr and Franceska Iles. He then engaged in agricultural pursuits and spent the remainder of his life on his farm, where his death occurred November 17, 1887.

Mr. Mohr was highly esteemed by all who knew him as a diligent and upright man. He was a Democrat in political views and a Catholic at heart, and remained a faithful member of the Church until his death, when he was anointed by the last rites of the Catholic Church. His wife, Maria Ann (Buittman) Mohr, was born in October, 1832, in Langen, Osnabruck, Hanover, Germany, and came to the United States in 1856, settling at St. Louis. She received her education at the St. Benedict Parish School, in Germany. She was a faithful worker all her life and possessed all the qualities of a good mother that anyone could have, her death occurring on the same premises as the death of her husband, on March 10, 1908. To Mr. and Mrs. Mohr the following children were born: Anna Katherine, who passed her school-days at SS. Peter and Paul's School, corner Sixth and Reynolds Streets, Springfield, and died in 1881 on the home farm; Lewis died in Sangamon County at the age of two years; Anthony, whose name stands at the head of this sketch; Mary Caroline, who married Nc Krueger, and agriculturist and carpenter of Sangamon County, and has a family of nine children; Regina, who married S. J. Ridder, of Morgan County, Ill., and they have five children; Francisca, who married David Iles, of Sangamon County, and has one child, Ruth, born in 1892; Ludowika, who married, June 1, 1891, in Springfield, Henry Ridder, of Morgan County; and William J., who married Mary Williams, of Sangamon County, and they have five children.

Anthony Mohr secured his education in SS. Peter and Paul's Catholic School, in Springfield, and was brought up to work on the farm, by his parents, utilizing his spare time to add to his education by study, and daily gaining knowledge and experience in the line of farming. He remained at home with his parents, assisting his father in cultivating the home farm, and after the latter's death took charge of the property, of which he and his sister, together, own eighty-seven acres. Mr. Mohr has a well-developed piece of land, which yields good crops, and he has improved it with handsome, substantial buildings, and raises full-blooded stock. He is recognized as an authority on scientific farming, and is looked upon as one of the township's intelligent and enterprising agriculturists.

Mr. Mohr has never married. He is a Democrat in political views, but has never cared for public office. Reared in the faith of the Catholic Church, he has remained a faithful member of that denomination, and can always be depended upon to support any movement for the church or of a charitable nature. He has travelled but little, and during the many years he has lived in the township, he has seen some wonderful changes take place. A pleasing conversationalist and congenial companion, he has made many friends, and is popular throughout his township.

MONTGOMERY, James Frederick, engaged in a general horse-shoeing business at No. 115 South Seventh Street, Springfield, is one of the live, progressive men of the city, and one who commands the respect of his customers by reason of the quality of his work and the honesty of his methods. Mr. Montgomery was born February 10, 1874, in Orange County, Ind., being a son of Robert M. and Mary (Morgan) Montgomery. The father was born near Louisville, Ky., but later moved to Orange County, Ind., where he bought 160 acres of land, operating it until his death, which occurred when he was seventy years old. His wife died on the farm in 1895. There were three children in their family: James F., Florence, now Mrs. Robert Grady, of Canada; and Hattie, of Scott County, Ill., who married Thomas Maguire.

Mr. Montgomery's educational advantages were limited, and after he was fourteen years old he earned his own living. His first work netted him nine dollars a month, and was secured in Orange County, but three months later he came to Carrolton, Ill., where he worked on a farm until sixteen years old. At this time he began learning the trade of horse-shoeing with William Sunderland, at Kane, Ill., remaining with him for three years, and for his work receiving two dollars per week and his board. After he had learned his trade Mr. Montgomery worked at it in Kansas City, Decatur, and other points. He finally started business on his own account, in Illinois, and soon after spent six years at Alsey, Ill., and ten years at Argenta, then came to Springfield to open his present establishment, since which time he has built up a large trade which extends over a wide territory.

Mr. Montgomery was married at Roodhouse, Ill., in 1895, to Emma Darling, of Sand Prairie. Two children were born of this marriage, Carles and Hal. Mr. Montgomery was married a second time, at Argentine, Ill., in September, 1901, to Miss Laura Delih, of that town, daughter of Jerry and Malinda (Slagle) Delih. No issue. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery are consistent members of the Methodist Church and in politics he is a Republican. Fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias and member of the Court of Honor. While not active in public affairs he is interested in securing good government and in protecting the interests of the people. He is industrious and upright, and has worked very hard all his life being certainly a self-made man.

MOORE, Samuel.—Mining and mines represent such a large share of the interests of Sangamon County, that no review of it would be complete without the names of some of the men identified with this vast industry. An experienced mining man is Samuel Moore, manager of the Springfield Co-Operative Mine, who is living at No. 1619 North Eighth Street, Springfield. He was born in St. Clair, three miles from Pottsville, Schuylkill County, Pa., June 17, 1854, the fourth son of John and Grace (Lamb) Moore, natives of Durham County, England, the former born August 14, 1810, and the latter in 1816.

John Moore started to work in the mines in his native county when very young, was there married to Grace Lamb, the family coming to the United States in 1856 and settling in Schuylkill County, Pa., but a few years later removing to Mahoney City, where Mr. Moore helped to open up the mines of the St. Clair Valley. At that time there were no railroads, but after a railroad had been constructed between that point and Port Carbon, the miners loaded their cars and sent them to the canal boats, where the product was disposed of. Mr. Moore rose to be a mine boss, a coal contractor and the owner of a small mine, and during his later years made a trip to Iowa and Illinois, mining in those States for a short time. His death occurred in 1897, he having survived his wife some twenty years. Both were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Their children were: Thomas, a member of the Second Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry during the Civil War, died at the age of fifty-two years; Frank, deceased; John, in Colorado; John; and Mary, George and William, deceased.

Samuel Moore had little chance to secure an education, as the Civil War had taken so many men away that teachers were hard to secure, and, as a consequence, he is self-educated. At the age of nine years he went to work picking slate at the mines, and at the age of twelve years began working inside the mines, pumping air to the men. He then became a mule driver, later a laborer, and finally a full-fledged miner. In February, 1876, he came to Springfield and went to work in the old North Mine, and after one year there began traveling through different States, but in 1880 again came to Springfield, where he has since resided. In 1885 he took the contract for sinking the Capitol Mine, and in 1892 sunk a mine at Selbytown. He sunk the mine for the Junction Coal Company, and opened up the big Jones and Adams mines near the Fair Grounds. At this work he is an expert, but has also done much mine repair work.

In September, 1905, he accepted his present position as Manager of the Springfield Co-Operative Mine.

Mr. Moore was married in Springfield, September 7, 1882, to Miss Rebecca Roy, of Springfield, daughter of John Roy, and to this union children have been born as follows: Grace, William R., Elsie, Elmer, twins of Elsie, Arthur, John, Samuel, Anue, George, Clifford and Walter. Mr. Moore is a Presbyterian in his religious belief. He is a staunch Republican in politics and his fraternal connection is with the Knights of Pythias.

MOORE, William Eaton (deceased).—One of the leading factors of success among the farmers of Sangamon County is their growing interest in high-grade stock. Probably no man in the region made a wider reputation for his fine strain of horses than William Eaton Moore, whose farm, now within the city limits of Springfield, was one of the finest stocked in the Mississippi Valley. Mr. Moore was an extensive importer of the finest breeds, making a specialty of the German coach horse. He made semi-annual trips to Germany for the purpose of purchasing the finest grade to be found in European markets. His horses were sold throughout the United States at high prices, averaging about twenty-five hundred dollars each. Mr. Moore became known among breeders and horse dealers throughout the country, both as an importer and as a dealer, and achieved the highest reputation for enterprise and business integrity, as well as ability in his line of operation. He was successful to a large degree, and had one of the finest suburban homes of Springfield, where he and his wife delighted in entertaining their many friends.

Mr. Moore was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, February 27, 1848, a son of W. H. and Anna Jane (Eaton) Moore, the former a book publisher. The family came to Illinois in 1876. William E. Moore attended high school in Cincinnati and later took a course in Sewickley (Pa.) College. After coming west he located in Sangamon County, where he secured a farm adjoining the city of Springfield, and now within its corporate limits.

Mr. Moore was married in Cincinnati, Ohio, November 10, 1870, to Miss Mary B. McGeehin, a native of that city, and they had five children, three of whom are living: Gertrude, Mrs. DeWitt Smith, of Springfield; Willa, at home; and Jeanette, the wife of J. Russell Yates, of Springfield. The family are prominent in social and other circles, and have the esteem and regard of their friends and acquaintances, being well known in the city and vicinity, their home for so many years. Mr. Moore departed this life, July 15, 1907.

MORSTATTER, George.—Ever since its incorporation Sangamon County has been noted for its phenomenal development, due not only to the fertility of the land, but to the enterprise and public-spirit of its citizens. Especially has this growth and development been apparent in the last few years, during which it has taken its place in the front rank of Illinois counties. One who has done his share in bringing about such a condition of affairs is George Morstatter, engaged in agricultural pursuits on Section 26, Iliopolis Township, where he has an excellent property. Mr. Morstatter is a native of Germany, born in Bavaria, February 28, 1836, a son of Jacob and Magdaline Morstatter, natives of the Fatherland. Jacob Morstatter, who was a fruit grower in his native country, came to America at an early date and settled in New Haven, Conn., where he conducted a vine garden until his death. He had served in the German army during the Franco-Prussian War. Of his family of six sons and four daughters George is the only survivor.

Mr. Morstatter was educated in Germany and assisted his father until coming to America in 1856, and after landing in New York went to New Haven, Conn., where he secured employment in a factory. One year later, however, he came west to Decatur, Ill., and followed gardening for seven years, eventually moving to Iliopolis Township and purchasing his present fine farm of 120 acres. He has been successful in his agricultural pursuits, and has also done his duty as a citizen, serving as Road Commissioner in Macon County for several terms. In political matters he is a Democrat. There are twenty grandchildren in the family.

MORTIMER, C. F., was born June 23, 1875, and graduated from Bethany College, of Bethany, W. Va., in the Class of 1896. He received his legal education in the law office of Conkling & Grout, in Springfield, Ill., entering that office in the winter of 1897 and remaining there about three years, being admitted to the Bar in 1900. Mr. Mortimer is a Republican in politics and was elected City Attorney in the spring of 1901. He has held no other political office. During the Spanish-American War, he was a private in Troop H, First Illinois Cavalry, Volunteers. He is a member of a number of fraternal and social organizations, including the Modern Woodmen, Court of Honor, Elks, Knights of Pythias and Masons, being a Shriner and a member of Medina Temple, Chicago, and belongs to the Sangamo Club and resides on West Edwards Street.

Mr. Mortimer was married February 7, 1904, to Frances F. Fawcett, a daughter of Andrew L. Fawcett, a highly respected citizen of many years' residence in Springfield. Both Mr. and MORTON, Salmon H.—Strength of purpose, success in business ventures, faithfulness to duty, all aid a man in securing material prosperity and winning the respect and confidence of those with whom he is brought in contact. One of the solid men of Springfield is Salmon H. Morton, residing at No. 101 East Madison Street. He was born in Bureau County, Ill., May 9, 1851, a son of Salamon and Zebiah H. Morton. The parents were born in New York, in 1811 and 1809, respectively. They came to Illinois in 1850, settling in Bureau County. The father died when about seventy-eight years old, the mother living to be eighty-three. They both died in Pierce City, Mo., to which they had moved. Mr. Morton has one brother who lives in Oklahoma, and a sister, Mrs. Vau Buren, living in Missouri. Mr. Morton left home when seventeen years old, and learned the broom making trade, worked at it for fifteen years, and is still engaged in that line.

Having made a study of government and social conditions, Mr. Morton has come to the conclusion that the remedy for existing ills lies in Socialism, and so is a strong supporter of the Socialist party. He realizes that the people have to be educated to an appreciation of the doctrines he holds, and does all he can to present convincing proofs of what he believes. As he is earnest and honest in his convictions, he never lacks for an audience. In religious faith he is independent but attends the Christian Church. He is unmarried.

MOYER, Charles E.—It is to the solid, substantial citizens of any community that we must look for the strength of that section, rather than to the brilliant operators, who, while occasionally achieving a large measure of success, is often liable to overstep his mark and end his career with a failure that envelops not only himself but others and tends to the detriment of his locality. Charles E. Moyer, an agriculturist of Pleasant Plains, may be depended upon to be a support to his community and a leader in any movement that will assist its advancement, one of the men who do right because it is right, and for no other reason. He was born in Gardner Township, January 16, 1835, a son of Charles and Mahala (Cruzan) Moyer.

The grandfather of Mr. Moyer was one of the pioneers of Sangamon County, and at an early day opened and conducted a tavern on the State Road, which is now known as the Bradford, later entering land which he operated until the time of his death. His trade was that of a millwright and, in addition to his farming operations, he conducted several mills and warehouses. Charles Moyer, the father of Charles E., was born in Pennsylvania in 1802, and was reared on a farm in Lehigh County, but after coming to Illinois, was married in Gardner Township, where he made his home until 1884, when he sold his farm there to purchase one in Salisbury Township, this being his place of residence at the time of his death. He and his wife were the parents of nine children: William H., who died in Pleasant Plains in April, 1909; Charles E.; Anna May, wife of James Jones, a grocer of Peters burg, Menard County; George, a resident of Williamsville; John, a brick-mason, who died in October, 1906; a daughter who died in infancy; Ella, the wife of James Merry, a farmer near Williamsville; Ada, the wife of George McKinzie, a resident of Williamsville, with whom Mr. Moyer's mother makes her home; and Dalsy, who died in young womanhood in 1900.

Mr. Moyer was reared on the home farm and received his education in the district schools. At an early age he had to take charge of the home farm, and remained in charge until he was twenty-six years of age, when one of his brothers took up the work where he left off. On August 12, 1861, he was married to Lucy I. Crawford, who was born in Salisbury Township, November 2, 1843, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Box) Crawford, both natives of Kentucky. The Crawford family came from Kentucky to Illinois in 1855, and about 1857 removed to Missouri, where Mr. Crawford died in 1879, when his widow came back to Sangamon County, and here the remaining days of her life were spent, her death occurring March 6, 1899. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Crawford, namely: a child who died in infancy; Campbell W., a resident of Chatham, Ill.; Margaret A., wife of Alpha A. Miller, a farmer in Gardner Township; Catherine E., wife of Hosen Baker, a resident of Spaulding, Ill.; Mary E., wife of Marion Miller, a farmer of Salisbury Township; Amaretta, the wife of Christian Knudsen, a farmer of Island Grove Township; Mrs. Moyer; and James Madison, a resident of Jacksonville, Ill.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Moyer rented land in Gardner Township, where they remained until 1894, at which time they rented land in Montgomery County, and Mr. Moyer operated 320 acres there until 1908. In that year he took charge of the Hugh Gardner farm of 200 acres, and continued to operate this until 1902, when he purchased a run-down eighty-two acre farm in Gardner Township, which he developed into one of the best properties in the township. Having purchased the property for $82.50 per acre, in 1906 he sold for $125.00 per acre and purchased a fifteen acre tract within the corporation limits of Pleasant Plains, and here he has devoted his attention to the breeding of pure Duroc hogs and Orpington chickens, of which latter he has now forty-one. Mr. Moyer is a self-made man, having started life empty-handed and built up his present prosperous condition through his own ability. Both he and his wife are members of the Christian Church, in which he is a Deacon and his wife a member of the Missionary Society. He was a Republican in politics and a staunch adherent of temperance, while his fraternal connection is with the Pleasant Plains - Lodge of Odd Fellows. Mr. and Mrs. Moyer had one child who died in infancy, but on October 13, 1910, they adopted a child, Bernice.

MUeller, Gerhard Anton.—The German-American element is one of the best this country knows. Germans are industrious, thrifty and loyal, and when they come here they bring with them many customs we would do well to follow. Few are poor and many Germans help in supporting institutions to care for destitute persons of other nationalities. A leading business man of Springfield who demonstrates in his everyday life his sound principles and reliable judgment, is Gerhard Anton Mueller. He was born at Leeb Ostfriesland, Germany, April 5, 1849, a son of Hane and Catherine (Loop) Mueller. The father was a manufacturer of furniture, and carried on that line of business all his life, which ended while he was on a visit to his son, in 1872. His remains are interred in beautiful Oak Ridge Cemetery, Springfield.

Mr. Mueller was educated in his native land, and when he finished school came to the United States, locating at Indianapolis. He remained there a short time and when he was seventeen years old came to Springfield. This was in 1868, and since then this city has been his home. After holding several positions as bookkeeper, at which he excelled, Mueller embarked in business for himself, and has been eminently successful in his endeavors.

In 1873 Mr. Mueller was married, in Toledo, Ohio, to Regina Huher, daughter of William and Elisabeth Huher. Her father was a merchant of Westphalia, Osage County, Mo. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Mueller, of whom the following are living: George Adolph; Elise Regina; Eda; Fred; William and Marguerite.

One son, George A. Mueller, is in business with his father. The family reside in their pleasant home on the southeast corner of Seventh and Reynolds Streets.

Mr. Mueller is a man of pleasing manner, and his genial, kindly nature wins for him hosts of friends. He can always he depended upon to give his support to any measure that is calculated to be of benefit to his community, and his charities are numerous.

MUeller, Hans Edward.—The younger generation of Springfield's business men are proving that they are alive, active and progressive, in favor of improvements and desirons of developing the Capital City to its fullest extent. Among these representative citizens is Hans Edward Mueller, who was born in Springfield, November 27, 1874, a son of the late lamented Henry E. Mueller and his wife, Genevieve (Kun) Mueller. Henry E. Mueller was born in Germany in June, 1844, and came to America in 1863, locating first in Indianapolis, where he remained until his removal to Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1867 he came to Springfield, where the remainder of his life was spent. He worked for some time as manager for Robert Rudolph, and later established a business of his own. He operated under the firm name of H. E. Mueller & Company, first at the corner of Sixth and Jefferson Streets, and several years later, a short time before his death, purchased property and located his business at 712 Adams Street, between Seventh and Eighth. He became known as one of the leading business men of Springfield and had a high standing in various circles. He enjoyed to a large degree the companionship and confidence of his family and immediate friends, being a man beloved by many for his kindly disposition and upright character, and his charities were so large that no one but himself knew of their extent. Soon after coming to the city he purchased his beautiful residence, which became known as "Maplawn," on Douglas Avenue. In April, 1868, he married Miss Genevieve Kun, and the following twelve children were born of this marriage: Mrs. Kate Jones of Springfield; Hans Edward Mueller, formerly of Topeka, but now of Spring- field; Mrs. Jennie Smith, of Indianapolis, Ind.; Mrs. Clara McKinnie, of Springfield; Mrs. Stella Westerberger, of Springfield; Mrs. Anna Eisbeck, of Terre Haute; Herman, Paul and Kurt, all of Springfield; the Misses Hilda and Mayne Mueller of Springfield and Robert, of San Francisco, Cal.

Henry E. Mueller passed away at his home March 11, 1905. He had been ill for some time and suffered a paralytic stroke the day before his death. He was one of the best known men in the city and owned large real estate interests there, besides his business and mining interests in the west. He was a man who readily made friends and retained their respect and esteem.

Hans E. Mueller, third child of his parents, was educated in the public schools of his native city and at early age entered his father's business, of which he took charge at the latter's death. He has also been interested in general contracting and pursued that line of business for some time at Toledo, Ohio. While in that city he served two years as Sergeant in the Ohio State Volunteers.

On October 10, 1906, occurred the marriage of Mr. Mueller and Miss Mary Alice Green- halgh, daughter of James and Mary Greenhalgh, of Chicago. Mrs. Greenhalgh resides with Mr. Mueller, but the father is deceased. He was for twenty-seven years a mechanic for the Wahash Company and later with the Illinois Central Railroad Company for ten years prior to his death, and was one of the road's trusted employees. One son, James Edward, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Mueller, July 10, 1907. Mr. Mueller is a Republican and, while not connected with any church, is Protestant in relig-
MULLIGAN, William Thomas, a prosperous farmer and stock-raiser on Section 8, Island Grove Township, Sangamon County, was born at Sinclair, Morgan County, Ill., September 27, 1867, a son of Samuel and Nancy C. (McConnel) Mulligan, the former a native of County Fermanagh, Ireland, born June 25, 1826, and the latter born in Ralls County, Mo., March 8, 1833. He came to America at the age of twelve years, then beginning life on his own account. He was a son of well-to-do parents, but having heard of the advantages offered to young men in the New World, left home in 1858, landing alone in the city of New York. He came west and began work on a farm band in Morgan County, Ill., and finally purchased eighty acres of land on his own account, near Sinclair. He erected a log cabin and otherwise improved his land and continued at odd times to work by the day or month, and thus was able to provide for his immediate wants while developing his farm. He was thus engaged when the war broke out, and he was one of the early volunteers, in 1861 becoming a member of Company I Tenth Illinois Infantry. He went to the front with his regiment and served for some time under General Thomas, for whom he named his first-born, the subject of this sketch. Mr. Mulligan took part in many long marches and heavy engagements, but never shirked his duty and proved a brave, faithful soldier. He accompanied General Sherman on the "March to the Sea." At the end of the three years for which he had enlisted he re-enlisted and served until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged.

After the close of the war Samuel Mulligan returned to Morgan County, Ill., and continued the improvement of his land, which occupation he had left to go to the defense of the cause he considered right. He was married, January 2, 1867, to Mrs. Nancy C. Craig, and they located on his farm, where they established a good home for themselves and their children. His health was much impaired from his hard service in the army and he had to content himself with such achievements as he could manage in the work of improving his farm, but accomplished his cherished purpose of becoming a land owner in his adopted country. Death claimed him October 14, 1872, and he now rests in the cemetery near Sinclair. He was a devout and faithful member of the Methodist Church and always ready to perform his part in the support of church work. He was a Republican after the organization of that party, and was honored and respected as a man of honor and integrity. He was a great friend and admirer of General Thomas, known by his familiar as "Pap Thomas." Two children were born to Samuel and Nancy Mulligan: William Thomas, of this sketch, and Sarah, who married Rev. W. M. Hailey, of Barry, Ill., editor of the "Barry Record," and they have four sons and one daughter—Howard William, Arthur Bowman, Foster, Margaret Lucile and Cordell Stephen. Mrs. Nancy Mulligan died August 3, 1905, and is buried at Concord, Ill. She was a devout and faithful member of the Methodist Church and much loved for her noble character and good deeds.

William Thomas Mulligan was reared on the farm his father had purchased, remaining there until the death of the latter, when the mother moved with her children to Concord, Morgan County, where he attended the public school. He later attended Whipple Academy at Jacksonville two terms, and after leaving school accepted a position as an attendant at the Hospital for the Insane at Jacksonville, where he worked fifteen months under Dr. H. F. Carriel, and in 1891 began working on a farm. On August 26, 1891, he married Miss Ella Kirby, born at Murrayville, Morgan County, April 3, 1863, a daughter of John and Fannie (Leaks) Kirby, both natives of England. Mr. Kirby was a leading farmer of his section of Morgan County and a good citizen, and he and his wife were active members of the Methodist Church. He died November 27, 1900, and his widow now resides near Franklin, Morgan County. Mr. and Mrs. Kirby had four daughters and two sons, namely: Emma, Rachel, William, George, on the home farm with the mother; Mrs. Mulligan: Anna, deceased.

After his marriage Mr. Mulligan and his wife settled on a farm on Joy Prairie, Morgan County, where they lived three years. Two children were born to them: Fletcher Kirby, August 6, 1892, and Vern, December 1, 1893, and later at Berlin, Glen S. born March 25, 1896. In 1894 Mr. Mulligan and his family removed to the vicinity of Franklin and in the following spring to Berlin, Island Grove Township, where he rented 135 acres on Section 8, which he has now operated fifteen years. He pays particular attention to stock-raising.

Mr. Mulligan has been most successful in his farming operations and is known for his honest purpose and earnest efforts, by which he has proven himself worthy of the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens. He is most practical and progressive in his methods, as is well shown by the results of his fifteen years in his present location. An upright and public-spirited citizen he has many friends. His farm is what is known as the Rose Place, and upon it he keeps a good grade of stock, and reaps a high degree of success from all branches of his farming. He has always been actively interested in school work and, for the past nine years, has been a member of the Berlin School Board, lending his influence to hiring the best teachers and other good movements. This school is one of the best in the county and a matter of pride in the commun-

MUNROE, Grafton, D. D. S.—One of the representative dentists of Springfield is Dr. Grafton Munroe, who is pleasantly situated at No. 304 Ferguson Building, corner of Sixth and Monroe Streets, while his residence is at No. 1300 North Fifth Street. He was born at Annapolis, Md., August 5, 1863, a son of James and Matilda Rebecca (Walker) Munroe.

Dr. Munroe is a graduate of St. John's College of Annapolis, Md., Class of 1882, degree of A. B. The further degree of A. M. was conferred on him by the same school in 1886. His dental training was obtained in the University of Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in 1888, with a degree of D. D. S. He also graduated from Edward H. Angle School of Orthodontia, of St. Louis, Mo., 1900. From the time of his graduation until 1888, Dr. Munroe practiced dentistry at Annapolis, Md., and then moved to Springfield, Ill., which has since been his home. There he has built up a large and constantly growing practice, some of his patients having been with him all these years.

On October 2, 1890, Dr. Munroe was united in marriage, at Springfield, Ill., with Bette Jane Brown. Three children have been born of this marriage: Ogden Brown, Frances Josephine, and Grafton, Jr. (deceased). In national matters, Dr. Munroe is a Republican, but in local affairs he votes for the man he thinks will best fill the office. He was brought up a Methodist, but later became a Presbyterian, and now is a supporter of that church.

Dr. Munroe is one of the solid men of Springfield, whose example tends to elevate the tone of the community. He has many warm, personal friends here, and is justly recognized as one of the leaders in his profession in Sangamon County. He is the author of the article in this work entitled "The history of Dental Surgery in Springfield and Sangamon County."

MURPHY, James, who for many years carried on farming in Sangamon County, since 1865 has lived in the city of Springfield, retired from active life. He is a representative Irish-American citizen, intelligently interested in whatever concerns the public welfare, and ready to perform the duties of good citizenship. He was born in County Galway, Ireland, in January, 1839, son of Mathias and Catherine (Lynsky) Murphy, also natives of Ireland. The parents spent their entire lives in Ireland, where the father was a farmer, and they were parents of three sons and one daughter, and of these children but two survive: James, of this biography, and Patrick, who lives in Ireland.

Mr. Murphy received his education in his native country and helped with the work on his father's farm until he came to America, in 1864. He landed in New York City and came thence direct to Sangamon County, but soon afterwards spent six months in St. Louis. Returning to Sangamon County, he took up farming and followed this occupation until retiring from active life a few years since.

October 10, 1871, Mr. Murphy was married in Springfield, Ill., to Miss Rebecca Walker, who was born in Boston, Mass., June 9, 1848, a daughter of John C. Walker. Mr. Walker was born in Limerick, Ireland, and his wife in Dublin. He came to America as a young man and for many years worked in the ship yards at Boston. He was married there and when Mrs. Murphy was two years old the family came to Sangamon County, making the journey from New York by stage. They settled on Lick Creek and Mr. Walker helped lay ties at the time of the construction of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, which was then being built through that part of the State. An uncle of Mrs. Murphy was serving as Road Master, and Mr. Walker worked for the company the remainder of his life. The family lived for some time in a log cabin on Lick Creek, then moved to Chat ham, where the father died May 7, 1888, and the mother March 15, 1877. They were parents of one son and seven daughters, of whom six children now survive, those besides Mrs. Murphy being: Letitia, Mrs. John Canham, living near Auburn, Sangamon County; Mary, wife of Jacob Hoggshemeier, of Durango, Colo.; Rachel, wife of Jerry Morford, of Monetay, Iowa; Sarah, wife of Edward Neil, of Bronson, Iowa; Robert, of Springfield.

Five children were born to Mr. Murphy and wife, of whom four survive, namely: John M., the oldest; of Sioux City, Iowa; Carrie, deceased; James O., at home; Robert, of Springfield; and Lettie B., at home. There are four grandchildren in the family. Mr. Murphy well remembers Abraham Lincoln, whom he knew personally. He is a member of St. Agnes Parish Roman Catholic Church, and his wife belongs to the Presbyterian Church. He is a Democrat in political belief. He owns a very comfortable home at 925 West Jefferson Street, Springfield, and has many friends in the neighborhood, as well as in other parts of the county.

MURPHY, Patrick (deceased), was long well and favorably known in Sangamon County. For years he was a farmer, but then became a railroad man, and in each capacity wielded a genial personal influence which made him beloved by all who were so fortunate as to be associated with him. He was born in County Kilkenny, Ireland, in 1841, a son of Thomas Murphy, a farmer, and was brought to the United States by his parents in 1843, when he was about two years old. The family settled near Chatham, on Sugar Creek, Sangamon County, Ill., where Mr. Murphy carried on farming, and where he and his wife died. Of the four sons and four daughters of Thomas Murphy only two daughters are now living:
Mrs. Stach McKelvey, of Springfield, Ill.; Mrs. Bridget Kelley is living in Kansas.

Patrick Murphy was educated in common schools in Sangamon County, and in his earlier years worked for his father on the home farm. Soon after the beginning of the Civil War he enlisted in Company C, Tenth Illinois Cavalry, at Springfield. He took part in much hard service, was in a good deal of spirited fighting, and served until mustered out at the end of the war, at San Antonio, Tex. His brother Michael was a member of the same company for the same period. Returning to Sangamon County, Patrick Murphy resumed farming. After his marriage he operated a farm near Buffalo two years, then became an employee of the Wabash Railway Company. In 1875 this service was begun, and it was continued till July 12, 1880, when he was accidentally killed. He was a Democrat and a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. Murphy married Alice (Barregarye) Dwyer, at Springfield, in 1870. She was born in Ireland, November 25, 1843, a daughter of Edward Barregarye, who came from her native county, Tipperary, to the United States, settling at Buffalo, Ill., where the father died, and the mother died in Ireland. They had two sons and two daughters: Matthew, the surviving son, is a citizen of Springfield. Alice Barregarye married John Dwyer, at Springfield, in 1865. He was a native of Tipperary, Ireland, and died in 1869, leaving a widow and two daughters, one of whom, Miss Bridget Dwyer Murphy, is living. Mrs. Murphy bore her second husband five children, three of whom survive: Thomas Murphy, of Buffalo, foreman for the Illinois Traction System; James, of Evanston, Ill.; and Mary, a member of her mother's household.

MURRAY, George W.—Springfield, as the Capital of Illinois, naturally can boast of more than its share of men of legal ability residing within its limits; men who are recognized the country over as authorities on all matters pertaining to the law in all its branches, and among this class may be mentioned the eminent jurist, Judge George W. Murray, whose reputation, especially as Judge of the Juvenile Court, is national. Judge Murray was born July 7, 1839, in Covington, Miami County, Ohio, a son of David and Elizabeth (Mikesell) Murray.

The Murray family is of Irish descent, Andrew Murray, grandfather of the Judge, having come over from Ireland and settled in Franklin County, Pa., and later removing to the vicinity of Dayton, Ohio, where he settled as a farmer, David Murray was born in Franklin County, Pa., coming with his father to Ohio when a mere boy, spending most of his life in Ohio, his father's vocation being that of a farmer and he was a minister of the German Baptist faith. He died at Phillipsburg, Ohio, in 1854. The mother of the Judge, passed away in 1854. Her parents had also come to Ohio from Pennsylvania, both dying near Pleasant Hill, Miami County, Ohio.

George W. Murray began his education in the public schools, later continuing his education in the Dayton high school. He was reared on the home farm, and in 1859, when twenty years of age he began teaching school in Bond County, Ill., but in 1860, returned to Dayton, where he taught school four years. There he became a law student in the office of General Moses B. Walker, a lawyer of great ability, under whose personal direction he was, and in March, 1871, he was admitted to the bar in Dayton, and at once began the practice of the law. In April 1880, he was chosen to represent his ward in the City Council in the City of Dayton, where he served for three years, and was active in the procurement and building of the present water works of Dayton. In 1887, he came to Sangamon County, and for two years practiced his profession at Auburn. At the end of this time, he came to Springfield, and in 1882, he was elected to represent Sangamon County in the State Legislature, his election as County Judge coming in 1890. At the end of his term he became a candidate for re-election. Judge Charles P. Kane being his opponent, but Judge Kane was elected, the entire Republican ticket being elected. However in 1888, four years later he again took his place on the bench, and in 1902, he was re-elected by a majority of 2,494 votes. Judge Murray has gained a wide reputation, as Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of Denver, Colo., has repeatedly referred to him as one of the most effective Juvenile Judges in the United States. He gained his reputation by absolute work in the Juvenile Court. The large oil painting, modeled by himself during his official career and painted by an eminent artist, for the benefit of the children, showing "The Two Ways Of Life," a copy of which may be found in another part of this work, has attracted great attention all over the country. Judge Lindsey, of Denver procured from Judge Murray, a large size photograph of this chart, and has given Judge Murray great credit on various occasions for his work in the Juvenile Courts.

Judge Murray, was a few years ago called to the State of Texas, and there delivered a lecture before the Legislature of that State, on Juvenile Court work, and added much on that occasion in procuring the passage of the Juvenile Court Law then before the Legislature of that State, for which he afterwards received the thanks of the House of Representatives for his address on that occasion.

On October 2, 1890, Judge Murray was married at Dayton, Ohio, to Emma Niebert, daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Coffman) Niebert, of Dayton, Ohio, born in Hagerstown, Md., and Rockingham County, Virginia, respectively. Six children have been born to Judge and Mrs. Murray, namely: William W., a member of the Springfield bar; Ida May, wife of Samuel J. Hanes, of Springfield; Katie Lee, wife of Frederick Lathmer, of San Francisco, Cal.; George Walter, recently married and residing in Chicago; Jacob Frederick, of Chicago; and Jennie, who died at the age of two years in Dayton, Ohio. Since December, 1910, Judge Murray has resumed the practice of the law, in Springfield, Illinois.

MURRAY, John William, was born at Woodsend, Morgan County, Ill., August 31, 1860, and is a son of Patrick and Bridget (Dolton) Murray. Both parents of Mr. Murray were born in County Tipperary, Ireland. The father came to America a boy of fourteen and after a short period in the city of Philadelphia, came to Jacksonville, Ill., where he found employment with Jesse Henry, in feeding cattle. After his marriage he engaged in farming and in 1887 came to Sangamon County. For two years he lived near Sanger, Ill., and then broke a section of land near Curran, Ill., and lived there some years, paying a large amount of money out of rent. He then purchased 294 acres situated one and one-half miles north of Curran, which he later increased to 284 acres, and resided there until 1890, when he was elected Sheriff of Sangamon County. This office Mr. Murray held for four years and then returned to his farm which he had mainly turned over to his son's management. In 1909 he retired, and with his wife went to Springfield where they occupy a comfortable home at No. 304 South State Street. Patrick Murray has always been a staunch Democrat. He is a member of the Owls and the beneficiary order of Royal Arcanum. He was married at Jacksonville, Ill., and both he and wife are members of St. Agnes Catholic Church, Springfield.

John William Murray was the second born in a family of thirteen children, four of whom are deceased. He attended the public schools of Curran, Ill., and those at Kelly's Point, leaving when eighteen years of age in order to assist his father in his large agricultural operations. After a number of years of hard work he became manager for his father and then went into the business of buying and selling stock and grain, dealing heavily for some years. When his father became Sheriff, he served as his deputy through the four years and in his official character became known and respected all over Sangamon County. Prior to entering into the mercantile business, Mr. Murray was concerned for some five years in the insurance business, since which he has been connected largely and successfully with the city's commercial life. He was reared in the Democratic party and exerts no little influence in its ranks in Sangamon County. Under the late ex-President Cleveland, Mr. Murray served as a United States Deputy Marshal.

Mr. Murray was married in St. Agnes' Catholic Church at Springfield, Ill., on June 20, 1894, to Miss Mary O'Brien, a daughter of William and Anna O'Brien. The parents of Mrs. Murray were natives of Ireland. The father is now deceased but the mother survives and resides with a daughter, Mrs. George Reisch, at Springfield. They had six children, Mrs. Murray being the youngest of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Murray have two children: Helen, who is a student in the Dominican Convent; and John W., who attends St. Agnes Parochial School. Mr. Murray and family are members of St. Agnes Catholic Church. He is identified like his father, with the Owls and the Royal Arcanum.

MURRAY, Thomas James, a successful business man of Springfield, Ill., was born at Atlanta, Logan County, Ill., December 1, 1858, son of James and Bridget (Brennan) Murray. James Murray was born in County Carlow, Ireland, August 15, 1818, and his wife was born in County Kilkenny, Ireland, in 1835. He was a blaster by occupation and came to the United States about 1854. He and his wife had six children. Thomas J. Murray received his education in the public schools of Springfield and afterward went to work in the rolling mills there. He worked seven years in the employ of the Illinois Watch Company, and then embarked in business on his own account. He has been in this business for twenty years and has met with gratifying success, having a good trade.

Mr. Murray was married, in Decatur, Ill., October 4, 1894, to Miss Nora Cullen, daughter of John and Kate Cullen, who was born in Decatur, in March, 1871. Her parents were natives of County Waterford, Ireland. Mr. Murray and his wife have no children. He is well known as an enterprising business man, of strict honesty and integrity, and has many warm friends. He is a devout member of the Catholic Church. He is a Democrat in politics and was a member of the Board of Supervisors when the State Fair was located in Springfield. He belongs to the Knights of Columbus and the Catholic Order of Foresters. He has spent all of his life in Springfield and has been a witness of many changes and improvements.

Myers, Alvah O., Jr. (deceased).—The capital city of any State affords abundant opportunities for those interested in the building trades, and many of the buildings in this city were erected by Mr. Myers, Jr., a carpenter, builder and contractor. He was born in New York State, on February 20, 1800, a son of Alvah O. Myers, Sr., and his wife, Martha (Fleming) Myers, natives of New York State. He spent his life in Springfield, where he lived, died, and was buried. He lived a modest and industrious life, and any of his friends would be willing to speak of him as a devoted family man, a man of unworldly tastes, and a simple and kindhearted person.

During a boyhood spent in attending school and learning his father's trade, Alvah O. Myers, Jr., developed an ambition to see something of the world which lay outside his own State, and so after he had taught school for some time in Broome County, N. Y., he moved to Petersburg, Ill., where he opened and operated a butcher shop. At the expiration of seven years, he sold out this business, and resumed his trade as a carpenter in Springfield in 1850. Here he built a comfortable residence at No. 720 South Fourteenth Street, where his widow now resides. During the years that followed his location in Springfield, Mr. Myers was associated with some important contracts and was noted for the quality of his work as well as the conscientiousness with which he carried out his contracts.

During the Civil War he served for four years in Company F, Third Missouri Cavalry, receiving an honorable discharge at close of the war. During his later years, his services received recognition by the bestowal of a pension, which he enjoyed to his death, and which is now received by his widow.

The marriage of Mr. Myers occurred on May 30, 1872, in Broom County, N. Y., to Electa Lobdell, born in that county, November 25, 1845, a daughter of Jason and Mary Ann (Watterman) Lobdell. Both parents were also born in Broome County. Mr. and Mrs. Myers were the parents of two daughters and two sons: one daughter and one son are deceased; Lily, married November 15, 1902, James H. Van schel, and they reside with her mother, having had three children—Catherine, Joseph and Edwin. Mrs. Myers has resided in her present home for thirty years, and it is associated in her memory with many pleasant events as well as sad ones, for in it died her beloved husband, on February 4, 1900. His funeral was largely attended by those who sought to honor the memory of a man they had known and loved in life. The services were conducted by the Methodist clergyman, for Mr. Myers had been a consistent member of that church for many years, and upon coming to Springfield had connected himself with that denomination. From the formation of the Republican party, Mr. Myers was an enthusiastic supporter of its candidates and principles.

Being a man of quiet habits, devoted to his home and family, Mr. Myers never figured in public life. He had no desire to come before the public for office, but could always be counted upon to lend his support to all measures which he deemed would work out to the betterment of mankind. Earnest in his church work, he carried his religion into everyday life, and while he endeared men to him, made few if any enemies. His was a lovable character, and even after the lapse of twenty years, he is deeply mourned by the faithful partner of his life, who spent their lives in their home State, where the father carried on a carpentering business.

Myers, Harry L. of Springfield, Ill., is a native of Pennsylvania, born in Franklin County, November 6, 1806, son of Peter and Susan (Teech) Myers, both born in Pennsylvania, he in 1822 and she in 1830. The parents spent their entire lives in Pennsylvania and for forty-five years lived near the Mason and Dixon line. The father spent eleven years working for a man named Fred Angle, for one hundred dollars per year, then purchased a farm of his own, which he occupied until his death. Three of his sons served throughout the Civil War, namely: Matthias, a bugler; and Philip and William, privates.

The childhood of Harry L. Myers was passed on his father's farm, where he lived until seventeen years of age, being educated in the public schools of the locality. February 27, 1882, he reached Illinois, landing at Maryland Station at two o'clock A. M. He nearly froze before daylight, then started to walk to his brother's farm, one mile away from the station. The snow was deep and drifted and so hard on top that he was able to walk over the tops of the fences. Mr. Myers remained with his brother until the first of March, then began working on a farm for Mort Hendrick, who lived near Polo, III., receiving twenty dollars a month for the season. He had previously worked a short time picking corn, at two dollars per day. In the fall of 1883 Mr. Myers became employed as clerk in a hotel at Forreston, Ill., remaining there one year, then worked five years for Peter Knodle, who owned a bus and dray line at Mount Morris, Ill., also carrying mail and express.

In 1887 Mr. Myers began learning the trade of blacksmith, which he followed fifteen years, then about 1905 retired from this vocation. He traveled one year through Wisconsin for a hardware firm, then for eighteen months worked for the Land Land Company, of Chicago. September 28, 1906, Mr. Myers became a resident of Springfield, where he has since made his home. After clerking one year for the clothing firm of Menter & Rosinbloom, he became agent for the Prudential Insurance Company, holding this position one year and then being promoted to the position of assistant superintendent, which he also filled one year. He then began work as solicitor for historical publications, and has since continued in this line of work.

Mr. Myers is a man of pleasing personality and has many friends. He is a Republican in politics and fraternally is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, to which he has belonged eighteen years. In religious views Mr. Myers is a Dunkard. He is a good business man and has had experience in many lines of work. He resides in Springfield.

Mr. Myers was married, October 1, 1894, at Franklin Grove, Lee County, Ill., to Nellie May Cover, who was born April 12, 1875, daughter of Aaron E. and Elizabeth Cover, the former born in Connecticut, January 1, 1806, and the latter born in Vermont, in 1834. Mr. Cover taught school in a small log building in Baltimore, Md., when a young man. He was a drummer boy in the War of 1812, at the age of twelve years. Mrs. Myers had six brothers who served through the Civil War, as well as three brothers-in-law. She also had two brothers who served throughout the Spanish-American War. Mr. Cover died in 1894 and his wife in 1875. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. Myers and his wife: Naomi, born June 21, 1895; Inez, November 21, 1898; Charles H., June 24, 1907.

NAPIERSKI, August.—Emigration from Germany continues, fortunately for this country, for have we always had need of the sober, industrious, thrifty sons of the Fatherland, who make such desirable citizens wherever fate takes them. One of these prosperous and desirable German-Americans of Springfield, belonging to the younger generation, is August Napierski, born in Germany, August 24, 1870, a son of Michael and Regina (Zeigmand) Napierski, both born in Germany, he in 1836 and she in 1837. The father was a blacksmith, who followed his trade in his native land, never leaving it, but dying there in 1894. His widow survived him until 1905. They had the following children: Wilhelmina, Loulsa, Adam, Gottlieb, Henrietta, Caroline, Charlotte, William, Michael and August.

August Napierski was brought up in Germany, where he was educated and taught blacksmithing. When he was twenty-five years old, on April 22, 1906, he came to Dawson, Ill., and on March 15, 1907, located in Springfield, buying his present home at No. 1031 Wheeler Avenue and an additional lot adjoining, which he has developed into a beautiful residence.

Prior to leaving Germany he was married, by the German Lutheran service, on August 26, 1904, to Louisa Dudda, born in Germany, September 10, 1882, daughter of Gustave and Henrietta (Dill) Dudda, natives of Germany. They had children: Gustave, Mrs. Napierski and August. Mr. and Mrs. Napierski have had the following children: Gustave, born August 26, 1905; August William, born June 19, 1907; Hendrick Frederick, born August 5, 1906. Mr. Napierski is a consistent member of the Lutheran Church, as is his wife. In politics he is a Republican, but he has not put himself before the public for office.

NEAL, Charles Newton, D. D. S.—The learned professions are represented by men of intelligence, who have had long training in the direction of their chosen work. The professional man of today must of necessity be experienced before he commences practice, and in this way the safety and comfort of the people at large is assured. Of the leading exponents of the dental profession in Springfield, is Dr. Charles Newton Neal, born August 20, 1875, at Chatham, Ill. He is a son of John Ross Sr. and Anna Virginia (Squire) Neal. In 1870 the father came to Springfield, from Carlisle, Ky., and twenty years ago became clothing salesman for the E. & W. Clothing Store of this city, which position he still holds, having proven his worth and reliability by years of faithful service. The grandparents were prominent in Kentucky, and New Jersey.

Dr. Neal attended the public schools of Springfield, and then, having decided upon dentistry as his life-work, entered a university, where he took up his study, being graduated in the Class of 1904. He entered upon active practice, May 14, of the same year. He is a skillful dentist and his work is his best recommendation. He understands every branch of his profession, and his increasing practice shows that his ability is appreciated by his patients.

In political views Dr. Neal generally espouses the Democratic platform. He is Dental Surgeon for the Illinois National Guard, and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, the Maccabees and the Red Men. His religious home is in the Christian Church, where he has many warm friends, and is one of the most popular of its young men members.

NEALE, Thomas M. (Vol. I, p. 394.)

NEEF, Frank, a merchant of Springfield, Ill., is a typical German-American citizen and has made his own way in the world from early youth. He was born at Treis on the Moselle, Germany, September 5, 1856, a son of Hubert and Catherine (Traben) Neef, natives of that country. His father was a laborer and the youth was early taught lessons of self-reliance and industry. He was educated in Germany and reared in the Catholic faith. He came to America, arriving at Chicago, Ill., October 8, 1871, and located in Springfield on the 13th of the same month. After working in various lines he established himself in business in Springfield and is now located on North Fifth Street, where he has built up a good business. He stands well in various circles and is well known in the city. He has been a Democrat for many years and is much interested in the welfare of his party and in local improvements and progress.

Mr. Neef is a trustee of SS. Peter and Paul Catholic Church, of which he is a devout member, and is affiliated with several societies. He joined St. Vincent's Unterstuetzungs-verein in June, 1871; St. Peter's Court, Catholic Order of Foresters, in March, 1895; Springfield Schutzen-verein in 1895; Springfield Nest, No. 1131, Order of Owls, in January, 1910, and Lincoln Lodge No. 35, Independent Association of Iron and Steel Workers, in 1881. He has been successful to a gratifying degree and owns a pleasant home at No. 530 South Glenwood Avenue.

Mr. Neef was married at SS. Peter and Paul Church, Springfield, October 30, 1883, to Miss Katie Spies, who was born in the city September 25, 1861, daughter of Gustav and Catherine (Bauman) Spies, and the following children have blessed this union: Emma K., born October 16, 1884; William C., December 19, 1887; Phillip J., March 7, 1890; Julia M., July 1, 1893.

NEEF, Frank W.—It is easy to identify a man of energy and enterprise from one who is contented in obscurity, by simply watching the course of their business careers. The industrious man will grow and develop, his establishment will enlarge and enter better quarters, and his business will branch out and embrace other lines. Such has been the career of Frank W. Neef, of 207 North Eleventh Street, Springfield, the progressive son of a progressive father. He was born August 29, 1881, on Washington Street, Springfield, and is a son of Matthew J. and Sophia (Heltle) Neef. Matthew J. Neef was born in Germany in 1854, a son of John and Lizzie Neef, who came to the United States in 1871 with Matthew J. and Mary, the only surviving members of their family of six. They traveled from Bremen to New York, and went immediately to Chicago, where they remained but a short time, owing to the great fire of that year. Both died in Springfield. Matthew J. Neef attended school in Germany until fourteen years of age, and after coming to Springfield followed farming for two years, then started a business on Washington Street, between Fourth and Fifth Streets. Five years later he removed to Fifth Street, between Washington and Jefferson streets, and after five years at that stand came to his present location, No. 1157 North First Street, at the corner of Grand Avenue, where he bought a substantial two-story brick building, and there has since continued in business. He is a member of SS. Peter and Paul Church, and is a stanch Democrat in politics. He was married in Springfield, in 1880, to Miss Sophia Heldler, daughter of Joseph Heldler, and to this union there were born four children: Frank W.; John, at home; Joseph, who died at the age of twenty-one years; and Frances.

Frank W. Neef first attended the SS. Peter and Paul German school and later went to the Trapp school and the high school for two years, finishing the latter at the age of seventeen years, and then assisting his father in business for one and one-half years. For nine years he was engaged in the grocery and meat business, and later conducted a business at Eleventh and Mason Streets, but eventually sold out to re-enter the grocery business at Eleventh and Madison Streets. Finding that his business warranted removal to larger quarters, he erected his present place at No. 207 North Eleventh Street, where he has since established one of the most flourishing businesses, carrying a full line of fancy and staple groceries and fresh and salted meats. Mr. Neef's success has been due not only to his shrewd business nature and progressive ideas, but to his fair dealing with his customers, his own personal popularity, and his prompt delivery of orders. His patrons include some of the best people in Springfield. Like his father, Mr. Neef is a Democrat in politics and a member of the SS. Peter and Paul's Church. Fraternally he holds membership with the Owls, St. Vincent's Society and the butchers' and grocers' organizations.

NEER, Catherine, widow of Samuel Neer, has been a resident of Springfield the past twenty-two years. She was born at Athens, Menard County, Ill., January 23, 1859, daughter of James and Catherine (Chapman) Hall, the latter a native of Pittsburgh, Pa. James Hall was a brick mason and contractor at Athens, and a very prominent citizen. He was successful in business and well known in the community where he lived. His daughter spent her childhood in Athens and there received her education. Her parents both died at Athens, after which she moved to Oldenburg, Ill., where she remained until her removal to Springfield. Her brothers, Henry and Charles Hall, served in the Civil War, and her brother-in-law, William England, was killed while a soldier in that struggle.

Catherine Hall was married, at Carthage, Ill., the ceremony taking place in the Christian Church there, to Samuel Neer. One child was born of this marriage, Kitty Marie, who lives with her mother, on East Washington Street, Springfield. Mr. Neer was a prominent member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and was a Republican in politics. Mrs. Neer and her daughter are members of the Christian Church at Fifth and Jackson Streets, Springfield.

NELCH, Adam (deceased).—It is always a matter of public regret when a man who is in the prime of life is removed from his useful sphere, just at a time when his family and community have need of his services and influence. When such a man has proven during his whole life, his fitness to occupy a high position in the estimation of his fellow citizens; has established a record for integrity and honor, and, as a business man, has always been his associates, then such an untimely loss appears all the harder to bear. The late Adam Nelch, one of the best known contractors and builders of Springfield, was a man whose business probity was never called into question, and whose personality was of such a character that he attached men to him and carried their friendship with him through life. Mr. Nelch was born February 26, 1850, at Beardstown, Ill., being a son of John Nelch, one of the sturdy German-Americans who located in Springfield early in the sixties.

Adam Nelch was apprenticed, in the good German way, to Contractor Kane to learn the bricklayer trade, and his education was obtained in the schools in the vicinity of Petersburg, and those of Springfield. After leaving Mr. Kane, he was employed in the Springfield Rolling Mills for nine years, when he began contracting for himself. Later he continued to conduct his own business, and was ultimately associated in the construction of some of the most important buildings in Springfield and vicinity, including the St. Nicholas hotel, the annex to it, the Springfield boiler works, both the Rooth and Baker buildings, the Trinity Lutheran Church, Salzenstein livery, the Johnson building, the Dresser block, the Lanphier building, the Reisch building, the Academy of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, the Million building, the Keys block, the Buck building, the Myers Bros. block, the Ferguson building, the new Bressmer building, as well as countless of the finest residences here. His work of all kinds was of such a character that it stands as the best monument he could have, and will as long as the city endures.

Mr. Nelch was married on March 26, 1873, to Anna E. Tipton of this city, daughter of J. P., and they had nine children, seven of whom with the widow survive, they being: Mrs. Barnum, wife of Dr. Lee Barnum of Illiopolis; Mrs. Charles Patterson of No. 1425 East Adams Street; Annie; Mary, wife of Raymond McClelland, 1401 Lowell Avenue; William T., George and Adam Jr.; all of Springfield. The fraternal affiliations of Mr. Nelch were extensive, including membership in Elwood Commandery, No. 6, Knights Templar; Sangamon County Lodge of Perfection; Springfield Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, No. 1; Central Lodge A. F. & A. M., No. 71; Flower City Chapter Order of Eastern Star, No. 152; Liberty Camp, No. 1534, Modern Woodmen of America; Springfield Council No. 136 Yeomen of America, and Abe Lincoln Lodge, I. O. M. A., now called the American Home Circle.

Mr. Nelch was essentially a self-made man, whose remarkable success in life was due to his own unaided efforts, intelligently directed by a brain that was ever busy. His business activity gave him but little time for public life, but he was always intelligently interested in current events, and supported his political convictions with that strength of purpose which was so characteristic of all his actions. His place is empty both in his home and business circles, but his influence remains, and those who were associated with him are the better for his example, and his family appreciate more fully, day by day, the love and devotion he ever gave them.

NETTLETON, William.—Many Englishmen, not finding in their native land the opportunities for which they are seeking, emigrate to their colonies or to the United States, where they can find an opening and establish themselves in life. Some of those who come to this country select in Springfield or its contiguous territory a home, and few if any are dissatisfied with results. One of those who have thus acted is William Nettleton, a gardener on Section 2, Woodside Township, whose ten acres of land, two miles from Springfield, is worth $900 per acre. He was born in Yorkshire, England, November 22, 1854, a son of William and Hannah (Thompson) Nettleton, born in Yorkshire and Dunington, England, respectively.

The father was a groom, who made a specialty of taking care of fine horses, but died in his native land, when his son was only twelve years old, his widow still surviving, making her home in England at the age of eighty-two. years. She bore her husband six children, two sons and four daughters, all of whom survive, although William Nettleton is the only one who came to this country. The latter was educated in England and early began to earn his own living in his native country, working as signal man for the London & Northwestern Railroad for several years. In 1853, he sailed from Liverpool, landing in New York, after a voyage occupying thirteen days. After reaching New York he came west to Michigan where he remained two years, there learning the broom-making business, and working at his trade for some time in Hillsdale and Tecumseh, Mich. After this he spent a short time in both St. Louis and St. Charles, Mo., after which he came to Springfield to take up farming, also working at the broom-making business. In 1854 he bought some land in Springfield Township, which has continued to be his home. His two acres yield him a larger income that many large farms, because he knows how to make every inch bring forth his biggest possible crop. His product meets with ready sale because of its superior quality and easy access to market.

Mr. Nettleton was married in Springfield, at Saint Paul's Pre-Cathedral, November 21, 1878, to Lavinia Price, born in England, October 11, 1855, but brought by an uncle and aunt from her native land when twelve years old, being than an orphan. Mr. and Mrs. Nettleton became the parents of twelve children, eleven of whom are living, viz.: Nettie, wife of John Welsh of Springfield; Charles, of Springfield; Amy, wife of Harry Sauer, a fireman on the Wabash Railroad; Harry of Springfield; Alice, wife of George Soile of Springfield; Jessie, a stenographer for Edwin Wilson of Springfield; Hannah, at home; William, George, Jean and Helen, also at home. There are three grandchildren in the family.

The family are members of the St. Paul's Episcopal Church of Springfield, and are active in church work. Mr. Nettleton is a fine type of the sturdy Yorkshireman, and is proud of the one in which he has succeeded so well and in which his children have been born.

NEU, Jacob, now living retired in his pleasant home at 423 West Adams Street, Springfield, Ill., is a representative and public-spirited German-American citizen, and spent most of his life in hard work and industry. He was born in Germany, January 24, 1838, son of Henry and Katherine (Faust) Neu, both natives of Germany, who died in Baltimore, Md., the father in May, 1892, and the mother at the age of seventy-two years. The father was a blacksmith and brought his family to the United States in 1850, locating permanently in Baltimore.

The education of Jacob Neu was acquired in his native country, and at the age of fourteen years he began assisting his father, who owned a farm, in addition to working at his trade. The young man remained on the farm four years, being eighteen years of age at the time he accompanied the rest of the family to America, and remained with them two years in Baltimore. In 1858 he came to Springfield, Ill., leaving his parents in Baltimore, and found employment in the blacksmith shop of John Schubert, Seventh and Jefferson Streets, with whom he remained four years, then found similar employment with Mr. Booth. In 1861 he became a member of the fire department, whose location was on South Seventh Street, in the building now occupied by Johnson & Hatcher. Mr. Neu was employed at Davidson & Henley's for four years before his retirement in Springfield.

At the age of eighteen years Mr. Neu became a member of the German Evangelical Lutheran Church, and for many years has been a member of the German Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church, of which he served some time as Trustee. He has been a Democrat in political views ever since locating in the United States. He is industrious and thrifty by nature and has won a fair degree of financial success. He is a great lover of his home and greatly enjoys the comforts his past years of hard work have won for him, and which he knows how to appreciate. It is such men as he who comprise the best citizens of the country.

Mr. Neu was married, in 1860, to Katherine Lutz, who was born in Germany, in 1841, daughter of Conrad and Maria (Fisk) Lutz. Mrs. Neu's brothers were extensively engaged in meat-packing and during the Civil War secured large contracts for supplying meat to the Government. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Neu, a son, who died in infancy, and a daughter, Mary, who married George Bettinghaus, a contractor and builder of Springfield.

NEU, John C. (deceased).--Few veterans of the Civil War are left of the vast army that bravely responded to the country's call and risked their lives on the battlefield, or languished in loathsome prisons. An honored soldier of Springfield was the late John C. Neu, born in Prussia, in 1840, a son of Peter and Elizabeth Neu. Leaving school at fourteen years of age, John C. Neu began working, and when sixteen came with a cousin, Chris Neu, to the United States. They landed in Baltimore, where he learned his trade of cooper. When his country had need of his services, he enlisted, serving in many hard-fought battles. Being taken prisoner he endured for ninety days the unspeakable horrors of Libby prison. He left the service when the war was over.

When he was twenty-six years old, Mr. Neu was united in marriage with Elizabeth Neu, and in 1869 they came to Springfield, where he obtained employment in a cooper shop. Following this, he worked in a woolen mill until it closed, when he employed his time doing odd JOBS, always discharging his duties faithfully and well. His death occurred on June 16, 1910, and his remains are interred in Oak Ridge Cemetery. He was a member of the German Methodist Church, and acted as one of its Trustees for many years. In political faith he was a Democrat, but never aspired to office.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Neu were as follows: John of Springfield, connected with the Otto Redder Company, dealers in wall paper, married Lydia Schultz, of St. Louis; Ida K., at home; William T., a farmer of Sangamon County, married Minnie Schniep; Edwin went to Texas; Charles, a grocer of Springfield, married Elizabeth Irwin. Mr. Neu's memory is tenderly cherished by his family, for he was a man who gave liberally of himself and never spared his efforts at the expense of others.

NEUMAN, John.—There has been too much tendency on the part of young people of the country during the past few years to leave the farm and seek their fortunes in the big cities, to quit the clean, pure life of the country for the bustling, nerve-wrecking hustle and bustle of the metropolis. It has been said by a certain notable public man, "We must look to the farm," and, in urging the young people of the country to remain in their present surroundings and do a work that means the promotion of the nation's prosperity, he gave figures and statistics going to show that the agriculturist, if his labor shall be expended in the proper manner, will reap a richer reward than the average youth in the large cities. A notable example of what scientific farming will accomplish can be found in the career of John Neuman, who owns a tract of 200 acres of farming land in Woodside Township, where he resides, as well as the fine property consisting of 111 acres, in Ball Township. Mr. Neuman was born September 14, 1850, in Springfield, Ill., a son of John G. and Mary (Greah) Neuman.

The paternal grandfather of Mr. Neuman, who was a native of Germany, spent his whole life in the Fatherland and died there, while on the maternal side, the grandfather came from Germany to the United States at an early date, and died in New York. John G. Neuman was born in Germany, as was his wife, and on coming to America first settled in New York, but later removed to Springfield, Ill., and subsequently settled on a farm in Sangamon County. On this property, which was known as the Rutledge farm, Mr. and Mrs. Neuman spent the remainder of their lives, carrying on agricultural pursuits and rearing their children of usefulness.

John Neuman secured his education in the public schools of Springfield, and as soon as he was able to do so took his place on the farm and began doing his share towards cultivating the soil and developing the property. On reaching manhood he took up a property of his own, and year by year, by intelligent and energetic labor, cultivated it, added to it and eventually became the owner of his present fine farms in Sections 24 and 25, Woodside Township, and in Ball Township. As new machinery has been invented, with its time and labor-saving devices, Mr. Neuman has installed it upon his land. He has studied much on agricultural matters; has experimented with tilling, grading, draining and ditching; has followed crop rotation, and as a result, has two of the finest properties to be found in Sangamon County. His buildings are large and substantial, his pastures are neatly and regularly fenced, and the entire general appearance of his farms denotes the enterprising, progressive agriculturist. Mr. Neuman is a Republican in political matters and has served his township as School Director for twelve years. His religious affiliation is with the Baptist Church, while his wife belongs to the Lutheran denomination.

On September 9, 1879, Mr. Neuman was married in Springfield, Ill., to Margaret Doerfler, who was born May 23, 1857, in Sangamon County, daughter of John and Lizzie (Traeger) Doerfler, natives of Germany, the former of whom died in Sangamon County, while the latter resides in Springfield, belon in her eighty-second year. To Mr. and Mrs. Neuman have been born eight children, all in Woodside Township: Charles, born September 25, 1880; Etta, born January 24, 1882, married Art Ginther and lives in Sangamon County, having one son, John E.; Catherine, born on October 11, 1884; Clara, born January 21, 1886; Ursula, born November 1, 1888, married Dave Ginther, and resides in North Dakota, having one son, Walter; Emma, born August 31, 1890; Tom, born October 9, 1892, and Esther, born October 4, 1894.

NEUMAN, John C., who has long been prominently identified with public affairs in Springfield, is a man who has made his own way in life through earnest and persistent effort. He has taken advantage of his opportunities and has at all times shown his ability to attain success. He was born on what was known as Vinegar Hill, Springfield, April 6, 1833, and belongs to an old and prominent family. His father, John Frederick Neuman, was a native of Oldenburg, Germany, born in 1814 and educated in his native country, where his marriage occurred. He and his wife had one child born in Germany, Helen, now the wife of Frank Willer, living on West Grand Avenue, Springfield.

In 1851 John F. Neuman brought his wife and their daughter to the United States. He came by way of the lakes to Chicago, and thence to Sangamon County, where he had friends. He made a permanent settlement in Springfield, and erected a substantial residence on Edwards Street. This house, which was built in 1855, was one of the earlier homes in the neighborhood. Later he erected another dwelling and eventually sold the remainder of his land there. He was a market gardener for many years and on Sundays devoted his time to preaching. He helped organize the German Baptist Church in Springfield and temporarily filled its pulpit. He belonged to an old and highly respected German family and after coming to Springfield was much esteemed for his piety and public spirit. He was a Republican in political belief but in local affairs voted for the man he considered best fitted to hold office. He never cared for public honors for himself, and was well satisfied to live in accordance with his ideal of an upright, private citizen. He died in May, 1888, at the age of eighty-four years. He and his wife had four children after they came to Springfield, namely: John C.; H. Frederick, who is married and has five children; two who died young. The mother died in 1857 and she and her husband are buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery, lying side by side.

John C. Neuman attended the public schools of Springfield until about twelve years of age, then served an apprenticeship to the trade of printer in the office of the Illinois State Democrat, a German paper. After remaining there one year he went to Cincinnati and secured a position as compositor for the Baptist Publication Society, remaining there one year. He then returned to Springfield and learned the trade of tinsmith under the direction of C. H. Edmands, with whom he remained for a period of sixteen years, during ten years of which he was foreman of the tinsmith department, where tinware, roofing and gutters were manufactured. Upon leaving the employ of Mr. Edmands, Mr. Neuman engaged in business on his own account, forming a partnership with O. A. Melcher, under the firm name of Neuman & Melcher, which arrangement, continued six years. When they dissolved partnership in 1888, Mr. Neuman remained in business at the old location until the building was destroyed by fire, and afterwards occupied several other stores. He came to his present place of business, in 1890. He has an extensive trade in all kinds of tinware, roofing, gutters, and various kinds of piping. In 1902 he put in sixty furnaces and has since had a large patronage in this line. When he first began to sell them it was in a small way, putting in only a half-dozen the first year, but his trade steadily grew and he has carried the highest grade of furnaces and makes a careful study of the needs of each building which he equips in this manner.

Mr. Neuman’s marriage occurred in 1876 at Alton, Ill., when he was united with Miss Mary E. Adams, a native of Fredericksburg, Md., born May 4, 1853, and brought in early childhood to Alton, where she was educated. Her father was killed at the Battle of Missionary Ridge during the Civil War, but her mother still survives and lives in Alton with a son and daughter. Mr. Neuman and wife have four children: John A., a graduate of the Springfield High School, works with his father; Lulu E., also a high school graduate, taught one year in the public school; Edward W., a clerk in the First National Bank; Bessie M., a student. Mr. Neuman is a member of the Central Baptist Church and his daughter Lulu has charge of the infant department of the Sunday School. He belongs to Capital Lodge, Knights of Pythias; to the dramatic order of the Knights of Khorassan; Springfield Camp No. 14, Modern Woodmen of America, and to Capital Tent No. 1, Knights of the Maccabees. In politics he is an earnest Republican and has been actively identified with public affairs since 1888. He lived for twelve years in the Second Ward in Springfield, then moved to 321 South Douglas Avenue, which is his present address, and was elected from this ward in 1890 as a member of the City Council, being reelected in 1901 and again in 1903. He served as Chairman of the Committee on Streets and Alleys and later on the Committees on the City Water, Street Lighting, Public Grounds and Buildings, Manufactures and Industries, and in these various capacities used his influence for the benefit of the public welfare and for any movement he considered would advance the interests of all. He was well known for his upright dealing in public matters and gave the city good service. He is well known as a business man of integrity and probity and has a good reputation in the various circles where he is known.

In 1874 Mr. Neuman became a member of Company C of the Governor’s Guard and served three years. His older son is now a member of Company C, of the Illinois National Guard. The family are prominent socially and have a large circle of friends.

NEVIIJS, Joseph O.—In looking for a reason for personal success, the seeker invariably finds that the men who rise above their fellows are those who have kept everlastingly at what they started out to accomplish, and through sheer perseverance surmount all obstacles and finally reach their goal. These are the kind of men who have brought Sangamon County to its present state of prosperity, and a prominent man among them is Joseph O. Nevius, who is carrying on agricultural and stock-raising business adjoining the village of Loami on the south. Mr. Nevius was born August 25, 1868, in Calhoun County, III., a son of John and May E. (Joy) Nevius, the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of West Virginia.

John Nevius came to Macoupin County, Ill., with his parents, but on account of the wild state of the prairies and swamps there at that time, the grandfather left Macoupin and settled in the timber of Calhoun County, where he planted extensive orchards of all kinds of fruit, became well-to-do and resided there all of his life, dying when about seventy years of age. John Nevius remained on the farm with his father until the outbreak of the Civil War, when he crossed the river and joined the Seventy-second Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and, having been prepared for the practice of medicine, was made Assistant Regimental Surgeon. Having been captured by the enemy and thrown into prison, he contracted a chronic diarrhoea, which so impaired his health that, after he had been exchanged, he received an honorable discharge on account of disability. On partially recovering his health, he located on Lick Creek and rented some land in Loami Township, but not having the strength to farm his land, he engaged in school teaching. Shortly after coming to Loami Township he was married to Miss May E. Joy, and went to Calhoun County, where he remained until the spring of 1889, in that year returning to Sangamon County, where shortly after his death occurred. His widow survived him until December 12, 1881, dying in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which both she and her husband had been lifelong members. Three children were born to this couple: Nellie, the wife of Henry J. Brown, a farmer of Talkington Township; Joseph O.; and Nora, the wife of W. F. Cleveand, a broker of Minneapolis, Minn.

Joseph O. Nevius was but one year old when his father died, of whom he consequently has no remembrance, although he treasures a tin-type of him taken in military uniform, some small surgical instruments and his meerschaum pipe. His boyhood days were spent in Loami Township, where he attended the public schools until thirteen years of age, and then hired out at $8.00 per month to herd cattle for H. Campbell, continuing this employment for seven years, and carefully saving his wages. On account of ill health, Mr. Campbell broke up his home and went west, and in February, 1883, Mr. Nevius made a trip to Portland, Ore., where he went to work on a farm and ranch, engaged in herding cattle for $4.00 per month. In May, 1882, he returned to Illinois, went to work on a farm and on October 3, 1894, was married to Miss Edith Campbell, who was born in Loami Township, March 6, 1876, a daughter of S. P. and Kate Campbell, honored pioneers of Sangamon County. She died March 30, 1896, having been the mother of one child, a daughter, Lonely, born June 16, 1895. This daughter is being given superior educational advantages, and is now attending the Bettie Stuart Institute at Springfield, after having passed through the seventh grade in the grammar school. She has been given a musical training, is a talented violinist, and sings in the choir of the Christian Church, of which she is a faithful member.

After his first marriage Mr. Nevius located on his wife's mother's estate. On March 10, 1900, he was united in marriage with Miss May Dodd, who was born in Sangamon County, Ill., a daughter of Theodore Dodd, one of the pioneers of the county, and now a farmer in Curran Township. They have one son, John G., born August 25, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Nevius located on the beautiful home at the south end of the village of Loami, which Mr. Nevius' daughter owns, and here they have resided to the present time. Mr. Nevius has twenty-seven acres of fine land, and here he breeds Hambletonian horses, Poland-China hogs and Jersey cattle, and ships his butter to Springfield.

Mr. Nevius has been prominent in Democratic politics in this section for some time, having served as County Central Committeeman for four years and as Constable of Loami Township for two years. He is also well known socially, being a charter member and having gone through all the chairs of Loami Lodge No. 901, I. O. O. F., also having been a representative to the Grand Lodge of the State. Enterprising and progressive, he is looked upon as one of his township's representative men, and his friends and acquaintances throughout this section are legion.

NEWELL, Claude P.—The career of a self-made man is interesting to follow, as it shows what may be accomplished by those who have the industry, perseverance and determination to succeed. It also serves as a good example to the youth of the community who are just entering the field of business. Claude P. Newell, who deals in groceries, hardware and feed, at No. 619-621 East North Grand Avenue, has built himself up a flourishing business in Springfield. He was born at Moberly, Randolph County, Mo., April 5, 1873.

Mr. Newell's great-great-grandfather emigrated from England at an early day and settled in New York State, whence he later removed to Snoshannah, Pa. Stephen Newell, the grandfather of Claude P., was a native of the latter state, where he spent his life engaged in the grocery business. He married a Miss Wilcox, and among their children was Charles C., the father of Claude P., now a fruit grower of Salem, Mo.

Claude P. Newell was five years old when taken by his parents to Louisiana, Mo., and he attended McCune College and the public schools, spending his vacations in clerking in a grocery store. When twenty-two years of age he went to Salem, Mo., to assist his father in conducting his fruit farm, and there continued until 1899, when he came to Sangamon County, to engage in farming. After four years spent in agricultural pursuits, he went to the town of Auburn, where, with J. W. Wineman, he established the grocery firm of Wineman & Newell, which they conducted there one year, and then came to Springfield, locating in business at Mr. Newell's present location. On November 1st of the same year Mr. Newell sold his interest in the store at Auburn to his partner, bought his partner's interest in the store in Springfield, which he has continued to operate to the present time.

"Newell, the Grocer," as he is familiarly known, has a large and lucrative patronage, due to the excellence of his goods, his promptness in delivering all orders, and his personal popularity.

On February 5, 1902, Mr. Newell was married in Auburn, Ill., to Miss Virginia Hill, of that city, daughter of the late William R. Hill, an early settler of Sangamon County. Three children have been born to this union: Virginia Ruth, born June 8, 1908; Mildred Isolde, born September 30, 1904; and Helen Jane, born August 14, 1908. Mr. Newell was reared in the faith of the Baptist Church. He is a staunch Republican in political views, and fraternally is connected with the Odd Fellows.

NEWTON, John B., an honored veteran of the Civil War, now living retired at his pleasant home, at No. 123 South Glenwood Avenue, Springfield, III., is a native of Erie County, Pa., born February 3, 1834, a son of Elijah and Melinda Newton, both natives of Pennsylvania. The father, who was a farmer, served in the War of 1812. The family moved to Michigan in 1854, and there the father died in 1866, and the mother in 1855. One son, Henry C., was killed in Kentucky in 1863, while a soldier in the Civil War.

The education of John B. Newton was acquired in a log school house in the country, and upon leaving school he followed farming four years and then went to Kansas and took up a claim there. He joined John Brown's Company and fought against the Missouri raiders. President Buchanan sent troops to the territory to protect the settlers. Mr. Newton returned to Michigan in 1856 and soon after moved to Logan County, Ill., where he resided until 1907, then located in his present home in Elkhart. In 1906 Mr. Newton made a trip to Los Angeles, Calif., and from that city traveled along the coast to Portland, Ore., returning to Illinois the same year.

Mr. Newton enlisted in Company E, Seventh Illinois Regiment, and after spending a short time in camp at Springfield, went to Alton, Ill., thence to Fort Hope and from there was ordered to the front. They went up the Ohio River, took Fort Henry, and went on to Pittsburg Landing. Mr. Newton was wounded in the Battle of Shiloh and was sent home, but returned at the end of thirty days to his company. He served as First and Second Lieutenant under Captain Roberts, of Company K. The latter was taken prisoner at the battle of Shiloh and during the six months he was held, Mr. Newton was acting Captain. Mr. Newton was wounded the second time, October 5, 1862, at the battle of Hatchie River, where he lost one of his lower limbs. His record speaks for itself and he proved himself to have been a zealous soldier. He is a member of Lee Myer Post No. 182, G. A. R., and his wife is a member of John R. Tanner Circle No. 54, Ladies of the G. A. R.

Mr. Newton is a strong Republican and has always been active in the interests of his party. He served as Police Magistrate of Elkhart, Ill., in 1868, and two terms as member of the City Council. He is a member of the Baptist Church of Springfield, a man of pleasing personality and has many friends. He owns a two-story brick house in Elkhart, Ill., and has been successful in his business enterprises.

Mr. Newton was married, in Lincoln, Ill., November 1, 1861, to Miss Mary V. Bishop, daughter of Harrison and Agnes Bishop, the father born January 15, 1812, and the mother December 20, 1814. Mr. Bishop and his wife were both natives of Virginia and came to Sangamon County among the early settlers, spending the remainder of their lives there. He died in November, 1862, and the mother, January 4, 1858, and both are buried in Fancy Creek Cemetery. Five children were born to Mr. Newton and his wife, namely: Nellie E., born April 12, 1867, married John R. Folliis, a clerk in a dry-goods store at Elkhart, Ill., and they have two children—J. Denner, born May 26, 1898, and Mary G., born April 1, 1907; Harry E., born August 7, 1872, employed as Assistant Dispatcher in the post-office at Springfield; Frances, born April 26, 1878, living in Lincoln, Ill., and Deputy County Clerk.

NICOLAY, John George. (Vol. I, p. 399.)

NICOLL, Byron William, one of the highly esteemed veterans of the Civil War, living retired from active life, in the pleasant home in Springfield, Ill., which he owns at 921 South Fourteenth Street, was born in Granville, Ohio, January 19, 1849, a son of Robert L. and Clara (Brown) Nicoll, both natives of Underhill, Chittenden County, Vt., the former born in 1808 and the latter in 1818. Robert L. Nicoll was a stone cutter and carver, and came with his parents to Ohio in early days. His father was killed in the war of 1812. Robert L. came to Illinois in June, 1854, locating first in Cumberland County. Later he moved to Mattoon, Coles County, where he died in 1888. He and his wife had three children, one daughter and two sons.

The education of Byron W. Nicoll was acquired in the country schools of Licking County, Ohio, where he was reared on a farm, and upon leaving school helped in the work of carrying on the farm. He came with his parents to Cumberland County, Ill., in 1854, and since 1892 has been a resident of Sangamon County. He had a very long record as a soldier of the Civil War and underwent many hardships and dangers, having many narrow escapes from capture and taking part in many hard-fought campaigns. He enlisted, August 2, 1861, in Company E, Thirty-Eighth Illinois Infantry, under Captain J. M. True, and served four years and seven months with this company, enlisting at Mattoon, Coles County, and being mustered out in Victoria, Tex., in March, 1866. Among the battles in which he participated were those of Knob Gap, Perryville (Ky.), Fredericksburg (Mo.), Stone River, Liberty Gap, Chattanooga, Chickamauga, the Atlanta Campaign from Rossville to Jonesboro, Franklin (Tenn.), and Nashville. He proved his bravery and reliability and is reasonably proud of his record. He is a prominent member of Mendal Post G. A. R. Though Mr. Nicholl is a member of no religious denomination he endeavors to shape his actions in conformity with the Golden Rule, and has malice in his heart toward none, treating all mankind as brothers. He is a general favorite with his acquaintances, who enjoy his society and whose friendship and good-will he fully appreciates. In political affairs he is a Democrat.

Mr. Nicholl was married, December 4, 1873, at Vandalia, Ill., to Harriet A. Maxwell, born in Ohio, August 28, 1837, and one of the thirteen children born to James and Elizabeth Maxwell, the former born in Philadelphia, Pa., and the latter in St. Clairsville, Ohio. Mrs. Maxwell’s youngest brother participated in the Civil War. Mr. Nicholl and his wife have no children.

NIESEN, William (deceased).—Springfield owes much to the sturdy, reliable Germans who located here and gave forth of their best to make the city what it is today. One of those who did his duty as a man and good citizen, but no longer is here to enjoy the benefits of what he helped to accomplish, is the late William Niesen, a tailor by trade, who made Springfield his home from 1871. He was born on the historic Rhine in Germany, August 6, 1848, being a son of Jacob and Agnes Niesen. Like many Germans, Jacob Niesen was a soldier, but when his term of service expired, he brought his family to America, this being about 1864 or 1865. Settling in Cleveland, Ohio, the father worked at his trade of tailoring, and there he and his wife both died. Their children were: Henry, Arnold, William and Odell.

William Niesen received but few educational advantages but he was taught the tailoring trade, working at it in Germany, and with his father after the family migration to this country. On July 6, 1871, he was married in Cleveland to Marie Killian, and came to Springfield the same year. Here he found plenty of work at his trade, and worked at it until his death, April 9, 1900. He was a well-known, capable man, whose word could always be depended upon. A Republican in politics, he supported the candidates of his party, while not seeking office for himself. He had been a member of the I. O. O. F. sixteen years. In March, 1890, he bought the family residence at No. 718 South State Street, where his widow now lives. She was born in West Prussia, January 6, 1851, but came to the United States when only eighteen months old. She is a daughter of Karl and Augusta (Dann) Killian, both of whom died in Germany.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Niesen were: Jacob of Springfield, where William also resides; Agnes at home; Mary, Mrs. Louis Myerhoff of Springfield; Catherine, Mrs. Charles Springer of Springfield; Henry is also at home; Odell and Frank, at home. There are four grandchildren in the family. The family are well known in the city, and retain the respect which attaches to the name kept untarnished by the husband and father who was called away from those he loved.

NISIUS, Peter.—Springfield is the home of many business firms and houses which put out a high class of work. The men controlling them are experienced and well trained, and are able to meet any demand made upon them along their special lines. A thrifty business man of the Capital City, who has worked up from a small beginning to his present comfortable circumstances, is Peter Nisius. His birth took place in Germany, December 17, 1848. There he grew to manhood, receiving a meagre educational training. In 1851, believing that in this country he could make better progress, he came to the United States, landing in Baltimore. From that city he came direct to Springfield, where he found immediate employment with the Illinois Watch Company, remaining with them for one year. He was industrious and thrifty, and seeing an opportunity for engaging in business for himself, he left the factory and established himself at No. 410 East Adams Street. There he continued until 1902, when he removed to No. 404 East Adams Street, where he conducts a regular locksmith and grinding business. He does razor concaving, sharpens scissors, and lawn mowers, files saws, makes keys of all kinds, repairs and covers umbrellas, and does a general repairing business. From the beginning he turned out nothing but good work, and this was the best kind of advertisement. It brought him new customers, and retained his old ones, and he now has a thriving trade. Thrifty and industrious, Mr. Nisius has been able to forge ahead, and demonstrates that a man can accomplish much if he is willing to devote himself closely to his task.

NOBLE, Theodore, a notable example of a self-made man, is a successful farmer of Cartwright Township, Sangamon County. He was born on Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., November 29, 1854, a son of William L. and Louisa (Johnson) Noble, the former born near Lonisville, Ky., and the mother’s parents being born in England. The parents of William L. Noble brought him to Schuyler County in boyhood and there he reached maturity. They were among the early settlers of the county and the young man learned the trade of cooper. He sold his early product to a packing house at Rushville and was one of the leading citizens of that village. He was a man of public spirit, was a Whig in early life, later helping in the organization of the Republican party. He was elected to various offices of public trust, and served as a Justice of the Peace and Collector for some time. For fifteen years he was City Marshal and Street Supervisor and during the war was appointed by President Lincoln to the office of Deputy Marshal of his district. He was never known to shirk a duty or betray a trust, and was called into many dangerous places in arresting deserters and traitors to the Government. In his capacity of Deputy Provost Marshal he became known throughout his district a fearless upholder of justice.

To William L. Noble and wife children were born as follows: John W., a farmer and merchant of Richland, Ill.; Theodore, of this sketch; Josina M., wife of J. W. Lawler, of Rushville; Simon died in infancy. The mother of these children died when Theodore Noble was about eight years old and, in 1882, his father married Susan Goodwin, by which union he had two daughters and three sons: Mollie, wife of William Frazelle, of St. Louis; Roland, of Rushville; Thomas, a traveling salesman whose home is in St. Louis; Nellie, wife of George Bateman, of Joppa, Ill.; James, the first-born, died in infancy, and William was killed while working on a railroad, near Peoria. The mother of these children died about 1902.

William L. Noble still calls Rushville his home, but spends much time visiting his children in Sangamon County, and other places. Although born in 1826 he holds his own well and has always taken an active interest in local affairs. He is a Republican and during the war was one of the true patriots of Schuyler County. He has long been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Rushville, and during the war belonged to the Union League and to the promoters of the Underground Railroad.

Theodore Noble was educated in Rushville schools, and after leaving school began working at farming by the month. Being a young man of industry and perseverance, he was able to save money and make a start in life for himself. He remained near his home until he was about eighteen years of age, and in 1872 came to Sangamon County, though at that time his cash capital was but seventy-five cents. For eight years he worked for others and, as a result of close economy, had become able to marry. He was united with Miss Amelia R. Croney, about 1883. She was born in Cartwright Township, where she has always lived, a daughter of Henry and Caroline (Rose) Croney, both natives of Germany, who settled on Lick Creek, Sangamon County, but both are now deceased. After marriage Mr. Noble rented land and began farming on his own account, thus beginning the career in which he has been so successful. In 1886 he purchased eighty acres of land on Section 16, Cartwright Township, which was in a raw condition, soon after purchasing a small frame house which he moved on to his place. He improved his farm, set out shade and ornamental trees and shrubs, tiled part of the land, and brought it into a high state of cultivation and it is now one of the most productive farms in the county. About 1901 the old house was removed and a handsome two-story seven-room dwelling erected on its site. Mr. Noble has been successful as a farmer and stockman and raises a high grade of stock. His wife is an enthusiastic raiser of chickens, and has high grade White Orpingtons that are pure bred and fine fowls. For many years she has raised Partridge Cochin chickens, and has about 300 of this kind. She has reaped success in her endeavors in this direction and takes great interest in the work.

Four daughters and one son have been born to Mr. Noble and wife, namely: Maude, at home; Mary, wife of Hiram Parkes, a farmer of Cartwright Township, Theodore Clyde, who assists his father with the farm work; Gertrude Lane, at home; and Fannie Bell, at home. Each child has been given a good common school education, and the son took a three-year course in a business college at Springfield.

For the past four years Mr. Noble has operated 320 acres of land in addition to the eighty acres which he owns, and is regarded as a practical and capable farmer. By dint of good management and untiring industry he has reached a point in life where it would be possible at any time for him to retire. Like his honored father, he has always supported the principles of the Republican party. He has held various township offices of honor and trust in which he has given excellent service, and fraternally is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 139. His wife is a member of the Court of Honor, and she and three other members of the family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Pleasant Plains. During the thirty-nine years of his residence in Sangamon County Mr. Noble has witnessed many changes there, and has done his full share in promoting the general progress of events.

The parents of Mrs. Noble, Henry Crouny and wife, were neighbors in their native land and both came to America in youth. They were married in New York City and not long afterward settled on Lick Creek, Sangamon County, but in 1853 he purchased a farm on Section 16 of Cartwright Township. He first purchased eighty acres of land and later added another eighty to it, and at the time of his death was considered one of the well-to-do citizens of his township. He lived there until after the death of his wife in 1883, and then removed to Springfield, where he died about 1892. Five of their children reached maturity. Four of these are: Lucy, wife of Edward Lynder, of California; Caroline, wife of Charles Purcell, of Paola, Kan.; Frank, of Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. Noble.

NOEL, John (deceased), who for many years carried on his farm in Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, was well known as an upright citizen, a kind friend and neighbor and an industrious farmer. He was an active member of the Christian Church and ready to advance the interests of every movement for the public benefit. In politics he was a Republican. and in 1860 voted for Mr. Lincoln for the presidency. Mr. Noel was born in Cass County, Ky., in 1826, a son of Moses and Jane (Hurst) Noel, both natives of Kentucky, and the former a farmer. The parents became early settlers of Clear Lake Township, where they lived several years on a farm, then returned to Kentucky, where the father died, the mother dying in Sangamon County. They were parents of one son and one daughter, both of whom are now deceased.

The subject of this sketch received a meager education in his native State and early began working on the farm for his father. He was ten years of age at the time the family came to Illinois, and remained with his parents until his father returned to Kentucky, after which he continued farming in Clear Lake Township the remainder of his life. The family removed to Mechanicsburg after his death and there his widow still resides.

The marriage of Mr. Noel occurred in Clear Lake Township, January 1, 1869, when he was united with Pheby Gibson, a native of the township, born March 29, 1854, a daughter of Samuel Gibson, who died when she was a small child. Mr. Gibson, who was a native of Indiana, was an early settler of Sangamon County and became owner of the land where the Clear Lake summer resort is now located, and he and his wife both died on the home farm. There were five sons and five daughters in the family, of whom four daughters and two sons now survive. There were born to Mr. Noel and his wife three children: Edward, a resident of Mechanicsburg; Emma J. and Delia, both living at home. There are three grandchildren in the family. Mrs. Noel has many friends in the county, where her entire life has been spent.

Mr. Noel’s death occurred December 4, 1895, aged sixty-nine years, seven months and nineteen days.

NOLAN, Edward, general road foreman of engineers for the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad system, is a man whose promotion to his present position has come about through insistent labor and faithfulness of service. He was born at Minocka, Grundy County, Ill., February 29, 1864, son of Frank Nolan, born in Bagenalstown, County Carlow, Ireland, who came to the United States in the early ’fifties, landing in New York City, whence he came to Illinois. He was married at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to Mary J. Hand, born in County Meath, Ireland, but brought to the United States in childhood by relatives, her parents having died in Ireland. The father was a railroad man for many years, but later in life became a farmer. In 1871 he moved to Joliet, but died in Chicago, in 1897, aged seventy-eight years. His wife died in 1879, aged fifty-four years. Their children were: Lawrence, president of terminals of the Grand Trunk System at Detroit, but prior to this appointment was with the Chicago & Alton Company for twenty-seven years, working up from section hand to train master, married Lizzie Felshy; Mary Ellen, deceased; Christopher, an enginer in the Chicago Stock Yards, married Mary B. O’Brien; John and Katie, both of Springfield.

In 1871 Edward Nolan was taken to Joliet by his parents. There he attended public school, and he kludily remembers his excellent teachers. When he was fourteen years old, he began working to help support the family. His first employment was picking stone used in making one of the boulevards of Chicago, and he was paid one dollar per day for this work. Two years later he began firing on what is now the Sante Fe road, and later was with the Chicago & Alton, as fireman. From that position he was promoted to be enginer, running between Bloomington and Chicago. In 1888 he went as enginer on the Missouri Pacific road, running between Kansas City and Wood, Mo., thus continuing until 1895, when he left that road and, after being in the employ of several in western States, came to Springfield, where until 1900 he was locomotive engineer between Peoria and St. Louis, but was then made Superintendent of Engineers. On August 5th of the same year he was again promoted, to Master Mechanic, and is now general road foreman of engineers, the company recognizing his peculiar fitness for such a position.

Mr. Nolan was married in Joliet, December 22, 1898, to Miss Julia Mack of Peoria, daughter of John and Julia (Shea) Mack. They have children as follows: Mary Marguerite; Vera and Vera, twins, the latter being deceased, and Francis Edward. Mr. Nolan belongs to St. Joseph Catholic Church. In politics he is a Democrat, while fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Columbus. He is an earnest, faithful citizen, and his promotions have been well earned.
Since then he has built up a large trade and enjoys the confidence of his customers, who know they can depend upon him for fair and honest treatment. So successful has he been that he has enlarged his store and greatly increased his stock.

Mr. Nolan is a member of the Roman Catholic Church and one of its most liberal supporters. The Democratic party receives his vote and he is active in its work. His associations with the Knights of Columbus are very agreeable and he has now passed the Fourth Degree in the order, and was formerly an officer. Mr. Nolan has already accomplished much, and his future spreads out before him invitingly. There is no doubt that he will impress himself vigorously upon the business life of the city, in which he is now an important factor.

NORDMEYER, John A. (Deceased), an industrious and useful citizen of Springfield, where he had lived about eleven years at the time of his death, was a native of Germany, born in 1854, son of John A. and Sarah (Metz) Nordmeyer, both natives of Germany. The parents emigrated to the United States and secured a farm in the State of Indiana. There John A. Nordmeyer, Jr., subject of this sketch, spent his boyhood and attended the public school. He afterward worked with his father on the home farm until learning the trade of shoe-maker, which he followed many years in Springfield.

Nordmeyer was a good workman, industrious and thrifty, and secured a good standing among the people with whom he was associated, on account of his many good qualities of mind and heart. He was a small boy at the time his parents brought him to America. He was a devout member of the Catholic Church and in politics was a Democrat. Mr. Nordmeyer was in the prime of life at the time of his demise, having been married but a few years, and his death came as a shock to his many friends. He passed away February 6, 1895, at his home in Springfield, and his remains were interred in Calvary Cemetery.

The marriage of Mr. Nordmeyer took place at Springfield, May 10, 1881, when he was united with Miss Annie Sunderman, born September 10, 1864, in Riverton, Sangamon County, daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (Schaffer) Sunderman, natives of Germany. Mr. Sunderman and his wife were early settlers near Riverton and secured a farm there. Her death occurred in 1891 and her husband died three years later, both being buried in Calvary Cemetery. Two daughters were born to Mr. Nordmeyer and his wife, Grace and Blanch, twins, born in Springfield, October 5, 1894, living with their mother in the pretty home at 1307 North Eighth Street.

NORThcott, William Allen, United States District Attorney of the Southern District of Illinois, and formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the State, is a distinguished citizen of Springfield, where his business, professional and social interests are many. He has been more or less identified with public life since 1876, when he began to discuss public questions on the forum, and he early gained the training and experience which the later demands of his life made it necessary he should possess. In the stormy field of politics, Mr. Northcott has borne a man's part, and has had his share in the great work of making the American Nation.

William Allen Northcott was born in Murfreesboro, Tenn., January 28, 1854, and is a son of Robert S. and Mary C. (Cunningham) Northcott. His father was an officer in the War of the Rebellion, being Lieutenant Colonel and brevetted General, of the Twelfth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. The youth attended the public schools of Clarksburg, W. Va., until 1869, when he entered the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., where he remained until 1875, subsequently entering upon the study of law, and he was admitted to the Bar at Clarksburg, in July, 1877. As indicated above, Mr. Northcott had already become interested in public affairs and engaged in the discussion of political problems and as his horizon widened, his views broadened and deepened, and he became a prominent factor in the political life of the State in which he chose to make his home. In 1880, he was appointed Supervisor of Census for the Seventeenth Illinois District and in 1882, was elected State's Attorney of Bond County, Ill., an office he continued able to fill for the next decade. In 1897, Mr. Northcott became one of the leading figures in public life in the State of Illinois, being elected Lieutenant-Governor, and in that exalted position served the Commonwealth with efficiency through the more or less stormy years of the period from 1897, until 1905, and in May, of the latter year, was appointed United States District Attorney of the Southern District of Illinois. Through these many years of public service Mr. Northcott has performed many arduous duties and has been called upon to play the diplomatist in many important cases, but has never failed in either tact or courage, whatever may have been the circumstances.

In January, 1904, the law firm of Northcott & Orr was established, and in May, 1905, Mr. Northcott established his home in Springfield. Aside from his professional and official interests, Mr. Northcott has business connections. He is President of the Inter Ocean Life and Casualty Company, of Springfield, which was organized in 1907, and is in a very prosperous condition. This organization furnishes life, health and accident insurance and has 21,000 policy holders.

Mr. Northcott was married at Marine, Madison County, Ill., September 11, 1882, to Miss Ada R. Stoutzenberg, and they have two children, namely: Nathaniel D., who is aged twenty-nine years; Amy Allen, aged twenty-four years. The beautiful family residence is situated at No. 835 South Second Street, Springfield. Mr. Northcott and family attend the Episcopal Church. He is identified with fraternal, political and social organizations, being a Mason, an Odd Fellow and a Modern Woodmen, and from 1889, until 1903 was Head Consul of the Modern Woodmen of America. On many occasions Mr. Northcott has been present at the meetings of the Hamilton Republican Club, of Chicago, of which he is a member and has been an honored guest. He belongs to the well-known social bodies, the Sangamo Club and Illini Country Club, of Springfield, and is a Director of the latter.

NOTT, Walter Harrison.—The Nott family, a representative of which is well known in Springfield, comes of old and distinguished stock in England. The family originated in Nottingham, England, one member being John Nott, who was Lord Mayor of London three different times. Other members of the family have been statesmen, ministers and public men of all ranks and conditions. The monogram and crest are still preserved, the motto being "Never Despair," and the crest a raven. Walter Harrison Nott, of Springfield is proud of his descent from these illustrious forebears. He was born at Tonlon, Ill., June 13, 1871, being the son of Arthur Slatt and Elizabeth (Umum) Nott. The father was a traveling salesman, and the grandfather moved from Hartford, Conn., to Cleveland, Ohio, and thence to Illinois, arriving in the latter State in 1860. During the Civil War, the father served bravely in Knapp's Battery, First Pennsylvania, and after the conflict was over, located at Toulon, Ill. At present he and his wife reside at Mt. Vernon, Ill.

The school days of Walter Harrison Nott were passed in Wisconsin and Illinois, and he remained at home with his parents, who taught him to be useful. He drove a physician's vehicle and later learned the trade of barber. He moved to Galva, Ill., and Sandwich, locatung in the latter place in the fall of 1899. In April, 1903, he came to Springfield, where he opened his present tonsorial parlors, and has been very successful. He is an Odd Fellow, Knight of Pythias, Woodman and Elk. The Congregational Church holds his membership and he is regarded as one of its most valuable members. In politics, he is a Republican.

Mr. Nott was married in Peoria, Ill., August 16, 1891, to Mary Belle Mellor, born in Kewanee, Ill., April 13, 1870. Mr. and Mrs. Nott have three children: Emmett Walter, born September 30, 1892; T. Bernard Arthur, born October 5, 1895, and Erma Elizabeth, born December 10, 1897. Mr. Nott is one of the enterprising young business men of Springfield and takes an interest in public events. His standing is high in the community, and he has fairly earned the success he has attained.

NOTTINGHAM, Walter.—The younger generation of farmers are teaching Sangamon County agriculturists how to operate their farms according to scientific principles, and their remarkable success is proving that they know what they are doing. One of the progressive young farmers of this locality is Walter Nottingham, of Section 31 Cartwright Township. He was born August 29, 1871, a son of John and Mary A. (Corson) Nottingham. John Nottingham was born in New Jersey, but was brought to Cartwright Township when a lad by his parents, and after reaching manhood served four years as a Methodist minister, following a circuit, after which he continued to be a local preacher the remainder of his life. His father, Jonathan Nottingham, entered land in Cartwright Township, Sangamon County.

After his marriage, John Nottingham went to Menard County, but after a short residence there came back to Cartwright Township, and erected a house on Section 26, where his son John still resides. This place was his residence until his death, July 18, 1890. His widow still survives, her home being at Delaware, Ohio. John Nottingham was an excellent man, a good farmer and a worthy citizen, active in the work of the Methodist Church, which claimed his earnest devotion and contributions throughout his life. He was active in Sunday School work and enjoyed his religious associations. Strong in his support of temperance principles, he was an ardent Prohibitionist and regretted that he could not live to see the doctrines of his party accepted almost universally, as he firmly believed, they would be sometime. He and his wife became parents of ten children: Arthur, a farmer of Cartwright Township; Walter; Luther, of Pleasant Plains; Jonathan owns eighty acres of the old homestead; Frances lives with her mother, as also does Richard; Elizabeth married Floyd Weaver of Delaware, Ohio; LeRoy, of Pasadena, Cal.; Frank, of Delaware, Ohio; Ida May, who died in infancy. Walter Nottingham spent his boyhood on the farms, attending school whenever opportunity offered. As soon as he was prepared, he entered college at Lebanon, Ill., where he took a three years' literary course. Finishing, he returned to the farm and for three years assisted in operating it. On January 1, 1896, he married Amy E. Roby, born in Pleasant Plains, March 21, 1875, daughter of George and Ellen (Rose) Roby. Mr. Roby was a successful contractor and builder of Pleasant Plains. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Nottingham rented a farm of I. P. Smith, north of Pleasant Plains, remaining there for six years. During this time, Mr. Nottingham operated 200 acres with remarkable results, and then in 1902, rented 400 acres south of Pleasant Plains from E. D. Boynton, and as before made a success of his work. In 1901, he bought land on Section 25 Cartwright Township, but did not live on that farm, renting it until 1909, when he sold it and bought 186 acres on Section 31, Cartwright Township, to which he moved the same year. For the past two years he has been farming this property, feeding hogs and cattle. He believes in a good grade of stock and has demonstrated that it pays to keep only that kind.
He has an eight-room residence, well fitted with modern conveniences, while his barns and outbuildings are in fine condition. His home was the old Peter Cartwright farm, and the old barn put up so many years ago, still stands.

Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Nottingham: a son who died in infancy; George, who died when nine months old, born October 28, 1900, died July 19, 1901; Edna, born July 31, 1903; Walter Jr., born August 25, 1905; Mary Ellen, December 23, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Nottingham are members of the Methodist Church, of which he is steward. In politics he is a Republican. He belongs to the Anti-Horse Thief Association. An excellent farmer and a good businessman, Mr. Nottingham has steadily risen, and is now one of the substantial men in his part of the county.

O'BRIEN, Bessie.—Several years ago, in St. Agnes' Catholic Church, at Springfield, was a little girl who always took her place in the choir loft on the side of the soprano singers. She was so small that the choir paid very little attention to her. In spite of the fact that her sister, Miss Mary O'Brien, was organist. But she sang for the great joy and happiness of it; the Latin words of the Mass appealed to her, and that she was allowed to sing them at all in the big choir, was the most wonderful part to her. Every Sunday and on feast days she was in her place, and after awhile the other singers began to notice the clearness and beauty of her tones. One eventful day a great master-teacher was present, who immediately began to ask questions. He went to her home and told her mother and brothers of his discovery of the little girl. She was encouraged at once, and began to study with him; success crowned her efforts, and soon she gave a recital of her own, being then only fifteen years of age.

The musicians of Springfield began to realize that they had a singer of rare ability in their midst, and she grew famous, not only in her own city, but throughout the central part of the State, where she sang in both concerts and churches. But the city of Springfield was her home, there were the friends who had first praised her. Would her dreams come true—could she win applause for her voice alone? Among those who did not know her, high praise had been meted out to her when she sang Verdi's "Aller che forte Corraci," at the concert which the people of Springfield gave to Governor Altgeld.

One Sunday morning at St. Jarlath's Church In Chicago, she sang Verdi's "Attila," arranged as an "O Salutarius," and in this she covered a little less than three octaves, from lower "E" to high "D." The strength of her voice and its exceeding fine quality made itself felt in the quiet church so that even the altar boys stole glances at the choir loft. The next day the Chicago papers announced, in terms of highest praise, the discovery of the wonderful singer at St. Jarlath's, one noted musical critic declaring that she "sang like an angel." So her dreams began to come true, and soon she left for Paris (accompanied by her sister) to study under the famous Madame Eames-Storey, then in that city. She took up her studies with Madame F. DePicotte, who was so pleased with her that after three months' work she was accorded the distinction of singing at St. Joseph's Church. It was here that she really made her debut during New Year week. Afterwards she studied with Mme. Marchesi, who fitted her for grand opera. In Paris she frequently met and sang for many famous singers, including Melba. After three years of hard work she returned to America and to Chicago, where she was received with the greatest praise, and given the name of "The Modern Patti." It is told that on the morning of her arrival in Springfield she went direct to her seat in the choir-loft of St. Agnes' Church, as though she had never been abroad, and sang the Mass with the others. She has since then constantly received the highest praise from musical critics, the press, and the public of Illinois and other States.

As Miss O'Brien and her sister now conduct a studio in the Odd Fellows Building in Springfield, besides which Miss Bessie does concert work throughout the State. With William Armstrong, who lectured on "Music and Musicians," she made a tour doing solo work, and she also served several years as soprano soloist at the Holy Name Cathedral in Chicago. She is a sister of Frank O'Brien, a grain broker, a biography of whom appears on another page in this work.

O'BRIEN, Frank Patrick, a successful commission broker in grain, of Springfield, was born at Curran, Sangamon County, July 18, 1868, son of Denis and Marcella O'Brien. The father was born at Skibbereen, County Cork, Ireland, about 1837, and the mother was born at Dungarvan, County Waterford, Ireland, about 1844. He was an employe of a railroad, when a young man, later engaged in the grocery trade, and died in 1906. He and his wife were parents of ten children, of whom Frank P. is the third.

Mr. O'Brien, the subject of this sketch, attended the Christian Brothers School, at Springfield, and received a business education. He was first employed as hook-keeper and later as telegraph operator by the Western Union Telegraph Company, working at the latter occupation from 1855 to 1900. For four years he was connected with the United Press, located at Chicago, and spent the years 1889-90 at St. Louis in the employ of the Associated Press. From 1890 until 1894 he was employed in Chicago by the Associated and United Press. In the latter year he located in Springfield, which has since been his residence. Mr. O'Brien is a good operator, and in the performance of his work for the press has been associated with many juteresting events. He has been engaged in his present business several years and has met with gratifying success in this line. He is an intelligent and public spirited citizen, much interested in public affairs, and an advocate of progress. Mr. O'Brien is a member of the Catholic Church of St. Agnes, of Springfield, and in politics is a Cleveland Democrat. He is unmarried.

O'BRIEN, John (deceased).—One of the best known men in the employ of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, was the late John O'Brien, of Springfield, Illinois, whose genial personality will be long remembered by those who knew and loved him. Mr. O'Brien was born in County Mayo, Ireland, in 1843, being the second son born to his parents John and Ellen (Rloys) O'Brien, farming people who lived and died in County Mayo. They had a family as follows: Michael, was the first to leave the old home for the United States; John; Mary, unmarried, died in Ireland; Bridget married Luke Lavin and lives in County Mayo; Margaret at home; Thomas, died in Springfield; and Andrew who lives here.

John O'Brien received a fairly good education and worked for his father while acquiring it. In 1871, he married Miss Bridget Lavin, also of County Mayo, daughter of Patrick and Mary (Lavin) Lavin, and soon afterwards they sailed from Liverpool for the United States. The journey consumed seventeen days, and as the passage was rough and stormy, they were glad when New York was reached. From there they came direct to Springfield, where Mr. O'Brien went to work for the Chicago & Alton Railroad, continuing with them for seven years, when he bought a farm in Logan County. Here he suffered from a severe sunstroke, which resulted in his retirement to Springfield, and eventual death, in 1898. He died as he had lived, a devout member of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, to which he was a liberal contributor. In politics, he was a stanch Democrat. He and his wife had children as follows: Mary; Margaret; Annie, a trained nurse in Chicago; Patrick, a miner; and Nellie. These children and Mrs. O'Brien all belong to St. Joseph's Church. Mr. O'Brien always did what he believed to be his duty, endeavoring to bring up his children correctly and provide for them and his wife the comforts of life. Stricken down while carrying out his farm duties, he never fully recovered, but kept his warm friendships to the last, and died regretted by a wide circle of those who still miss his kindly presence and sympathetic words of praise and advice.

O'BRIEN, Patrick, a public-spirited Irish-American citizen of Springfield, Ill., was born in March, 1829, and is a son of Thomas and Mary (Welsh) O'Brien, also natives of Ireland, where the death of both occurred. Thomas O'Brien and his wife were parents of nine chilcarpenter, and has since worked at it. His entire life has been spent in Springfield and he has assisted materially in its growth and progress since engaging in business on his own account. For the last six years he has been taking contracts for the erection of houses and other buildings, and has been able to build up a good business. He is an expert carpenter and possesses considerable executive ability, being quick to see the best way of doing a thing and equally quick to apply the knowledge. He has shown intelligence and enterprise in establishing himself in his present line of work, for which he is well fitted, and has an excellent reputation in business circles.

Mr. O'Brien was married in Springfield, April 26, 1897, to Miss Bridget A. Murray, born September 21, 1865, daughter of William and Catherine D. Murray, who spent their entire married lives on a farm until 1909, since which they have lived in Springfield. Mr. Murray was born December 10, 1843, and his wife November 28, 1846. Four children were born to Mr. O'Brien and his wife, namely: Ethel R., born March 10, 1898; Timothy M., April 10, 1902; William M., May 26, 1905; Cyril P., May 17, 1910. Mr. O'Brien owns the comfortable family residence at 1049 North Fourteenth Street. He is a member of the Catholic Church, a Democrat in politics, and fraternally has been a member of the Order of Xosom since 1901.

O'CONNELL, Cornelius.—Springfield is one of the most delightful residence communities within the confines of the whole Commonwealth. There are gathered congenial people, bound together by civic pride and common interests, who, working in concert, produce conditions that are almost ideal. For this and other cogent reasons, many men locate in the city when they have retired from the activities of a business career, and among those who have shown such good taste and common sense, is Cornelius O'Connell, a retired baker, whose residence is at No. 1511 East Jefferson Street. He is a native of Ireland, born in County Clare, a son of Patrick and Ellen (Kilkcain) O'Connell, both of whom spent their lives in Ireland, where they died. After a boyhood spent in his native place, Mr. O'Connell learned the baker trade in Milltown, Ireland, and in 1857, wishing to take advantage of the opportunities offered in America, he came here, landing in New York City, whence he proceeded direct to Bloomington, Ill. There for a year he found employment at his trade, but left that city for Jacksonville, which continued his home for one year more, when he settled in Springfield. Until 1900 he worked as a baker, then retired, feeling that he had done his full duty. During the Civil War, like so many of his compatriots, Mr. O'Connell served his adopted country, giving much appreciated service as government cook at Camp Butler. His political affiliations are with the Democratic party. In religious faith he is a Roman Catholic, belonging to St. Mary's Church.

In May, 1864, Mr. O'Connell was united in marriage with Ellen Long, the ceremony being performed in Springfield. Mrs. O'Connell was born in Tipperary, Ireland, where she lost both parents, following which she came to America with an aunt. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. O'Connell: John and Cornelius, both of whom live in St. Louis; Charles lives in Springfield; Mary is the wife of Samuel Bloom and lives in Springfield; Susan lives in Chicago; Jennie lives at home and is in the employ of the Illinios Watch Company; and Theresa is the wife of Harry Harbold, of Chicago, who is in the employ of Swift & Company. There are twelve grandchildren in the family, of whom Mr. and Mrs. O'Connell are exceedingly proud. Mr. O'Connell is one of the substantial, reliable men of his community. He remembers well the earlier days of the city, and, having come to it when Lincoln and Douglas were something more than mere names, he recalls these distinguished men very well, and relates many interesting stories of them and their associates.

O'CROWLEY, Daniel (deceased).—It is seldom indeed that the public receives such faithful service from one of its officials as was rendered by the late Daniel O'Crowley, who was for twenty-eight years an employee of the Recorder's office in Springfield. Mr. O'Crowley for this long period, displayed a conscientious regard for fulfillment of duty, and as a citizen and official was esteemed and honored. He was born in County Cork, Ireland, April 2, 1834, a son of Daniel and Mary Langtou O'Crowley, also natives of County Cork, where both died. Mr. O'Crowley's father was a general merchant.

Daniel O'Crowley secured his education in the County Cork schools, after leaving which, he served as a Customs House official in Ireland for some years. At the age of twenty-five, he left the Emerald Isle for New York City, from whence he went to St. Louis, Mo., and thence to Jacksonville, Ill., where he engaged in school teaching. He arrived in Springfield in 1858, and the outbreak of the Civil War found him, an employee in the Settlers Department at Camp Butler. In 1864, he entered the Recorder's office, and from that time until 1882, he served faithfully and well, performing his duties in such a manner, that it was next to impossible to secure a man to take his place. In 1882, he retired from active life. His death occurred suddenly at his home, in Springfield, on March 18, 1910, his funeral being from the Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception, of which he had for many years been a devout member.

Mr. O'Crowley was married May 11, 1864, at East St. Louis, Ill., to Mary Kavauough. Eleven children were born to this union, three of whom died in infancy. Those surviving are: Mrs. C. H. Jones and Mrs. F. W. Conron, of Minneapolis, Minn., Daniel L., married and residing in Missouri, being connected with the Cudahy Packing Company; John M. and Charles J., residing in Minneapolis, Minn.; and Josephine L., Florence L., and Vita Alice, all of whom reside at home. The family are well known socially, and take an active part in affairs of the Catholic Church.

OGG, Basil W., a progressive young business man of Springfield, Ill., was born at Scottville, Ill., August 25, 1853, a son of F. T. and Alice (Goble) Ogg, both natives of Scottville, the father born in 1854 and the mother in 1862. The parents came to Springfield in 1890 and have since made their home in the city. The father was engaged in the harness business in early life, but after coming to Springfield became a travelling salesman and has since continued that line of work for a harness company. He is a Democrat in politics and is affiliated with the United Commercial Travelers Association and the Modern Woodmen of America. He and his wife had three children: Diemle, wife of Joseph Conrad; Basil W.; Roy A., a druggist, all residents of Springfield.

At the age of seven years Basil W. Ogg accompanied his parents to Springfield and there received his education, attending the Edwards and, later, the Stewart and Hay (now known as the Lawrence) Schools. Upon leaving school he learned the trade of cigar maker and, in 1890, established a business at his present location, 1006 South College Street, his factory being located in the rear of his residence. He has built up an excellent trade and won quite a reputation as the manufacturer of the "400," the "Oggesta" and the "La Zilla" cigars, made to sell at a popular price. His business structure is 22 by 60 feet, and he has a daily output of 5,000. In a busy season, employing then about twenty-five men. He is well regarded in business circles and has a reputation for strict honesty and integrity.

October 5, 1902, Mr. Ogg married Miss Barbara Marie Diebold, daughter of Roman Diebold and Elizabeth (Stremdorfer) Diebold, born in Springfield, October 10, 1851, and left an orphan in early childhood. One son has blessed this union, Stewart B., born November 14, 1905. Mr. Ogg is affiliated with the Eagles, the Elks, the Masons and the Maccabees. In politics he is a Republican and in religious views a Protestant, while his wife is a Catholic. He is a member of the Springfield Commercial Association, the Travelers' Protective Association and the Order of Red Men.

OGLESBY, Richard James. (Vol. I, p. 408.)

OLDFIELD, Seth A., photographer, Springfield, Ill., was born in Jacksonville, Ill., August 12, 1873, a son of William Henry and Sarah (Trigg) Oldfield, both natives of England, the former born near Manchester and the latter near Sheffield, that country. The Oldfields are one of the older families of England, their genealogy being traceable as far back as 1600. William Henry Oldfield after coming to Amer-comprehension and wise guidance, he is much beloved. The financial condition of his parish is excellent, owing to his judicious management.

ORENDORFF, Alfred (deceased), former prominent lawyer and leading citizen of Springfield, Ill., was born on a farm in the northern part of Logan County, Ill., July 29, 1845, the youngest of a family of four sons of Joseph and Elizabeth (Stevens) Orendorff, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Henderson County, Ky. The Orendorff family in Illinois was descended from Christian Orendorff, who was a military officer in Germany, married a Miss Elizabeth Miller, of a prominent German family, and came from Wurttemburg, Germany, in 1751, first settling with his family in Lancaster County, Pa., but a few years later removing to the vicinity of Sharpsburg, Md. Their second son, Christopher, was married at Hagerstown, Md., in 1791, to Elizabeth Phillips, and soon after spent some time in Georgia and South Carolina, but finally settled in North Carolina, where, on November 25, 1804, their son Joseph Orendorff, the father of General Alfred Orendorff, was born. Christian Orendorff and family later resided successively for a time in the States of Tennessee and Kentucky, but in 1818 came to Washington County, Ill., whence a few years later they removed to the "Sangamo Country," settling on Sugar Creek, then a portion of Sangamon County, but which, on the organization of Logan County in 1839, was embraced in the northern part of the latter. Here Christian Orendorff and his family opened up a farm and built and operated on Sugar Creek the first water-power grist-mill in that part of the State, and here, on June 23, 1833, the son Joseph was married to Elizabeth Stevens, who, as already explained, was a native of Henderson County, Ky. Orendorff's father, Joseph Orendorff, died September 18, 1854, when the son was little more than nine years of age, and soon after the mother, with her family, removed to Lincoln, which was founded about that time and named in honor of Abraham Lincoln, later becoming the county-seat of Logan County. Here Alfred received his primary education in the common schools, later taking a course in the Wesleyan Academy at Bloomington and in the military school at Fulton, Ill. In May, 1864, when less than nineteen years of age, Mr. Orendorff took the lead in organizing Company I, One Hundred Thirty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, which was mustered in for one hundred days, and of which he was promptly chosen and commissioned Captain, serving through its period of enlistment and being mustered out at Camp Butler, near Springfield. Later he turned his attention to the study of law, taking a course in the Albany (N. Y.) Law School, from which he graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and in the autumn of 1867, was admitted to practice in the State of Illinois. Taking up his residence in Springfield, he soon after became the junior member of the law firm of Herndon, Zane & Orendorff, this relationship continuing until June, 1873, when Mr. Zane having been elected to the circuit bench, the firm became Herndon & Orendorff. In April, 1877, Mr. Herndon having retired from active practice, Mr. Orendorff entered into partnership with Hon. James A. Creighton, present Justice of the Circuit Court for the Springfield District, which continued until Mr. Creighton's election in 1884 to the judgeship which he still retains. His next partnership was with Robert H. Patton, which lasted for several years. Evidence of his prominence in and his devotion to the profession, is furnished in the fact of his election as the first Secretary of the Illinois State Bar Association on its organization in 1877, and its subsequent election as its President. On several occasions, he served as delegate to the National Bar Association, and in 1906, was elected as delegate to the International Law Association which held its session that year in the City of Berlin, Germany.

Reared as a Republican, General Orendorff's first political relations were with the Republican party, of which in 1870, he was the chosen candidate for State Senator, but failed of election in a strongly Democratic district. In common with many other members of the Republican party in 1872, he aligned himself with what was known as the "Liberal Republican Party," in support of Horace Greeley for President and in the same campaign was elected Representative in the General Assembly, receiving the support of the regular Democrats and serving as a member of the Judiciary Committee during the two sessions of that body. His subsequent political relations were uniformly with the Democratic party, which he served as Member, Secretary and Chairman of its State Central Committee, and Delegate to the numerous local State and national conventions, and was twice in 1880 and 1884, the candidate of that party for State Treasurer. In January, 1893, he was appointed Adjutant General by Governor Altgeld, and held that office three years, resigning January 4, 1896. His experience as a soldier and his knowledge of military affairs rendered his administration of this department highly satisfactory.

The most active efforts of General Orendorff's later years were devoted largely to the interests of the Illinois State Historical Society, of which he was a member for many years, and was chosen President in 1905, serving continuously in that capacity for the remainder of his life. A sketch of his career published in the Quarterly Journal of the State Historical Society of the month of October, 1906, says "he loved the Illinois State Historical Society and no detail of its affairs was too small to secure his interest and he labored for it unceasingly."

Other business interests besides the practice of his profession with which General Orendorff was associated, included the German-American Loan Association, of which he was Vice President for many years; Director of the Guarantee Abstract Company, as one of the organizers of the Springfield Improvement Association; President of the Franklin Life Insurance Company; and, at the time of his death, President of the International Bank & Trust Company, of Vinita, Okla. He was also prominently identified with the various fraternal and social organizations, including the Order of Masons, Odd Fellows, Elks, Sangamon Club, Iroquois Club, of Chicago, Workmen, Woodmen and others. He was especially active in connection with the Order of Odd Fellows, having served as Representative to the State Grand Lodge, Grand Master and as Representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the World. He also served as President of the Board of Trustees of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, was associated as Representative of the State Historical Society in 1908, to the celebration of the Semi-Centennial of the Lincoln-Douglas Debate of 1858, and as a charter member of the Lincoln Centennial Association, took part in the honors paid to the memory of Abraham Lincoln on February 12, 1900.

"On June 22, 1870, General Orendorff was married to Miss Julia J. Williams, a daughter of Colonel John Williams, one of Springfield's most distinguished citizens, who was for fifty years a leading merchant, and for many years President of the First National Bank of that city. Mrs. Orendorff's death occurred May 27, 1908. Their three children, John, Alfred, Alice Elizabeth and Lydia Edna, all survive. The son resides in Joplin, Mo., and the daughters occupy the family homestead on South Second Street in Springfield. "General Orendorff's mother and three brothers all preceded him to the beyond. His mother died May 16, 1866; his brother Christopher, June 28, 1862; Robert, December 21, 1879, and James in 1902."

General Orendorff's death occurred as the result of a protracted illness, October 22, 1908, and was deplored by a large circle of friends in his home city and throughout the State. Among the many earnest tributes paid to his memory none are more worthy of our mention in this connection than those expressed by Honorable J. Otis Humphrey, of the United States District for the Southern District of Illinois, and Judge James A. Creighton, his former business partner in Springfield—the former in an address before the Odd Fellows Grand Lodge, November 18, 1909, and the latter in an address before the Illinois State Historical Society at its annual meeting in May, 1910.

OSBURN, James R., now living retired from active life at the home of his son-in-law, George W. Meredith, at 1172 North Third Street, Springfield, was born at Cadiz, Harrison County, Ohio, January 6, 1842, and served in the Eleventh Ohio Cavalry during the Civil War. He is a son of William B. and Rebecca (Rankin) Osburn, the former born in Westmoreland County, Pa., and the latter in Fayette County, Pa. The father was a carpenter and contractor in Ohio, and he and his wife had eleven children. The father of Mrs. Rebecca Osburn, Robert Rankin, was wounded in a battle in the War of 1812, and after being carried off the field lived to reach his home, but died a few hours later.

James R. Osburn spent his boyhood at Cadiz, Ohio, receiving his education in the public schools of that place, and upon leaving school began working with his father in a blacksmith and machine shop. At the time of the Civil War he enlisted in Company E, Eleventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and served creditably and bravely for three years. At the close of the war he entered the employ of C. Aultman & Company, of Canton, Ohio, and continued this occupation until 1900, when he moved to Springfield and retired from active life. He had the requisite qualifications for a successful salesman and had the confidence and respect of his customers and employers alike.

Mr. Osburn was married, at Cadiz, Ohio, December 25, 1873, to Miss Editha Dickerson, who was born in New Athens, Ohio, daughter of Joshua and Mary A. (Harris) Dickerson, both of whom were born in New Athens. Children as follows were born of this union: John W., a machinist, married and residing in Springfield; Margaret, Mrs. George W. Meredith, lives in Springfield; Frank A., a machinist, is married and lives in Canton, Ohio; James E., chief musician in the First United States Artillery, stationed at Fort Sill, Okla., is also married. Mr. Osburn is an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic of Springfield, and has been a life-long Republican. He takes an active interest in public affairs, although he has never cared to hold office himself. He is a member of the Baptist Church. The family is well and favorably known in Springfield, where they have many friends.

OSENTON, John S.—The work devolving upon the county officials is of such importance that it cannot be over-estimated. Especially is this true of that connected with the superintendence of the poor farm, where the county's unfortunate are cared for. Sangamon County is to be congratulated upon its present superintendent, John S. Osenton, a practical business man, and sympathetic official, who, while protecting the interests of the tax payers, knows how to give those under his charge efficient and thorough supervision. Mr. Osenton was born in Grayson, Carter County, Ky., August 2, 1858, being a son of Henry K. and Sciotha (McAllister) Osenton, natives of the same county as their son. Henry K. Osenton was a blacksmith and merchant, who never left Kentucky; John S. Osenton being the only one of the family to locate in Illinois.

After attending the common schools of Carter County, Mr. Osenton worked as a day laborer at whatever work came to his hand, gaining a wide and varied experience. When he came to Sangamon County, in the spring of 1878, he found employment as a farm laborer, but in the fall began manufacturing tile, to meet a growing demand for that material. For ten years this work engrossed him, and then he branched out into a paving business, and was thus engaged, when appointed superintendent of the poor farm. For the following three years, he acted in this capacity, then retired to take up farming on his own account. In 1901, he was once more called upon to accept appointment to the same office, and for three years more, he gave his services, but again left to carry on his own farm. He was too valuable a man for the people to allow him to remain in private life, however, and for the third time, in December, 1908, he was placed in charge of the poor farm, which is still under his supervision. This property contains 107 acres of excellent land on which corn is raised as the principal crop, although there is sufficient stock for the use of the institution, it being the aim of Mr. Osenton to produce all the inmates need in the way of green vegetables and meat. Being a practical farmer, and the business man, Mr. Osenton knows how to make the farm support its inmates, and is a very busy man, attending as he does to his own excellent farm of 176 acres, as well.

Mr. Osenton was married June 22, 1886, in Buffalo, Sangamon County, Ill., to Lillie Bradley, daughter of Eno and Sarah Bradley, of Buffalo, natives of Illinois, who had lived in Buffalo for many years. They have been dead for some years, and were most excellent people.

Mr. and Mrs. Osenton have had a family as follows: Harley B., Edna Fern, Reed G., Shelby M. Mrs. Osenton died in October, 1908. On October 16, 1909, Mr. Osenton married Ida Kaylor, daughter of Daniel Kaylor, of Buffalo, a farmer and estimable citizen.

Fraternally, Mr. Osenton belongs to Pickwick Lodge, No. 589, K. of P., of Buffalo, and has filled the majority of the offices in it. His family are members of the Methodist Church, which he attends, and contributes largely towards its support. His father and brothers all espoused the cause of Democracy, but since the second Grant campaign, Mr. Osenton has been a Republican and is very prominent in the party in Buffalo, being a member of the County Central Committee and is frequently sent as a delegate to conventions. Upright, honorable, conscientious, Mr. Osenton is an excellent example of the self-reliant man who has worked his own way in life, asking favor of no one, but working hard and saving his earnings. Such a man is a valuable addition to any community.

OSTERMEIER, George Frederick, an enterprising young business man of Springfield, Ill., and a member of the jewelry firm of Ostermeier & Trunk, was born near Springfield, November 11, 1877, a son of August C. and Augustine (Krieger) Ostermeier. August C. Ostermeier was born in Germany, May 6, 1842, and his wife in Darke County, Ohio, March 18, 1855. He came to America with his parents, at the age of eleven years. The family settled first in Ohio, but later Mr. Ostermeier moved to Logan County, Ill., and thence to Sangamon County, where he lived until the spring of 1880, when he purchased land in Christian County, where he and his family have since resided. He has been a farmer all his life. He was married in December, 1870, and he and his wife became parents of four sons and six daughters, all of whom are living, the fourth child being George F. The mother of these children died suddenly, July 12, 1902.

The early education of George F. Ostermeier was acquired in the country schools of Christian County, and he later attended the North-ern Indiana Normal School and Business College, at Valparaiso. He had a natural taste for books and the best literature and made the most of his educational advantages. He lived on his father's farm until he reached his majority, then secured employment in the lumber department of the Deering Harvester Company, Chicago, where he remained one year; then became book-keeper and cashier for Joseph F. Wattier Company, retail jewelers, at 178 West Madison Street, Chicago, remaining there six years and acquiring valuable knowledge and experience for his later business career. In January, 1906, Mr. Ostermeier secured a position with the Illinois Traction System at Springfield, where he remained until August, 1909, when he formed a partnership with Charles A. Trunk, and on October 2nd of that year they opened a retail jewelry store at 518 East Monroe Street, where they conduct a successful and growing business. Both are men of energy and ambition and look carefully after the details of their business and the wants of their customers. They are upright and honest in their dealings and have a good standing in the community. Mr. Ostermeier has not allied himself with any political party in local affairs, choosing to vote for the man rather than the party, but in national issues generally follows the principles of the Democratic party. He is a member of the German Evangelical Lutheran Church.

Mr. Ostermeier was married, at Edinburg, Ill., September 12, 1900, to Elenore Fehring, born in Springfield, January 14, 1880, a daughter of Henry and Elenore (Dahman) Fehring, who still reside on their farm in Christian County. Four children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Ostermeier, namely: Cecil Henry, born August 11, 1901; Gladys Viola, born December 23, 1903; Mildred Marie, born July 2, 1907; and Florence Louise, born March 19, 1911.

OTT, John (deceased), who was a resident of Springfield, Ill., for more than half a century, died at his home at 223 W. Carpenter Street, where he had lived since 1858, April 13, 1901, in his seventy-first year. Mr. Ott was well known in the city, where he had a large number of friends, as a man of sterling integrity and high character. He was employed by several business firms in Springfield, for whom he performed faithful service. He was sincerely mourned in social and church circles, where his loss was deeply felt. Mr. Ott was born in Wurtemburg, Germany, October 14, 1830, one of the eighteen children of John and Burkor (Mongall) Ott, both natives of Germany. The father and mother lived on a farm and both died in Germany, he in 1850 and she in 1847. Of their large family six lived to old age.

John Ott, Jr., spent his boyhood on his father's farm and attended the public schools of his neighborhood. At the age of fifteen years he began learning the trade of cabinet-maker, working at it for some years in Germany and resuming it after settling in the United States. He emigrated to America in 1852, first landing at New Orleans, whence he came direct to Springfield, and was first employed by Williams & Link, with whom he remained fifteen years, then worked five years for General Barkley, after which he entered the employ of Priest & Latham, furniture dealers. Mr. Ott was a stanch Democrat, always performing his work in a satisfactory manner. He occupied the same house during the entire period of his residence in Springfield and up to the date of his death in 1901, and this is now the home of his widow, who also owns property adjoining this on the west. Mr. Ott was a devout Christian and a member of Trinity Lutheran Church. In politics he was a stanch Democrat, and was a man of kindly, genial nature, taking great delight in the companionship of his chosen friends.

Mr. Ott was married, February 28, 1858, to Katherine Geisinger, daughter of Philip and Efa Geisinger, the former born in 1802 and the latter in 1807. Mrs. Ott was born in Bade, Germany, August 12, 1837. The parents were both natives of Germany. They came to the United States in 1848, landing at New Orleans, then proceeding directly to Springfield, Ill., where the father died in 1855 and the mother in 1852. They had four daughters and one son, all of whom are living except the son, who died in February, 1858. One son and two daughters were born to Mr. Ott and his wife, namely: Mrs. Emma Erving, a widow, whose husband died in 1885, is a nurse in Kent, Ill.; John, a carpenter by trade; Elizabeth, wife of Elwell Jacobs, a Lutheran minister. Mrs. Ott has ten grandchildren.

OWENS, John William, for many years a fruit and truck farmer now living at Springfield, Ill., was born at Bryant, Fulton County, Ill., December 7, 1872, a son of Thomas J. and Vina (Barton) Owens, the father born at Akron, Ohio, August 30, 1849, and the mother at Munce, Ind., February 28, 1851. Thomas J. Owens was a miner and farmer by occupation in early life, and in 1866 moved to Memphis, Mo., where for some years he lived on a farm. In 1869 he engaged in coal mining at Bryant, remaining there twelve years, then moving to Peoria, where he continued in that occupation. He subsequently returned to Bryant, but later removed to Lewistown and still later to Canton, and in 1898 to Norris, Ill. One year later he came to Springfield, where he has since lived. He and his wife were parents of twelve children, three of whom are now living: John W., Robert and Edwin.

Mr. Owens attended the district school, the Peoria schools and (one year) night school, and later took a course in the International Correspondence School, of Scranton, Pa., for Civil Service studies. He worked one year as clerk in a store at Farmington, Ill., at the same time attending night school there, then engaged in mining at Bryant for a time, then went to Lewistown in 1894 and, one year later, removed to St. Louis. In 1896 he located at St. David, and went from there to Canton, where he enlisted, May 1, 1898, in Company K, First Illinois Cavalry, being discharged March 1, 1899.

Mr. Owens was married in 1900, at Maples Mill, Ill., to Lulu C. Windsor, born at that place October 5, 1880, a daughter of James M. and Elia (Bodner) Windsor, the father, now deceased, born at Louisville, Ky., and the mother, born near Lewistown, Ill., but died at Maples Mill in 1883. Of the two children born to Mr. Windsor and wife Mrs. Owens was the younger and the other is now deceased. After marriage Mr. Owens and wife went to Havana, Ill., where he operated a fruit and truck farm for ten years with excellent success. He sold his interests there in 1910 and purchased a city residence at Springfield, and he is now engaged in mining in the vicinity. He is an industrious and reliable citizen and has many personal friends. He is a Methodist in religious belief and politically is an Independent. He belongs to U. M. W. A. No. 2403. He and his wife have one child, Oscar J., born November 2, 1901. Their home is at 918 South Tenth Street.

In 1904 Mr. Owens was appointed on the police force at Canton, Ill., on which he served a considerable time. In 1910 he was a candidate for Commissioner, receiving a goodly number of votes.

OWENS, Thomas J.—The valuable mines in Springfield and vicinity have attracted there some of the most reliable men of Sangamon County, who are spending their days developing the vast resources of this particularly favored region of the State. Among these is Thomas J. Owens, born at Akron, Ohio, August 30, 1849, son of Evan and Margaret (Alexander) Owens, the former born in South Wales and the latter in Glasgow, Scotland. The father was a farmer and came to America in 1843, first settling in New York, where he worked on a farm three years. In 1846 he went to Akron, farming there until 1877. He is now residing at Billings, Mont. During the Civil War he served in the Fifty-third Missouri Volunteer Infantry, en-
Johnathan Paddock, the great-great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, a son of Peter, was born in the town of Yarmouth, Barnstable County, Mass., in 1724. He was a prominent man in Duchess County both before and after the Revolutionary War, in which struggle he was Major of a regiment. His son, David Paddock, the great-grandfather of James H., subsequently moved to Kinderhook, N. Y., and in 1800 to Onondaga County, in the same state. In 1832 a large number of the family moved either to Jollet, Ill., or to Racine, Wis., where David Paddock died at the age of ninety-four years.

James Paddock, a son of David and grandfather of James H. Paddock, married Ann McClaughrey, and died in the fall of 1854, at Kankakee, Ill. John W. Paddock, the father of James H., was born February 14, 1815, in Onondaga County, N. Y., his grandfather David Paddock, having been a private in Captain Waterbury's company and Col. Ludington's regiment, was at the battle of Saratoga. John W. Paddock resided in New York after his father had moved to the West, in order to complete his education. Later he studied law and practiced in Will, Dupage, Kendall, Kankaee, Iroquois and Livingston Counties, Ill., from 1837 until 1861. At the outbreak of the Civil War he assisted materially in raising the Seventy-Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and had a surplus of four companies over and above the necessary number, and these he took as a nucleus for the One Hundred Thirteenth Illinois Volunteers, which was known as the Third Board of Trade Regiment. He served as Lieutenant Colonel of this regiment until his death, which occurred at Memphis, in August, 1863, from disease contracted during the siege of Vicksburg in the maritime regions on the Yazoo River. He was a brave man and his memory is preserved with those of other heroes of the Civil War.

John W. Paddock was married twice, first to a Miss Birch and they had two children: Emma, who is now deceased; and Henry, who was First Lieutenant of his company in the Civil War and is now a resident of Cile, Iowa. John W. Paddock was married second to Mrs. Helen Lilliny Paddock, a widow, whose people, the Harveys and Ransoms, came from Massachusetts. Mrs. Paddock is now in her eighty-ninth year and resides at Kankakee, Ill. The following children were born to the second marriage: Helen, who died in infancy; John W. and James H., twins, the former of whom died in infancy; Daniel H., who is deceased, was a prominent attorney of Kankakee, Ill.; Frances H., who is the wife of Duff Sherman, of Providence, R. I.; Lucian, who is the wife of W. W. Cobb, of Kankakee; J. W., who is an attorney at Kankakee, and Mary Ransom, a twin sister, who is the wife of George F. Lovell, who is connected with the paymaster's Department of the U. S. Army station at Chicago; Portio Sophia, who is unmarried; and Catherine Ann, who was drowned when about 22 years old.

James H. Paddock was educated in the public schools of Kankakee, Ill., to which place he was brought in 1853, when three years of age. At the age of fifteen years he started as a page in the Illinois State Senate, from 1867 until 1877 was Assistant Postmaster; was made Secretary of the State Senate in 1877; served as Secretary of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission from 1889 to 1893, and as member of the Board of Livestock Commission from 1893 to 1901.

On October 9, 1873, Mr. Paddock was married to Miss Mary L. Crawford, of Kankakee, formerly of Portland, Me., a daughter of Franklin and Frances (Daniels) Crawford, and they have two children: Harry W. and Frances. Harry W. Paddock was born April 6, 1873, at Kankakee, and is now a Tax Attorney of the Chicago Telephone Company, Chicago, Ill. He married Jessie Gilbert and they have one daughter, Mariana. Frances Paddock married George E. Keyes of Springfield, Ill., and they reside at Springfield, and have one son, George E., Jr. Mr. and Mrs. Paddock are members of the Episcopal Church. He has been a lifelong Republican and is a member of the patriotic order of the Loyal Legion, of the Union League Club, Chicago, of the Illinois County Club, and the Sangamo Club, Springfield, Ill.

PAGE, Alonzo, who has lived retired for the past twenty years, was long actively engaged in farming in Sangamon County and is honored as a veteran of the Civil War. He now lives at No. 555 West Mason Street, Springfield, and has many friends and acquaintances in the city. He was born in Ohio, July 5, 1838, a son of Archless and Urany (Holmes) Page, the father a native of New York and the mother of Pennsylvania. The parents were married in the latter State and then located in Virginia. Later they moved to Ohio, lived there several years, and eventually came to Pontiac, Livingston County, Ill., the father purchasing 100 acres of land near there, upon which he lived until his death in 1867. He was a soldier in the Civil War, in which struggle he also had six sons at the same time, namely: Alonzo and John, in Company E, Fifty-seventh Ohio Infantry; Preston in the One Hundred Thirty-ninth Illinois; Lorenzo and William, in the One Hundred Twenty-sixth Ohio; and Henry in the Seventieth Ohio. The father had one brother, Ezekiel Page.

In boyhood Alonzo Page attended the public schools in Ohio and worked on his father's farm, where he remained until he was twenty-two years of age, at which time he enlisted in Company E, Fifty-seventh Ohio, under Capt. Guthrie, serving three years. They marched from Covington to Perryville, Ky., where they encountered the first battle, which lasted one day. They went to Knoxville, Tenn., built a fort and remained there one month, then moved on to Kingston, Ga., where they camped a short time, whence they moved on to Atlanta, and there took part in their second battle, which lasted one day. They soon afterward participated in their third battle, which was at Franklin, Tenn. Their next serious engagement was the Battle of Nashville, which lasted one day, soon afterward went to the city of Washington, D. C., and thence were ordered to Wilmington, N. C., where they camped a short time, after which they went to Raleigh and later to Salisbury in the same State. Mr. Page was mustered out at Salisbury, June 28, 1865, went to Baltimore, Md., and then on to Cleveland and thence to Camp Dennison, Ohio, where he received his final discharge. He was wounded at the battle of Perryville, the first serious engagement in which he participated. He returned to Rochester, Brown County, Ohio, after leaving the army. He is now an active member of Stephenson Post G. A. R. No. 30, of Springfield. In politics he is a Republican. He came to Sangamon County in 1882 and engaged in farming, which was his occupation all his active life, but for the past twenty years has been retired. He well remembers Abraham Lincoln, for whom he voted twice, and the noted Mr. Douglas once made a speech in the rear of the house where Mr. Page now lives.

Mr. Page was married in Ohio in June, 1861, to Miss Margaret Cox, daughter of Elzy and Delila Cox, who came to the United States in early life. By this marriage Mr. Page had four children, namely: Cornellus; Norah Urany, wife of Frank Miller, a painter living in Springfield; William M., a teamster. He also has seven grandchildren. Mr. Page was married (second) April 9, 1901, to Mrs. Margaret (Purnell) Morris, born January 6, 1845, a daughter of John and Sally Ann Purnell, natives of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Page's father came to Rochester, Ill., and died July 20, 1852, and her mother died January 16, 1892. By her first husband, Mrs. Page had eleven children, of whom three are living, namely: William E. Morris, of Sangamon County; Norah Willett Courtmey, wife of Andrew Courtmey, a farmer; Margaret, wife of Brocksen Page, employed at the Illinois Watch Factory. Mrs. Page had eight grandchildren, of whom five are now living. Mr. Page has one great-grandchild.

PAGE, John A., a veteran of the Civil War and a prominent citizen of Woodside Township, Sangamon County, was born in Woburn, Mass., March 14, 1841, son of John O. and Elizabeth (Finnegan) Page, the former born at Londonderry, N. H., and the latter in Limerick, Ireland. The father, who was a tanner and shoe manufacturer, moved from his native state to Massachusetts, where he carried on his two lines of work until his death, in 1880. He had five sons and three daughters, and one child survives besides John A., Oliver H., living in Montreal, Canada. The mother's parents died in Ireland and she came to America on a sailing vessel when a girl with a family, every member of which perished on the way over, leaving her a stranger in a strange land. John O. Page's father was a "Minute Man" in the Revolution.

The childhood of John A. Page was passed in his native State, where he received his education. In youth he worked in his father's tannery. As a boy he ran away to sea and was shipwrecked off the coast of Newfoundland. When he was seventeen years of age he went to Lawrence, Mass., where he spent three years. In 1861 he enlisted as a member of the State Militia of Massachusetts, and in the month of April of that year became a member of Company I, Sixth Massachusetts, for three months, at the end of his term re-enlisting in the Fourth Massachusetts Battery, of which Ben Butler was Brigadier-General, as it was part of the New England Division. Mr. Page became Corporal and later Second Lieutenant, finishing his term in March, 1864, when he resigned.

After the war Mr. Page came to Illinois, settling in Sumner Township, Kankakee County, where he purchased a farm and conducted it two years, then went to Chicago and became shipping clerk for Wall Brothers & Lighthall, of Alnsworth Station, now South Chicago. About 1867 he came to Braidwood and lived in that village about thirteen years, conducting a grocery and bakery business part of this time. He then moved to Springfield, where for twenty years he conducted a dairy business. Since about 1898 he has been engaged in farming and gardening, in which line of work he has been very successful. He lives at the place he first occupied on coming to Springfield and owns sixteen acres of fertile and well cultivated land in Woodside Township.

Mr. Page is member of Stephenson Post No. 30, G. A. R., of Springfield. He was elected School Director in 1880 and served one term. He is a devout member of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church and active in its support. He is well known in his community and popular with his many friends. He has established himself in the esteem and respect of all and has an excellent reputation.

Mr. Page was married (first) in Lawrence, Mass., in 1861, to Nellie Gray, a native of Massachusetts, who died in 1872, and to this union three daughters and one son were born. The son is deceased and of the daughters: Annie, wife of Nick Roden, lives in Springfield; Mrs. Nellie Snyder lives in Kansas City, and the third lives in Richmond, Va. Mr. Page was married (second) in September, 1874, in Joliet, Ill., to Alice DeMars, who was born near Montreal, Canada, in 1841 and came with her parents to Kankakee, Ill. Her father was a farmer and spent his last days in Illinois, as did his wife. They were Canadian-French. Of the five children born to Mr. Page by his second marriage four are living: Edna, widow of Harry Walsh, lives in Springfield; Edgar, living in Bloomington, Ill.; Christopher, lives with his father; Grace, wife of James Ostenbury, living on a farm near Springfield. There are seventeen grandchildren and one great-grandchild in the family.

PAINKE, Bernhard (deceased).—Col. Roosevelt, in his late speech in Berlin, stated in effect that Germany had given to America much that was good, and that no country dominated by such virtues as are taught in Germany, could fail to prosper. His views are heartily endorsed by all who have been brought into association with German-Americans, especially those who located in Springfield, where they are always found laboring for good government, excellent schools, and law and order. The late Bernhard Pahnke was one of the best examples of sturdy German manhood that has ever located in Sangamon County. He was born in Prussia, Germany, June 16, 1800, and although taken away in the prime of life, managed to accomplish much. His parents were natives of Germany, where they engaged in farming.

In 1835 Mr. Pahnke came to the United States and to St. Louis, and thence to Springfield, which remained his home until his demise, June 26, 1861. He remained with his parents while living in Germany, and with them farmed, but upon locating in Springfield embarked in a cement business, which occupied him until his death. He never joined any fraternal organizations or took part in public affairs, devoting himself to his family and business matters, although he voted with the Democratic party.

Mr. Pahnke was married in Cleveland, Ohio, to Minnie Hoffe, born in Prussia, Germany, October 20, 1866, a daughter of Charles and Lena Hoffe, also natives of Germany. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Pahnke: Charlie L., born January 26, 1859; Gustava, born October 4, 1853; John, born October 8, 1855; and Clara, born January 18, 1858. Mrs. Pahnke resides at No. 1520, East Adams Street, Springfield.

PALMER, George Thomas, M. D.—That the professional man, in spite of the exactions of his calling, may prove himself of inestimable worth to the community in which he resides, by taking an active part in its civic betterment, is demonstrated in the experience of Dr. George Thomas Palmer, to whom belongs the credit of having placed the health department of the city of Springfield upon a sound and efficient basis. Dr. Palmer was born here March 7, 1875, being the son of John Mayo and Ellen Clark (Robertson) Palmer, and grandson of Senator John M.
Palmer. The latter, who became one of Illinois most eminent men, was born in Scott County, Kentucky, but came to Illinois, where he was educated in Shurtleff College. At the beginning of the Civil War, he was made Colonel of the Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Regiment; later becoming Major-General in charge of the Fourteenth Army Corps. Still later, he was made Military Governor of Kentucky, and directed the affairs of that Commonwealth as only a man of his unusual executive ability could have done. His incumbency of the gubernatorial chair of Illinois, to which he was elected on the Republican ticket, was marked by a brilliant and forceful administration, and he was equally valuable in the United States Senate. His election as Senator was made on the Democratic platform, but during the money troubles and free silver agitation, he cast his influence with the Gold Democrats, and ran on the ticket of that party for President. Dr. Palmer was equally fortunate in his maternal grandfather, Dr. William Robertson, who was a well-known student, physician and philanthropist of Carlinville, Illinois. An enduring monument to his memory exists in Robertson Hall of Blackburn College, which he built.

John Mayo Palmer, father of Dr. Palmer, was born in Carlinville, Illinois, March 10, 1848, and his wife was born in the same place. Dr. Palmer attended Blackburn College and was graduated from the Harvard Law School with the degree of LL. B. For many years he was engaged in the practice of law with his father and the late William E. Shutt, but in 1888, he went to Tacoma, Washington, later to remove to Chicago, where he formed a partnership with ex-United States Senator James R. Doollittle, of Wisconsin, and Edgar R. Tolman, under the firm name of Doollittle, Palmer & Tolman. So distinguished was his career in Chicago, that he was made Corporation Counsel of Chicago under Mayor John P. Hopkins. Mr. Palmer, who was recognized by his colleagues as one of the most brilliant student lawyers of the State, died at Battle Creek, Michigan, in 1904.

Dr. Palmer passed his boyhood in Springfield and in the State of Washington, attending successively the public schools of Springfield, Wyman Institute at Upper Alton, Illinois, and Washington College, at Tacoma, Washington. In 1888, he was graduated from the Medical Department of the Northwestern University. While still a boy in Springfield, he edited an amateur paper, a paper at Wyman Institute, now the Western Military Academy; was editor of the first school paper in the State of Washington, and has always retained his interest in literary and journalistic work. In connection with his brother, Robertson Palmer, and Herbert S. Hadley, now Governor of Missouri, he managed the Northwestern Law Review, and later became the first manager of the Bulletin of the Northwestern University Medical School. For eight years, he was editor and publisher of The Chicago Clinic, having associated with him Dr. Marcus P. Hatfield, Professor of Pediatrics in the Medical Department of the University of Illinois, and in the Chicago Clinical School.

On leaving medical school, Dr. Palmer engaged in the practice of medicine in Chicago, and, serving under Dr. Marcus P. Hatfield, became instructor in the disease of children in the Chicago Clinical School and founder of the Trinity Diet Kitchen for Infants, the first milk charity for infants to be established in the West. In 1903, he was made assistant secretary of the Illinois State Board of Health and upon his appointment to that office, he returned to Springfield. In 1905, Dr. Palmer rendered valuable service when in charge of the yellow fever quarantine at Culro, but his desire to resume his professional work, brought about his resignation in 1907, and he entered the private practice in Springfield. In 1909, his public health service received public recognition and he was appointed head of the Health Department by Mayor John S. Schnepf, which office he now holds. During his administration, he has succeeded in completely reorganizing the department and placing it in a position of efficiency said to be second to none other in the State, and with all of the improvement in public service, the expenditures of the office were reduced almost $3,000 during the first year. He is now Trustee of the Orphanage and the Home of the Aged; Director and First Vice-President of the Iliini Country Club, and is physician to the Springfield Hospital, the Old Ladies' Home for the Friendless. He has served as Secretary and Treasurer of the Sangamon County Medical Society and belongs to the Illinois State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the Chicago Medical Society, the Chicago Pediatric Society and the American Medical Editors' Association. He is a very prominent member of Christ Episcopal Church and is a member of the vestry of that organization.

Dr. Palmer is also a member of the committee chosen by the Chicago Tuberculosis Institute to organize a state-wide crusade against tuberculosis, and is Chairman of the Committee on Public Hygiene of the Illinois State Conference of Charities and Corrections.

On June 22, 1898, Dr. Palmer was married at Alton, to Maude Gregg. Mrs. Palmer has been exceedingly active in civic and philanthropic work in Springfield, serving as President of the Springfield Woman's Club for the year 1909-1910.

PALMER, John McAuley, former soldier, Governor and United States Senator, was born in Scott County, Ky., September 13, 1817, the son of Louis D. and Ann Hansford (Tutt) Palmer, the former born in Northumberland County, Va., June 3, 1781, and the latter in Culpeper County, same State. Louis D. Palmer was the third son of Isaac and Ann (McAuley) Palmer, both natives of Northumberland County, the former born November 1, and the latter in April, 1747, both of whom died in Christian County, Ky., within a few months of each other, being then the oldest persons in that portion of the State. The maternal grandparents, Louis and Isabella (Yancey) Tutt, were born about the year 1750, their ancestors being early settlers of Virginia, the Tutts from England and the Yanceys from Wales. The grandfather Palmer was a soldier of the Revolution, being enrolled as a "minute man" and the receiver of a pension in his later years.

In 1818, Mr. Palmer's parents removed to Christian County, Ky., where the family remained until 1831, and where the children received their rudimentary education, one of their early teachers being Isaac Boone, a relative of the famous Kentucky pioneer and explorer, Daniel Boone. In the year last named, the parents removed to Illinois, settling in Paddock's Prairie in the northern part of Madison County, about ten miles northeast of Alton, where the father built a log house in which the family lived during the first year. The son John remained in Kentucky with his grandparents for the first few months, but in October following joined his parents, crossing the Ohio River at Ford's Ferry, and proceeding through Illinois by way of Equality, Mt. Vernon and Carlyle to Edwardsville, some eight miles northwest of which his parents had located. The youthful immigrant always retained a vivid recollection of this journey through Southern Illinois, especially of his first sight of a prairie landscape in the vicinity of McLeansboro, Hamilton County, and which grew in interest as he advanced northward. The Kentucky home being in the southern part of that State, during a period of much agitation on questions affecting land titles and the interpretation of conflicting laws, as well as at a time when the slavery issue was of growing interest, the impressions there received undoubtedly exerted a deep influence upon the mind of the future citizen of Illinois.

The first summer after arriving in Illinois was spent with his father in working on the new farm, during a part of the time being engaged in driving a team of four yoke of oxen, breaking the prairie sod with a twenty-four-inch plow. During one winter he and a younger brother devoted their time to cutting saw-logs on government land, thereby earning forty-eight dollars, to which their father added two dollars more, with expenses in reaching the Government Land Office, enabling John M. to purchase forty acres of land in his own name, which later was deeded to the father. An accident which occurred about this time in the summer of 1834, is thus described in the "Autobiography of John M. Palmer," as published in "The Bench and Bar of Illinois," issued under the editorship of Gen. Palmer in 1889:

"One evening, while my father and self and younger brothers were discussing the subject of education and matters of that kind, my father said to me, in reply to some expression of a wish to obtain a good education: 'Very well, sir, you owe me four years of service yet; I will give you that; go and get an education.' I looked at him with an expression of surprise, no doubt, and asked in an excited, trembling voice, 'When may I go, sir?' He seemed amused and said, 'Tomorrow morning, if you like.' I remember that I left the room to conceal my feelings. After recovering my composure, I returned to the room where my father was seated and sat for some time in silence, when he said with signs of emotion, 'I have no money to expend for your education, but a healthy boy, as you are, needs no help; you may go tomorrow morning. I give you your time. Do not disgrace me. May God bless you!"

That this incident proved the starting point in the new career of the future lawyer, soldier and statesman, who, as he says in his autobiography, "had looked forward to the independence of manhood with the eagerness of hope," and "had reveled in dreams of results to be accomplished," is shown by the fact that, after an early breakfast the next morning, starting out on foot, without money and without extra clothes, but—as he again expresses it—"with my newly acquired fortune, 'my time,' with all of its hopes and possibilities," the afternoon found him in Upper Alton, where recently had been established a manual-labor school, which later became the nucleus of Shurtleff College. Here he immediately found employment in making and carrying mortar for a man engaged in building a house, thus earning enough money to pay his board, purchase some clothes and finally enabling him, with a surplus of five dollars, to enter college. For a while he paid his board by working on Saturdays, later in company with an older brother, earning some money by clearing a street of timber between Upper Alton and Middletown, a village between Upper and Lower Alton.

Fired by zeal for the independence of Texas from Mexico, in the summer of 1835 he enlisted in a band of "Revolutionists," but while on the way to take passage on a boat down the Mississippi, was fortunately prevented from carrying out this plan by the purchase with the payment of a small debt incurred in the purchase of some clothes. His vacations were occupied in various kinds of employment, at one time (1838) being engaged in the peddling of clocks for a Connecticut firm. It was during this period, while in Hancock County, he met for the first time Stephen A. Douglas, who was then conducting an unsuccessful campaign for Congress against the late John T. Stuart of Springfield.

In the winter of 1838-39 he taught a three-months' school near Canton, Fulton County, and while thus employed began reading law, thus marking a new step in his career. In March following, after visiting his father, he went to Carlinville, where his older brother, Elihu, was pastor of a Baptist church, and there entered the office of John S. Greatonse as a student of law. Regarding this period (again quoting from his autobiography) Gen. Palmer says: "I was aided in my studies by that great promoter of diligence, poverty." His admittance to the bar took place December 11, 1839, when he made a trip to Springfield for this purpose in company with his preceptor, Mr. Greshouse, there taking an examination by Stephen A. Douglas and J. Young Scaummon, and receiving his license from Judges Lockwood and Browne of the Supreme Court. While during a period of nearly sixty years, Gen. Palmer enjoyed an extensive practice which brought him in close contact with the most distinguished members of the bar and jurists of Illinois, including such names as Abraham Lincoln, O. H. Browning, Stephen T. Logan, John T. Stuart, Milton Hay, and Judges Lockwood, Reynolds, Breese, David Davis, and many others, it is nevertheless his public and official life that will be of especial interest in this connection.

While still a student at law in 1838 he was an unsuccessful candidate for County Clerk of Maccoupin County, but in 1843 he was elected Probate Justice of the Peace, serving in that capacity until 1847, when he was chosen Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of that year, serving in that body as a member of the Committee on Education. During the same year he failed of reelection as Probate Justice, but in May, 1848, was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of his predecessor, and in November following was elected County Judge under the new Constitution which he had assisted in framing. In 1852 he came into greater prominence by election without opposition as State Senator to fill a vacancy, his political associations up to this time having been with the Democratic party. On the adoption by Congress in May, 1854, of the Kansas-Nebraska Act, he took a pronounced attitude in opposition to that measure; in November of that year he was reelected Senator for a full term as an Anti-Nebraska Democrat, and during the next session of the his first term to the United States Senate. In Legislature (1855) bore a prominent part in securing the election of Lyman Trumbull for U. S. Senate; his seat in the Senate and, on May 29th of that year, served as President of the State Convention held at Bloomington, which marked the organization of the Republican party in Illinois. This event was commemorated by a reunion of surviving members of that convention and citizens of the State, held at Bloomington, May 29, 1900—only a few months before Gen. Palmer's decease—in which he took a deep interest, delivering one of the principal addresses on that occasion.

In 1859 Gen. Palmer was a candidate for Congress, but as the outcome of a vigorous campaign in a strongly Democratic district, was defeated by John A. McClernand, the Democratic nominee. In 1860, however, he was chosen Presidential Elector for the State-at-large on the Republican ticket, casting his vote in the Electoral College for Mr. Lincoln.

Chronologically this brings us to the war period, in which Gen. Palmer bore a conspicuous part. After serving as a member from Illinois of the Peace Conference which assembled in Washington on February 4, 1861, by invitation of the State of Virginia, in the hope of solving the issues presented by the secession movement—but which resulted in total failure—on May 9th following he was elected Colonel of the Fourteenth Illinois, organized at Jacksonville, this being the second Illinois regiment organized under President Lincoln's second call. A few months later he was promoted to Brigadier-General and, on November 20, 1862, to Major-General, serving until September 1, 1865, and taking part in some of the most notable battles of the war, including those of Stone River and Chickamauga. Not the least important part of his service, however, was rendered as Commander of the Department of Kentucky, to which he was assigned by order of President Lincoln in January, 1865, in which, during the last year of the war and the reconstruction period, he had to deal with a number of questions arousing the animosity of the civil authorities of Kentucky, and resulting in indictments for alleged violation of State law. In all of these he showed his courage and independence, as well as his determination to protect the rights of the colored classes. Most of these issues were solved, however, by the final adoption of the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery in all the States. During the latter part of his service he met Gen. Grant in Washington who offered to recommend his appointment to a position in the regular army, which he declined.

Returning to his home in Carlinville after retirement from the army, he soon after entered into partnership for the practice of his profession with the late Milton Hay of Springfield, removing to that city in April, 1867, which continued to be his home for the rest of his life. In November, 1868, he was the Republican candidate for Governor, receiving a majority of 50,650 over J. R. Eden, his Democratic opponent. During his administration he again illustrated his independence by voting probably a larger number of bills than any of his predecessors—according to his own statement, the number amounting to 112. The reasons generally given were bad policy, injustice or violation of the Constitution, and, in many cases, where bills were finally passed over his veto, his position was sustained by decisions of the Supreme Court.

In 1872 Gen. Palmer was one of a large number of previous members of the Republican party in Illinois who supported the nomination of Horace Greeley for President on what was called the Liberal Republican Platform, and later acted in cooperation with the Democratic party. In 1878 he received the Democratic nomination for Governor as the opponent of Hon. Joseph W. Flcer, but was defeated. Two years later (1890) he was nominated by the Democratic State Convention for United States Senator, and after a sharp struggle in the session of the Legislature which followed—and in which three Farmers Alliance members held the balance of power—on the 154th ballot he was elected as successor of Charles B. Farwell.
The first joint ballot was taken January 26th and the last March 11th, Gen. Palmer then recieving 103 votes to 101 for Cicero J. Lindley and one for Alson J. Streeter.
In 1896 Gen. Palmer received the vote of the “Sound Money” branch of the Democratic party for the Presidency, and while he failed to win a vote in the Electoral College, his devotion to sound money principles was widely recognized. Retiring from his seat in the United States Senate in 1897, he resumed his law practice as head of the firm of Palmer, Shutt & Lester, but in declining health of his later years, devoted his last labors to the preparation of his “Story of an Earnest Life,” which was completed a few weeks before his death.
Gen. Palmer was married (first) on December 20, 1842, to Miss Malinda Ann Needley, with whom he spent the first year of their married life in a log house on the present site of the court house in the city of Carlinville. Mrs.
Palmer died May 9, 1885, having borne her husband ten children of whom the three follow-survive: Elizabeth, widow of Dr. John Pitt Matthews, of Carlinville, Ill.; Harriet, wife of E. G. Crabb, of Corpus Christi, Tex.; and Jessie Palmer Weber, Librarian of the State Historical Library. John Mayo Palmer, his eldest son, was his law partner and was with him during the Civil War.
April 4, 1888, the General married as his second wife, Mrs. Hannah M. Kimball, a daughter of James L. Lamb, a former prominent citizen and business man of Springfield. The General’s death occurred at his home in the city of Springfield, September 25, 1900, his second wife still surviving him. Mr. Palmer was a member of the Baptist church.
Besides the last address, his life delivered at Bloomington, on May 29, 1900, in celebration of the forty-fourth anniversary of the convention held in that city for the organization of the Republican party in Illinois in May, 1856, other memorable speeches and addresses of Gen.
Palmer’s later life included a speech before colored citizens on the seventh anniversary of the issue of Mr. Lincoln’s Emancipation Proclaama-tion; an address, May 31, 1871, on the reintermant of Gov. Bissell’s remains in Oak Ridge Cemetery; the welcome to Gen. Grant, May 5, 1889; a speech in the Hall of Representatives in honor of Gen. John A. Logan, in February, 1887; an address at Snodgrass Hill on dedication of Chickamauga Park, September 19, 1885; and an oration delivered at Galesburg, October 7, 1896, on the thirty-eighth anniversary of the Lincoln-Douglas debate in that city. A zealous supporter of the doctrine of “State Rights,” he was always an earnest advocate of the rights of the citizen without regard to “race, color or previous condition of servitude.”

PALMER, (Gen.) John McAuley. (Vol. I, p. 412.)

PALMER, Mrs. John M.—The lives of all great men are largely formed by their mothers and wives. Too much credit cannot be given to the women who, remaining in the shelter of their homes, exert the most powerful influence in the world, ever pointing upward and onward. The majority of our great statesmen frankly admit their debt of gratitude to the women of their family, and Mrs. John M. Palmer, widow of the distinguished statesman for many years Senator from Illinois, is one who always inspired her husband to deeds that resulted in good to his country and distinction to himself and family.

Mrs. Palmer was born in Springfield, Ill., July 6, 1838, and is one of the most eminent of its daughters. She is a daughter of the late James L. and Susan H. (Cranmer) Lamb. Mr. Lamb was born in Pennsylvania in November 1800, while his wife was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in August, 1803. He was a prominent man, engaging in large enterprises as a merchant and packer, and he left a comfortable fortune at his demise.

The educational advantages enjoyed by Mrs.
Palmer were secured at Monticello Seminary at Godfrey, Ill., where she was a favorite with teachers and classmates alike, and from which she returned home to become, on June 18, 1802, the bride of Legh R. Kimball. For three years she made him an excellent wife, and mourned his death May 30, 1805, Meanwhile John M.
Palmer was playing an Important part in Illinois affairs. He had been Governor of the great commonwealth and Mrs. Kimball learned to esteem the great statesman. When both were deprived by death of those they had selected as life partners, the distinguished man and the charming widow were mutually at-ttracted, and their admiration for each other resulted in their marriage, April 4, 1888. From then on Mrs. Palmer was her husband’s constant inspiration. During the time he was Senator she graced Washington society and she sustained him during his campaign for the Presidency. During his last days she was his comfort and delight, and when he died, September 25, 1900, it was in their beautiful home in Springfield, which her loving care had made so pleasant for him. She now resides at 1104 South Sixth Street, sustained by her memories of him and his devotion to her.

Mrs. Palmer is a consistent member of the Baptist Church, in which she has long been an active worker, and she is loved for her sympathetic nature, as well as for her many graces of character, her wide experience and her knowledge of men and events. The people of Springfield are proud of her and her long associations with the capital city where she was born and which has ever been her home.

PANGLE, Sylvester.—Many of the farmers of today are specializing in gardening, having proven that this branch of agricultural industry is one productive of satisfactory results. Sangamou County land is so fertile and valuable that much of it is divided up into small tracts, which are devoted to the growing of small fruits and vegetables. One of the men who is successfully engaged in this line of work is Sylvester Pangle of Woodside Township, owner of eleven acres of as good land as can be found in the entire county. He was born in Bates County, Mo., December 14, 1857, a son of Joseph K. and Sarah (Robertson) Pangle, natives of Virginia and Effingham County, Ill., respectively.

Joseph K. Pangle, who was a cabinet-maker by trade, migrated to Illinois at a very early day, settling near Springfield. Later the family moved to Bates County, Mo., where the father continued working at his trade, and manufactured some fine handmade furniture. Owing to the disturbances occasioned by the war, the family returned to Illinois, settling in Effingham County, where the father lived for twenty-five years, at the expiration of which period he moved to Springfield, and there his death occurred. There were seven children in his family, four of whom survive: McClelland, a tile manufacturer, resides in Sangamon County; Mrs. W. Y. Sanford, lives near Effingham, her husband being connected with the Frank Sanford Furniture Company; Mrs. George Summersgill, whose husband is also connected with the above mentioned concern, and Sylvester.

Sylvester Pangle first attended school at Altonam, Effingham County, and finished his education in that place. During the life of his parents Mr. Pangle devoted himself to their care, his father surviving until he was seventy-six years of age, passing away in 1892. The mother survived him until 1905, when she died, being then also seventy-six. This good son, during all these years, did some farming and gardening, and clerked in a store for a time. His knowledge of his work, which was so well felt that in gardening he could obtain the best results. In 1904, he came to Woodside Township, where he bought his present home, and proceeded to develop it until he now has an estate of which he may well be proud. It has been his practice to work along scientific lines, using improved machinery, and enriching his land so as to produce the best results. His products are of so superior a class that he secures the highest prices for them, shipping to distant markets.

The marriage of Mr. Pangle occurred in Springfield April 9, 1902, when he was united with Mrs. Susie (Childers) Hughey born in Auburn Township, Sangamon County. Later her folks moved to Curran Township, where she resided until her marriage. She was a daughter of William and Mirilda (Deper) Childers. They were natives of Tennessee and Chatham Township, Sangamon County. They resided in Chatham Township where he farmed until his death June 11, 1909. Mrs. Childers is now living with her daughter, Mrs. Pangle. Her parents were settlers of that locality, and highly respected in their neighborhood. No children have been born of this marriage.

Mrs. Pangle is a consistent member of the Seventh Day Adventists Church and a most charitable lady, who presides with dignity and housewifely skill over her household. Mr. Pangle is a Democrat, but has never been willing to give his name for use on the party ticket. Absorbed in his work, he has no time for public matters, aside from voting for the men he believes will produce the best results. He and his wife have many friends in their neighborhood, and his business associates esteem Mr. Pangle highly because of his honorable dealings and strict adherence to the letter of any agreement into which he may enter.

PAPE, Charles Henry, a highly esteemed farmer of Cotton Hill Township, Sangamon County, Ill., is a self-made man and has been very successful in his operations. He was born in the Province of Westphalia, Prussia, Germany, February 2, 1840, son of Charles H. and Caroline Pape, both natives of that country, who came to the United States in 1848 and subsequently settled in Monroe County, Ill., where both died. The grandparents all died in Germany. Charles Henry Pape was five years old when his parents came to America and he was reared by his mother's brother in Germany, where he received his education. At the age of eighteen years he came to America and spent three years with his parents in Monroe County, then moved to St. Louis, where he obtained employment as fireman for a railroad company. He spent twenty-two years in this line, being promoted to the position of engineer. About 1883 he came to Sangamon County and engaged in farmling and later came to his present home. He was always fond of outdoor life and has been successful as a farmer. He owns eighty-three acres of land, which he has brought to a high state of fertility, and still keeps active in carrying on his farm, although he has reached the age where many men retire.

Mr. Pape has been twice married, (first) in St. Louis, to Lizzie White, who died in that city in 1865, leaving three children: Charles, married Rose Raper, and they have three children—Lenz, August and Adda. (second) Mr. Pape married Pet Barker and they have seven children—Earl, Harry, Jessie, Virgil, Dec, Harley and Amme; Lizzie, married John Haines and they have five children—Verne, Goldie, Grace, Viola, Clara and Virgil. Mr. Pape's second marriage took place August 30, 1874, when he was united with Antoinette Theresa Vogel, a native of St. Louis, and they became parents of children as follows: Louisa, born June 7, 1875, married Tom Funderburk, and they have four children—Ray, Carrie, Glenn and Willey; Henry, born April 26, 1877, married Kate Jones and they have three children—Lewis, George and May; Emma, born September 4, 1879, married Bert Delay, and they have three children—Cecil, Glady's and Ross; Clemmon O., born May 21, 1882, at home; Otto, born October 18, 1885, married Bertha Boardman, and they have one child, Gordon; Clara, born February 28, 1801, at home; three children died in infancy. The oldest son, Charles, is a grand-father, as his daughter Lena is married and has three children, making Charles H. Pape a great-grandfather, in which fact he takes great pride. He and his wife have given their children the best educational advantages within their power.

Mr. Pape and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church but most of the children have joined the Methodist Church. He is a Democrat in general politics, but votes for the principle rather than for party. While living in Montgomery County he served as Road Commissioner, otherwise he has taken little part in public affairs. He is a member of the Masonic Order and of the Brotherhood of Engineers. He is genial and pleasant in manner and has formed many warm friendships since coming to Sangamon County, being recognized as a man of upright character and true worth.

PARK, George W.—Sangamon County is noted for its men who have a thorough knowledge of agricultural methods and the science of breeding stock. Probably the conditions in this part of the State are as nearly ideal as anywhere to be found for the successful raising of great crops of grain, and the fertile pasture land is especially adapted to the needs of the stock raiser. George W. Park, a leading agriculturist and stockman of Sangamon County, who is carrying on operations on Section S, Maxwell Township, was born August 4, 1873, a son of Thomas N. and Sarah E. (Franklin) Park.

Thomas N. Park was born in Sangamon County, Ill., February 16, 1831, on the farm of his father, James Park, on Lick Creek, where the latter had settled coming from Kentucky, and entered a large tract of land. Thomas N. Park was a member of a family of fourteen children, of whom Sarah J., born July 21, 1821, married D. Gibson, and died August 8, 1889; John G., born July 7, 1822, in Sangamon County; James A., married Sarah E., daughter of J. Pape, of Maxwell Township; Harriet A., born September 12, 1823, married Allen Short, and died June 6, 1900; Robert M., born December 13, 1824, resides with his daughter near Decatur, Ill.; Mary L., born December 25, 1825, married Frank George, deceased, and now resides in Emuburg, Christian County; Elizabeth H., born February 10, 1827, is the widow of William Morris and resides in Loomis, and Julia A., born April 17, 1829, married Joseph Riggs (now deceased), and moved to McDonough County, where she reared a large family and died February 2, 1900.

Thomas N. Park started out on his own account early in life, engaging as a clerk in a store at Loomis, and later in Iowa, in fact turning his hand to any honest labor that presented itself. Finally, he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, in which almost all of his life was spent, and his perseverance, his hard, unremitting toil and his thorough knowledge of agricultural conditions enabled him to acquire a tract of 500 acres of some of the finest farming land in Sangamon County. Prior to his death, which occurred July 6, 1910, Mr. Park gave to each of his children a comfortable home and provided for their welfare.

Thomas N. Park was married three times, his first wife being Margaret Fowler, whom he married March 17, 1855, and who died November 20, 1858. She was born May 3, 1830, and bore her husband two children: James and Alice, both of whom died in infancy. On December 26, 1861, Mr. Park was united in marriage, with Miss Sarah Y. Hudson, who was born February 9, 1844, and who died January 23, 1859, having been the mother of two children, namely: Lavenna, born April 1, 1854, who married D. C. Franklin, a farmer of Maxwell Township, and Mary, born February 13, 1856, who died during July of the same year. The third marriage of Thomas N. Park was to Sarah E. Franklin, who was born near Edinburg, Christian County, Ill., November 2, 1858, a daughter of William Franklin. She was married to Mr. Park in October, 1871, and was the mother of two children: George W. and Thomas Elmer, and died July 30, 1900. In early life she was a member of the Christian Church, but on coming to this location there being no church of that denomination, she united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and died in that faith.

Thomas N. Park was a man of the highest integrity and the strictest honesty. Plain and outspoken and well versed in the topics and happenings of his day, he was fair in all matters and was ever ready to hear another's side of an argument. These characteristics were recognized by his fellow-townsmen as just the sort of attributes needed in the man to represent them as Justice of the Peace, and during his twelve years in that office no decision handed down by him was ever reversed by the higher courts. In addition he served as Supervisor of the township for many years as well as Assessor until he refused to accept another nomination, and in every office in which he served he showed that he was there in the interests of the people and not trying to further his own political aspirations. His political faith was that of the Republican party. Mr. Park was a devout member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and when it came to the union between the Cumberland and the Presbyterian Church he was outspoken in his arguments against such a movement, the idea being repulsive to him that the church in which he had been baptized and in whose service he had spent a long life should be taken over by another body. His death was a severe loss to the community in which he had resided so long, and it will be a long time before another can be found to take his place.

George W. Park was born on the farm and his youth was spent there, his education being secured in the district schools and the Springfield Commercial College, where he took a commercial course. With the exception of these three months spent in Springfield, Mr. Park has always lived on the farm, and his occupations of stockraising and agriculture have been uniformly successful. Like his father he has been a staunch Republican, and has served creditably as Justice of the Peace. He is socially connected with the Odd Fellows, Lodge No. 881 of New Berlin, an ancient Masonic Lodge No. SIS, Modern Woodmen of America. With his wife he attends the Cumberland Church.

On October 17, 1894, Mr. Park was married to Josie E. Brockelsby, who died February 22, 1898, having had one daughter, Lutie Merle, born January 14, 1896, residing at home. Mr. Park was married secondly, October 11, 1900, to Miss Amy E. Reynolds, who was born in Sangamon County, Ill., a daughter of Edward and Harriet (Brewer) Reynolds, farming people of Sangamon County, who went to Cottonwood County, Minn., and in 1889 to Douglas County, Ill., where he now resides. To this union there has been born one son, Lester W., born September 6, 1901.

PARKER, Charles Allen.—Among the pioneers of 1852 will be found the name of Charles Allen Parker, now a resident of Section 35, Cartwright Township, whose efforts in behalf of Sangamon County merit the record of a work of this character. Mr. Parker was born in Robinson County, Tenn., November 13, 1847, being a son of Jesse S. and Elizabeth (Clnhard) Parker. Both parents were probably born in Robinson County, Tenn. In 1852, they came to Sangamon County, renting land from Peter Cartwright, in the township of Menard, where he remained five years, when his parents finally bought land about 1860, near Tallula, in Menard County, there developing eighty acres. Several years later this was sold, and Mr. Parker bought the farm now owned by Frank Scott in Cartwright Township. About 1870 he settled upon it, and made it his home until his death in 1884. His widow survived him until 1887, when she, too, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. George M. Renshaw. Mrs. Parker was a member of the Presbyterian Church, but her husband was not connected with any religious denomination. In politics he was a Whig, and later a Republican. They had seven children, six sons and five daughters, five now survive. Those deceased are: George, Susan, Mary Jane, William, and Matilda F. Those living are: Rosa Catherine, Sarah T., Richard and Charles Allen.

Charles Allen was but five years old when the family came to Sangamon County and he grew up in this locality, and in Menard County, remaining with his father until he was twenty-eight years old. On May 7, 1876, he was united in marriage with Sarah E. Batterton, born in Sangamon County, March 14, 1850, daughter of William and Eliza (Gaines) Batterton. The father was born in Adair County, Va., but was brought to this county by his parents during pioneer days. His wife was born in Kentucky. The death of Mr. Batterton occurred about 1895, when he was eighty-nine years old, while his wife passed away about 1900, aged eighty-nine years. They had ten children, eight of whom survive: Madison, Richard, Amy, Robert, Henry Clay, Mildred, Maria, Sarah E., Charlotte and George William.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Parker spent a year on the family homestead, then went to Salisbury Township. In 1852, they moved onto a farm in Menard County. In 1856, he bought thirty-five acres on Section 35, Cartwright Township. After improving this property, he added to his holdings until he now owns ninety acres, all in good condition, and here the two children have been born. These children are: Grace, born March 1, 1883, a young lady of remarkable musical talent, which has been carefully cultivated until she is now one of the most successful teachers of instrumental music in this township; and Perry Noel, born August 12, 1886, assisting his father in the farm work.

An enthusiastic member of the Baptist Church, Mr. Parker is appreciated in his congregation. Always a strong Republican, he supports the candidates of his party without ever deviating from the straight ticket. Fraternally he belongs to the Court of Honor. A good businessman and farmer, Mr. Parker has steadily forged ahead, gradually bettering his condition through hard work, and his success is certainly well merited.

PARKER, James.—The Irish possess so many excellent qualities that they are welcomed whenever they leave their native land for ours. Here they find ample opportunity for development, and the records show that more of them occupy positions of trust and responsibility, in proportion to their numbers, than people from any other country. One of the men who has prospered in Sangamon County, who was born on the Emerald Isle, is James Parker, now living retired in Williamsville. He was born in Belfast, Ireland, June 4, 1845, a son of John and Eliza (Miller) Parker, natives of Ireland. John Parker was a stone cutter and contractor, who spent his life in Ireland, but his widow came to America with her son and daughter, locating in Genesee, N. Y., where she spent the remainder of her life. The paternal grandfather was a ship carpenter of Belfast, who worked in the ship yards of Ireland and Scotland, having the distinction of working on the first propeller that was ever launched from Belfast.

Conning to this country in boyhood, James Parker grew up in Genesee, where he was educated. While attending school he also worked on a farm to assist his mother, spending in all some fifteen years in that vicinity. Then, desiring better opportunities, he came west to Chicago, where he lived for a year, then joined his sister, who resided at Virden. This continued his home for a year more, when he located in Williamsville, beginning to farm and continuing this for some years. He has also been engaged in teaming, but when his circumstances warranted he retired, and is now living in comfort in his home in Williamsville.

While residing in Virden, Ill., Mr. Parker was married in 1873, to Lulu Orr, born in Scottsville, Ill., where her parents had early settled, and her father followed his trade of blacksmithing for many years. Later Mr. Orr removed to Kansas, took up a claim, and there he and his excellent wife passed away, highly esteemed by all who knew them. Mr. and Mrs. Parker became the parents of a son, Herbert, now a resident of Muskogee, Okla., where he owns and conducts a barber shop. He is married and has one child, Chaucey. Mr. Parker’s home is preceded over by a niece, Mrs. Neille Cruse. A Democrat in politics, Mr. Parker has conscientiously supported the candidates of his party and is influential in its ranks. His religious home is in the Episcopal Church, of Williamsville, of which he is a member. Keen, shrewd, a good business man, and possessed of a kindly disposition and genial manner, Mr. Parker succeeded in business as well as accumulating friends, and is proud of what he has accomplished.

PARKES, James, farmer and stock-man on Sections 7 and 18 Gardner Township, was born in Cooper Township, near Berry Station, April 2, 1831, a son of William and Polly or Mary (North) Parkes. The father was born January 29, 1807, at Jonesboro, Washington County, Tenn., going later to Jefferson County, Tenn., where he married, April 14, 1830. His wife was born in 1810, in Buckingham County, Va. Their two children born in Tennessee died in infancy. Later they moved to Posey County, Ind., where another child was born and died. In 1836, they came to Illinois, settling in what is now Cooper Township, but in 1838 moved to Mechanicsburg, where they lived until 1848. In this year they returned to Cooper Township, where his wife died September 12, 1873. He was there married June 7, 1875, to Mrs. Mary (Enyart) McMurray. He died December 28, 1890, and both he and his first wife now lie at rest in Oak Hill Cemetery, Cooper Township. They were of English and Irish ancestry, and representatives of their families took part in the Revolutionary War. Mr. Parkes was a Whig, then a Republican and was very active in his party. A strong admirer of Mr. Lincoln, he was proud to follow in his footsteps. Both he and his first excellent wife were members of the Christian Church. Both a farmer and blacksmith, Mr. Parkes was always a hard working man, and, dying, left a comfortable estate. Their children were as follows: Caroline, born January 12, 1838, married September 24, 1867, Charles Bosline; Eveline, born January 4, 1841, married January 8, 1863, J. South, and died January 15, 1889; Henry, born January 15, 1843, enlisted in August, 1862, in Company C, One Hundred and Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, dying while in service at Cheraso, June 29, 1863; Minerva, born April 6, 1845, married August 14, 1867, Charles Roberts; Elizabeth, born January 3, 1847, married January 14, 1869, Edgar Eckel; and James Hiram, born April 8, 1854. The other children died young, under six years. After the death of his wife, Mr. Anderson; Robert Edgar, born Mrs. Sarah McMurray, whose maiden name was Enyart. She died in 1888.

James Parkes was reared on the farm now owned by his brother, and was educated in the district schools, remaining at home until about twenty-four years old when he married. It occurred February 11, 1875, to Hannah Boehme, born near Aromvie, Cass County, Ill., April 13, 1852, a daughter of Henry and Augusta (Polletts) Boehme. Her parents were natives of Hanover, Germany, and her maternal grandfather was for forty-five years pastor of the Lutheran Church at Hanover, Germany. About 1850, the Boehme family came to America, settling in Cass County, Ill., but in 1856, moved to Cartwright Township, this county, where the father died in 1873, and the mother in 1880. Mrs. Parkes was the only child of her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Parkes had children as follows: William H., born March 12, 1876, a merchant of Jefferson City, Mo., married Cora Anderson; Robert Edgar, born September 1, 1877, a farmer near Pawnee, Ill., married December 12, 1904, Louise Foster; Ella Belle, born January 22, 1880, married September 28, 1903, W. J. Ross, and they have one child, Ralph Parkes; Bertha Augusta, born November 28, 1883, married Sidney Maxcy of Newfield, one child, Alphonso Arthur, born September 19, 1887, married Mary Noble, on October 11, 1910, and he is operating a portion of the home farm; Maule Grace, born July 10, 1893; and Lillian and James Russell, twins, born January 20, 1895.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Parkes began farming her parents’ homestead, but in 1882, they moved to their present farm, on Sections 7 and 18, Gardner Township. Here they have made many improvements. In addition to his homestead, he owns sixty acres in Cooper Township, making a total of 274 acres in Sangamon County. Mr. Parkes raises horses, cattle, hogs and sheep, specializing on Durac-Jersey hogs and Shropshire sheep. In all of his operations he is very successful, and is regarded as one of the most progressive farmers of the county. A staunch Republican, he supports the party, but has never desired office. He and his family belong to the Methodist Church. Paternally he belongs to M. A. of A. of Piqua Plains, The pleasant home of the Parkes family is a delightful place to visit, for here is found true hospitality.

The father was a miner who came to Pennsylvania at an early age, with his wife Thomas Passent.

After a number of years spent in Pennsylvania, Joseph Passent went to Missouri, but after spending a short time there he went to England for a visit, and upon their return, in 1880, they located in Christian County where they remained eighteen months when they removed to Sangamon County.

PATTERSON, Frank U.—The Patterson family here described originated in Ireland and emigrated to the United States before the middle of the eighteenth century. The ancestors of Frank U. Patterson participated in the Revolutionary War and the members of the family have always been identified with the progress and improvement of every community where they have lived. Frank U. Patterson is known throughout the State of Illinois as State President of the Master Plumbers' Association. He is Secretary and Treasurer of the firm of Patterson & Stewart, of Springfield, Ill., and an able and energetic business man.

Mr. Patterson was born in Springfield, October 14, 1842, son of Israel D. and Jane Patterson, and grandson of William and Mary Patterson. The family settled at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., before the Revolutionary War and William Patterson was born in that city. He emigrated to Portsmouth, Ohio, where he lived many years, then coming to Mason County, Ill., where he died about 1842. His children were: James, a wealthy resident of Portland, Oreg.; Samuel, a farmer of Mason County, Ill., died there; Julietta, married Samuel Ryan, and died at Danville, Ill.; and Isaac D.

Isaac D. Patterson was born in Orange County, N. Y., in 1832, where he received a common school education, then spent seven years at the carpenter's trade in Columbus, Ohio, and later moved to Mason County, Ill., locating on a farm between Mason City and Athens, Menard County, where he arrived about 1832, being then about nineteen years of age. He worked for a time at the carpenter's trade, then worked on a farm in Mason County, but later returned to his farm, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1858, when he located in Springfield and spent the remainder of his life there. While living on his farm he was often called upon by his neighbors to construct houses and barns, and after about eight years after coming to Springfield he continued at his trade, when he health having failed, he retired from active life. He died in 1877 and was buried at Athens, Menard County.

Mr. Isaac D. Patterson was a radical Republican, and during the Civil War, when Springfield was under martial law, served as police officer. He was also an active member of the Christian Church and for years served as its Deacon.

Sarah Hall, the wife of Isaac D. Patterson, was a daughter of Eliza Hall, and was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, March 17, 1822. Her father removed from Bedford County, Va., to Lawrence County, and later moved to Menard County, Ill., the daughter then being five years of age. The family made the trip to Ohio in a prairie schooner, and stopped on the edge of Springfield so they would not witness the hanging of the first murderer executed there. Mrs. Patterson was one of the following named children: Tabitha, William, Dabney, Tabitha, Lucy, Keziah, Nancy, Nelson, Virginia, Tenbrooke, Sarah, Susan, Ella, Eliza Hall died in what is now Menard

John Overstreet enlisted September 17, 1775, for one year; Capt. John W. Heads, for three years; and re-enlisted in 1781, but the time of enlistment is not stated. Among the battles in which he participated were Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth, Stony Point, and Yorktown. When the War of 1812 broke out his son-in-law, Elisha Hall, was drafted for service, but on account of sickness was-unlisted for duty. So Mr. Overstreet said, "I'll take your place, son," and served from March until October, 1814. Both the Overstreet and Hall families were originally from England. At a barbecue given at Athens, Ill., John Overstreet found a Tory in the ranks and, during the parade, dragged him out of line and administered a sound thrashing to him remarking: "No traitor can march in parade with me."

Frank U. Patterson was educated in the common schools of Springfield, and when sixteen years of age began work in the grocery department of C. M. Smith, where he remained three years, when he began working at the plumbing trade with Holaday & Snape, serving five years. In boyhood Robert Patterson lived on a farm and received his education in the schools of Indiana. As a young man he worked three years on a Mississippi River steamboat, which he continued three years. At the time of the Civil War he enlisted, in August, 1861, in Company C, Fifty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Capt. Winters, of Whitehall. His first engagement was at Pea Ridge, Mo., whence they went to West Plains. In 1863 he began serving with the "Ram Fleet," which he continued until January, 1865, and was mustered out as private at Pittsburg. He swam across the Red River at one time to escape capture. He has reason to feel proud of his record and encountered many interesting experiences, as well as hardships and dangers, during his service. He is a member of Stephenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R., of Springfield. One of Mr. Patterson's brothers was killed in 1847, during the Mexican War. Robert Patterson was the youngest of the ten children born to his parents.

PATTON, Charles Lanphier, M. D.—The younger physicians and surgeons of Springfield are taking first place among the members of their profession practicing in Sangamon County. They have had the advantage of training and experience in the medical colleges and hospitals, which cannot be excelled, and which are so far in advance of the one secured by the practitioners of half a century ago. Among the successful and popular physicians of Springfield is Dr. Charles Lanphier Patton, who has well appointed offices at No. 25 Illinois National Bank Building, and resides at No. 1006 South Fifth Street. He was born
In this city, August 13, 1870, being a son of James William and Francine Elizabeth (Lanphier) Patton.

From 1883 to 1896, Dr. Patton attended the Springfield High School, then spent two years at Orchard Lake, Mich., and from 1896 to 1902, attended the University of Michigan. From 1902 to 1903, he was intern in the University Hospital, and then served two years as an instructor in gynecology and obstetrics in the University of Michigan. Dr. Patton was licensed to practice in Springfield, in 1902, soon after his graduation with the degree of M. D. from the University of Michigan, but he spent several years more in his special studies, fitting himself thoroughly for his life work. On June 21, 1904, Dr. Patton married Alice Jess, in Springfield, Ill. Dr. and Mrs. Patton have one son, Robert Jess Patton.

The political affiliations of Dr. Patton are with the Democratic party. He belongs to the Sangamon County Medical Society, the Illinois State Medical Association and the American Medical Association. At present he is on the surgeon's staff of the Springfield Hospital and Training School. Dr. Patton is engaged in a general practice, and has already firmly established himself in the confidence of the people of Sangamon County, who know that in him they have not only the experienced and upright physician and surgeon, but the sympathetic friend. He is a close student and keeps thoroughly abreast of current events in the medical world, as well as on general topics, and few members of his profession have a brighter outlook for the future.

PAUL, Gabriel (deceased).—In a community where there is a constant increase in population and new building constantly going on, those lines of business connected with the building trades are bound to prosper, and the men engaged in them attain a well-merited success. One of the older business men of Springfield, now passed to his last rest, who attained some distinction in connection with the lumber interests there, was the late Gabriel Paul. He was born in Cumberland County, Ill., April 20, 1859, a son of William and Catherine (McClinton) Paul, the father having been a liveryman for a number of years.

Mr. Paul grew up in his native county, attending the district school and learning to work on his father's farm. He was a lad of good habits being sober and industrious, and when he came to Springfield he found ready employment. Later he established himself in a lumber business, which he developed to large proportions, making it a point to carry out all his contracts faithfully, and to maintain a high standard of business integrity. His death occurred in Lincoln County, Ill., January 1, 1894, after a lingering illness. In politics he was a Democrat, but being retiring in disposition, he did not aspire to public office. His religious affiliations were with the Christian Church, and during his long illness he exhibited a patience and sweetness of disposition that showed he was living in the faith he professed.

Mr. Paul was married in DeWitt County, Ill., February 20, 1883, to Althea Roberts, born there December 20, 1866, daughter of John B. and Amanda Roberts, life-long residents of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Paul had three children: Franklin James, born December 29, 1884; Lucy May, born January 27, 1887, and Clara Viola, born June 25, 1890. Mrs. Paul has been a resident of Springfield for the past twenty years, and is prominent in the Christian Church and well known in her neighborhood. The family residence, at No. 1115 East Adams Street, is a favorite gathering place for the young people, who appreciate Mrs. Paul's hospitality, assisted as she is by her children. The family are well known and have many friends.

PAUL, Henry (deceased), who resided in Springfield, some twenty years, was a native of Germany, born December 26, 1858, a son of Frederick and Anna Mary (Eyemyer) Paul, both also born in Germany, where their entire lives were spent, the father being a gardener by occupation. As a boy, Henry Paul enjoyed the educational advantages offered by the public schools of his native country, and when a young man decided to emigrate to America, having heard from relatives in Springfield of their prosperity and favorable business opportunities. In 1883, at the age of twenty-five years, he left his family and native land and took passage for the New World, coming direct to Springfield, where he soon found employment in the printing office of Mr. Rokker. He was an ambitious young man, being quick to learn the new language and customs of those about him, and by good judgment and industry won friends and advisers in the city. He entered the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company before he had long been a resident of Springfield, and by his diligence and intelligence became promoted from time to time until he was made foreman in the car-repairing department, which position he held until his death. He was economical and thrifty in the management of his financial affairs, and purchased property from time to time, as he was able, providing a good home for his family and being solicitous for their comfort and well-being.

Mr. Paul was married, May 17, 1861, to Miss Mary Paul, also a native of Germany, daughter of William and Mary (Strubber) Paul, who spent their entire lives in Germany. The father was employed for many years as a postman in his native country. He died in 1885, and Mrs. Paul died when Mary was an infant. Four children were born to Henry Paul and his wife, namely: Elizabeth married F. A. Grospitiz, and they live in Alberta, Canada; Frank and Mamie, twins, live at home with their mother. Frank is a decorator and painter.

Mr. Paul was a stanch Republican in politics and took an intelligent interest in public affairs. He was a faithful member of the German Lutheran Church, of which his widow is also a member. Mr. Paul had established himself in the good estimation of his employers and associates and is kindly remembered by all who knew him. He had come to Springfield as a young man, determined to win a foothold in that city, and had been successful in a gratifying degree, having purchased the home now occupied by his widow, on South First Street, about a year before his death. Mrs. Paul also owns some building lots in the vicinity of her home, Mr. Paul's death occurred December 28, 1903, and he was remembered as a kind husband and father, a true friend and useful citizen of his adopted country.

PAUL, J. Fred.—Germany has given this country some of its most substantial and reliable citizens; men who are the very backbone of the land, and can be depended upon in both war and peace. They left their native land to look for better opportunities for advancement in life, bringing with them their habits of industry and thrift, which, when followed here, work towards such excellent results. J. Fred Paul, of Section 7, Curran Township, is an excellent example of this class of men. He was born in Hanover, Germany, December 6, 1848, a son of Frederick and Gertrude (Shumach) Paul, both born in 1824 in Hanover, Germany.

In 1879, Frederick Paul, the father, sailed from Bremen, Germany, for New York City, landing there on September 15, coming direct to Springfield, which he reached, September 17, 1879. He bought land in Gardner Township and engaged in farming, remaining on his land for ten years, when he moved to Curran Township, buying the farm now owned by J. Fred Paul. On it the father died in 1884, his widow surviving until 1885. J. Fred Paul was their only son, the three were the only ones of the Paul family to come to this country, the grandparents on both sides dying in Germany.

J. Fred Paul received an excellent education in Germany, learning how to farm under his father's expert instruction. Mr. Paul has always been a farmer, and now owns 160 acres of rich land in Curran Township, which he has developed into a very valuable property, devoting it to general farming and stockraising.

The marriage of Mr. Paul took place in Springfield, May 29, 1883, to Elizabeth Boshner, born in Germany, August 5, 1861. Her parents never came to this country, she making the trip with a brother, Adam Boshner, of Rochester Township, where he is a farmer. She had three sisters, who survive, Mr. and Mrs. Paul became the parents of four daughters and three sons: Anna, wife of Bert Strain, a farmer of Curran Township; Elizabeth, wife of Earl Cantrell, a farmer of Curran Township; Frank, at home; John, Eva, Sophia and William, also living at home. There are six grandchildren in the family.

Mr. Paul is a Democrat and has served as School Director of Curran Township, making an efficient official. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church and takes pleasure in his religious home. For thirty-three years, Mr. Paul has lived on his farm, and is very much attached to it. He can point with pride to many improvements he has made, and realizes how farming property has increased in value, since his family purchased it so long ago.

PAYTON, Jesse K.—The first abstract books of Sangamon County, were made by a man named Coon, about 1859, and Mr. Coon afterwards sold his books to Nicholas Strott, who later, with Zimri Enos, formed the partnership of Strott & Enos. Some years later Mr. H. C. Latham acquired the interests of Mr. Strott and the firm was then known as Latham & Enos. Mr. Latham retained the active management for a number of years, having associated with him as partners, successively, Louis Tichnor, Samuel Mendenhall and George H. Souther. On September 24, 1889, the firm of Latham & Souther, together with a number of other men, incorporated a business under the corporate name of The Abstract & Title Guaranty Company.

The Sangamon County Abstract Company was incorporated in February, 1901, with B. R. Hieronymus as President and Walter Eden as Secretary. In February, 1904, the plant and business of the Abstract & Title Guaranty Company was purchased by the Sangamon County Abstract Company, which company also in October, 1905, purchased the business of Hardin & Hallahan, and now has three complete sets of abstract books.

The Sangamon County Abstract Company has a capital stock of $100,000, consisting of 1,000 shares of $100 each, and its present officers are: B. R. Hieronymus, President; James A. Easley, Vice President, and Jesse K. Payton, Secretary and Treasurer.

Jesse K. Payton is a native of Sangamon County, born at Williamsville, in 1867, son of Isaac M. and Mary Jane (Kidd) Payton, farmers of that place. Jesse K. Payton received his education in the public schools of Sangamon County. He is a Republican in politics and has taken an active part in public affairs. He served four years as Chief Deputy Sheriff of Sangamon County, and is at present a member of the County Election Board, being the only Republican serving on it. He has been a member of the board four years and is serving his second term. Mr. Payton has been engaged in other lines of business besides his present one. For five years he worked as traveling salesman for a clothing house, then engaged in merchant tailor and clothing business. He is an excellent business man, of keen judgment and progressive spirit, and has been connected with the abstract business many years. The firm has an established reputation and does a large business, having a long, clean record back of them. The officers and directors of the corporation are all men of business integrity and stamina, and the concern does a growing business.

Mr. Payton married Miss Laura Forden, a native of Sangamon County, and three children have been born of this union: Howard F., Luella and Helen. Mr. Payton is well known in business circles and fraternally is connected with the Masons, the Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

PEARSON, Isaac N. (Vol. I, pp. 415-416.)

PEASE, Hon. Shaw (deceased), who spent many years in Sangamon County, was prominent as an educator and also took an active part in the councils of the Republican party. He represented the Macon district in the General Assembly for one term. He was born in Sangamon County, April 23, 1828, son of John and Amanda (Leslie) Pease, both natives of Loudoun County, Va., where the father was engaged in farming. They became residents of Sangamon County, where their last days were spent, and there they reared their family.

The early education of Shaw Pease was received in the country schools of Sangamon County, after which he attended school in Springfield and subsequently graduated from college, at Quincy, Ill. After leaving school he taught seven years in the public schools of Sangamon County and later became prominent in political affairs, serving as Representative from his district. He became a resident of Springfield in 1885 and there his death occurred, in 1890, at the home now occupied by his widow, at 1530 East Brown Street. He was a devoted husband and father, a kind friend and neighbor, and his loss was genuinely mourned. He was a member of the Methodist Church and in politics was a strong Republican after the organization of that party.

Mr. Pease was married in Springfield, June 21, 1859, to Miss Amanda P. Fox, born June 2, 1838, in Loudoun County, Va., daughter of Dr. Joseph B. and Amelia (Osburn) Fox, both natives of that county. Children as follows were born to Mr. Pease and his wife: Mary L., Lucinda V., Joseph M., Francis S. and Florence Ella. Mrs. Pease owns the family residence, besides other property in the vicinity, and since the death of her husband has devoted herself closely to the rearing and care of her children, all of whom have reached honorable man and womanhood.

PEERCE, John T., one of the most successful business men of Pawnee, Ill., is regarded with a high degree of respect and esteem by all who know him, and has well earned his present position and prosperity. He is always ready to aid those less fortunate than himself and is a true friend and kind neighbor. Mr. Peerce was born in Edmondson County, Ky., November 1, 1856, a son of John L. and Ann (Abell) Peerce, the former born in the same county, April 10, 1831, and the latter born in Marion County, Ky., January 6, 1822. The father was a farmer and moved to Sangamon County, Ill., in 1870, but on account of poor health returned two years later to Kentucky, locating in Grayson County. He came to Sangamon County again March 6, 1882, and died in Pawnee, February 25, 1896. He sometime prior to this time conducted a meat market in partnership.

Mrs. Ann Peerce died in Pawnee, March 11, 1894. The father of John L. Peerce was a native of Grayson County, Ky., was a farmer, and died in his native county, and his wife, also a native of Kentucky, died in Edmondson County. The latter was partly reared in a fort, as the Indians were so numerous in the part of Kentucky where she was born that the white settlers were much troubled by them.

The father of Ann Abell was a native of Kentucky and died in Sangamon County, Ill. He located there at a very early day, when there was plenty of wild game and very few settlers. His wife died in Kentucky, her native State.

Until reaching the age of twenty-two years John T. Peerce lived with his parents, and as a young man worked at farming until 1889, living part of this time on a farm he owned in Grayson County, Ky. In 1880 he returned to Sangamon County and engaged in farming, in which he continued some ten years, then sold his shop and returned to Springfield, where he entered the employ of the street railway company. Later he returned to Pawnee, where he worked for a time at the trade of carpenter, then embarked in the transfer business, which he continued until 1899, when he began dealing in feed and has been successful in both branches of his business, operating now under the firm name of J. T. Peerce & Son.

Mr. Peerce married, at Litchfield, Ky., November 29, 1877, Miss Mattie J. Mudd, born in Grayson County, December 12, 1859, daughter of William A. and Mary E. (Higdon) Mudd, both also natives of Grayson County. After the death of Mr. Peerce's mother his father returned to Kentucky and there married, as his second wife, the widow of William A. Mudd, and they returned to Sangamon County, where they remained until his death, after which they now returned to Sangamon County, where they still reside, and where Mr. Peerce was born. The father of William A. Mudd was a native of Kentucky and late in life removed to Texas, where he died, his wife having previously died in Sangamon County. His maternal grandparents were natives of Kentucky, where they spent their entire lives, and lived to an advanced age.

Mrs. Mattie J. Peerce died in Pawnee, June 24, 1900, and is buried in Calvary Cemetery. She had borne her husband the following children: William R., born in Kentucky, February 12, 1880, in business with his father, married May Beynon, a native of Braceville, Ill., November 10, 1900; Mary A., born in Pawnee, October 29, 1889, is unmarried and lives at home; Francis M., born in Pawnee, March 1, 1890, living at home; six who are deceased. The children who died are: Charles A., born in Kentucky, April 12, 1880, died there March 12, 1887; Jessie W., born in Kentucky, June 25, 1882, died there October 12, 1885; Jessie A., born in Kentucky, July 2, 1884, died in Sangamon County, November 25, 1892; Leota, born in Sangamon County, October 13, 1892, died there September 9, 1893; Joseph H., born in Sangamon County June 27, 1893, died there February 12, 1899; Joseph Howard, born in Sangamon County, January 20, 1901, died there September 10, 1901.

John T. Peerce was one of two children, the other being his brother, James E., who was born in Grayson County, Ky., May 30, 1853, and was married, January 20, 1875, to Emma Mudd, by whom he had the following children: Lizzie, born in Kentucky, December 20, 1875; C. E., December 14, 1876; Robert E., April 14, 1879; Adie J., June 29, 1890; Francis E., July 7, 1882; Clarence, December 9, 1883; Walter, March 22, 1885; Mattie J., June 27, 1887; John W., July 18, 1888; Mark L., March 21, 1891.

Mr. Peerce is a devout Christian and carries his beliefs into his every-day life. He is a devout Catholic and a member of St. Mary's Church. He belongs to Pawnee Camp, Modern Woodmen. He has always been active in political affairs and is a Democrat in principles. He has served as Alderman of Pawnee.

PELHMAN, Michael, one of the many enterprising and useful German-American citizens of Springfield, Ill., has lived in the city since he was two years of age, and has seen many changes incident to the growth and progress of the city. He remembers when it was almost without sidewalks, witnessed the erecting of the foundations of the State House and the placing of the Lincoln Monument, among the many interesting things that have taken place there. His parents located in Springfield in 1868 and still reside there. Michael Pehlman was born in Bavaria, Germany, August 4, 1866, and is a son of Conrad and Barbara (Tovar-rider) Pehlman, both natives of Bavaria, Germany, the father born March 3, 1845, and the mother August 7, 1845. The father was a stone mason by trade and followed same after locating in Sangamon County. He and his wife had seven sons and three daughters, namely: Michael; George, a member of Springfield police force; John, assistant foreman in a mine; Fred, running a truck farm; Kate Green; Anna; Mary; William, Frank and Henry, working at mining. All live in Springfield, and all were educated in the Third Ward School of the city.

Michael Pehlman began working in a brick yard in Springfield when ten years old and three years later began in business for himself. He worked twelve years in the Old North Shaft, nine years in the New North Shaft, several years in Trower & Gray's Shaft, several years in Storms' No. 2 Shaft, one year in the West End Shaft, three years in the Black Diamond Shaft, four years in Peabody Mine at Sherman, Ill., and for the last two years has worked for the Springfield Colliery Coal Company. He is an industrious and faithful worker and has been successful in his investments and private affairs. He has three valuable pieces of property in Springfield, owns a fine home at 1123 North Sixth Street, and also owns property. He is a highly respected citizen and has at heart the welfare and progress of the community. He is public-spirited and enterprising, and is much interested in current issues and affairs. In political views he has always been a Democrat. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church of Springfield and helps in its good work. He is well known in fraternal circles, being an active member of the Odd Fellows Lodge No. 6, which he joined in 1901. He is of a social disposition and is popular among his many friends.

Mr. Pehlman was married, in Springfield, April 12, 1893, to Anna Schmidt, who was born in Baden, Germany, July 15, 1870, daughter of Henry and Caroline Schmitt, both natives of Baden, Germany, the former of whom died in 1902 and the latter in 1901. Her parents came to Sangamon County in 1892 and lived at 1123 North Sixth Street, where her father carried on his trade of shoe-maker. Mr. Pehlman and his wife have no children.

PELHMAN, Michael—Sangamon County is peculiarly well adapted to fruit growing both on account of its fertile soil and the climatic conditions which prevail, and some of the more progressive farmers of this locality have taken advantage of the opportunities offered, specializing in fruit culture. One of the young farmers who has succeeded beyond even his own expectations is Harry Emerson Phelps, who owns fifty-seven acres of very fertile land, three miles west of the city of Springfield. He was born in Springfield, October 15, 1880, a son of Adna and Martha (Melz) Phelps, the former born in Hebron, N. H., December 25, 1852, while his wife was born in Iowa, in 1840.

Adna Phelps was brought by his parents to Ionia, Ill., in 1844. Six years later, removal was made to Springfield. In 1851, Mr. Phelps began teaching school in a small brick structure of Sangamon County

PHILIPP, Maximilian, a well known and popular citizen of Springfield, III., was born in Aschaffenburg, Bavaria, Germany, October 10, 1832, son of John and Martha (Hoeflich) Philipp, both natives of Germany. The father was a painter and decorator and both parents spent their entire lives in Germany. He was for several years a soldier in the German Army. They were parents of three sons and two daughters.

The education of Maximilian Philipp was obtained in his native town, and upon leaving school he learned the trade of cabinet maker, at which he worked in many different German towns, spending some time in Munich. He emigrated to the United States about 1865, landed in New York City, and came direct to Springfield, where he has since resided. He worked at his trade in various positions until 1867, when he entered the employ of John Bressmer Dry Goods Company, for whom he worked thirty-five years in their carpet department, and in 1902 retired from active life.

Mr. Philipp is well known in connection with the St. Vincent Society, a Catholic society which he organized in 1866, and which has grown to be one of the largest orders in Springfield. He is a member of the Church of SS. Peter and Paul. He was an energetic and industrious worker in business life and was regarded with respect by all who were associated with him, and in social circles he has made many warm friends. He owns a pleasant home at 904 East Reynolds Street, besides other city property.

Mr. Philipp was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Philipp, in Springfield, April 30, 1867. She had the same surname, but was of a different family. She was born in Aschaffenburg, Bavaria, November 14, 1842. Her father died in Germany and her mother brought the family to America the same year as Mr. Philipp came and on the same vessel. Four sons and four daughters were born to Maximilian Philipp and his wife, of whom seven children survive, namely; Joseph A., in the employ of the John Bressmer Dry Goods Company of Springfield; Elizabeth J., living at home; Reverend Maximilian J., a Catholic priest, Professor of Librarians in the Josephinum Catholic College,
PHILLIPS, David L. (Vol. I, pp. 422-423.)

PHILLIPS, Eber.—The soldiers of the Civil War were animated by intense patriotism when they enlisted to save their country from the perils that threatened it. Those of a later generation, removed as they are from the horrors of the conflict, cannot appreciate how much these brave men sacrificed, but they can render the honor that is due the veterans of the great struggle. One of the old soldiers of Sangamon County is Eber Phillips, now living retired at No. 412 South Glenwood Avenue, Springfield. He was born in Richland County, Ill., June 9, 1843, a son of John M. and Virginia (Trainer) Phillips, the former born in Sumner County, Tenn., in 1821, and the latter in Hardin County, Ky., in 1822.

John M. Phillips was a farmer. He was brought to Illinois by his parents in 1828, at the age of five years. His father entered land in Sangamon County, but later in life went to Richland County and bought land, farming upon it. In 1863 he sold, removing to Coles County, where he bought land and operated it until his demise. His widow survived him for ten years, dying in Cumberland County. The maternal grandfather of Eber Phillips was in the Revolutionary War, so that Mr. Phillips inherited his loyalty and patriotism. He had five brothers and five sisters, there being eleven in the family, but only two sons and four daughters now survive: Thomas A., of Decatur; Jennie Wallace, of Neoga, Ill.; Minerva Small, of Shelbyville, Ill.; Margaret G. Custer, of Stark County, Ill.; Elizabeth Brown, of Decatur, and Eber.

Eber Phillips was educated in a log schoolhouse in Richland County, and during his boyhood worked on the farm for his father. On August 20, 1861, he abandoned his peaceful occupations to enlist in Company E, Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from Clay County, under the command of Col. Stephen G. Hicks, whose remains are buried at Salem, Ill. When his enlistment expired he re-enlisted, in January, 1863, in the Mississippi Brigade, to fight bushwhackers, thus serving until the close of the war. He participated in the battle of Shiloh, being in the marine brigade. On January 8, 1865, he was mustered out at Vicksburg. From there he came by boat to Cairo and thence to Olney, Ill., arriving home February 6, 1865. His parents meanwhile had moved to Coles County, and there he worked for five years. Upon the death of his father he went to Cumberland County with his mother, and worked on a farm until he came to Sangamon County. For many years he worked on the old

Peter Troxell farm, returning later to Cumberland County, where he remained some years, and in 1873 came back to Sangamon County to continue farming. He also worked in the construction department of the old Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railroad, from Olney to Springfield, being associated with this road for six years, and in 1885 returned to Springfield. On December 22, 1891, he moved to Quincy, but nine years later returned to Springfield, which has continued to be his home ever since.

Mr. Phillips has never married. He is a consistent member of the Methodist Church. The Republican party holds his support and its candidates receive his vote. He has a comfortable home in Springfield and is in receipt of a pension from the Government, which appreciates his efforts in its behalf a half century ago.

PHILLIPS, James Alexander.—The valuable mines of Springfield have long offered opportunities for men of experience who flock there to take advantage of them. One of those who have become very well known among mining men is the present Republican candidate for Commissioner. James Alexander Phillips, born in Uxbridge, Ontario, Canada, October 10, 1855. He is a son of Benjamin and Amanda (Lynd) Phillips, the former born in Nova Scotia and the latter in Port Whitby, Ontario, Canada. The father was a farmer and lived out his life in Canada. The grandfather's name was Edward Pridle, but on account of troubles relating to his leaving the English Army, changed it to Phillips, as it is still written. His escape was sensational, as he swam for two miles, most of the time under water, for as soon as his head appeared he was shot at, but he managed to come out unharmed. The maternal ancestors were of Pennsylvania-Dutch stock. Benjamin Phillips died in 1897 and his wife in 1894; both are in the faith of the Methodist Church. Eleven children were born to them: Sylvester, deceased; James A., Benjamin, Hector, Maurice; Charles, who was killed in a snow-slide on the Rocky Mountains; Louisa married A. Gray; Margaret; Amanda married Al. Redford; Hester; and Mabel, who married Charles White.

James A. Phillips went to school in Ontario and worked for his father until he was twenty-four years old. This was in 1879, and, resolving to better his fortune, he left home, with but seventy-five cents in his pocket, going to Grand Rapids, Mich., where he became foreman in a chair factory, but after three years there he came to Riverton, and from 1882 to 1884 worked on a farm. In the latter year he came to Springfield, which has since continued to be his home. He became a teaming contractor, hauling coal for nine years. This brought him into contact with the mines, and in 1904 he entered the employ of the West End Coal Company as foreman, thus continuing.

Mr. Phillips has gone through all the chairs of the Order of Red Men, belonging to Pawnee TRIBE No. 66. He is also a Knight of Pythias, belonging to Navarre Lodge No. 142. A strong Republican, he is the logical candidate of his party for Commissioner, and comes before the people with a clean record and untiring energy. His associations as a member of the United Mine Workers Association are very pleasant, and he has friends all over the State.

PICKRELL, Jesse A., who was one of the earliest farmers and stockraisers of Sangamon County, Ill., to introduce improved breeds of hogs, cattle and other stock into the county, was the first of his family to come to the State, though his parents came at a later date and also settled in Sangamon County. Jesse A. Pickrell was born June 13, 1805, in Montgomery County, Ky., a son of John and Jane (Taylor) Pickrell. Abel Pickrell was born in London County, Va., March 14, 1782. When he was quite young his father died and his mother took him to Fleming County, Ky., about 1793. As a young man he removed to Montgomery County, and was there married in 1804, to Sarah Taylor, who was born in Tennessee, at a place known as Red Stone Fort, Pa., October 31, 1784. Abel Pickrell enlisted from Montgomery County in the War of 1812, and in the fall of 1818 moved from there to Shelby County, Ky., whence he moved to Sangamon County, Ill., arriving in what is now known as Williams Township in the fall of 1821. He and his wife had six children, all born in Kentucky. Mrs. Pickrell died April 9, 1861, and Mr. Pickrell died January 3, 1862, both near Mechanicsburg, Sangamon County.

Jesse A. Pickrell came to Sangamon County in the spring of 1828, returned to Kentucky on a visit, and in the fall of that year returned to Sangamon County with his brother, William S., the latter of whom served three terms in the Black Hawk War. Jesse A. Pickrell became one of the most prominent farmers of his time and was an extensive stock raiser. He displayed an active interest in public affairs and was highly esteemed and respected.

December 18, 1828, Mr. Pickrell was married, in Sangamon County, to Elizabeth Churchill, and they became parents of ten children, as follows: William O., born February 27, 1830, married Hannah Reed and removed to Kansas; Abel George, born February 19, 1832; Miller H., born March 31, 1835, married Sophronia Fry; Ann Maria, born January 14, 1840; married Henry H. Lee, who died August 10, 1867; Mary V., born December 11, 1842, married Samuel T. Rogers; Amanda P., born August 31, 1844, married Walter F. Swift, and died at Ottawa, Kan., June 19, 1872; John C., born October 27, 1846, served three years in Company B, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, part of the time as Orderly of Gen. George H. Thomas, and died March 25, 1873; Benjamin F., born December 10, 1848; M. Gertrude, December 29, 1850; Sallie E., March 6, 1855.

Abel George, the second son of Jesse and Elizabeth (Churchill) Pickrell, enlisted July 20, 1861, in Company C, Eleventh Missouri Infantry for three years, was commissioned Quartermaster of the regular army July 24, 1862, and mustered out August 13, 1864. He was married December 27, 1864, in Jacksonville, III., to Emma H. Winn, daughter of Dr. Charles and Nancy (Branson) Winn, and they became parents of four children, namely; Corilla, Alice, who married Robert Lee Winn, a sketch of whom appears in this work; Patsy, Mrs. Floyd Whittemore, of Linesville; Jessie C., wife of Maycie Cantrall. Mr. Pickrell located on a farm a half mile south of Linesville, and died on the old farm, June 28, 1886. Dr. Charles Winn was born August 13, 1800, in Virginia, and received his medical education at Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky. His wife, Nancy (Branson) Winn, was born in Ohio, June 4, 1806.

PILCHER, A. B., who has for many years been a resident of Chatham, Ill., was born in Athens County, Ohio, February 28, 1839, a son of Stephen X. and Cassandra (Bean) Pilcher, the former born in Athens County and the latter in Hardy County, W. Va. The father's parents were natives of Kentucky and the mother's of Virginia. Stephen X. Pilcher carried on farming in his native county until 1855, then moved to Clay County, Ill., and three years later located in Chatham, where he spent the remainder of his life. Mrs. Pilcher's father, Mr. Bean, was a soldier in the War of 1812.

The education of A. B. Pilcher was acquired in the subscription schools of Ohio, and he spent his boyhood days on a farm. He followed agricultural pursuits until 1875, then moved to Chatham and began working at the carpenter's trade, and has helped erect many of the best residences of that village. He enlisted at Cincinnati, Ohio, September 3, 1861, in the Eleventh Ohio Independent Light Artillery, under Capt. Constance, served three years, and was mustered out November 7, 1864. In this service he endured many hardships and took part in battles at New Madrid, Corinth, Vicksburg, Little Rock, Pine Bluff, and many minor engagements. He fought against bushwhackers in the Missouri hills. In the hard-fought battle at Inka, Miss., the battery lost every horse and mule belonging to them. He acquitted himself with credit to himself and his company and is a member of the G. A. R.

Mr. Pilcher was married at Chatham, Ill., January 15, 1873, to Miss Annie Aldrich, born at Rochester, N. Y., December 31, 1848, daughter of Marcellus and Elizabeth (Crooker) Aldrich, natives of New Hampshire. Mr. Aldrich was a carpenter by trade and died when Pilcher was a child. Mrs. Aldrich came to Chatham from New York, and her death occurred in 1900. Mrs. Pilcher knew very little of her grandparents except that they were natives of New Hampshire. Five children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pilcher, all of whom survive: Jessie P., born in Chatham, November 19, 1873; Mabel C., July 10, 1875; Charles N., November 6, 1877; Fannie M., and Frankle (twins), January 16, 1857. Frank and Fannie live in Springfield and the latter is married. Charles, Mabel and Pearl live in Chatham, and all are married.

Mr. Pilcher and his wife are among the oldest residents of Chatham and have many warm friends in the community. He has been a hard-working, useful citizen, and has served as Collector of Chatham Township several times. He is a member of the Masonic Order and of the Modern Woodmen of America, and in religious views is a Methodist.

PILCHER, John, Sr.—Some families have given more than their share in service to their country, their representatives having risked life and limb in more than one of the mighty conflicts which have convulsed the nation. This is the case in the Pilcher family, of Springfield, for both the War of 1812 and the Civil War profited by the heroism and patriotism of its members. John Pilcher Sr., of this city, is a man who gave of his best to his country, and his grandfather on the paternal side was a private in the War of 1812, surviving to spend a long and useful life in Kentucky, where he died. His wife survived him, coming to Illinois in 1824, when this State was still in a somewhat uncivilized condition. John Pilcher Sr. was born in Springfield, March 13, 1842, a son of Moses and Mary E. (True) Pilcher. The father was born in Lexington, Ky., in April, 1800, while the mother came of old Virginia stock. A carpenter, the father found employment at his trade upon his removal to Illinois in 1824, and during his long life there was an upright and honorable citizen, dying on October 26, 1866, firm in his religious faith.

John Pilcher Sr. was educated in the public schools of Springfield, and until he was eight years of age lived on a farm, but then removal was made to Springfield, which has since been his home. He, too, is a carpenter, having learned the trade from his father, and has been employed upon some of the most important buildings in the city. For the past six years he has also been associated with a storm dyeing plant, and in all his operations he has shown business sagacity which has resulted in ultimate success. Mr. Pilcher served in the First Cavalry for three months, being mustered out at Mound City, Ill., July 14, 1861, and September 23, 1861, he enlisted in Company H, Tenth Illinois Cavalry, being mustered out November 22, 1865, at San Antonio, Texas, and receiving his final discharge January 6, 1866. He participated in the battles of Prairie Grove, Little Rock, Mulligan Bend, Cotton Hill and Mobile, as well as others of less importance. He is now a member of Stephenson Post, G. A. R., of Springfield. The Christian Church holds his membership, while he is a staunch Republican politically.

Mr. Pilcher was married in Springfield, October 26, 1866, to Mary E. Hurst, born in Jackson-ville, Ill., March 19, 1859. She comes of one of the most prominent families in Morgan County. Mr. and Mrs. Pilcher became the parents of the following children: Lucilla, born June 24, 1870; John W., born May 7, 1876; Robert E., born December 29, 1878, and Clara May, born December 5, 1881. Mr. Pilcher is a man of excellent habits, who has always been a believer in temperance, and his devotion to his family is a matter of comment. Quiet and unostentatious, he has made many friends for himself by his attention to business and fair dealing.

PIPER, Carl Frederick William, one of the representative old residents of Springfield, has lived in his present comfortable home for forty-three years. He owns 267 feet deep with a fifty-foot frontage, and his yard is a source of much pleasure to him. His house was among the first to be built in his neighborhood, but when first erected contained only two rooms. In these he reared all of his children, but as his means increased he added another story, so that he now has four rooms. He was born in Prussia, May 17, 1834, a son of Daniel Piper, a grocer and wholesale dealer, and a man of considerable means in the Province of Brandenburg. Until he was fourteen years old, Carl Frederick William Piper attended school, but at that age began driving a team, continuing teaming until he came to the United States, at the age of twenty-four years. He sailed from Hamburg and landed in Quebec six weeks being consumed in the passage. He came direct to Spring-

ick, and immediately obtained work in the construction of Andrew Kuhl's brewery. When this was completed, he worked on several farms. On October 22, 1864, he married Abigail helming (Dahlman) Dauphin, widow of Philip Dauphin. Following his marriage, Mr. Piper began hauling sand and coal, being the first teamster in the city to haul the latter. In 1876, Mr. Piper secured some of the teaming for the Elevator Mill Company, and for thirty-one years he thus continued. Following this he was employed as a laborer in Washington Park. Mrs. Piper passed away, November 21, 1910, her remains being tenderly interred at Oak Ridge Cemetery. In 1802, when the German Lutheran Church of this city had but twelve members, Mrs. Piper joined it, and continued faithful in its good work until her death. Both she and Mrs. Daniel Piper had the honor of being married in the old governor's mansion. Mrs. Piper was a deaconess in the family of Mrs. C. M. Smith, a sister of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln, and proud of the fact that she cooked the last meal eaten by Mr. Lincoln just before he left for Washington for his inauguration, and that her hands prepared the lunch that great man took with him on the journey. Mrs. Piper had four children by her first marriage: Herman of Hot Springs, married Dorothy Gootenrath; Amelia, born in Farmingdale, Wis., January 10, 1803, married in Springfield in 1834, to Rev. J. C. Kalser, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, of Jonesville, Ill., issue—Hulda, Clara, Otto, Paul, Ruth, Olga, Carl; George and Fred, twins, the former in Petersburg, Ill., married Amelia Hagemen, no issue, and the latter a car inspector, married Christina Droego, issue—Amelia, John, Carl, Ollie, Freda, Elmaer and Walter. Mr. and Mrs. Piper had children as follows: Gustave of Cleveland, married Ad- dle Hazel, issue—Edward, Viola, Ruth; Julins, at home; Henry, of Cleveland, married Louise Heiden, issue—Carl and Henry; Edith married William Walsh, issue—Gerald and George. Mrs. Walsh resides with her father.

During his many years' residence in Springfield, Mr. Piper has made true friends who app- reciate his sterling traits of character. He has been thrifty, saving his earnings and in- vesting them as a security for his old age, and is now enjoying his declining years, surrounded by the comforts his frugality has provided, and the love of his children and grandchildren.

PLUMMER, Nathan (deceased), who was for many years successfully engaged in farming in Cotton Hill Township, Sangamon County, was highly esteemed for his sterling qualities and high character, and honored as a veteran of the Civil War. Mr. Plummer was born near Columbus, Ohio, a son of Nathan and Elizabeth Plummer, also natives of that State. The father, who was a farmer, carried on this occupation in Ohio and was accidentally killed in a runaway, following which his widow brought her children to Sangamon County and located on a farm in Cotton Hill Township. There were two sons and five daughters in the family, all of whom are now deceased.

During his boyhood days Nathan Plummer worked on the farm for his mother, and his education was received in Sangamon County. During the early part of the Civil War he en- listed in Company E, Forty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, which was later consolidated with the Fifty-third Regiment at Guntown, Miss., after the battle at that place, where the Forty-third was nearly annihilated, and Mr. Plummer served until the close of the war, be- ing under the command of Gen. Sherman. He participated in many important battles, but was never wounded nor taken prisoner. He was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., and finally dis- charged at Chicago.

At the close of the war Mr. Plummer returned to Cotton Hill Township and resumed farming. He carried on the farm where his widow now resides until his death, and was known as an industrious and able farmer. He was married in Springfield, Ill., in October, 1860, to Miss Emily Purnell, born in Dover, Del., August 26, 1840, daughter of Jonathan and Sally Ann (Clayton) Purnell, the father born near Hazen- strom, Md., and the mother at Smyrna, Del.

Mr. Purnell was a farmer and in 1857 removed with his family to Sangamon County, Ill., and carried on farming in Cotton Hill Township un- til his death. Both he and his wife are now deceased. There were two sons and five daugh- ters in the Purnell family, and four daughters and one son now survive, namely: Samuel is engaged in farming in Christian County; Mrs. Plummer; Mrs. Susan Bosford, of Cotton Hill Township; Mrs. Adelaide Hawlett, whose hus- band is a farmer in Cotton Hill Township; Margaret, wife of Alonzo Page, of Springfield, a sketch of whom appears in these pages. To Mr. Plummer and wife five daughters and three sons were born, of whom the following survive: Elizabeth, wife of Osborn Boyd, of Girard, Kan.; Nathan, of Rochester; Addie, wife of John Fogle, of Rochester; Sallie, wife of Charles Patterson, of Punnel; Samuel, at home with his mother; Della, wife of Orrin Richards, of Cotton Hill Township. In the family are seven- teen grandchildren and three great-grandchildren, namely: Marie, Helen, Cecile and Iva Plummer, children of Nathan Plummer; Samuel, Rosie, James, Emma and Ralph Rich- ards, children of Orrin Richards; Myrtle, daughter of Osborn and Mrs. Boyd, is the wife of Edward Langdon, and they have one child, Edna Boyd; Essie, wife of Charles Rodgers, the daughter of Chester Huddleston, and Eliza Plummer, deceased, has two children, Walter and Elma Goodman; Harry, Gladys, and Beat- rice Fogle, are children of Mrs. Fogle; Samuel Plummer married Maggie Wooley, born near Custrall, Sangamon County, and they have three children: Charles, Irene and Earl.

PLUNKETT, Asa W., retired and living with his daughter, Emma J., on Pearsia Road, near the State Fair Grounds, just outside the city of Springfield, Ill., is a member of a family that has been prominent in Sangamon County for nearly a century. He was born in the county, April 3, 1834, son of Robert S. and Ruth (Combs) Plunkett, the father born in North Carolina, June 15, 1805, and the mother born in Green County, Ky. Robert S. Plunkett was a farmer and located in Sangamon County about 1825. He and his wife died there, he in 1890 and his wife at the age of twenty-nine years. He was a son of John H. and Elizabeth (Pur- vines) Plunkett, born in Cabarrus County, N. C., the former October 3, 1782, and the latter, March 17, 1855. They were married February 19, 1804, and moved to Sangamon County in 1825.

The boyhood of Asa W. Plunkett was spent on his father's farm in Cartwright Township and he attended school in Richland Creek school house, a crude log building. As a boy, he often hunted coons and deer after leaving school and worked for his father. He built a log cabin, fourteen feet square, of buckeye timber, and put in the window and the door. When he was a young man he could get up almost any morning and shoot prairie chickens.
for breakfast. He made farming his life work and was very successful in same. About fifteen years ago he began breeding, raising and training running horses, one of which, Sleepy Fred, made a good record as a race-horse in St. Louis, and was in that city at the time of the cyclone. He also owned several other horses that were a credit to him to their train-

He has always been a strong Republican, and while living in Cass County, where he owned a farm, served as Constable. He served three years as School Director in Sangamon County. He owns a half interest in a small piece of ground east of the Fair Grounds and here he has lived retired the last nine years. He is a member of the Baptist Church and a man of probity and strict integrity in business and social affairs. He is well known in Sangamon County and has many warm friends.

Mr. Plunkett was married, in Sangamon County, January 12, 1853, to Miss Nancy J. Willis, who was born in Kentucky, July 21, 1831 (the year of the deep snow), daughter of William and Melinda Willis, who came to Illinois in 1833, settling near old Sangamo on Prairie Crossing. Children born were in this union: two died in infancy; Mary E. died at the age of nine years; Robert, a dealer in race horses, in Oklahoma City, Okla.; Emma J., living in Springfield with her father; John W., a dealer in horses; Lilie, wife of Edward Michael, a stock raiser and farmer of Welch, Okla.

PLUNKETT, Cornelius A.—Some of the most substantial men of Sangamon County are utilizing their ability and energies for farming purposes, realizing that the soil in this locality pays magnificent interest for all labor expended upon it. One of those profiting from this knowledge is Cornelius A. Plunkett, a farmer and stock raiser of Section 34, Cartwright Township. He was born on his present farm, February 14, 1852, a son of Silas P. and Salina (Keltner) Plunkett. The father was also born on this farm, June 15, 1828, while his wife was born in Cass County, Ill. Mrs. Plunkett was living in Sangamon County at the time of her marriage. Silas P. Plunkett was a son of John Plunkett, a native of North Carolina, who married in that State, Elizabeth Purvines, coming afterwards to Illinois and settling in Sangamon County about 1820. The father of John Plunkett was a Revolutionary soldier, so that loyal blood is in the veins of Cornelius A. Plunkett. John Plunkett entered wild land in Cartwright Township, on which his son Silas was born, making this farm his home until his death, in 1849, his wife passing away in 1858, and they, with the great-grandfather, are interred in Richland Cemetery.

Silas Plunkett had seven children, one of whom died in infancy, while Nellie died at the age of sixteen years, and Albert died at the age of seven years, but the others attained mature years, being: Cornelius; James H., whose sketch appears in this work; Emma, wife of Thomas Plunkett, a farmer of Cartwright Township; Eva May, wife of Marion Turner, a resident of Medora, III. Silas Plunkett was one of the representative men of his time. Active in politics, he was first a Whig and later a Republican, and gave excellent service to his party. He was a consistent member of the Baptist Church, in which he served as Deacon for many years. In all public matters he was ever ready to bear his part in all measures he believed would work out for the ultimate good of the people he had always been by many.

Growing up amid healthy agricultural surroundings, Cornelius A. Plunkett early learned farming, attending the district school whenever opportunity offered. He remained at home until his marriage, which occurred June 24, 1875, when he was twenty-three years old. His wife was Miss Virginia E. Parker, born in Robinson, Tenn., daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth (Cleland) Parker. Mr. and Mrs. Parker came to Illinois, settling in Cartwright Township, whence they moved to Menard County, III., buying land and living upon it until they sold it to return to Sangamon County, where they died.

After marriage Mr. Plunkett built a beautiful cottage on a portion of the homestead. He has improved the property very materially, erecting substantial buildings, and now has a very comfortable home. He owns thirty-four acres of land, which is highly cultivated and yields large crops. Here three generations have been born, and the land has always been in the family. Mr. and Mrs. Plunkett are the parents of three children: Harry E., born January 27, 1879, at home; Daisy Pearl, born November 10, 1881, wife of Cloud Hodgen, a farmer of Auburn Township; and Scott, born September 6, 1885, manager of the men’s furnishings department of the Boston Store, of Chicago.

During all his life, which has been spent in Sangamon County, Mr. Plunkett has been interested in current events, and recalls many interesting events in the history of his county, including the heart-rending occasion of the burial of the immortal Lincoln. He has always been proud to follow that leader in his support of the doctrines of the Republican party. He and his wife are consistent members of the Baptist Church, in which he has been Deacon for a number of years. Fraternally he is a member of the Odd Fellows, Lodge No. 770, and Camp No. 139, Modern Woodmen of America, of Pleasant Plains, while Mrs. Plunkett belongs to the Court of Honor of the same place. Both are charming people, sociable in their tastes, and their hospitality is enjoyed by their friends upon numerous occasions.

PLUNKETT, James Huston.—Many farmers of Sangamon County have found it profitable to devote much of their attention to breeding blooded stock, and one of the men who has accomplished much as a general farmer and stockman is James Huston Plunkett, born on Sec-tton 34, Cartwright Township, January 3, 1854, being a son of Silas P. and Salma M. (Keltner) Plunkett. The general family history of the Plunkettes is given elsewhere in this work.

Like many another farmer boy in Sangamon County, Mr. Plunkett grew up to agricultural work, amid a healthy atmosphere. He attended school in the Plunket district school, and learned well what was taught him. He remained under the parental roof until September 14, 1876, and then married Alice Rawis, born in Cartwright Township, a daughter of Abram Rawis, a pioneer of the county. The young people settled down to married life on the home farm, and in 1881 Mr. Plunkett bought a portion of it and they moved to their new home. There Mrs. Plunkett died February 17, 1895, a consistent member of the Baptist Church, and a worthy, good woman. On June 23, 1897, Mr. Plunkett was married to Sarah May Mackey, born in Lincoln, Logan County, Ill., May 29, 1872, daughter of William and Sarah M. (Hall) Mackey. Her father had come to Springfield in 1850, where he followed his trade of wagon-making, and there died August 13, 1890, an old man, having been born in Lincoln, Ky., November 5, 1834, and married February 8, 1855. He had been born in Morgan County, Ill., March 20, 1830, and died in Springfield June 30, 1905. Mr. and Mrs. Mackey had children as follows: Mary Ellen, born December 1, 1856, widow of Edward Beach, living in Kansas; Emma Jane, married Joseph Hurt, of Meuarta County, Ill., died June 4, 1885; Evangeline, wife of John Rawis, died January 1, 1910; Minerva Ann, born August 11, 1864, married James B. Chypher, of Springfield; Nana E., born December 14, 1869, wife of A. H. Hughes of Dawson, Ill.; Mrs. Plunkett; William Clyde, a member of Company H, Fifteenth United States Infantry, stationed at Fort Douglas, Utah. The family all belonged to the Christian Church. Mrs. Plunkett's maternal ancestry belonged to good old Virginia stock.

Mr. Plunkett has been very active in politics, being an aggressive Republican. He served for years as a member of the Board of Supervisors, and in 1900 served as its Chairman. In 1908 he was appointed a member of the Board of Review by Judge G. W. Murray, becoming Chairman of this board as well. In addition, Mr. Plunkett has served in many other offices, his ability, impartiality and sound judgment fitting him for almost any office within the gift of the people. His services to his party have been very valuable and he is now serving on the County Central Committee. His religious affiliation is with the Baptist Church. Fraternally Mr. Plunkett is a member of the Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America and Encampment, and is now Past Grand Master of the first-named order. Mrs. Plunkett belongs to the Court of Honor of Pleasant Plains, Ill. Both are representative people, who know how to do the right thing in the right way, and are often called upon for advice and assistance. Their pleasant home is a favorite gathering place for the friends of both, and no two people stand higher in the county than they.

PLUNKETT, William F., a prosperous farmer and stock raiser of Section 9, Cartwright Township, is recognized as a man of strict integrity and high moral character, whose word is as good as his bond, and he has the general respect of all who know him. He is a native of the township where he now resides, born north-east of the Plains, October 13, 1844, a son of John H. and Mary Elizabeth (Conner) Plunkett, the latter a native of New Jersey, who came to Cass County by rail, with their family Benjamun Conner and wife, in Cass County, John H. and Mary Elizabeth Plunkett were married. He owned 100 acres of land in Cartwright Township, where they located, and on that farm seven children were born to them. About 1850 the family moved to Knox County, Mo., where Mr. Plunkett purchased 240 acres of land, established a comfortable home, and was prospering well when the Civil War came on. He made his home on that farm until his death, about 1890, his widow surviving him until 1895. Their seven children were: Silas P., of Newark, Mo.; William F.; Eliza, wife of William Graves, of Iates County, Mo.; Mrs. Joel McSurley, a farmer of Knox County, Mo.; Rebecca, wife of Howard Cox, of Knox County; Jasper, a farmer in that county; and Benjamin H., of Beardstown, Ill.

The education of William F. Plunkett, which had been begun in Sangamon County, was continued after the family removal to Missouri, and he was reared there. He cherished sentiments of loyalty to the flag of their country and were greatly persecuted by the bushwhackers for that reason. At one time William and his brother Silas had to secrete themselves, for safety, in what was known as “Black Jack Hollow,” for a period of two weeks, waiting for the Federal Army. At length they were able to reach Newark and there enlisted for three years in the Eleventh Missouri Cavalry. The regiment was organized and sent to the front, the first fight being at Kirksville and the second at Newark. William Plunkett was captured by old Gen. Joseph Davenport, paroled and turned loose. The Third Iowa soon after came and turned the rebel army out of Newark, they leaving their dead and wounded on the field, and Mr. Plunkett was discharged and sent home. His brother Silas re-enlisted in 1862 for three years.

After his service in the cause of his country Mr. Plunkett returned to Sangamon County and for three years worked at farming by the month. May 14, 1871, he was united in marriage with Miss Adeline Gabberd, also a native of Cartwright Township, and daughter of Lynn Gabberd and his wife, Frances (Fletcher) Gabberd, both now deceased. Mrs. Plunkett was one of four children, each of whom received twenty-five acres of land from their parents, and Mr. Plunkett purchased the shares of the other heirs in the farm and they began their married life there. They lived on the Gallaher farm for about thirteen years, and about 1854 sold it and invested in eighty acres of land on Section 9, where they have a very good home. He has refused an offer of $200 per acre for his farm and no better farm land is to be found in the county. He has been very successful in his operations and is able to enjoy a well earned rest from hard work. Six children have been born to him and his wife as follows:
William Alexander, of Pleasant Plains; John Lindsey, of Pleasant Plains; Warren, who helps operate the home farm; two sons deceased, Logan and Jessie. They are also parents of two daughters, Cordelia Anna, wife of Isaac Harris, of Springfield, has two children—
Adella and Logan, and Maggie Belle, at home.
Mr. Pinnkett and son are operating an additional 100 acres of land, making about 240 acres altogether. Mr. Pinnkett has spent his entire life in Cartwright Township except for a few years spent in Missouri, and has always taken an active and patriotic interest in the growth of the community for himself, the state and county. His parents were among the early settlers there and were held in high esteem.
Mr. Pinnkett is not a member of any church, but has contributed freely towards the support of churches and schools. He was for some time one of the Directors of the Claysville District school board and took a general interest in the well being of those who kept school. He has always been ready to vote a high salary to a teacher. He has given his children good common school educations and reared them to useful man and womanhood. In politics he has always been a strong adherent of the principles of the Republican party. His wife is a devout member of the Baptist Church.
On November 1, 1910, Mr. Pinnkett suffered a stroke of paralysis, but has to a large extent recovered from it, having a strong physique and robust health.

POEHLMAN, Conrad.—One of the many hands-some residences of Springfield, is that at 3355 Locust Avenue, owned by Conrad Poehlman, who has for several years been living retired from active life. Mr. Poehlman was born in Bavaria, Germany, March 3, 1845, son of George and Barbara (Mixer) Poehlman, both natives of Germany. The father was a farmer by occupation and both he and his wife spent their enti-tire lives in Germany.
The boyhood of Conrad Poehlman was spent on his father's farm and he received his education in the public schools of his native country.
After his school days he worked for his father and afterwards learned the trade of stone-cutter, at which he worked six years in Bayreuth, Bavaria. He emigrated to America in 1868, landing in New York, and proceeding direct to Springfield. He worked for a time at the trade of mason, then became employed in the mines, and several years later entered the employ of the Culver Construction Company. For several years he has lived quietly at his home in Springfield, surrounded by his children and grandchildren and enjoying a well-earned rest after his active and industrious years of work. Mr.
Poehlman was a skilled workman in his line and was quick to learn the language and customs of his adopted country, easily becoming adapted to his surroundings. He has been very successful in his work and respected by all who have come into contact with him. In the year 1899 Mr. Poehlman made a trip to his native land and revisited the scenes of his childhood. He has many friends in Springfield and is considered a representative citizen.

Mr. Poehlman was married, in Springfield, June 6, 1868, to Barbara Taubenrether, who was born in Bavaria, August 4, 1846, and came to America when a young woman. Her parents lived and died in Germany. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Poehlman, seven sons and three daughters, namely: Michael, of Springfield; George, a patrolman of Springfield; Henry, engaged in mining; Frederick, engaged in farming; William, engaged in mining; John, now in the employ of the National Pottery Company of Springfield; Frank, in dairy business; Catherine, wife of John Green, an iron molder of Springfield; Anna B. lives at home;
Mary works for the Illinois Watch Company.
Mr. Poehlman and his wife have eight grandchildren.

POGUE, John F.—Now that many years have passed since the Civil War ended, the people of the country can view fairly and without discrimination the services rendered by the men who responded to what they believed to be their duty, and fought bravely and well for the cause they loved. While the ranks of the old soldiers are yearly thinning, many still remain, to be the objects of veneration and respectful affection from those who are now profiting from their bravery and patriotism. One of the best known veterans of Springfield is John F. Pogue, now living retired, but who for many years was as-associated with the oil industry, as well as with other interests. He was born in Clermont County, Ohio, December 9, 1829, a son of Thomas F. and Grace (Gilkeron) Pogue, both born in Augusta County, Va., he in 1798, and she in 1803.
The father was a farmer, who resided in Virginia until 1822, but in that year moved to Ohio, which remained his home until 1854. Becoming imbued with a confidence in Illinois, he moved to the State in 1854, but lived only a year thereafter, dying in 1855, tenderly beloved by his family, to whom he had been greatly atached. His father had been a Revolutionary soldier who located in Virginia, and there spent the remainder of his life, retaining the title of General, which he had won during the war. He also gained distinction in connection with his services as Government Surveyor.

John F. Pogue attended college in Ohio, having been prepared for the course by a boyhood spent in farm work and attendance on the district school. Following his leaving college he taught school in Montgomery County, from 1854 to 1856, having moved to the State in the former year. At the outbreak of the war he enlisted, in April, 1861, one of the first to respond to President Lincoln's call for troops, serving three years and three months as a non-commissioned officer. He participated in the Siege of Vicksburg as well as other important engagements, and was wounded. Returning home, he resumed the labors interrupted by his military career, but in 1866 went to Lafayette, Ind., which continued his place of business for five years, during which time he was engaged in a mercantile line, but once more he came to Illinois, and for twelve years successfully operated an extensive oil business in Springfield, eventually retiring.

Mr. Pogue was married in Springfield, April 8, 1858, to Virginia V. Fox, born in Sangamon County, in 1842. Her parents were also Virginians, who came to Sangamon County at an early day and remained there the remainder of their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Pogue have had one child, Grace May, born May 30, 1869. Mr. Pogue has been a Republican since the formation of the party, and served as Township Clerk and for many terms was School Director, rendering the community valuable service by the interest he displayed in educational matters. From 1883 to 1885 he was in the Provost General's office at Springfield. He belongs to the G. A. R., and the Veterans' Union, and is liberal in his charity. He is a member of the Methodist Church, of Springfield holds his membership, and for years he has been its loyal supporter, both as to means and energy. Like his forebears, Mr. Pogue has always been fond of his home and loved ones, but he has been ready to render service to those who needed it, and his neighbors and all who have been associated with him appreciate and honor his many excellent traits of character.

POPE, Obadiah, well known farmer, postoffice Buffalo, Sangamon County, Ill., is of German and old American stock and combines the good qualities suggested by that statement. He was born in Jefferson County, Tenn., August 29, 1834, a son of Peter and Sarah (Wilson) Pope, natives respectively of Germany and North Carolina. His father, a farmer, was brought to America by his parents, when he was comparatively young. The family lived in North Carolina for many years, until the father died. After that event Peter went to Tennessee, locating in Jefferson County, where he farmed until his death, which occurred in 1872. His widow died at the home of her son in Sangamon County, Ill., in 1875, aged eighty years. They had three sons and three daughters, all of whom except the subject of this sketch are dead.

Obadiah Pope was educated in Jefferson County, Tenn., in a pioneer school-house with log walls, slab benches and greased paper window panes. He worked on his father's farm until he attained his majority, then learned the wagon-maker's trade in Morristown, Tenn., and worked at it there until the Civil War began. Then he entered the mercantile business, an independent company and fought for his country for a short time. Obtaining a discharge, he entered the government service as a carpenter and a maker and repairer of wagons. At the end of the war he resumed farming in Tennessee. In 1872 he came to Sangamon County, Ill., and after operating one farm three years, removed to another at Lanesville, where he remained thirty years, then retired from active life and took up his residence in Buffalo, selling his fine farm of 100 acres. He was Road Commissioner of Lanesville Township and was twice elected Justice of the Peace, rendering a reputation as a model official. His religious and political affiliations may be dismissed with the significant statement that he is a Baptist and a Republican.

Mr. Pope married Miss Mary Adams, in Jefferson County, Tenn., May 5, 1855. She was born in Washington County, that State, October 4, 1838, a daughter of Henry and Rhur (Nave) Adams. They have been long residents of Lanesville and are both born in Tennessee and her father was a farmer there until his death. The wife also died there. She is one of a family which consisted of two sons and three daughters, all of whom except herself have passed away. Her father was a soldier in the War of 1812. To Mr. and Mrs. Pope were born twelve children, five sons and seven daughters. Peter lives at Dawson, Ill.; Melissa is dead; Henry is dead; Sally is the wife of Albert Ketcham, of Dawson; Samuel, at Dawson; Kate is the wife of Ottis J. Hunter, a Nebraska farmer; Angelina is Mrs. Leonard Scruggins, of Lincoln, Colorado; John at Lanesville, Ill.; Leonard at Riverton; Nellie, wife of Alexander Reynolds, of Rochester; Ida, wife of J. G. Sock, of Eagle, Neb.; Grace, wife of Roscoe C. Cox, of Moberly, Mo. Mr. and Mrs. Pope have thirty-two grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren.

PORTER, Harry C., an energetic young business man of Springfield, member of the firm of Porter & Brisk, was born in Alexis, Warren County, Ill., October 4, 1877, son of James I. and Martha (Dorland) Porter, both natives of Pennsylvania and for the past thirty-five years residents of Alexis. Harry C. Porter is the second of three children and was educated in the common and high schools of his native town, leaving when within two months of graduating from the latter. He had previously been employed during vacations in potteries and on

After leaving school Mr. Porter worked for a railroad, beginning as messenger boy and being promoted through various grades to the position of traveling freight agent. At the end of four years he resigned his position and accepted an agency in Springfield for a large company, and formed a partnership with Mr. Brisk. He is energetic and ambitious in a business way, has a pleasing personality and is popular with his friends. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and in politics is a Republican. He is affiliated with the B. P. O. E. and is well known in fraternal circles.

Mr. Porter was married, in Taylorville, Ill., December 6, 1904, to Miss Ivy Dickerson, of Rochester, and they have one child, Dorothy.

POWELL, William E., a retired farmer living in Williamsville, Ill., was born in Fayette County, Ill., June 21, 1831, a son of Seymour and Angelina (Carter) Powell natives of Virginia. In 1850 the father moved to Effingham County, Ill., and there died, in 1879, aged eighty-seven years. He was a farmer by occupation and a most worthy and excellent man, who became prominent in his community.

The education of William E. Powell was received in Effingham County, and as a boy he was very fond of hunting and fishing. He was reared to agricultural pursuits and has followed them all his active life. Settling down on a farm in the county in which he was reared, Mr. Powell spent a number of years as an energetic and industrious farmer, so that he was able to retire from active life in 1902, coming then to the village of Williamsville, where he has become one of the substantial and respected citizens of this pleasant little community.

On July 11, 1862, Mr. Powell joined the Seventy-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served nearly four months, being mustered out at Chicago, Ill. He spent a portion of this time guarding bridges and prisoners, acquitting himself with credit and faithfully performing all the duties assigned him. Mr. Powell is a man who impresses all with his reliability and integrity, and is able to win and retain valuable friendships. In religious belief he is a Methodist, while politically he is a Republican. Mr. Powell has well earned the rest he now enjoys.

The first marriage of Mr. Powell occurred in Effingham County, March 14, 1850, to Anna E. Doaty, who was born in 1843 and died April 27, 1872, having had nine children, of whom three survive: Sarah A., married Charles Engert, was born October 7, 1861, three children; —Eugene, Walter and Lagora; Mary A. J. Engert, born December 27, 1870; and Crabell, born December 21, 1865; married L. M. Elliott, On. April 22, 1872. Mr. Powell was again married in Effingham County, to Ellen (Leffler) Anspaugh, widow of Solomon Anspaugh, to whom she had been married in 1862. They had three children before the death of Mr. Anspaugh in 1869, namely: Mary, who married Charles Newbern and they have twelve children; Emma J., who married John Burns and they have two children; and Albert L., who married Clara Jackson, and they have four children. Mr. and Mrs. Powell became the parents of the following children: Lillie M., deceased, born July 16, 1873; Edward T., born December 20, 1874, married Ada Hale; John C., born October 28, 1876, married Stella Renfrow; Charles E., born December 31, 1878, married Sallie Younger; Thomas B., born February 10, 1884, married Mamie Tipsword; Lola, born November 24, 1882, twin of William, married Isahat Tipsword, while William married Hattie H instead; Cleveland, born June 1, 1885; George, born April 16, 1887, and Bennie twin, of George, died. Mrs. Powell has forty grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Mr. and Mrs. Powell and family are very prominent in their community. Having lived in Springfield and its vicinity for so many years, they were, of course, acquainted with Abraham Lincoln. One of Mr. Powell's most pleasant memories of early days is of a foot-race he ran with Mr. Lincoln, the venerable Peter Cartwright acting as Judge upon that occasion. The Powell family took an active part in pioneer affairs, Seymour Powell serving in the Black Hawk War under Mr. Lincoln, and being mustered out at Alton, Ill. Mrs. Powell's father, Solomon Leffler, gave up his life in the Union cause, dying while in service during the Civil War. Mr. Powell is also proud of the fact that his father was employed in the construction of the State House, for he likes to think that he and his have borne their part in making improvements in the county he loves so well.

POWER, Charles A.—It is given to some men to commence their business career with nothing and through perseverance and courage to achieve ultimate success. The man who starts out with his fortune already made is handicapped from the beginning, for there is no present need to act as a stimulating impetus to urge him forward. When he takes unto himself a wife, the rich man does not have to exert himself to provide for necessities, and therefore is robbed of much honest pleasure and desirable encouragement of his efforts. Charles A. Power of Springfield, is one of the best examples in this city of what a man can accomplish if he only possesses the right amount of willingness to work, and knows how to save his money.

Mr. Power was born in Springfield, May 14, 1852, being a son of Maurice and Margaret (Smith) Power, both natives of Ireland, who transmitted to their son many of the desirable qualities. The father was a shoemaker by trade, and during the war made his home at Chatham, Sangamon County, but in 1866 returned to Springfield, where he continued to reside until his death.
Charles A. Power attended the public schools of Chatham, Ill., while his parents lived there; later becoming a student of the Christian Brothers’ school, and the Springfield public schools. He learned the cabinetmaking trade in the furniture store of Mr. Westenberger, with whom he remained three and one-half years during this time thoroughly mastering the business. A better example of his work can be found than his own two-story residence at No. 1401 Whittier Avenue, Hawthorne, which he built.

On September 10, 1873, Mr. Power and Miss Elizabeth White, of Springfield, who was born in Fancy Creek Township, were united in marriage. Mrs. Power’s father was also a native of Ireland, who died during her infancy. Although Mr. and Mrs. Power have no children of their own, they have reared three and are among the most charitable people of Springfield. Both are consistent members of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Mr. Power being a very generous supporter of it and an earnest worker in its ranks. He belongs to its regular societies, as well as to the Western Catholic Union, Council No. 304, Knights of Columbus; to the Modern Woodmen of America; to the Mystic Circle; to the Loyal Americans and the Royal Circle. In politics, he is a Democrat.

Mr. and Mrs. Power are delightful entertainers and their pleasant home is often the scene of charming gatherings, both always displaying that hospitable instinct which is so characteristic of the people of Erin and their descendants. In church and social circles both are very popular, and whenever sorrow enters the home of any of their friends, it is to these two good people that the afflicted come for both sympathy and material help, and never in vain.

POWER, Charles P., was born on the farm where he now resides, in Fancy Creek Township, February 14, 1882, and belongs to a family that has taken a prominent part in the affairs of the locality for several generations past. He is a son of James England and Laura (Foster-Chord) Power, the former born on the old Power homestead in Sangamon County, December 1, 1824, and the latter born at Peters burg, Menard County, October 7, 1847. The father was born and reared on the farm where his father, George Power, settled in 1821. George Power was born in Fayette County, February 18, 1738, his father being a native of Virginia, who had lived for a time in North Carolina before going to Kentucky. When about ten years of age George Power accompanied his parents to Bath County, Ky., and was there married on February 10, 1829, to Nancy Hul cockson. They had but two children, one born in Bath County and the other in Fancy Creek Township. They located, upon their arrival in 1821, on the Power homestead near Cantrall, which has since been the family home. Mr. Power held various civil and military offices, including: a commission dated September 15, 1827, from Gov. Nuelan Edwards, as Major of the Twenty-fifth Regiment Illinois Infantry, under the military laws then in existence; commission from Gov. Reynolds, dated June 4, 1831, as Lieutenant of a company of mounted volunteers in the Black Hawk War; commission as Justice of the Peace, from Gov. Edwards, dated July 25, 1828, and a similar document from Gov. Reynolds, dated September 3, 1831; commission for same purpose from Gen. Joseph Dun can, August 27, 1835; one from Gov. Thomas Carlin, August 27, 1839; one from Gov. Thomas Ford, August 14, 1843, the whole covering a period of nineteen years in this office. He built the first frame house in the county north of the Sangamon River. He engaged in business with a cash capital of but five dollars and by earnest effort and good management became the owner of two thousand acres of choice farm and stock land, which is now in the possession of his descendants. He erected a family vault on his farm, at a cost of five thousand dollars, soon after the death of his elder son, who was the first person to be buried there. His elder son, born in Bath County, Ky., May 2, 1821, came with his parents to Sangamon County the same year, and there married, January 6, 1843, Nancy J. Barnett, five children being born of their union. He was elected County Judge in 1861 and reelected in 1863, dying while in office March 2, 1863, after which his widow resided in Springfield.

James E. Power, younger son of his parents, was reared on the farm near Cantrall and spent his entire life in farming. He was married and continued to live on the homestead which he inherited. One small building now remains on the farm that was erected soon after George Power came to the place where he established a permanent home. It was on this ground that the slaves were freed about 1837. Mrs. Laura F. Power is a woman of prominence in the community.

George Power was awarded a gold-headed cane for the most skillful feat of horseback riding by an elderly gentleman, at the fair held by the Sangamon County Agricultural Society in September, 1876, the presentation being made by the President of the organization, ex-Gov. John M. Palmer, in the presence of a large gathering. Mr. Power was the eldest of the five competitors, being then in his seventy-ninth year.

PRICKETT, David.—The Honorable David Prickett was of English ancestry, his father, George Prickett, emigrating to America some time before the Revolutionary War and settling in Maryland. In the struggle for Independence he cast his lot with the American patriots and fought for the freedom of the Colonies. The coat-of-arms of the Prickett ancestry is a full-antlered Buck Deer. Soon after the close of the Revolutionary War, George Prickett, the father (who was a lawyer and a planter), removed with his family, consisting of his wife and six children, from their Maryland home to Franklin County, Ga. To all the children except one had been given Bible names of Hebrew origin and significance, namely: Abraham (the father of many); Isaac (Laughter); Jacob (a supplanter); Eliash (the salvation of God); John (the grace of the Lord); David (well beloved); and George, who was given his father's name, being the exception. David Prickett was born in Franklin County, Ga., September 21, 1800, and, in 1809, came with his parents to the then Territory of Illinois, the family locating at what is now Edwardsville, Madison County. Here David made his home for nearly twenty-five years. The Prickett family being thus among the early settlers, had much to do in the making of the early history of the State with which it was prominently identified.

Abraham Prickett was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818, which framed the first State Constitution of Illinois, and was also a member of the first Legislature held under this constitution at Kaskaskia in 1818-19, this being the last Legislature to meet in the original State capital.

David Prickett was a graduate of the law department of the Transylvania University at Lexington, Ky. He completed his collegiate course during his twenty-first year and on November 15, 1821, was admitted to the bar at Edwardsville, where he served as Judge of the Probate Court, following which was his appointment as first Reporter of the Illinois Supreme Court. While he was practicing as an attorney, the late U. S. Senator John M. Palmer began the study of the law in his office. In 1826 he was elected a member of the Fifth General Assembly from Madison County, the sessions of this body being then held at Vandalia. Letters and speeches left among his papers indicate that the affairs of the young State of Illinois were then in a chaotic condition. At the time of the meeting of this session a determined effort was made by men of nerve and sound judgment to improve the existing deplorable conditions. The punishment of criminals at this time was cruel and partook of barbarous customs, such as the whipping post, confinement in stocks, branding, cropping, and the gallows. In furtherance of proper reforms, the first State Penitentiary was established at Alton, largely through the instrumentality of Representative David Prickett. The system of the Judiciary was one of the most exciting topics before this session. The people were much opposed to the plan of Judges of the courts being appointed and holding office during life or good behavior. This General Assembly abolished the office of Circuit Judge and imposed their duties on the Supreme Judges. It also revised the laws of the State, which required the issue of a volume of statutes of 380 pages, printed by Robert Blackwell of Vandalia. Up to this time the Judges of the Circuit Courts charged the jurors on the facts and, in many cases, made long stump speeches to the jury on the facts in the case on trial. The Fifth General Assembly corrected this evil also, by confining the instructions of the court to the law in the case only. This session of the General Assembly lasted seventy-eight days and passed 143 laws, all of which were of the highest importance to the new State. During Mr. Prickett's legislative term, he was commissioned by Governor Coles, aide-de-camp to Gen. Samuel Whitesides, which extended to service in the Black Hawk War. His notable associates in the Black Hawk expedition, were: Gen. Stillman, Commandant; Zachary Taylor, afterwards President of the United States; Lieut. Jefferson Davis, afterwards President of the Southern Confederacy; Abraham Lincoln, afterwards President of the United States; William S. Hamilton, son of Alexander Hamilton, the great Federalist; Robert Anderson, of Fort Sumter fame, and many other men who afterwards became distinguished in American History.

Mr. Prickett was elected Clerk of the House for the Seventh General Assembly (1830-31), and by successive reelections served in the same capacity in every General Assembly up to the Eleventh (1838-40), serving in the latter from December 9 to February 3, 1840, this being the first session held in Springfield—after which he resigned. He was also made Assistant Clerk of the Fifteenth General Assembly, held in 1846-47, up to the time of his death in that year.

Having moved with his family to Springfield before the capital was located there, Mr. Prickett took a very active part in securing that result, contributing liberally of his means and time to aid successfully the enterprise; and being one of the signers of a note, dated March 22, 1838, for $16,064.67, given by the citizens of Springfield, covering a balance due on $50,000, which had been pledged by the citizens, together with two acres of land, to secure the location of the capital in their town.

In 1837, he was elected State's Attorney for the First Judicial Circuit, composed of the counties of Pike, Calhoun, Greene, Morgan, Sangamon, Tazewell, McLean, Mason and Macoupin. Other official positions of importance held by him included that of Treasurer of the Board of Canal Commissioners, to which he was appointed by Gov. Carlin, in 1839, and he was elected to the same position by the Legislature in 1840 for a second term. In 1843, he was appointed by Gov. Ford, Commissioner of the State Bank of Illinois, his duties as specified by the Legislature being to reduce the public debt of the State one million dollars and to place the bank in process of liquidation.

In 1845, David Prickett and James W. Keyes, father of the late Charles A. Keyes of this city, were appointed by the Democrats of Central Illinois as a special committee to wait on James K. Polk, the newly elected President of the United States, at his home in Nashville, Tenn., to present the desires and claims of their Democratic constituency for presidential consideration. The result of this commission was quite satisfactory to the Democrats, whose chosen representatives they were.

Hon. David Prickett, was married January 24, 1834, at Tremont, Tazewell County, Ill., to Charlotte Griffith, who was born March 9, 1806, in Chester County, Pa. They removed to Springfield in 1835. Here Judge Prickett purchased a tract of land comprising nine acres, bounded by Capitol Avenue, Edwards, Second and Third Streets. The house in which the family lived has been removed and in its place stands the first Supreme Court Building ever erected by the State of Illinois. It is quite a coincidence, that this beautiful and costly building should stand on the home site of the man who was appointed, nearly a century ago, the first Reporter of the Court which occupies this temple of Justice. Unto Judge Prickett and his wife, five children were born: Christiana G., born August 13, 1855; Thomas G., born December 23, 1837; Gibson R., born June 30, 1840; Hannah O., born January 15, 1842, and died 21st of May, 1909, and another daughter, Susan, who died in infancy. The three surviving children all reside in Springfield, Christiana G., now (1912) resides in a beautiful modern home on a part of the original Prickett site in the full enjoyment of the comforts and consolation of a happy, well spent life, and has the love and esteem of her relatives and of her many life-long and devoted friends and neighbors. Thomas G., is a retired attorney at law, while Gibson R. resides with his sister, Christiana G., looking after the business interests of the estate.

The Hon. David Prickett, after a useful and strenuous life, passed away in 1847, and his remains rest in the beautiful Oak Ridge Cemetery at Springfield. He was a man of more than ordinary ability and force and of the highest integrity. As a public official he executed the many highly responsible trusts which had been committed to his care with rare fidelity and honesty, demonstrating his peculiar fitness and capacity as a public official.

'Tis of the brave and good alone
That good and brave men are the seed;
Yet training quickens powers unborn,
And culture nerves the soul for fame.

PRICKETT, Thomas G.—Thomas G. Prickett, second of the five children of David and Charlotte G. Prickett, was born in Springfield, December 23, 1837. He was educated at the Chalottsville Seminary, New York, from which he graduated in 1854. He entered the army during the rebellion with the rank of Captain in 1862, and served for one year on the staff of Gen. John A. McClernand, afterwards reading law under the preceptorship of General McClernand; graduating with the title of Bachelor of Laws from the Law Department of the Michigan State University in 1865. He was twice elected City Attorney of the City of Springfield, and also served as Alderman in 1874-76. On November 3, 1886, he was united in marriage to Mrs. Margaret (Johnstone) McRoberts, whom he survives. Mr. Prickett is a well known, popular citizen and attorney at law of Springfield and Central Illinois, and is held in high esteem for his many excellent qualities of head and heart, as a citizen and a neighbor by his many friends. He is one of the best posted and reliably informed men in the State as to the early history of the State and the men who started Illinois on her wonderful march to success.

PRICKETT, Mrs. Charlotte (Griffith), was born in Chester County, Pa., May 9, 1806, and was married to the Hon. David Prickett, in Tremont, Tazewell County, Ill., January 24, 1834. Mrs. Prickett died in Springfield, Ill., in 1876, and was buried beside her husband in Oak Ridge Cemetery. She was of Quaker parentage on her mother's side, being the daughter of Dr. Thomas Griffith and Christiana Gibson Griffith, who intermarried in the State of Maryland, where Dr. Griffith was born. Shortly after their marriage they removed to Pennsylvania and afterwards to Richmond, Ind., where Dr. Griffith remained until coming to Tazewell County, Ill., with his family in 1828. He was a man of more than ordinary ability and skill in his profession, a graduate of the Medical College of Baltimore and commissioned by the Royal Medical Society of London, England, to investigate and ascertain the Materia Medica of the Herbs and Flora of North America. He was a kind and affectionate husband and indulgent father, highly respected and esteemed by all who were favored with his acquaintance. He died and was buried in Tazewell County, where his remains rested until the death of his wife in 1852, when they were removed to Oak Ridge Cemetery and placed by her side.

The ancestry of the Gibson family traces back to John Gibson of Bonstod Hill, Burg on the Sands, who was born in 1680, in County Cumberland, England, on the shores of the Solway, just inside the line of the old Pict's Wall and about five miles from Carlisle. He was a member of the Society of Friends or Quakers; his father, also John Gibson, was persecuted for his religious faith. Shortly after his father's death, his mother removed to Lurgan, County Antrim, Ireland. He married in Ireland Christiana Harlan, whose ancestry on the mother's side is traced to the Norman Kings. Thomas Gibson, son of the above, was born in Lurgan, Ireland, 1723, and came to Pennsylvania with his parents at the age of six years, and, in 1751 he was married. His daughter, Mrs. Christiana Gibson Griffith, the mother of Mrs. Charlotte G. Prickett, the subject of this sketch, was born in Pennsylvania in 1768, and died in Springfield, Ill., at the age of 85 years.
Mrs. Prickett was the mother of five children of whom mention is made elsewhere in this connection. She was a woman of most lovable character, highly educated and refined; devoted herself to the culture, comfort and moral training of her family, and early sought indubitably to impress them with habits of industry, self-reliance, integrity, patriotism and morality. She was possessed of a kind, sympathetic nature, ever ready and active in relieving the necessities and distress of others. Being a woman of high ideals and social qualifications, her beautiful and spacious home was always the seat of pleasure and enjoyment to the many friends of her young and ambitious husband. Among these were men of the highest honors in State craft and of social standing. Thus surrounded by an affectionate family and congenial friends, she bestowed a graceful and charming hospitality upon a large circle of devoted admirers.

PRICKETT, Mrs. Margaret (Johnstone), was born in Smallholm, Parish of Lochmaben, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, July 15, 1851, the youngest of eight children born to John and Mary Neckelson Johnstone. Her mother died in Scotland when she was two years old. In the fall of 1851, her father, Mr. John Johnstone (being the oldest son of the family and, under the laws of England, sole heir to its landed estate—the same having descended from father to son, for nearly four hundred years), after providing for some of his relatives, who were in less favored circumstances, by placing them in possession of enough of the old estate to secure their comfort through life, disposed of the remainder, bid adieu to his native land and came to America, settling with his four daughters, Elizabeth, Jane, Mary and Margaret, and John, James, David and William, his four sons, on what was then known as the Constant Farm, consisting of 240 acres on Wolf Creek in what is now Williams Township, Sangamon County.

THE JOHNSTONES OF ANNANDALE.—The Johnstones, at one time among the most powerful, as they are now one of the most ancient, of the Border Septs—with the winged spur as their appropriate emblem, and the words, "Ready, ae a Ready," for their motto—were originally settled in the East Lothian, but for over four hundred years they have held extensive possessions in the Western Marches. The first of the family, Sir John De Johnstone, was one of the Scottish Barons who swore fidelity to Edward I of England in 1266. (His great grandfather also, Sir John De Johnstone, was conspicuous for his valor in defense of his country in the reigns of David II and Robert II.) In 1310, he defeated an invading army and two years later was appointed Guardian of the Western Marches. His son, Adam Johnstone, was one of the Commanders of the Scottish Army at the battle of Stark in 1448, in which a signal victory was gained over the English invaders. Sir Adam also took a prominent part on the royal side in the desperate struggle between James II and the Douglases, and was very instrumental in the suppression of the rebellion of that great house against the Crown. He was awarded by the King a grant of land in Lanarkshire, and the Johnstomes of Annan-dale have ever since borne alone, with their ancestral arms, the Heart and Crown of Douglas as a memorial of the important service rendered to the Royal cause by their ancestors at that critical period. Sir Adam, the eldest son, was the progenitor of the Annandale or main branch of the family, while Matthew, his second son, who married a daughter of the Earl of Angus, chief of the Red Douglas, was the ancestor of the Westerhall branch.

On March 25, 1859, at the home of her father, Margaret Johnstone was united in marriage to John McRoberts of Springfield, Ill. He died January 22, 1882. By this marriage two children were born to her: Mary N. McRoberts, who married Judge Charles E. Messerly of Seward, Mo., and James J. McRoberts, also of that city. On November 3, 1886, she was married to Thomas G. Prickett, an Attorney-at-Law of Springfield. On March 27, 1912, after an exemplary and good life, her remains, accompanied by a sorrowing husband and a large circle of devoted friends, were affectionately laid at rest in the beautiful Oak Ridge Cemetery, at Springfield.

Mrs. Prickett was endowed by nature with those noble and exalted traits of heart and brain which tend to the loftiest heights of true womanhood. Deprived, as she was, of the tender and loving care of a fond mother while so young, she naturally looked to her father for that affection, care and training she so much sought and required. To him she told her childhood troubles; to him she looked for protection and comfort. While on his knee at the Scottish fireside, in song and story she learned of the wars and triumphs of her ancestry and became fully imbued with the moral of their motto. It was her guiding star through life, that at duties' call, whether from her God, her King, her country or in every day life, she must be "Ready, ae a Ready."Though she had but little schooling before leaving Scotland at the age of ten years, she had committed to memory her Catechism, many of the Psalms and chapters in the Bible. She also memorized many of the songs of Burns and seemed to know them all. She loved her native land above all others.

"She di'na lo' e this country less, but she loe'd the ma'hr her a'la.'
There was that a poon at her heart, to see Scotland ance again:
Though ye talked to her o 'ither lan's, be they far awa' or near,
Ye could na win her lo' e awa' frae the lan' to her sae dear."
She was an active and earnest member of the Mary A. Lawrence Circle of the Kings' Daughters, a Society devoted to charitable purposes. While she cheerfully acquiesced in its many modes and measures for the betterment of the unfortunate and needy, at heart she was opposed to outward show or publicity of charitable acts, often so necessary in the workings of such societies. The many sacrifices she made in behalf of those she loved and held most dear, as well as to those less fortunate than herself in the blessings of this world—all administered in strictest privacy unknown to her circle—afforded her that inward satisfaction so consoling to her life and so noble in the sight of heaven.

She was ever ready to counsel silence in those who spoke to her of the faults, misfortunes and mistakes of others. She never had an unkind word for any and would oftentimes say: "Would there were some gift age us, to see oursen's as uthers see us." If so we would be more charitable and forgiving to one another, less vain and self-conceited and help to make this world brighter and happier for all.

Among her writings are found the following beautiful lines, which show the true trend of her Scottish heart:

"The bonnie hills of Scotland, so majestic and so grand,
Their summits crowned with glory, 'tis my own, my native land;
Is it any wonder then, that my heart with rapture thrills
When I behold the beauty of those bonnie Scottish hills?"

"Those bonnie Scottish hills, Oh! how dear they are to me;
Their summits pointing skyward and their bases by the sea,
Many changes do I flud, which my heart with sadness fills,
But no changes can be noticed in those bonnie Scottish hills.

"Those bonnie Scottish hills, where my girlhood days were passed,
Where oft I wandered happily and the future tried to cast;
Many are our day dreams bright that the future ne'er fulfills,
Yet happy were my day dreams on those bonnie Scottish hills.

"Now my bonnie Scottish hills I will bid you all adieu,
In my home beyond the ocean I will ofttimes dream of you;
And in the after time of life, if my Father only wills, I'll oft behold the grandeur of ye bonnie Scottish hills."

PRIEST, James A. (deceased), who was a prominent farmer and citizen of Sangamon County, was born in Ohio, May 2, 1833, a son of Chauncey and Mary Priest, natives respectively of Ohio and Massachusetts. His father came comparatively early to Sangamon County and farmed within its borders as long thereafter as he lived. Mr. Priest's great-grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary War and the history of his patriotic service will long be cherished by his descendants.

In the family of Chauncey and Mary Priest were three sons and two daughters, of whom only two survive. The subject of this notice began his education in Ohio and began there the acquisition of his practical knowledge of farming under the able preceptorship of his father. He was only twelve years old when his parents brought him to Sangamon County, where he attended school and continued his labors on the home farm. He farmed in the county in all his subsequent years except during two years when he was so employed in Christian County. He was a Republican in political faith and a man of great public spirit, who had much to do with the affairs of his community, always helpful and patriotic. He passed away in 1870.

Mr. Priest married Mary Daley at Springfield, in 1856. She was born in Ireland, August 15, 1835, a daughter of John Daley. Her parents both died in their native land. She came to the United States with an uncle and for four years thereafter lived in Baltimore, Md. Then she came to Springfield, where she married. She had two brothers and a sister, all of whom are dead. She bore her husband one son, Henry Priest, who is the manager of an elevator at Lanesville, Ill. She is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. She has a comfortable home in Buffalo.

PRIEST, John W. (deceased).—In recalling the life and services of John W. Priest, who for years was a prominent factor in the developing of the enterprises which have been vastly beneficial to Springfield, a long path backward must be traveled, his early experiences belonging to an era that seems distinctly remote from the things of today. He came of hearty stock, pioneers from Vermont to western New York in days when transportation was by means of ox teams and the traversing of a hundred miles was accomplished only after days of arduous travel.

John W. Priest was born at Pomfret, Windsor County, Vt., and died in Springfield, Ill., June 7, 1887. His parents, both of English extraction and presumably of the farmer class, left Windsor County for St. Lawrence County, N. Y., and it is recorded that in order to assure a safe crossing of the ice on Lake Champlain, the oxen were shod with wooden shoes. The new home proved to be a tract in the virgin forest, and even as a child of seven years, John Priest was called on to help his father in clearing a spot on which could be built the first semblance of a home. He grew in strength and in stature and in the course of years was his father's main dependence in the developing of a farm, proving himself a worthy and filial son. When he reached man's estate he formed domestic ties of his own and in 1835, with his wife, Olive Wakefield, made a wagon journey, interrupted by a passage on the Erie Canal, to Montgomery, Ala., that southern city being selected mainly on account of the delicate state of his young wife's health. Mr. Priest engaged in the stove business and worked at the tinner's trade until it became evident that his wife could not long survive, and they returned to New York, where she died in 1840.

At the time of his wife's death Mr. Priest was thirty-one years of age, his birth having occurred October 18, 1809, and he was in the flush of manly vigor. To walk a part of the way from St. Lawrence County, N. Y., to the prairies of Illinois did not appear a very formidable feat, and as he had no other transportation but the lakes and Erie Canal and no railroads led to Sangamon County or centered at what is now the busy and populous Capital, he made most of the long journey on foot. He entered into the brick manufacturing business in Springfield, and being a pioneer in this line, became an extensive manufacturer, the brick all being made by hand. He was a good business man and through foresight and business judgment his undertakings became successful. He was engaged in farming for many years and in a number of other enterprises. He established a furniture and stove store on the north side of the Square in Springfield, and this became a landmark in the city. At various times he invested in land and acquiring a section near Pana, Christian County, and 500 acres in Clear Lake Township, near Springfield, and the original patents for this land are preserved by his descendants.

Mr. Priest's first wife was Olive Wakefield, whom he married in Parishville, N. Y., in 1835. His second marriage took place in 1845, when he married Lucinda Stafford, at the home of her brother, Orson Stafford, in Springfield, Ill. She was born at Rochester, Ill., September 10, 1826, and died in 1851. She came of an old English family that settled in Rhode Island in 1700, the emigrant ancestor being Edward Stafford, who married Margaret Green, and their son, Joseph Stafford, married Orpha Sweet; they becoming parents of three sons: John, Joseph and Stephen. If these three sons Joseph married Nancy Green and their oldest son, also named Joseph, was born April 25, 1759, in Kent County, R. I. The last-named, although reared in the faith of the Society of Friends, became a soldier in the Revolution, serving under his relative, General Greene. A rather remarkable coincidence was that he chose for his bride a young woman named Orpha Sweet, they being the second couple in the family with identically the same names, the first being his grandparents. Ten children were born to Joseph and Orpha (Sweet) Stafford, some of whom came to Sangamon County, Ill., where they married and identified themselves with other old families, and the name of Stafford frequently appears on important papers and in valuable records, there being at that time many prominent representatives of the family. Caleb Stafford, father of Mrs. Priest, was born June 22, 1789, and in 1804, accompanied his parents to Essex County, N. Y. He later served in the War of 1812, married Rebecca Eggleton, and in 1836 came with his family to Illinois. He died May 7, 1855, and his wife in 1843.

To John W. and Lucinda M. (Stafford) Priest four children were born, namely: Olive, was married, in 1867, to George C. Latham, a representative of one of the prominent old families of Springfield; Mary E., who is the widow of Silas Wright Currier; two others, John Orson and Emma Rebecca, died in infancy. Mr. Priest was married in 1833, to Catherine Wright, of Peotronton, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., who died in 1875. In 1878, he was married to the estimable lady who survives him, Mrs. Pheobe Eggleton, a resident of Springfield.

For many years Mr. Priest was an active and useful citizen, accepting the responsibilities of public life and performing the duties pertaining to them with the faithfulness of a man of high ideals and pure motives. He was long a member of the School Board and at various times was President of that body, his daughter, now Mrs. Mary P. Currier, having received a diploma which was signed by her father. For several years, at different times, he served as Alderman, and in 1856-58, and again in 1870 and '71, served as Mayor of the city. It was during his incumbency of the latter office, that many city utilities were installed, and through his personal effort city bonds were sold in New York that enabled important public improvements to be made. His name is indissolubly connected with the history of street paving and the installation of the city water works, and for a number of years he was President of the latter company. In all his public-spirited efforts, he was apparently inspired by no idea except the advancement of the general welfare and the establishing of laws and methods that would be of perpetual value. In this way the influence of his beneficent life continues long after he has passed from the scene of life.

PROKOPP, Joseph W.—Among the successful farmers of Sangamon County who spent most of their lives within its limits may be mentioned Joseph W. Prokopp, who owned a well cultivated farm near Spandling. He was born November 13, 1858, son of Joseph A. and Barbara (Shingle) Prokopp, the former of whom was born in Friedland, Bohemia, in September, 1830, and the latter in Ohio, March 12, 1830. The father came to America as a young man and was an early settler of Sangamon County, where he spent the remainder of his life in farming. They spent forty-five years on one farm, where both died, the father April 1, 1867, and the mother, March 6, 1910.

The boyhood of Joseph W. Prokopp was spent on a farm and he was educated in the schools of Sangamon County. As he was old enough he began, to help with the work on his father's farm and when he started out for himself continued in similar work. He lived on the old homestead, for twenty-four years, until recently. He now resides in Middleton, Tenn., and owns 277 acres there. In 1910 he spent some time visiting in Arkansas. He is an energetic and intelligent farmer and has a natural aptitude for this line of work. He stands well all and is known for a public-spirited, useful citizen.

Mr. Prokopp was married in Randolph County, Ill., July 8, 1886, to Mary L. Queffemme, daughter of Ambrose and Cecilia Queffemme, who came from France and settled in Randolph County at a very early day, buying the farm where they now live. Mr. Queffemme was born March 1, 1839, and died August, 1911, and his wife was born December 12, 1839, and besides Mrs. Prokopp they have two other children: Adolph, born November 13, 1867, a farmer living in Missouri, and Alfred, born April 22, 1858, a farmer living on the old homestead in Randolph County. Four children were born to Mr. Prokopp and his wife: James, born April 11, 1890; Lucy, March 5, 1897; May, October 26, 1899; William, May 14, 1904. They are all fine, well-grown children and a credit to their parents.

Mr. Prokopp is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, in politics is a Republican, and takes an active interest in every issue or movement affecting the general welfare of his community. His eldest son, James A. Prokopp, now resides in Springfield, III.

PRUITT, Edgar C., County Superintendent of Sangamon County Schools. Mr. Pruitt came to Sangamon County in 1855 and began his work as teacher at the Pleasant Hill school, two miles east of Springfield. He taught in the country schools of the county for eighteen years, was principal of the East Springfield School for two years, and was elected to the office of County Superintendent of Schools in 1906. He is now serving his second term as Superintendent.

Mr. Pruitt was born Nov. 5, 1863, at Paragon, Ind., and came to Illinois in 1870. He is a member of the Christian church.

PRUNK, Charles J.—The stirring events of the 'sixties, when men's lives were in constant jeopardy, and characters were developed overnight, are but faintly appreciated by the present generation, who have not lived through them. Every old soldier, remembering what he suffered for his country and flag, knows that no honor can be too great for him and those who were his comrades on the bloody battlefields which preserved the Union at such frightful cost. One of the representative veterans of Sangamon County who returned home to devote himself to the peaceful occupation of farming, is Charles J. Prunk, of Mechanicsburg Township. He was born in Clark County, Ohio, May 13, 1828, son of John and Nancy Prunk, natives of Virginia. They were married in that State, soon thereafter migrating to Clark County, Ohio, where they bought land, remaining there until 1848, when removal was made to Cooper Township, Sangamon County, Ill. Here land was bought, upon which both died, she in 1852 and he in 1853, and there were eight children of their family, but Charles J. Prunk is the only one who survives.

Charles J. Prunk attended the public schools of Cooper Township, which were very different in those days from what they are today. A primitive log house sheltered the children, who sat on rude slabs made into seats. When there was any floor aside from that provided by Mother Earth, it was made of rough puncheons. Yet the pupils learned well the lessons taught in these schools, for they were eager for knowledge and wore their few books to scraps. In August, 1862, feeling that he could not remain away from the front any longer, he enlisted in Company E, One Hundred Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being assigned to Virginia, General Burnside's Division, Army of the Potomac. Mr. Prunk participated in the battles of Vicksburg and Shiloh, and was on the March with Sherman to the Sea, returning through the Carolinas to Washington, where he took part in the Grand Review. On account of sickness he was honorably discharged at Springfield, at the close of the war.

In February 1868, Mr. Prunk was married to Melissa Dickenson, born in Sangamon County, Ill., daughter of George and Amanda Dickenson, natives of Kentucky. They have one daughter, Clara, who married Charles Taylor. Mr. Taylor, who died, leaving her with one son, Charles Walter, now a bright young lad of fourteen years. Mrs. Prunk died December 4, 1905, and Mrs. Taylor now keeps house for her father.

Following his marriage Mr. Prunk began farming in Mechanicsburg, leaving the homestead where he had resided up to that event, owning part of that land. He on this place lived until fifteen years ago, when he sold his farm and moved to Mechanicsburg, and there has since lived retired. In politics Mr. Prunk is a Republican, but has not desired office. He is a Methodist in religious faith and has taken an active part in church work, contributing financially towards its support. Like most of the old soldiers, Mr. Prunk takes a deep interest in the G. A. R., belonging to Stephenson Post, of Springfield. In both war and peace Mr. Prunk has proven himself a good citizen. Hard-working and thrifty, he not only made a living for himself and family, but provided for his old age and established his reputation for fair and
Mr. Pugh has made many friends who are proud of his war record, and glad to be numbered among those deemed worthy a place in his confidence.

PUFFINBARGER, Martin, of an old and honored family in Sangamon County, is a native of the county and a veteran of the Civil War. He was born December 25, 1838, son of William and Mary (Harris) Puffinbarger, the father a native of Maryland and the mother of Ohio. The father removed to Ohio as a young man, was there married, and soon afterward, in 1832, came to Sangamon County, settling on a farm south of Springfield, later entering 120 acres of government land there. He operated this land, which he had improved, for many years, then sold it and removed to Christian County, where he spent the remainder of his life, both he and his wife dying on a farm there. There were six sons and three daughters in the family, of whom four sons and one daughter now survive, namely: William C., of Osseo, Kan.; Jackson, of Christian County; Mary, wife of Jacob Cordman, of Osseo, Kan.; Martin, of this sketch. Martin has a half-brother, Douglas Puffinbarger, living in Kansas.

Mr. Puffinbarger was educated in the public schools and reached man's estate on his father's farm. He was acquainted with Abraham Lincoln and his first vote was cast for Stephen A. Douglas. During the early days of the Civil War he enlisted in Company H, One Hundred Forty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Col. Lackey, and at the end of three months was mustered out and discharged at Springfield. He had participated in several skirmishes, mostly in Missouri, and after his service resumed farming, which he has since followed. With the exception of three years spent in Christian County, he has spent his entire life in his native county, and has been on a farm during that entire period, with the exception of two years spent in the city of Springfield. He rents a good farm on Section 10, Cotton Hill Township, where he has lived the past two years, and has a pleasant home there. This land is well improved and in a good state of cultivation.

Mr. Puffinbarger was married in Springfield, in September, 1860, to Mary Lettie Martin, who was born in Christian County, Ill., June 26, 1831, daughter of Eli Martin, an early settler of that county, who followed his trade of blacksmith until his death. Four children were born of this union, of whom two now survive: Ida M., wife of William Boyle, of St. Louis, has one son, William E. Boyle; Battie A., wife of Lawrence Furlong, lives with her father. Mr. Puffinbarger is a Democrat in politics and ready to perform every duty that devolves on him as a citizen.

PUGLISI, Stephen, who has built up an excellent trade in the line of fruit and produce in the city of Springfield, is a native of Italy, born November 25, 1863. He is a son of Dominick and Vittoria Puglisi, the father being interested in various lines of business at Messina (the scene of the memorable earthquake of a few years ago), including the occupations of carpenter and builder, mine dealer and wholesale grocer. At the age of nineteen years Mr. Puglisi left school and came to the United States and learned the trade of barber at Brooklyn, N. Y. In 1888 he came to Springfield and embarked in his present business at 218 North Fifth Street, where he conducts the largest enterprise of its kind in the city. During the year 1910 he handled one hundred and fifty carloads of fruit and produce, and he has won a reputation for fair dealing and first-class goods that is a valuable asset.

Mr. Puglisi was married in Springfield in 1890 to Sarah Foti, a native of Milazzo, Italy, who came to America as a small child, and two children have blessed this union, Victoria and Dominick. The family reside at 323½ North Sixth Street and attend the Church of SS. Peter and Paul. Mr. Puglisi is independent in politics and belongs to the Order of Woodmen. He is well regarded by his patrons and has many warm friends in the city.

PURVINES, Achilles Newton.—It is with the greatest pleasure that we present the name of this honored citizen-soldier and pioneer farmer of Sangamon County, to the readers of this work. He was born on Section 29, Cartwright Township, where his sister Mrs. Thomas White was born, and has since made her home. He was a son of Samuel and Mary (Irvin) Purvines, both born in Cabarrus County, N. C., in 1800, and she in 1802. Both families came from North Carolina, settling in Sangamon County in 1828, and in this county the parents were married. Samuel Purvines was a son of John Purvines, born in Pennsylvania in 1769, moving to North Carolina prior to the Revolution, enlisting from that State into the Continental Army, serving in it for five years. Much later, he moved to Illinois, locating one mile north of Pleasant Plains where he entered land from the government, and there made his home until death claimed him in 1852. On this same farm, Samuel Purvines passed away. In August, 1852, while his wife died in October of that same year. Samuel Purvines and wife were parents of eleven children, three of whom died in infancy, eight growing to maturity, as follows: Tabatha married Robert F. Hamilton, dying in 1909, aged eighty-two years; Lydia A., married J. C. Bone, dying in 1867; A. X., born December 1, 1832, the subject of this review; Matilda, widow of Thomas White, of whom further mention is made elsewhere in this work; Frances was the fourth wife of J. C. Bone, dying in 1908; John F., a resident of Springfield, is nearly seventy years old; Rachel M., widow of James

Zane, resides in Carthage, Mo., aged sixty-eight years; Samuel S., residing in Pleasant Plains. No family has done more to reclaim, build up and beautify Sangamon County than that of Purvines. Coming to the county in 1820, when the State had been in the Union for but a short time, the grandfather of our subject settled on Section 20, and later his son entered land on Section 20. The family has been prominent in agricultural life and successful as farmers and stock raisers. The old grandfather was one of those who offered up his life to secure liberty for this country, and following that led a thrifty, industrious existence. The younger generation are sustaining the reputation made by the honored pioneers for good citizenship and excellent farming. It is because of such families as this, that Illinois has attained its present prominence.

Achilles Newton Purvines received his education in the subscription schools of the county, attending one held in the old log school house with its puncheon floor, slab benches and mud and stick chimney. The primitive fireplace was lined with rocks. The parents of the children had to pay a certain amount per child, so that the education of his eight children cost Samuel Purvines considerable amount, but he believed in education, and gladly denied himself to give them the advantages these schools afforded. At the same time, he expected them to assist on the farm, and as soon as one was old enough to plow, he was set to work driving three and four yoke of oxen to break the wild land. Mr. Purvines forgets the hardships of those times, and delights to look back to those early days of the settlement of the county. He retains an old cradle and resp hook and in looking at them recalls the happy days at home before death made any break in their household. He remembers his mother using the old splicer to cook her corn pones in the fireplace. Until one year of her death, the mother used these primitive utensils, preferring them to those of more modern pattern, and Mr. Purvines contends that corn pone cooked as she used to make it, is far superior to anything now produced. In his boyhood, Mr. Purvines dropped corn by hand until his father bought the Brown corn planter. Although reared to primitive methods in his farming, Mr. Purvines has kept abreast of improvements, and has the latest improved machinery on his premises.

Like his honored grandfather, Mr. Purvines responded to his country's call, enlisting August 8, 1862, in Company F, One Hundred and Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry for three years' service, or until the close of the war. The regiment was organized at Springfield, and was sent in November, 1862, to Memphis, Tenn., and assigned to skirmishing duty. In the spring of 1863, the regiment participated in the Siege of Vicksburg, and other engagements in Tennessee and Mississippi. In June, 1864, Mr. Purvines was wounded at Guntown, Miss., in the right ankle. With this painful wound, he and his regiment managed to escape, but were pursued with bloodhounds, but managed to get into the swamp, where the water killed the scent. They subsisted seven days on wild blackberries and bark from the trees, suffering terribly. Mr. Purvines in his crippled condition tramped to Memphis to rejoin the portion of his regiment which had been transferred to that city, spurred on by the fear of imprisonment in the dreaded Andersonville, where some of his company were confined for thirteen months. Reaching Memphis, he was put in the hospital, and kept there for two months until able to rejoin his regiment. Following this he was sent to Little Rock, Ark., to reinforce General Steele; then to Nashville, Tenn.; thence to Mobile, Ala., where news reached the command of the surrender of General Lee. The regiment was returned to Vicksburg, and there mustered out in August, 1865, being honorably discharged at Springfield, Ill. In 1863, Mr. Purvines was promoted to First Duty Sergeant, retaining this office to the close of the war, although he often performed the duties of his captain.

After the war, he returned to the old home, soon thereafter buying 120 acres of land on Section 3, which is now his home. Immediately, he began to improve this property, erecting comfortable buildings, tilling the land, and buying new machinery. He now owns 345 acres in one body on Sections 3 and 4, and 90 acres in Section 29, Cartwright Township, a total of 435 acres. He has a beautiful residence of modern pattern. Mr. Purvines was the first man in the county raising Percheron horses and was among the first to begin breeding fine horses, short-horn cattle and Poland-China hogs. He has become a leader in breeding all kinds of stock. All his life, Mr. Purvines has been identified with the best interests of Sangamon County, and has always been public-spirited. He was first a stock holder, but upon the formation of the Republican party, he joined issues with Abraham Lincoln with whom he was well acquainted, and is proud to say that he was one of Lincoln's hirings. He has never sought public office, but has continued to content himself with the duties of a good citizen. For the past few years, he has practically retired from active life, while he still makes his home on the farm, surrounded by friends and the comforts of home, gained through the efforts of a busy, well-spent life. Socially he is a member of the Dick Johnson Post, G. A. R., of Taliula, Ill. No better or truer citizen of soldier ever lived in Sangamon County than A. N. Purvines of whom we write.

PURVINES, Burton Lee.—An agricultural life is one of the healthiest and sane there is, for under the blue sky and amid the influences of nature, the farmer learns to take a broader view of life and humanity, than when crowded in the confines of a large city. His living is assured him from his land, and if he understands his work, an income as well. Few farmers of today are content to follow old lines, but are branching out, and specializing in many lines.
Still there are many who prefer to devote themsever themselves to general farming, and all are benefiting from the experiments conducted by the government and private individuals. One of the leading agriculturists of Sangamon County, is Burton Lee Purvines, who owns a fine tract of 400 acres. He was born on a farm near Pleasant Plains, May 22, 1875, a son of Green Lee and Louisa (Potter) Purvines, the latter of whom was born in Menard County, near Petersburg, Ill., a daughter of Elijah Potter. Elijah Potter was born in White County, Ill., but in early manhood moved to Menard County where he died. Abraham Lincoln made his home at the house of Mr. Potter's mother while a clerk in the store at Old Salem, and Mr. Purvines has never changed his views regarding that great man, for whom he early formed an attachment and to whom he gave an unrestricted admira-

The boyhood days of Mr. Purvines were spent much the same as those of other farmer youths of his vicinity, the time not needed on the farm, being spent in attending the district schools of his locality. Owing to the failing health of his father, his time was pretty well occupied, and when his father died on December 20, 1894, he assumed full charge of the place. In 1895,
Mr. Purvines assisted his mother in erecting a beautiful home on Church street, Pleasant Plains, but continued to operate the home farm of 208 acres.

On September 14, 1898, Mr. Purvines was united in marriage with Miss Susie Harrington, dughter of George T. Harrington, whose biographical sketch is given at length elsewhere in this work. After marriage, Mr. Pur-vines returned to his birthplace, and he and his wife gave their attention to farming and stockraising. This continued until he started on a very successful career as an agriculturist.
Mr. Purvines built a cottage on Main street, in Pleasant Plains, still continuing to operate the farm in its entirety. In 1907, he rented a portion of the home place, but continues his farm and stock operations from Pleasant Plains, owning 400 acres of rich farm land. In 1910, this land averaged sixty bushels to the acre, he having planted 225 acres in corn.

Mr. Purvines is one of the representative men of his county and State, being very progressive in his methods and beliefs. He is prominent fraternally, belonging to Pleasant Plains Ma-sone Lodge, No. 700, and Welcome Lodge No. 770, I. O. O. F., while both he and his wife are con-ected with the Eastern Star Lodge. They are consistent members of the Christian Church, in which they are active, giving liberally of both time and money. In political matters, he has always been a Democrat, and can be depended upon for hard work in securing the election of the candidates of his party. Such people as these are the very backbone of any community, for they not only are influential in material matters, but the effect of their upright, Christian lives is felt by all who come into contact with them.

PURVINES, Elijah Alexander.—Among the representative agriculturists of Sangamon County may be mentioned Elijah Alexander Purvines, who is carrying on operations in the eastern part of Pleasant Plains. Mr. Purvines was born in Menard County, Ill., December 22, 1863, a son of Green Lee Purvines. When Mr.
Purvines was about eleven years of age, the family located in Cartwright Township, and as soon as he was able to reach the plow handles, he began to do his full share of the work on the home farm, and so continued to operate about forty acres of land with his father until reaching his majority. He was married October 17, 1888, to Elizabeth Watkins, who was born west of Petersburg, Menard County, whence her family had come from Kentucky, this branch of the Watkins family having been founded here about 1820, by her grandfather who made the trip overland. Mrs. Purvines was the daughter of Samuel and Mary (Woldridge) Watkins, who are still living on the old Watkins farm. Of their eight children, all are still living, as follows: Jennett, the wife of Zadock Thompson, a merchant of Petersburg, ill.; Elizabeth, who became Mrs. Purvines;
Evans G., a prominent farmer of Menard County; Elías, who carries on operations northwest of Petersburg; Walter, a farmer and stock breeder of Menard County; Edgar, an agriculturist engaged in operations west of Petersburg; Hattie, the wife of Christian C. Juhl, a farmer near Petersburg; and Nona, the wife of Ira R. Abbott, owner of the electric light plant at Petersburg. Samuel Watkins was one of the prominent agriculturists of his section of Menard County, where he operated about 2,500 acres of land, and he was often urged to seek political honors by his fellow townsmen of the Democratic party, but being a man of a quiet and unassuming nature, he always preferred to give his time to his farm and his home.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Purvines settled on a part of his father's farm in Cartwright Township, and there he successfully
1902, in which year he built a beautiful home in the eastern part of Pleasant Plains. In addition to about 400 acres in this county, he owns a tract of 320 acres in Cowley County, Kans., and 500 acres in Potter County, Tex., a total of 1,570 acres. His Sangamon County land produced eighty bushels of corn to the acre in 1910, and he has also been very successful in the breeding of stock. He is one of the intelligent and progressive farmers of the county, and his operations have always been carried on along scientific lines. Much of Mr. Purvines' success may be attributed to his wife, who has assisted him in many ways as only the agriculturist's wife can help him. While not a member of any special church, Mr. Purvines is always ready to contributed towards church or charitable movements. His political belief is that of the Democratic party. He is very fond of travel, believing that it is an education and means of broadening the mind and increasing one's fund of knowledge, and in 1900, with his brother-in-law, he took an extensive European trip, visiting the Paris Exposition, Germany, Switzerland and Denmark.

To Mr. and Mrs. Purvines there have been born four children as follows: Talvi V., born December 9, 1880; Rollie, born March 12, 1892; DeWitt L., born April 20, 1893, and Mary J., born May 22, 1906. Mrs. Purvines and her children, being a private Sangamon County thought a Fort Janus very far away, long (deceased). Mr. DeWitt L. Cabarrus the detachment foraging the Menard regiment of the Illinois volunteers, swimming the Illinois river, very near his regiment's camp.

Purvines, Green Lee (deceased).—Prominent among the names of representative and distinguished citizens of Sangamon County, Ill., should be placed that of the late Green Lee Purvines, who during a long life spent here and in Menard County established a reputation for uprightness of character and sterling integrity in every walk of life. He was a native of Sangamon County, born in Cartwright Township, near Pleasant Plains, November 10, 1826, a son of Alexander C. and Margaret (Weddington) Purvines, both natives of Cabarrus County, N. C.

Alexander C. Purvines was born March 16, 1794, and continued to make his home in his native county until 1819, when, accompanied by his wife and child, he emigrated to Sangamon County, and here three other children were born to him and his wife, Albert B. Purvines, who was born October 25, 1818, in North Carolina, and died in Sangamon County, Ill., March 11, 1859; John W. was born in this county October 25, 1821, and died in 1841; Elizabeth F., was born June 28, 1824, and died in 1872; she had been the wife of John C. Bone, who is also deceased and Green Lee was the fourth in order of birth. Mr. Purvines' mother died in January, 1831, and the father was married a second time to Mrs. Jane Hamilton, nee Coleman, and by this union there were eight children.

John Purvines, the grandfather of Green Lee, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., in 1763, and it is supposed that the family is of French extraction; that it emigrated from France to Ireland, and thence to the Colonies prior to the Revolution, locating in Pennsylvania and other eastern States. It is thought also that the name was originally spelled Purvanse, as written, one Robert Purvanse, in the courts of Cabarrus County, N. C., and as signed by David S. Purvance in the capacity of witness on two occasions in the Illinois courts. John Purvines removed to Mecklenberg County, N. C., in 1775, and to Cabarrus County in 1778. During the Revolutionary War, he enlisted in the company of Capt. James White, attached to a regiment commanded by Colonel Davis, and the company marched to a point in South Carolina, where the entire militia of the Carolinas had assembled under General Rutherford. Soon afterward occurred the battle of Stone River, July 20, 1779, in which Mr. Purvines participated. Later, in 1781, he enlisted as a private horseman in the company of Captain William Penny, being attached to the army under young General Gates at Lynch Creek, thence to Rugby Mills; was present at the capture of Fort Orangeburg, S. C., in May, 1781; was a member of a foraging party which was attacked by the Tories, his horse shot, him being wounded himself and his saddle captured. At another time he was a member of a foraging party which visited an old mill. While there they were surrounded by a detachment of Tories. Mr. Purvines was the only one who evaded capture, which he managed to do by jumping from a window into the river, and by swimming he succeeded in making his escape, although fired on by the Tories several times. The close of the war found him under the command of Col. Wade Hampton and General Sumter, and when he was mustered out of the army he had a record of nearly five years of fighting. In 1819, he went to Sangamon County, Ill., and there the death of this patriot occurred in 1853, and there a monument to his memory was erected by his friends.

The boyhood of Green Lee Purvines was much the same as other boys of his day and locality, his spare time being given to attendance at the small district school house, and much attention paid to the work of the home farm. On reaching man's estate, he started out to farm on his own account on an eighty-acre tract in Menard County, which had been given him by his father, Later he purchased the adjoining eighty acres, and on this tract he made his home for upwards of a quarter of a century. On selling that place, he bought a farm two miles east of Pleasant Plains in Cartwright Township, to which he added from time to time until he had accumulated 500 acres of fine farming land, all under a high state of cultivation and improved with large substantial buildings.

On February 4, 1862, at the home of the bride in Menard County, Ill., Mr. Purvines was united in marriage to Louise Potter, a native of that county and a daughter of Elijah and Elizabeth (Green) Potter. Mr, Potter was born in White County, Ill., February 24, 1813, and his wife in Overton County, Tenn., October 30, 1818, and when five years of age came to Illinois with her parents in a wagon. Mr. Potter died March 23, 1870, and his wife August 16, 1888, both being interred in Greenwood Cemetery, Tallula. To Mr. and Mrs. Purvines there were... born three children; Marietta, wife of J. Henry Irwin, an extensive farmer in Cartwright Township; Elijah Alexander, farmer living in the village of Pleasant Plains; and Burton Lee, who owns the old homestead.

PURVINES, James O., a retired farmer residing at Pleasant Plains, Ill., was born a mile and a half northeast of his present home, February 11, 1845, a son of Alexander C. and Jane (Coleman) Purvines. His father was a native of Cabarrus County, N. C., and came to Sangamon County about 1823, being among the “Snow Birds” who struggled so hard for existence in early days. The mills were so far distant they had to mash their own corn for meal and they lived among the Indians for neighbors. Mr. Purvines was born March 16, 1794, and died in Illinois, January 5, 1861. He was a man of strong character and pronounced views, always ready to defend the honor of his State. He was one of the founders of Cartwright Township. At the time of the Mormon trouble at Nauvoo he took a load of men and started for that place, although having no gun himself. Those who were armed started to the front and Mr. Purvines took a neck yoke from his wagon and started to do battle with it, but found it unnecessary to take any active part in the fight. When the excitement was over they returned to the work on their farms, none the worse for the adventure. Deer and other wild game was abundant on the farm, and they had a large herd of hogs. Their market was St. Louis, to which place they hauled wheat and sold it for twenty-five cents per bushel and sold dressed hogs for $1.75 per hundredweight, making the trip with ox teams. Mr. Purvines was a man of energy and determination and at the time of his death was one of the extensive land holders of his part of the county. He saw the wild prairie and heavy timber land converted into fertile farms and the Indian hut give way to the home of the farmer. He helped build the Richland Baptist Church and was an earnest Christian. His latch-string was always left on the outside and the truant of families moving westward who passed his place found a stopping place and a chance for rest at his home. His widow survived until October, 1878. She was a woman of high character, who was always cheerful amid the trials of pioneer existence and held in warm regard by all who knew her. Her maiden name was Jane Coleman, and she was born January 28, 1806, and died April 19, 1878. The couple married October 19, 1822, to George Hamilton, by whom she had two sons and a daughter, namely: Robert F. Hamilton, died and left a family in Illinois; Martha C. married Asural Emory, a wealthy land owner living near Cuba, Mo.; George K., died at Pleasant Plains. After the death of Mr. Hamilton she became the wife of Alexander C. Purvines, who had been married before, and by his first wife had children as follows: Alfred, born October 25, 1818, died in young manhood; John W., born October 25, 1820, died in 1821; Elizabeth became the wife of Jack Bone, her birth occurred June 23, 1824; Green Lee, born November 10, 1826. The mother of these children bore the name of Lisbon before her marriage.

By his second marriage Alexander C. Purvines had children as follows: Margaret, born September 5, 1832, married Abraham Duff and died in Texas about 1860; William G., born September 3, 1834, lives at Pleasant Plains; Nancy S., born August 9, 1836, died in young manhood; Sarah E., born July 17, 1838, married Mr. Hill Armstrong and died without leaving children; Alexander J., born August 3, 1840, died in Kansas about 1907 and his widow in 1908; Itha L., born September 12, 1845, wife of E. L. Bone, of Petersburgh, and mother of William Bone, a noted lecturer; James O., of this sketch; Edgar C., born July 11, 1847. The mother of Alexander Purvines reared motherly care to fourteen children and also reared four grandchildren, making eighteen children who had grown up in her household. She and her husband gave the children such educational advantages as they were able.

James Oscar Purvines attended the Purvines district school and was reared to farm work. He remained on the farm until coming to Pleasant Plains in 1891. May 5, 1874, he married Miss Mattie Harnett, born near Circleville, Ohio, June 25, 1851, daughter of James B. and Mary (Pontious) Harnett. Her father died in Ohio, December 1, 1867, and in 1869 her mother brought her children to Pleasant Plains, where she bought a home and where her death occurred March 12, 1896. She had twelve children, of whom four now survive: James P., married Mary Blaney, in 1876, and is a contractor and builder of Pleasant Plains; Molly, widow of S. S. Purvines, of Pleasant Plains; Sarah, wife of Morgan Luse, of Garnett, Kan., recently celebrated their golden wedding anniversary; Mrs. J. O. Purvines; Catherine, Wilson and Joseph died unmarried; Susan; Daniel, deceased; Elizabeth married Dan Donovan and is deceased; Louisa married a Chas. McLean and died at Circleville, Ohio, in 1882. Mr. Purvines purchased a beautiful home at Pleasant Plains and has since resided there. Their children are: Merry May, born April 25, 1875, graduate of the high school of Pleasant Plains, and of Sangamon College; George O., born July 22, 1877, a graduate of the State University, has for the past eight years been Assistant Cashier of the Farmers State Bank at Taylor, and is a young man of business ability and promise; Libbie Jane, born October 20, 1879, wife of James A. Daniels, Assistant Cashier of the bank of Heyworth, III., has two children, David Russell, born in March, 1903, and Gwendolyn, born July 21, 1906; Louisa, born January 29, 1882, died September 24, 1885; Florence M., born June 11, 1880, is a graduate of Pleasant Plains High school and the Normal of Bloomington, and has for the past three years been a teacher at Pleasant Plains High School. The children of this family have been given many advantages in the way of education, etc., and have been fitted for honorable positions. Merry May is known throughout central Illinois as an expert horsewoman and an excellent judge of the merits of horses. For the past fourteen years she has been one of the most successful teachers of Sangamon County and commands the highest salary. She has won many medals for her riding at state and county fairs and is noted for her easy and graceful carriage. She is a lover of fine horses and an expert in training a fine saddle horse. Her sister Florence is also an excellent horsewoman and both daughters are well known as teachers of ability, having many friends.

Mr. Purvines has been identified with the best interests of his community and county and has taken an active part in all movements for the general welfare and progress. In early life he accompanied his father when the latter sold corn for eleven cents per bushel and hauled it a long distance, but times have greatly changed and he has been one of the most successful men of the county.

PUTNAM, Samuel, a prominent and well-known citizen of Spaulding, Ill., where he served several years as Postmaster, is now residing in active life. He was born in Delaware County, N. Y., July 8, 1838, a son of Jeremiah and Hannah (Roe) Putnam, the former a native of Connecticut and the latter of New York. The father was a shoemaker by trade, and was a soldier in the War of 1812. He settled in Delaware County at an early day and there followed his trade of shoemaker until his death. He and his wife had three sons and four daughters, and those surviving besides Samuel are: Charles, a retired merchant living in New York, and two daughters now residing in Delaware County.

Mr. Putnam acquired his education in his native county and worked on a farm after leaving school, continuing in this line of work until he came to Illinois in 1861. He then worked several years on a farm near Buffalo, and later engaged in the manufacture of tile at that place. Some years later he engaged in the same business at Cedar Rapids, Ia., but lived there only a short time, then returned to Sangamon County and spent a short time at Riverston. He worked several years in the employ of the Spaulding Nursery Company, and, in 1898, received the appointment of Postmaster of Spaulding, being re-appointed twice and holding the position eleven years. He conducted a general store in the village during this time, but has now retired from active life. He has spent a busy, profitable life and has been successful to a fair degree. Mr. Putnam enjoys the confidence and regard of a large circle of friends and well merits their good opinion.

December 31, 1863, Mr. Putnam was married, at Delavan, Ill., to Miss Anna Browner, born in Rushville, Ill., December 11, 1858, daughter of John Browner. Mr. Browner was a native of Maryland and his wife of Virginia. They were married in Columbia, Ky., and were early settlers of Rushville, locating there about seventy-five years ago and remaining there until their deaths. They had four sons and four daughters and of these but three now survive: Mrs. Putnam, who is living in Denver, Colo.; and Mrs. Mary Fiske, of Chicago. To Mr. Putnam and wife two children were born, Gertrude and John. The former is the wife of William Bell and they live on a farm near Rochester. John lives with his father and mother, married Jessie Stutters, and has four children: Amy, Roy, Gertrude and John.

PUTTING, William Fred, a successful manufacturer of Springfield, Ill., was born in St. Louis, Mo., December 26, 1800. His parents, Frederick W. and Catherine (Sheer) Puttng, were both born in Germany in the years 1828 and 1832 respectively. Frederick W. Puttng was engaged in contracting business in the city of St. Louis for a number of years subsequent to his arrival in America, and later moved his family, consisting of three boys and four girls, to Worden, Ill., where he continued to be an active business man until the time of his death.

Of the sons, William was the second in age. When about fifteen years old he manifested a strong interest in mechanics and immediately began to learn the blacksmithing trade. He labored hard and industriously, working in various shops and factories until his ability as an artisan was generally recognized. During the mouth of October, 1838, he opened a general blacksmithing business in Springfield on a small scale. His ability, together with his honesty and thrift, soon developed a business that demanded larger quarters, so he was obliged to move four times to accommodate his patronage. In this manner he grew from a repairer to a manufacturer of vehicles.

Mr. Puttng was married to Ida F. Klaus, daughter of John and Rosina Klaus, at Moro, Ill., on the 10th day of October, 1838. The male line of the Klaus family for generations, until now, without exception, were mechanics and artisans.

Mr. and Mrs. Puttng have had three children, all of whom now are prominent citizens of Springfield: Oscar J. Puttng, an able attorney of the Sangamon County Bar; Rosa V. Riefer, wife of Carl Riefer, Auditor of the Court of Honor; and Edward H. Puttng, now the junior member of the manufacturing firm of W. F. Puttng & Son.

The manufacturing business of which Mr. Puttnng is the head is the largest of its kind in this part of the state. Thus, by early ambitions, long and persistent toil and labor, Mr. Puttng, entirely without assistance, has risen to a position of high credit and respect among his fellow townsman. Religiously he is a member of the German Lutheran Church. Politically he, as well as his two sons, are stanch Republicans, always ac-
Mr. and Mrs. Putting continue to enjoy good health, and from all indications will yet spend many a happy day in their comfortable home at No. 316 North Glenwood Avenue.

PYLE, William A., one of the best-known farmers of Woodside Township, Sangamon County, III., is a native of Sangamon County and has been very successful in his operations. He owns a very pleasant home on Section 21 and enjoys all the comforts and conveniences of modern times. He is a native of Sangamon County and has witnessed the remarkable development of his section of the State during the past eighty years. Mr. Pyle was born November 13, 1850, and belongs to one of the earliest families to settle in Sangamon County. His grandfather, Nicholas Pyle, came from England and first located in South Carolina. He was married in South Carolina during the Revolution, his wife's maiden name being Ann Black, and some of their children were born there and the others in Kentucky, where they lived later. They moved to Christian County, Ky., and thence to St. Clair County, Ill., remaining there a short time, and about 1825 came to Sangamon County.

Thompson Pyle, the father of William A., was born in Kentucky and became a farmer. He accompanied his father to Sangamon County and a large landowner and has been very successful in his operations. He entered land from the Government and both he and his father died on this land, the former December 10, 1870. Thompson Pyle married Margaret Moffett, also a native of Kentucky, whose death occurred in 1896. They became parents of ten children, of whom four are living.

William A. Pyle was educated in Sangamon County and in his boyhood worked on his father's farm, where he has lived ever since. He now owns 340 acres of excellent farming land, part of which was entered from the Government. He has done much himself toward the development of his farm, but now rents most of it to tenants and has practically retired from business life. He was born the year of the deep snow and is a member of the "Snow Bird Club" of Sangamon County.

Mr. Pyle is one of the most highly respected men of his part of the county, is popular with his many friends, and personally is a genial, whole-souled gentleman, kindly in manner and nature, and a representative of the highest type of citizen. He is always ready to forward every worthy cause and takes great interest in public affairs. He is a Democrat in political belief. Mr. Pyle is unmarried.

QUINN, Edward.—The agricultural States have always offered attractive opportunities for farmers, and none more than Illinois. During the 'fifties and 'sixties the tide of emigration brought with it many sturdy, industrious, hard-working men from more eastern States, and they remained, becoming well-to-do through cultivating the land they secured before it attained its present high value. One of the men who was far-sighted enough to appreciate the fact that in this State he could obtain something worth while from his work, is Edward Quinn, now living retired in Springfield. He was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in May, 1836, being a son of Patrick and Mary (McHugh) Quinn, both of Ireland. The father was a farmer and he and his wife never came to America, but died in their native land. He passed away in young manhood, leaving a widow and three sons and three daughters, of whom Edward Quinn was the youngest and is the only survivor.

After a boyhood spent according to the customs of his time and country, Mr. Quinn came to this country in 1854. He had helped his father on the farm, and proven himself a good son, so that when he landed in Philadelphia, on May 16th, he found ready employment, for he had learned obedience to his employers, and how to give fair measure for the wages paid him. Four years later he left Philadelphia,emerging west to Sangamon County, where he resumed his farming work. In 1862 he located in Sangamon County, which has since continued to be his home. He rented eighty acres and this he made his home until 1900, when he retired to Springfield.

Mr. Quinn was married in Springfield, in November, 1860, to Mary McCloud, born in Donegal, Ireland, whose parents never left their native land, dying there. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Quinn: Frank J., manager of a large shirt and overall factory of Cairo, Ill., resides in that city; and May A., in the employ of the Stevens Dry Goods Company, resides at home. There is one grandchild in the family. Mr. Quinn knew the lamented Abram Lincoln and is proud of the fact. He owns his well-kept home at No. 610 West Capitol Avenue, as well as other city realty, and is in comfortable circumstances. In political faith he is a Democrat. A strong Roman Catholic, he is connected with St. Agnes Parish, and is one of its liberal supporters. Kind-hearted, genial, and an excellent type of the best class of his countrymen, Mr. Quinn has many warm friends and holds the confidence of his associates.

QUINN, Patrick Joseph.—Ireland has given the United States some brilliant statesmen, and reliable business men. There is something in the character of an Irishman that wins friends, and when he also possesses excellent business judgment his success is assured. A representative of the genial, popular son of Erin, whose home has been in Springfield since 1851, is Patrick Joseph Quinn, Mr. Quinn was born in County Mayo, March 12, 1801, a son of Patrick and Ann (Morrisroe) Quinn, both of whom were also born in County Mayo. There they married and spent their lives, the father dying in 1896 and the mother surviving until 1905. He was a farmer all his life and a hard-working man. He and his wife were Catholics and brought up their three sons and four daughters in the same faith. One daughter is now deceased and two sons and two daughters came to the United States.

Patrick Joseph Quinn arrived in America in 1881, coming direct to Springfield. He had received a fair common-school education in Ballaghadeen, Ireland, leaving school when sixteen years old to help his father on the farm. When he arrived at Springfield, however, he did not engage in agricultural work, but obtained employment in the watch factory. He also worked in the rolling mills and in the parks, finally, in 1904, embarking in his present business.

Independent in politics, Mr. Quinn gives his support to men and the measures, rather than to any particular party. He has never applied to public office, but is liberal in his support of charities and movements he believes will work out for the ultimate good of the community. Mr. Quinn belongs to the Catholic Order of Foresters, and is a consistent and liberal supporter of St. Agnes Catholic Church, to which he belongs. On June 26, 1859, Mr. Quinn was married to Mary Tobin, born in County Waterford, Ireland, daughter of William and Bridget (Flynn) Tobin of the same county. They came to America about 1872, when Mrs. Quinn was five years old. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Quinn, but only three survive: William, who is with the Chicago & Alton railroad; Anna, at home, was educated at St. Agnes School and the Ursuline Convent; and Bernardine, also at home. Mr. Quinn has accumulated considerable property in Springfield, and has displayed his confidence in the future of the city by thus largely investing.

RACHFORD, Thomas W., who now holds the position of City Electrician of Springfield, was chosen because of his ability and technical knowledge, in preference to others less well qualified to fulfill the duties and responsibilities of the position. He was born in Chenoa, McLean County, Ill., November 13, 1870, son of Thomas and Catherine (O'Brien) Rachford, both natives of Ireland, where the former was a farmer. Thomas Rachford and his wife emigrated to America and settled on a farm in McLean County.

The early education of Thomas W. Rachford was acquired in the public schools and he afterwards attended Grand Prairie Seminary, at Onarga, Ill. He was reared in the Catholic faith. He is skilled in electrical work and has had valuable experience. In political views he is a Democrat and fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen and the Knights of Columbus. He is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. He owns the property where he resides, at 300 North Fifth Avenue, Springfield.

Mr. Rachford was married, June 28, 1905, at Alton, Ill., to Miss Kathryn Kelly. Three children were born of this union, namely: John Kelly, born May 30, 1906; Kathryn Agnes, June 10, 1908; Thomas Walter, Jr., March 13, 1910. Mr. Rachford is highly esteemed by his associates and has many friends. He is a man of energy and ambition, making the most of his opportunities and giving his best services to the city by which he is employed.

RAGAN, Jonathan (deceased), for many years a resident of Mechanicsburg, Ill., was one of that village's most highly respected citizens. He was born in Washington County, Md., March 9, 1831, a son of John and Sarah (Cramer) Ragan, both of whom died in the East when their son was quite young. The father was a farmer by occupation.

The education of Jonathan Ragan was acquired in Hagerstown, Md., and after leaving school he learned the trade of printer, which he followed in Hagerstown until coming West. In 1866, he came direct to Mechanicsburg, his home for the remainder of his life. He worked at farming for several years and under the administration of President Cleveland served as Postmaster of Mechanicsburg. Later he followed his trade, publishing, printing office for several years. He was well regarded by his fellow-citizens and served one year as Constable. In politics he was a Democrat. In later years he served as caretaker of the Christian church and of the school house at Mechanicsburg. He was a devout member of the Christian Church, as was his widow.

Mr. Ragan was married in Hagerstown, Md., October 9, 1852, to Miss Sarah Young, born in Frederick County, September 14, 1828, daughter of Frederick and Lydia (Bowersocks) Young, both natives of the same county. Mr. Young was a tailor by trade and conducted a shop in Johnsville, Md., where the family resided many years. They removed to Mechanicsburg and there the parents died. There five children, of whom two still survive: Mrs. Ragan, of Mechanicsburg, and Mrs. Martha Fortune, a widow, living in Springfield.

Six children were born to Mr. Ragan and wife in Hagerstown and two after they located in Mechanicsburg, and five children are living, namely: Richard H., Anna, Mrs. John H. Woodcock, Mrs. John Anderson, Mrs. Maggie Somonds. Richard H. Ragan, a resident of Springfield, married Miss Mary Hall, of Mechanicsburg, who died in March, 1903, having borne four daughters and one son, and four children are now living, namely: Anna, living with her grandmother. Mrs. Ragan's deceased children: Elizabeth, wife of George Cox, of Springfield; William, of Mechanicsburg and Hallie, of Springfield. Lydia Ragan married Amos Benedict, who was a soldier in the Civil War and is now deceased, and of their children four are living, namely; Gertrude, wife of Frank McCoy, of Springfield; Cora, married A. H. Rastahan, of Lanesville; Jesse, of Springfield; Christina, wife of Charles Barnett, of Springfield. Mrs. John Anderson and her husband live on a farm north of Decatur, having eight children, namely: Edna, wife of William Weedon, of Glenarm, and her twin sister, Ethel, wife of Carl Huff, also of Glenarm; Clara, Cordelia, Georgia, Roy and Grace, all at home. Magadalena, wife of John Sammonds, of Springfield, and their children are: Katie, wife of Carl Wilson, of Virden; Arthur, Ernest, Leslie, Byron, Russell, Clarence, and Harold, all at home.

Mr. Ragan had many friends in the community and was missed from many circles. He took welfare. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His widow has a comfortable home in Mechanicsburg.

RAGLAND, Joseph.—Kentucky furnished to the Western States many excellent men who had the instinct that prompted pioneers in the days when what is now a mighty commonwealth was a wilderness peopled by savages. Mr. Ragland, born in Kentucky, Hugh Ragland followed farming all his life, never leaving the Blue Grass State, where he and his wife passed away, after rearing a fine family of four sons and three daughters to do them credit. He was a soldier in the Mexican War, serving to the end. He lived to the ripe old age of seventy-four years, dying in full possession of the confidence and esteem of his neighbors.

Joseph Ragland was brought up on the Kentucky homestead, working on the farm for his father, and attending the schools of his neighborhood. Having heard so much of the rich Sangamon County farm lands, however, in 1851 he left his home to come there, and immediately engaged in farming in Williams Township. After five years there he returned to Kentucky, where he continued farming until 1906, when once more he located in Williams Township, buying thirty-four acres in Section 7, which has been his home ever since. There he carries on farming and gardening, and has been eminently successful.

Mr. Ragland was married in 1879, to Bettie Walters, born in Kentucky, and they had three daughters and two sons, three of whom survive: Nannie, wife of George Durham, of Franklin, Ill.; Mary, residing with her sister, Mrs. Durham; Frank, who resides in Kentucky. Mrs. Ragland died in 1886. In 1902 Mr. Ragland was married to Nan Blanton, also of Kentucky, no issue. She died in 1907. On August 15, 1910, Mr. Ragland was married to Mrs. Margaret Parker, of Springfield, born in New Jersey, but a resident of Springfield and Sangamon County for fifty years. Her father was a merchant in New Jersey, where both her parents died. The Methodist Church claims Mr. Ragland’s membership, while in politics he is a Democrat. He is an excellent farmer, who understands thoroughly what he is doing, and his land has increased in value very materially since it came into his possession.

RAHMAN, Herman.—The history of the Civil War has never been fully written, and never can be, for it is impossible to give in detail what the soldiers suffered, or what their after life has been, hampered by the effects of exposure and neglect. Although the nation rests under a heavy debt of gratitude to the veterans, they appear to estimate their services at much less than do those who come after, who, profiting by the results, know what the cost really was. One of the honored veterans living in Springfield, is Herman Rahman, a German-born citizen who risked life in defense of his adopted country. Mr. Rahman was born in Niederland, May 7, 1839, a son of Fackka and Mary (Benz) Rahman, natives of Germany. In 1847 the father emigrated to America, settling first in Pella, Ill., but later removing to St. Louis, where he died. In his native land he was a farmer.

Herman Rahman had few educational advantages, his school days being limited to his native land and a short period after arrival in America, for his services were required to help support the family. Upon coming to Illinois, in 1856, Mr. Rahman located near Tallula, where he remained until the outbreak of the war. He enlisted from Camp Butler, in Company F, Twenty-eighth, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, participating in the battles of Pittsburg Landing, Spanish Fort, Belmont (Ark.), Hatchie River, and the charge at Jackson, Miss., being discharged at Springfield, in 1865. He then settled down in Springfield, which has since been his home. Mr. Rahman belongs to Stephenson Post, G. A. R., of Springfield. In politics he is a Republican.

On December 6, 1869, Mr. Rahman was married at Rockport, Mo., to Minnie Martin, born near Berlin, Germany, December 16, 1849. Her parents never came to America, but died in Germany. Twelve children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Rahman, eight of whom survive: Dorothy Louise, wife of Charles Lloyd, of Whiting, Ind.; Marle, of Chicago; Angie, wife of Bert Fernandes, of Jacksonville, Ill.; Whilma, at home; William, of No. 101 Osburn Avenue, Springfield; Frank, of Toledo; Harry, of Springfield, and Lewis, at home. There are eight grandchildren in the family. For some years Mr. Rahman has been living retired after a long and useful life, and during which worked in the rolling mills at Springfield. He readily makes and retains friends, and enjoys the confidence and respect of his neighbors and associates.
HISTORY OF SANGAMON COUNTY

RAMSEY, Christopher (deceased).—The arduous work of a coal-miner takes such heavy toll of the system that many die in the very prime of life, and few live to a healthy old age. Yet the very danger of the work appeals to many, and the Springfield mines constantly attract men to them. One of the men who passed away undeuly was the late Christopher Ramsey, born in Mauchchum, Pa., March 14, 1861, a son of Christopher and Margaret (Ray) Ramsey, the former born in County Fermanagh, and the latter in County Cavan. The parents came to the United States at an early day, locating near Champugun, Ill., where the father farmed until his death in 1896, his widow surviving him until 1903. There were eleven children in the family, of whom four survive: Katie, wife of William Hale; Eliza, wife of Adam Poulk, and Margaret, wife of James Baskin—all of Pennsylvania; Joseph of Findlay, Ill., and Christopher.

Christopher Ramsey was reared on the farm, attending school as he found opportunity. His first work was on his father's farm, but later was employed in the rolling mills after coming to Springfield, still later being engaged in coal mining, where he was employed when he met his death, May 15, 1900. Mr. Ramsey was married in Pennsylvania, September 16, 1881, to Catherine Baskin, born in County Donegal, Ireland, November 27, 1858, a daughter of Adam and Katherine (Alcorn) Baskin, her father a native of County Donegal and her mother of an island on the coast of Ireland. Mrs. Ramsey was the youngest of the eight children born to her parents, the others being as follows: Margaret, wife of Patrick Foster of Ireland; Jane, wife of James Baskin; William; Adam; Mary Ann, wife of William Spence of Ireland; Fanny, wife of John Trumble of Pennsylvania; and James, also of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey had these children: Catherine, died in childhood; Robert A., born July 17, 1883; William A., born in September, 1885, and died at the age of eighteen years; Chester J., born July 26, 1891; Joseph D., and John Norman (twins), born December 12, 1893; Christopher died young.

Mr. Ramsey belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America and the U. M. W. A., and his associates in both adopted appropriate resolutions expressing their sympathy upon the occasion of his death. In politics he was a Republican, while his church affiliations were with the Episcopal Church. He was a man who never neglected his duty, and was a kind husband and father and a most worthy citizen.

RANKINS, William, an honored veteran of the Civil War, as well as a highly respected citizen of Mechanicsburg, Ill., spent most of his active life in agricultural pursuits and has now retired. Mr. Rankins was born at Flemingsburg, Ky., April 12, 1830, son of John L. and Mary E. (Stockton) Rankins, both also natives of Kentucky. The parents moved from Kentucky to Callaway County, Mo., when William was a boy and located on a farm there, remaining until the death of the father. The mother died in 1874, in Springfield, Ill. There were four sons in the family, of whom William is the only survivor. One son, Robert, served in the Confederate Army and died from a wound received while on duty in Mississippi. His name was that of William Rankins, who served in the War of 1812, and the father of his wife, George Stockton, was a Commodore in the United States Navy during the same war.

As a boy William Rankins attended school at Fulton, Mo., completing his education after coming to Sangamon County. He worked on the farm for his uncle, George Stockton, until nineteen years of age. April 15, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, State Militia, then entered in the Forty-ninth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, serving with this company until the close of the war. He was mustered out at Benton Barracks, Mo., August 2, 1865, being then Corporal of his company. He participated in many battles, including Moose Mill, Spanish Fort, and minor skirmishes, but was never wounded or taken prisoner. He has every reason to feel proud of his record and was well known among his comrades for his devotion to duty.

After the war Mr. Rankins again engaged in farming in Sangamon County, and continued the same until he retired from active life, a few years ago. He was married at Fulton, Mo., July 12, 1869, to Mary E. Spannhurst, by Rev. Dibbles. She was born in Germany, January 12, 1843, daughter of Frederick and Elizabeth (Bannegarden) Spannhurst. Her parents came to America when she was a child and located in Callaway County, Mo., where they spent the remainder of their lives, the father being a carpenter by trade. There were five sons and two daughters in the family, and of these two sons and two daughters are now living. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Rankins and of these six survive: Minnie, wife of Mace Short, a farmer of Mechanicsburg Township; Edward, a farmer of Christian County; Ida, wife of Charles Patrick, of Christian County; Ernest, of Mechanicsburg Township; Katherine, wife of George Blankenship, of Christian County, Saphronia, at home with her parents. There are twelve grandchildren in the family.

Mr. Rankins is a member of the United Brethren Church and in politics is a Republican. He is much interested in the welfare and progress of the county and has always been a representative, public-spirited citizen.

RAPE, Alfred N. (deceased).—The Rape family were among the early settlers of Sangamon County, Ill., and have always represented the best interests of the community where they have lived. Alfred N. Rape was a native of the county, born May 5, 1830, a son of John Rape, who purchased land there at an early day and carried on farming until his death.

Both he and his wife died there. They were parents of several children.

The boyhood of Alfred N. Raps was spent on a farm and he was educated in the district schools of Sangamon County. He worked for his father until the latter’s death, then engaged in farming on his own account. He continued this occupation successfully for many years, then worked at the blacksmith trade for sixteen years in Pawnee, retiring from active life in 1869 and locating in Dawson. He enlisted August 12, 1862, in Company K, One Hundred Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving three years and being honorably discharged at Vicksburg, Miss., August 15, 1865. He had served his country well and participated in fifteen battles. He became a prominent member of the G. A. R. Post at Pawnee and was a member of the Methodist Church. He was ever ready to lend his aid to any public movement he considered worthy his help and in politics was a Prohibitionist. He won the respect and good-will of his neighbors and was a kindly, conscientious man. He had a high regard for good principles in others and carried out his religious teachings in his daily life.

Mr. Raps was married in Dawson October 17, 1871, to Mary A. Constant, born in Lake Fork, Ill., June 17, 1836, daughter of Isaac and Nancy (Peples) Constant, both natives of Kentucky. The parents were early settlers of Mechanicsburg Township, moved to Lake Fork, Logan County, thence to Buffalo Hart Grove, Sangamon County, and finally to Dawson, Ill. The only survivors of the family are: Mrs. Raps; her brother, William R., residing at Ottawa, Kan.; Sadie, widow of H. M. Van Winkle, of Dawson; Mrs. Margaret Deavers, of Mt. Pulaski, Logan County. Two children were born to Mr. Rapse and wife, both of whom died in infancy. Mr. Rapse died March 2, 1882, at his home in Pawnee. His widow owns a beautiful home in the village, where she has won many friends.

RAPS, George J. (deceased).—Some of the bravest soldiers in the great struggle between the North and the South, were of German birth. They were trained in their own army service and were not raw recruits, so that their enlistment was hailed with delight by those who were forming the regiments to send to southern battlefields. After the war was over they located in different sections and became solid, responsible business men or public officials, rounding out their lives in peace and prosperity. One of these representative soldier-citizens of Springfield, was the late George J. Raps, born in Germany, July 1, 1856, a son of Mathias Raps, also a native of Germany, where he farmed. The mother died when George J. Raps was only a year old. Mathias Raps came to the United States but did not identify himself with any enterprise, living retired among his children to his death.

After a boyhood spent in Germany, during which time he learned the carpenter trade, George J. Raps grew into vigorous young manhood and, appreciating the fact that more opportunities were to be found across the ocean, he came to America, locating in Springfield, where he readily found employment at his trade. In 1890 he went into business for himself, thus continuing until he was made a policeman. He was also connected with the grocery trade, being successful in all his undertakings. Previous to his death he was actively engaged in business controlling a large trade. During the Civil War he enlisted in Company F, Second Missouri Volunteer Infantry, becoming Corporal, and served gallantly until he was mustered out. He was a member of the German Lutheran Church, to which his family still belong, and in politics was a Republican.

Mr. Raps was married, in Springfield, January 29, 1863, to Mary Heneadlia, born in Germany, March 0, 1848, who was brought to Springfield by her parents at an early day. Her father was a tailor by trade. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Raps, four of whom survive: Paul of Springfield, employed by Van Horn; Henry in the employ of the Illinois Watch Company; Catherine, wife of Henry Krittenmeyer, of Sands, Ill., where he is pastor of the German Lutheran Church; Ambertina, wife of John G. Kupferer, of Jacksonville, Ill., where he is pastor of the German Lutheran Church. Mrs. Raps owns her pleasant home at No. 221 West Capitol Avenue, as well as other city property. She is essentially a home woman, taking great interest in domestic affairs, and is one of the noted housekeepers of her neighborhood.

RAUCH, (Dr.) John H. (Vol. I, p. 441.)

RAUTH, Joseph Bernard.—Among the successful and enterprising business men of Springfield, Ill., who have made their way in the world by their own hard work and ambition, is Joseph Bernard Rauth, a native of Springfield, born at No. 106 East Mason Street, son of Frederick and Julia (Buselmyer) Rauth, both of whom were born in Germany. The father was a bricklayer by trade and later became a contractor. He emigrated to the United States and he and his wife were parents of eleven children, three dead and eight living.

Joseph B. Rauth was born March 17, 1862, and spent his boyhood in his native city. He was educated at SS. Peter and Paul Catholic School, and then began learning his trade of bricklaying, in which he became very proficient. He was a partner of his father as general contractor from 1891 to the year before the latter’s death. In 1900 he began contracting on his own account, which he has since continued. He is a man of good business judgment and knows every detail of his business thoroughly. Being a good workman himself, he demands good service of his employees, and has been able to build up a good business, which has been steadily increasing and is a financial success. He built the SS. Peter and Paul Catholic Church, also the First Church of the Sacred Heart, the Illinois Hotel, Commercial Hotel, the Reisch Brewery, and many other business buildings and handsome residences.

Mr. Rauth is a man of good habits, sterling honesty and reliability, and has a good reputation among those with whom he has had dealings. Fraternally he is a member of the St. Vincent Benevolent Society, which he joined in May, 1879, also of St. Peter's Court of Foresters. He is a devout member of SS. Peter and Paul Catholic Church and has always supported its good work as has his wife. In national politics he votes for Democratic candidates, but in local affairs votes for the man he considers best fitted by ability and principles to give the best service to the public. Mr. Rauth is well known and has a host of friends. He owns the property at 300 N. First St., which has been his home since February, 1908. He lived with his parents until his marriage, then moved to 318 N. First St., where he lived until he built his present beautiful residence.

Mr. Rauth was married, at Quincy, Ill., May 24, 1894, to Marian Brinkman, daughter of Benjamin and Gertrude May, natives of Westphalia, northern part of Germany. Mrs. Rauth was born at Quincy, Ill., the sixth of nine children of her parents. She has a twin sister now living at the old homestead. She and her husband have no children.

REAVLEY, Jacob Matthias.—Too much credit cannot be given the man who has struggled against adverse early circumstances, developing himself into a successful business man. The self-made man is a product of this country, where he is given the chance to rise and become prosperous. One of Springfield's business men who can justly lay claim to such a title is Jacob Matthias Reavley. He was born in Springfield, Ill., April 9, 1883, a son of William and Elizabeth (Greenough) Reavley, natives of Pennsylvania and England, respectively. Both parents survive, the father having retired from his work of coal mining. He is a Republican but has never sought to come before the public in an official position.

Jacob Matthias Reavley attended the McClellan public school of this city, and after leaving it, worked for some time in a cigar factory. He then engaged in coal mining for three years, after which he started into business for himself. His success is probably due more to the fact that he has always endeavored to give the men a square deal, than to anything else. Mr. Reavley is very liberal in his views, not alone on religious questions, but in politics as well. According to his belief, in local affairs it is better to vote for the man or measure calculated to be of service to a majority of the people, rather than allow himself to be restricted by party lines. However, in national affairs he is a Republican.

On March 6, 1906, Mr. Reavley was united in marriage with Miss Belle Waggoner, who was born in Pike County, Ill., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Waggoner. They have no issue. Mr. Reavley is engaged in the wine, liquor and cigar trade at 103 East Adams Street, Springfield.

REAVLEY, Robert, a prosperous and well-known citizen of Riverton, Ill., now holds the position of County Mine Inspector, to which he was appointed in 1908. Mr. Reavley was born in Springfield, Sangamon County, March 10, 1875, son of Thomas and Jane (Hughes) Reavley, the former born in Pennsylvania in 1836, the latter a native of Wales, in 1836. The father was a miner, but is now living retired from active life. The parents are both now living in Riverton, where they have resided for several years. The mother came to the United States at the age of twelve years, and after spending a few years in the East, came to LaSalle County, Ill., where she met Mr. Reavley, who had come during the Civil War. They were there married and the father enlisted in an Illinois Regiment, serving three months. At the close of the war he engaged in mining and lived thirty-five years in Springfield, then moved to his present home.

Robert Reavley was born in Riverton, near the mines, which occupation he has followed all his life until a few years ago, when he became an inspector. He received his education in the public schools of Riverton, but left school for work at an early age. He is largely a self-made man and has made the most of his opportunities for mental and material improvement. He is largely self-educated and has learned much in the school of experience. He is well informed in the business he has followed all his life and has made an exhaustive study of methods and desirable conditions under which the work should be directed. He is able to state his ideas with clearness and vigor, and performs his official duties with alacrity and thoroughness, realizing that much depends upon his sound judgment and careful investigation. He owns a very pretty and comfortable home in Riverton, besides other property. He is a member of the Methodist Church and in politics is a Republican. Fraternally he is prominent in the Masonic Order, being affiliated with Lodge No. 756, at Riverton, and is also a member of Lodge 445, I. O. O. F.

April 21, 1894, Mr. Reavley was married, at Riverton, to Alice Safford, born in that village September 1, 1878, whose parents came from the East and both are now deceased. Mr. Safford was an engineer by occupation. Four children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Reavley: Lester, Joseph, Irene and a baby born April 29, 1911.

REAVLEY, Thomas Sr., retired miner and well-known citizen of Riverton, Sangamon County, is a son of William and Mary (Berlison) Reavley, natives of England, and was born November 12, 1835, in Schuykill County, Pa., where his father was a coal-miner. His parents had come from their native land to America in 1834. The father became superintendent of several mines in turn and remained in Pennsylvania some years, then moved to Shullsburg, Wis., where he was successful as a prospector for lead. After twelve years' residence in Wisconsin, he moved to LaSalle County, Ill., to accept the superintendency of a mine. Several years later he went to similar employment at Springfield. From Springfield he finally retired to LaSalle, Ill., where he died, aged ninety-seven years. He and his good wife lie side by side in Oak Ridge Cemetery, Springfield. They had five sons and four daughters.

Thomas Reavley Sr. was educated in the district school at Silver Creek, Pa., and early learned mining, at which he was long employed in Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Illinois, until his retirement from active life a few years ago. He is of the stuff of which soldiers are made, and April 1, 1861, when war had become an assured fact but had not progressed beyond its beginning, he enlisted at LaSalle, Ill., in Company K, Eleventh Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he saw continuous service until the end of hostilities, when he was discharged at Bird's Point, Mo., with the honor due a good and faithful soldier. His brother Joseph also did soldier's duty in the Civil War. In 1869 Mr. Reavley located at Springfield, whence, after some years, he removed to Riverton, where he has since lived. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and of the Methodist Episcopal church. In his political affiliations he is a stanch Republican.

At LaSalle, Ill., in 1859, Mr. Reavley married Miss Jane Hughes, born in Wales, September 20, 1838, the daughter of a miner who came to America and became well known in mining circles in LaSalle, Ill., later removing to Riverton, where he and his wife both passed from the scenes of this life. Mrs. Reavley bore her husband ten children, of whom the following survive: Mrs. Phema Bell, of Riverton; William Reavley, miner, of Riverton; Robert, County Mine Inspector and Examiner, Riverton; George, of Riverton; Margaret, wife of William Wanless, manager of the Klonrik mines, Riverton.

RECHNER, August.—Conditions have changed so materially that housekeepers are conducting their homes upon an entirely different basis today than that which their mothers inaugurated. They are finding it better and cheaper to buy bread and pastry ready-made, and are growing more and more to depend upon reliable bakers to supply their needs along these lines. For this reason the bakers of Springfield are assuming added importance in the industrial life of the city, and one of the experienced men engaged in supplying this large demand for wholesome and appetizing food is August Rechner, proprietor of Rechner's Bakery, at No. 500 North Twelfth Street. Mr. Rechner secured his training in one of the best places in his native land, Baden, Germany, where he was born October 3, 1878. He is a son of John Joseph Rechner, whose biography appears elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Rechner attended Reisenbach Catholic school, in Baden, leaving school at fifteen years of age. He had already begun learning his trade, and after leaving school was able to devote all his time to it, becoming thoroughly experienced. In 1895 he left Germany, coming to America and landing in New York. He did not remain in that city, but came direct to Springfield, where he secured employment in a bakery at No. 1158 North Eighth Street. Here he remained five years, becoming acquainted with the language and conditions during this time, so that when he established himself in business he was able to meet all its requirements successfully and build up a firm reputation for excellence and fair dealing.

On April 30, 1901, Mr. Rechner was united in marriage to Helen Bansbach, a sister of Mrs. William Rechner, whose biography will be found elsewhere in this volume. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rechner: William Albert, attending SS. Peter and Paul's Catholic School; Joseph Henry, Albert Carl and Otto Frederick, at home. Mr. Rechner is a Democrat, but has been too fully occupied with business cares to look for office. He belongs to SS. Peter and Paul Catholic Church, of which he is a liberal supporter, and belongs to the Catholic Societies of his church. Perhaps no man in Springfield is a better type of the German-American of today, alert, progressive and far-sighted, in favor of good educational advantages for the young and the furthermore of all measures which tend towards a moral uplift.

RECHNER, John Joseph (deceased).—The late John Joseph Rechner, who died April 16, 1907, was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and his memory is tenderly cherished by his widow and children. He is remembered as a man of upright character and kindly disposition, well known in the community where he lived and possessing many friends. Mr. Rechner was born in Baden, Germany, was there educated, and after marriage settled on a farm in his native place. His widow is also a native of Germany and now resides in Baden. They were parents of five sons and three daughters, all of whom survive: two sons and one daughter live in Germany; William, born November 13, 1866, is a business man of Springfield; August is also in business in Springfield; Sigmund is associated with his brother William in a business way; and two daughters. The sons are enterprising and energetic and have become successful in business.

John J. Rechner was a devout Catholic, as were the members of his family, and supported all movements of the church, morally and finance. His life was a fitting example to his children, all of whom extended him their complete respect and reverence, and all were reared to follow the faith and teachings of their Church in all their relations of life.

Mrs. Rechner, whose maiden name was Katharina Hemberger, lives in Baden. She is greatly revered by all who know her for her high character and kindly disposition.

RECHNER, William, a well-known resident of Springfield, Ill., was born in Baden, Germany, November 13, 1806, son of John Joseph and Katherina (Hemberger) Rechner, both natives of Germany. The father died April 16, 1807, and the mother still resides in Baden. Both were reared in the Catholic faith and in the education and training of their children ever kept before them the teachings and lessons of the church. Of their five sons and three daughters, all survive, namely: one daughter and two sons living in Germany; William and his brother Sigmund, associated in business in Springfield; August Rechner, baker in Springfield, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; two daughters. Sigmund Rechner, born in Baden, August 27, 1831, was educated in the Reisenbach Catholic School, in Baden, and in 1803 came to America, working first in the Rechner bakery, conducted by his brother August, and later becoming associated with his brother William. Sigmund and August are members of the SS. Peter and Paul Catholic Church in Springfield. The former is unmarried and is a member of St. Vincent's Society. In politics he is Independent.

The boyhood of William Rechner was spent on his father's farm and after he reached the age of fourteen years he did not attend school except on Sundays, and on the other days of the week assisted his father in the farm work. He was educated in the Reisenbach Catholic School and was reared in the utmost respect and reverence for the teachings of the church. In 1891 he emigrated to America, came direct to Springfield, Ill., but shortly afterwards went to Dixon, where for four months he was employed on a farm. Returning to Springfield, he worked some years for the Reisch Brewing Company, and filled various positions with this firm. For some years past he has been engaged in business on his own account and has established himself as one of the successful men of the city. He is a self-made man and has the entire confidence of his associates in business. His probity and integrity are unquestioned and he has many warm friends. He has never sought public office, although much interested in the welfare and progress of the community. In politics he is a Democrat.

Mr. Rechner was married, October 19, 1892, to Miss Lena Bansbach, who was born in Baden, Germany, daughter of William and Francesca (Galhen) Bansbach, both of whom died in Germany. She was the fifth child in a family of five daughters and two sons, of whom four daughters and one son live in America and one daughter and one son live in Germany. Mrs. Rechner died January 9, 1908, and was buried in Calvary Cemetery at Springfield. She left eight children, namely: Frances Katherine, Lucy Mary, August William, Louis Joseph, Theresa Elizabeth, Irene Agnes, Irma Molly and Charles, twins. Mr. Rechner is a member of SS. Peter and Paul Roman Catholic Church, of which Rev. Riesen is pastor. He belongs to St. Vincent's Society, the Western Catholic Union and the Catholic Order of Foresters. The family reside at 715 North Fourth Street. Mr. Rechner has been able to accumulate considerable city real estate in Springfield.

REDMOND, James.—The Irish are generally recognized as being among the brightest and most useful people in the world. Wherever an Irishman is found he is sure to have friends and to have attained some degree of success in whatever line he has followed. Some of the most highly esteemed residents of Springfield are men of Irish blood, and none occupies a better position in the confidence of the community than James Redmond, veteran of the Civil War, and a merchant. Mr. Redmond was born in Dublin, Ireland, March 1, 1835, a son of John and Martha (Munlo) Redmond, natives of Ireland, where the father was a merchant, dealing extensively in dry goods.

On September 1, 1800, James Redmond came from England to New York City, after having been educated in that country, to which his parents moved. Arriving in this country, Mr. Redmond soon became imbued with the spirit of the times, and when his adopted land needed his services, he promptly enlisted, in 1861, in the Union army, serving three years and being honorably discharged. During his time of service he proved his bravery and learned to love the country he was risking his life to defend.

After his military service Mr. Redmond came to Springfield, where he embarked in a dry goods business, conducting it very successfully. From time to time he proved his confidence in the future of the city by investing in its real estate, until now he is a large property owner. He is a consistent Catholic, belonging to St. Joseph's Church, to which he subscribes liberally. Politically he is a Republican, but has never come before the people for election to office.

February 13, 1865, Mr. Redmond was married in Springfield to Margaret Fitzgerald, and they have one son, Frank, born in Springfield in 1871. Mrs. Redmond's brother was a well known business man of Springfield. Although now somewhat advanced in years, Mr. Redmond is active and takes a lively interest in business. His recollections of early days, and of the stirring events of the war are interesting and well worth inserting in this too brief biography, did space permit. Too many of the veterans of Springfield have already been called Higher, so added honors are shown the sur-

REED, Charles M., a representative farmer and stock raiser of Loami Township, Sangamon County, Ill., is a native of the county, born in Cartwright Township, June 24, 1857, son of William and Elizabeth (Allen) Reed, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of New Jersey. Elizabeth Allen was born May 8, 1828, and in 1840 accompanied her father to Butler County, Ohio, where she became acquainted with William Reed, and they were married about 1854, after which they came to Sangamon County, Ill. They have resided on the old farm settled on land in what is now Island Grove. His father, John Reed, had seven sons, and bought a large body of land nearby, giving each of his sons a farm. All seven sons married and had children, except Robert, and William was the fifth in order of birth. The only ones of the family now living in Sangamon County are Charles M. and his brother George M.

William became a prominent farmer and was respected by all who knew him. His father died in Island Grove Township about 1861. In politics William Reed was first a Whig and later a Republican. He was a quiet, even-tempered man, his wife having kept him out of humor, and he had many warm personal friends. Children as follows were born to him and his wife: John W., a dairyman of Long Beach, Cal.; Charles M.; Mary E., wife of Hugh Pollock, and they have four children—Harry, Elizabeth, Stella and Margaret; Mary, of New Berlin, with whom her mother resides; George M., on the old home farm. Mrs. Elizabeth Reed (second) Joshua Drake, who is deceased, and they had one child, Frank, now Principal of the Edwards School, in Springfield. William Reed's death occurred in 1893. John Reed was one of the founders of the Presbyterian church at old Berlin and the family have been active in a prominent public enterprises. The seven sons of John Reed settled near the home farm and this locality became known as the Reed Settlement.

Charles M. Reed spent his boyhood much the same as other country boys and was educated in the district schools. He helped with the farm work and remained on the home farm after the death of his father, until he reached his majority. He was married, February 13, 1878, to Miss Amy J. Van Doren, and soon after began working by the month. His wife is a daughter of Peter C. and Margaret (Hathaway) Van Doren, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of New Jersey. Mr. Van Doren and his wife were married in 1829 and in 1831 moved to Sangamon County, living in Curran Township, where they spent the remainder of their lives, he dying in 1868, at the age of eighty-five years, and she died at the age of seventy-two years, having been born in 1810. Both were devout Methodists and reared their children in the same faith. Of these five children eight still survive: Sarah, widow of S. P. Gibson, of Loami; John M., a farmer of Oklahoma; E. H., died in Wichita, Kan., in 1906; Cornelius, a farmer living near Chatham; Haimah M., widow of William Nixon; Barbara H., married John Ebersait, and they live near Petersburg, Ill.; William L., a farmer near Chatham; Mary, wife of Hiram Alexander, of Chatham; Amy, Mrs. Reed.

In 1880 Charles M. Reed took charge of the home farm and remained there until 1883. He has since operated various large farms in Sangamon County, and has been one of the enterprising and industrious farmers in the vicinity. In 1905 he rented a farm in Loami, but he has devoted his entire life to agricultural pursuits and has won success through energy and intelligence. He now has 385 acres under his charge, in 1910, having 145 acres in corn, forty in wheat and thirty-five in oats. He raises pure-bred Duroc Jersey hogs, and now has 75 head of these animals that are eligible to registration. For ten years he bought and shipped hogs. He has the Oxford sheep and believes in keeping the best grade of all kinds of stock.

Mr. Reed and his wife have had children as follows: Linford, born January 8, 1879, a farmer living near Coffeyville, Kan.; Pearl, born September 2, 1883, has never married, born November 29, 1886, wife of Morris Kissler, manager and superintendent of the light plant at Auburn, and they have one child, Lora Imogene; Ella M., born March 15, 1889, for the past three years one of the most successful teachers in Sangamon County, commands a high salary; Ernest, born August 4, 1891, at home; Helen, born July 19, 1894, a student in Auburn High School; Ida Mary, born September 15, 1896; Helen, born February 25, 1903. Linford Reed was married (first) to Nina Troxwell, who died, leaving one child, Florence E., now living with her Grandfather Reed, and Linford Reed married (second) to Bertha Bohe Newman, whose grandfather was one of the noted Methodist Episcopal ministers of early days.

Mr. Reed has always taken an active interest in political matters and staunchly supports the principles of the Republican party, being ready to advance any measure he believes will be of benefit to his community. He served five years as Road Commissioner of Chatham, and soon after locating in Loami Township was chosen as the leader of his party. He was nominated and elected in 1902 to the office of Supervisor on the Republican ticket, receiving a handsome majority against a strong Democratic opponent. During 1907-08 he was one of the strongest members of the Board. In 1900, having secured the entire confidence of the people, received a much larger majority than before. He has served as chairman of the building and printing committee, and in this connection has always lost sight of his personal interests and taken the consciences' endeavor to serve the people in the best possible manner. He is a member of the I.
O. O. F., in 1890 joined the M. W. A., and both he and his wife are members of the Royal Neighbors and the Rebekahs. The family are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Loami, and have given generous support to its good work.

REED, Patrick, a retired farmer residing at No. 1954 East Capitol Avenue, Springfield, Ill., has been a resident of Sangamon County for fifty-four years. He was born in County Mayo, Ireland, March 17, 1821, a son of Dominick and Mary (Hopkins) Reed. Dominick Reed was also a native of County Mayo, Ireland, and there spent his entire life engaged in farming. His wife, who was a daughter of Thomas Hopkins, also spent her life there and, of their ten children, Patrick was the only one to come to the United States.

Patrick Reed received but a limited education in his native country, going to work at an early age on his father's farm. On February 3, 1844, he was married to Catherine Cassidy and two years later they came to New York from Liverpool on a sailing vessel, the Ibert Gallatus, which took seven weeks to make the voyage. After his arrival he located for a time near Camden, N. J., where he worked on a farm, his wife doing housework. For thirteen years Mr. Reed worked with the construction gang of the Chicago & Alton R. R., receiving ninety cents a day and having to wait two years before he was paid. He then moved to Chatham, Ill., where he rented a farm for several years, but by this time his children were old enough to help him, and he subsequently purchased a farm of 240 acres in what is now New Berlin Township, paying down $1,000 and going in debt for $11,000, which he paid in seven years, although his contract allowed him ten years to complete the payment. To accomplish this required close economy, and the raising of large crops, and his success in this line is shown by the fact that, in one year, he sold 10,000 bushels of corn at sixty-eight cents per bushel. In their early days after coming to Springfield, in order to aid her husband, Mrs. Reed took in washing, during a part of this time working for Mrs. Lincoln at $1.25 per day. About 1896 Mr. Reed turned the management of his farm over to his son and moved to his present home in Springfield. He has erected several houses there, in addition to the one which he occupies. He is a staunch Democrat in politics, and he and Mrs. Reed are members of the Roman Catholic Church.

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Reed: Thomas, who married Kate Hefferton; Mary, twin sister of Thomas, married Thomas Solomon; Kate, at home; John, married Eliza Scanlan and died in 1904; William, married and lives on the home farm; Dominick, married Ann Carrigan, also resides on the home farm; Frank, married Hannah Carrigan, and resides in Springfield; Annie, married Frank Flesch a contractor of Springfield; Joseph is single; Maggie, is Mrs. Patrick Carrigan of Springfield; and three died in infancy.

REES, Hon. Thomas.—Springfield can boast of many men of more than local reputation, and its prominent men are to be found in all lines of business and in the professions. Naturally enough its best known are those who have held, or are now holding, public office, but most of these have been well known in other capacities before entering political life. Such is the case with the Hon. Thomas Rees, ex-State Senator and publisher of the Illinois State Register, whose reputation in newspaper circles is national. Mr. Rees was born in Pittsburg, Pa., May 13, 1850, son of William and Mary (Laforge) Rees, and his literary ability is probably inherited from his father, who was a newspaper man and the first man to recognize the literary ability of Samuel L. Clemens ("Mark Twain"), having paid him for the first of his articles which were published in Mr. Rees' paper in the year 1856.

Thomas Rees was but nine years of age when his father died, and four years later he began to solve the serious problem of making his own way in the world by entering a printing establishment at Keokuk, Iowa. He worked several years at the trade. In 1876, he began business on his own account, forming a partnership with Judge John Gibbons, now of Chicago, George Smith and H. W. Clendenin, which connection was maintained with the latter two, until the death of Mr. Smith in Springfield in 1886. He is still associated with Mr. Clendenin in the publication of the Illinois State Register. The partners purchased the Keokuk "Constitution," and although this had been a losing investment to its former proprietors, it proved a big success in the hands of the new firm. Mr. Rees being the business manager, and in 1881, it was sold at a good profit. In June of the same year the partners purchased the Illinois-State Register from the late John M. Palmer, of which Mr. Rees has since been business manager. He is thoroughly familiar with every department, from typesetting and press work to writing and compiling.

For years Mr. Rees has been a member of the Illinois Press Association, of which he was President during 1891 and 1892. He was sent as a delegate from Illinois to the National Editoral Association conventions in St. Paul, Detroit, Chicago, Galveston, and other places. He is a member of and has served on the Advisory Committee of the Associated Press, and is a member of the American Newspaper Publishers Association and other organizations. He is a 32d Degree Mason and is also connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Royal Arcanum and the Royal Circle, having held official rank in the two latter—and was for a term Exalted Ruler of the Elks. He has been for many years a member of the Executive Committee County Democratic Committee and has acted as chairman of the City Democratic Committee. In the fall of 1902, he was nominated and elected to the office of State Senator. He was Chairman of the Citizen's Armory Committee that accomplished the building of the State Armory and Arsenal of Springfield, and succeeded in a short time in raising a subscription of $50,000 for purchase of the ground, which was presented to the State by the citizens of Springfield.

During his term as State Senator, Mr. Reese secured to Springfield the erection of the Supreme Court Building, which is considered a most beautiful specimen of architecture, being built on truly classical lines. He secured for the State Board of Agriculture, the enlargement of the machinery hall, the completion of the coliseum buildings, the woman's building, the dairy building, the only permanent cattle building and a number of other permanent improvements on the State Fair grounds. In addition to these items, he also secured the building of the new power plant in connection with the State House, the hospital building at Camp Lincoln, a magnificent school building for the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; also, extensive improvements on the buildings and grounds of the Insane Asylum and the State School for Blind at the same place. He introduced and secured the enactment of the law creating the Good Roads Commission of the State of Illinois, which is doing much for the improvement of the highways of the State.

In addition to writing a number of technical papers on the publishing business for editorial conventions, he has been the author of several pieces of work of a more literary nature. Having travelled extensively in nearly every State in the Union and in a number of foreign countries, he has given the readers of the State Register the benefit of his observations as he traveled, having attained a considerable reputation as a descriptive writer.

In 1906, he made a long trip through Cuba and Mexico and on his return wrote a book of over 400 pages on these very interesting countries, under the title of "Spain's Lost Jewels." In 1908, he made an extensive trip through Europe and wrote a similar book describing the several countries in which he travelled, under the title of "Sixty Days in Europe." Both these books were published by the Illinois State Register Company and have proven quite popular. Mr. Reese has also written a number of selections in verse.

He was married July 17th, 1901, to Lou Hart of Gardner, Illinois.

REESE, John H. (deceased), for some years a resident of Cotton Hill Township, Sangamon County, where he was known as a highly respected and substantial citizen, was a native of North Carolina, born January 9, 1830, a son of Samuel and Mary (Rhodes) Reese, both natives of the same State. The parents became early settlers of Shelby County, Ill., where the father purchased land and engaged in farming. He died there and his wife afterward moved to Dallas, Tex., where she purchased land and there her death occurred about thirty years ago. She had two other sons besides John H.—Joseph and Henry, both of whom remained in South Carolina.

Mr. Reese acquired his education in the public schools of Shelby County, and when old enough began to help in the work on his father's farm, continuing in this occupation during the remainder of his life. For a number of years he lived on a farm three miles southeast of the place occupied by his widow. Upon his marriage, he lived for a time near Pawnee, Ill., and also owned land southwest of the present home place, which he sold and then purchased sixty acres of land on Section 5 of Cotton Hill Township, where he lived from 1878 until his death, which occurred on his birthday in 1885. He was a Republican in politics and an active and useful member of the Methodist Church, living an earnest and consistent Christian life. He improved and cultivated that farm and was successful in his operations. It is now owned by his widow.

Mr. Reese was married in Cotton Hill Township, October 10, 1863, to Phoebe Funderburk, daughter of David and Hannah Funderburk, and a native of Sangamon County. Her father served three years in the war of 1812 and came to Sangamon County in 1819 before there was any Springfield, and two years later married Hannah Hinkle. He and his wife had five sons and three daughters and besides Mrs. Reese those living are: Alfred N., David, Sarah (Mrs. Voyles), now living in Jefferson County, Mo., and at present writing ninety years of age; Mrs. Reese has had five children of whom four sons are living: Samuel D., George Washington, Edward G. and William Warren. George W. lives with his mother. Mary Frances died in infancy. Mrs. Reese has nine living grandchildren. She has reared her children to honorable man and womanhood and is much esteemed by her many friends. Besides her home in Cotton Hill Township, Mrs. Reese owns land in the vicinity of Glenarm.

REFINE, Antonio De Frates (deceased).—It is touching to note the care with which so many of Springfield's reliable men provided for their families, so that when death claimed them the loved ones were left in comfortabel circumstances. These men were fully alive to the grave responsibilities resting upon their shoulders, and never shirked their duty or put their own comfort first. One of the men deserving of special mention because of his fidelity to duty, was the late Antonio D. Refine, born on the Island of Madeira, in December, 1830, a son of De Frates Refine and Frances (De Frates) Refine. The parents died in Spain, where the father was a truck farmer.

his death. He learned the brick-layer and plasterer trades, and always had plenty of work. He was engaged on a number of the leading buildings put up in Springfield during his residence there. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and died sustained by its faith, March 22, 1897, his remains being interred in Oak Ridge Cemetery. In political faith he was a Republican, but never desired office. When his adopted country had need of his services he enlisted August 14, 1862, in the Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until 1865, when he was mustered out. When the G. A. R. Post was organized, he joined it in Springfield and continued one of its active members the remainder of his life.

Mr. Relfe was married in Springfield, September 29, 1863, to Mary Roderick, born in Port of Spain. In 1848, daughter of Manuel C. and Homaya Roderick, born on the Island of Madeira. Mr. and Mrs. Relfe had children as follows: James, born November 17, 1869, is married and resides at No. 1106 East Miller Street; John C., born March 27, 1872, is married and lives at No. 1820 East Adams Street; Laura, born November 11, 1877, married Andrew Leahy, a carpenter, and lives in St. Louis; William L., born September 15, 1883, is unmarried, lives in Quincy, Ill., where he is a painter; and Daniel is married, living at home with his widowed mother at No. 1101 East Miller Street. Mrs. Relfe is a most excellent lady, who was beloved by all with whom she has ever been a good neighbor, ready to give sympathy and material help in time of sickness or other trouble.

REGAN, Michael.—Prosperity after years of toil is the reward which has attended a number of the retired farmers now living in Springfield, and it is well deserved, for few men work harder than the agriculturist. One of the men representative of his class is Michael Regan, of No. 417 West Canedy Street, who has resided in Sangamon County for a number of years. He was born in County Mayo, Ireland, January 1, 1837, son of William and Bridget (Duffy) Regan, both natives of that county, who lived and died there.

The educational advantages of this lad were poor, but with customary Irish keenness of intellect, he made the most of them and worked faithfully on his father's farm until he was twenty years old, when he left sailing from Liverpool for New York City on the sailing vessel, "General McClellan," Captain Tremblay commanding. After three weeks on the water he landed, with but $2.50 in his pocket. To the ambitions young Irishman, however, this was but of little importance, for he immediately secured work laying brick in Union Hill, N. J., remaining until he had sufficient to come west to Jersey County Ill., where at Jerseyville he worked several months for $27 per month. He then went to Menard County to work in a brick yard for a season. In the fall of 1865 he came to Springfield and was a hod carrier and section hand on the Chicago & Alton Railroad for several years. In 1867 he returned to Menard County to resume work in the brick yard for a season, when he rented a farm in Petersburg and remained on it for twelve years. He then rented a farm from J. C. Taylor, at Chatham, for twelve years more, following which he bought 176 acres in New Berlin Township, on which he lived until 1893, when he retired. Mr. Regan belongs to St. Agnes Catholic Church. He is a staunch Democrat. All through life Mr. Regan has been a hard worker, never shirking any duty, but striving to perform every obligation faithfully and to better his condition.

REID, Archibald (deceased).—Every year the Grim Reaper calls for his own number of members of the Grand Army of the Republic, thinning the ranks of what was at one time one of the largest organizations the world has ever known, the institution that bound together for all time the boys in blue who had fought side by side through one of the greatest struggles mankind has seen. Each year finds its ranks growing thinner, and for that reason if no other we should honor and respect the veterans while they are with us to remind us of the nation's great struggle to free the slave and uphold the Union. The late Archibald Reid, who was a retired stationary engineer and veteran of the Civil War, and who lived at No. 1146 North Fourth Street, Springfield, was born three miles from Edinburgh, Scotland, November 21, 1834, son of Walter and Jean (Stuart) Reid, and a descendant of the royal family in Scotland. His father was a miner and mine contractor, furnishing horses and mules for mine work, and both he and his wife died in Edinburgh. Mr. Archibald Reid went to school until ten years of age, when he was put to work in the mines helping his father, and when seventeen years of age he had charge of a hoisting engine, which he operated until leaving for the United States in 1854. He sailed from Liverpool to New York, whence he went to Potts-ville, Pa., where one of his brothers, Thomas, had charge of a junction shaft. He worked there in the mines for a few years, at the end of which time he and a brother engaged in the grocery business in Springfield, but later operated the Co-Operative engine for two years and then took charge of the engine at the old North Shaft. He enlisted at Alton, Ill., in 1864, in Company G, One Hundred Thirty-third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and after receiving his honorable discharge went to Florida, but eventually returned to Springfield, where he has resided ever since. He was formerly a member of the Baptist Church, and his politics are those of the Republican party.

On April 26, 1860, Mr. Reid was united in marriage with Miss Hannah Jones, a native of Wales. In 1873 Mr. Reid and his wife moved to New Athens, Ill., where he was superintendent of mines, and during their stay there they adopted a little girl about six weeks old, naming her Ella May. She married William Worthington, of Springfield, by whom she has had two children, Isabelle and Edward Bruce.

REID, William Brown, chief engineer in the Supreme Court Building at Springfield, Ill., comes of an old Scotch family in which the men for generations back have been connected with mechanics, and both his father and grandfather were experienced miners. He was born at Silver Creek, Schuykill County, Pa., September 15, 1857, and is a son of Thomas and Maymie (Brown) Reid, and a grandson of Walter Reid, who returned to Scotland and died in his native land.

Thomas Reid was born in Dalkeith, Scotland. He came to the United States before his marriage and worked as a miner for a number of years in the Schuykill coal regions in Pennsylvania, then came to Illinois and worked in Morgan County until 1867, when he came to Springfield. He was superintendent of the old Loose Mine and later had charge of the Wabash Coal Company mine at Athens. He died at Springfield, when fifty-nine years old, May 28, 1892. He was survived by five children: William Brown, Walter, Mrs. Henry Kueswana, Jennie and Minnie.

William Brown Reid was quite small when his parents came to Illinois, where he attended the public schools until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he became a clerk for C. M. Smith, in his grocery store, where he remained for four years, then accepted a position at the Illinois Watch Company, remaining five years. For one year afterward he was a fireman on the Wabash railroad and for three more years operated a stationary engine at a coal shaft. Mr. Reid then traveled fifteen years in all parts of the United States as an erecting engineer for the Ide & Sons Engine Works, and for seven years was chief engineer for the Springfield electric plant, one year for the water works and in 1909 accepted his present position.

Mr. Reid was married September 13, 1895, to Miss Lizzie Morris, of Springfield, a daughter of the late George Morris, and they have six children: Charles F., Janetta M., Jessie, Gladys, Willa Dorothy and Margaret Ann. Mr. Reid and family attend the Second Presbyterian Church. He is a Republican in his political views and fraternal he is prominent in Masonry, having attained the thirty-second Degree, and is a Knight Templar and a Shriner. He belongs also to the Knights of Pythias, in which he is Past Chancellor, and to the Woodmen, in which he is Past Venerable Counselor.

REILLY, Thomas W., proprietor of a grocery store at 430 West Hay Street, Springfield, is a native of the city, born October 10, 1883. He is a son of Michael and Ellen (Connors) Reilly, both natives of County Waterford, Ireland, and the father died in 1907. They were parents of seven children, four of whom now survive: Annie; Nellie, wife of John McFall, of Springfield; James, Thomas W., Michael Reilly came to the United States in 1871 and spent some years working in a foundry in Boston. He came to Springfield in 1881 and his widow still resides there. He was a strong Democrat and a member of the Hibernian Society and the Modern Woodmen of America. He was a member of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, but usually attended the Church of the Immaculate Conception, at Seventh and Monroe Streets, of whose pastor, Father Hickey, he was a warm admirer and friend.

Until fourteen years of age Thomas W. Reilly attended St. Joseph's parochial school, then went to work in a brick yard. Two years later he began driving a grocery wagon, at which occupation he worked two and one-half years, then for nine years worked in the coal mines. He has been engaged in his present business since 1907 and has succeeded in building up a good trade. His honesty and integrity are unquestioned and he endeavors to meet the requirements of his customers in the line of groceries and provisions he carries. He is well known in his part of the city and has a good standing in the community.

August 24, 1904, Mr. Reilly married Stella Hurt, also a native of Springfield, born July 10, 1872, and daughter of Laterfield and Molle (Wehrle) Hurt, natives of Germany. Mr. Hurt is retired from active life and resides in Springfield, and Mrs. Hurt is deceased. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. Reilly and wife, namely: Stella, born May 28, 1906; Ursula, June 10, 1908; Edith, December 21, 1910. Mr. Reilly is a Democrat in politics and was a candidate for the office of Commissioner in the primaries of February 28, 1911. He attends St. Joseph's Catholic Church and is affiliated with the Hibernians. He resides at 530 West Hay Street and has many friends in the city.

REISCH, Franz Sales (deceased).—In all parts of Illinois are to be found German-Americans who have impressed their personalities on the history of the communities in which they have lived. Their sturdy honesty, their ambition to make the most of their opportunities for advancement, and their interest in the cause of progress, are qualities which made them valuable citizens. Among the citizens of Springfield, who have contributed much to the development of the resources of the city and vicinity, was Franz Sales Reisch, who has been dead many years, but his influence is easily discernible in the results of his activities. He is well remembered by all who had dealings with him, in a business or social way; and his presence was missed in many circles of the city for many years. He left a record of which his family and friends have been justly proud, and his success in life was a gratification to his many warm personal friends.

Mr. Reisch was born in the Grand Duchy of Baden, on the Rhine, January 24, 1805. He was of the peasant class, and his father's occupation was that of a butcher. Mr. Reisch was one of five children, three boys and two girls.

Franz S. Reisch received a limited education, and at the age of seventeen years became apprentice to a cooper in the village of Schletstadt, across the Rhine from his home, in Alsace, France. After spending three years learning his trade Mr. Reisch worked three years as journeyman. At the age of twenty-four years, he decided to seek larger opportunities to better his condition in life, and emigrated to the United States. He first located in Kentucky, later removed to Indiana, and after living in that State a short time, moved in 1833, to Beardstown on the Illinois River, where he followed his trade successfully four years. Mr. Reisch then returned to his native country for his wife, having been engaged to be married to Miss Susan Maurer, a farmer's daughter, born near his own birthplace. They were married and spent their honeymoon traveling to their new home in Beardstown, where Mr. Reisch established a shop of his own. By diligent work and economy he saved money enough to purchase, in 1840, land on Richland Creek, Sangamon County. After locating on his farm, he continued to manufacture barrels, delivering them by wagon to Beardstown, Springfield and St. Louis. He later sold this farm and purchased land eight miles from Springfield. He was a successful farmer and business man, and saved enough to engage in mercantile business, in 1846, in which he continued four years.

In 1850 Mr. Reisch moved his family to Springfield, having the previous year established a small brewery with a capacity of 150 barrels annually; and in this enterprise was so successful that he was soon able to produce 400 barrels a year. He had been associated with another in business but purchased the interest of his partner and carried on the brewery alone for some time. He also had a mercantile establishment and retained his farm. In 1854, on account of a temperance wave which swept over the country, he leased his brewery and engaged in manufacturing brick, still carrying on his grocery store, having a partner in the latter business. In 1858 Mr. Reisch resumed his management of the brewery, and started to build up the business anew, and about this time the grocer with whom he had been associated in business was admitted to partnership in the brewery, but in 1862, Mr. Reisch became sole owner again. In 1863, he admitted his son Frank to partnership and in 1868, the enterprise had grown to such an extent that they erected an immense brewery plant, which was the most extensive in the city. This enterprise has become one of the largest in Sangamon County, and its present output is 100,000 barrels per annum. The machinery has been added to and replaced from time to time, until the latest improved appliances have come into use in all parts of the immense plant, comprising five large buildings.

In 1875 Mr. Reisch was superintendenting the construction of an addition to the brewing plant when he fell from the partly completed building, was fatally injured, and died a few hours later. He left a widow and seven children to mourn his loss. Mr. Reisch and wife had a happy married life of thirty-eight years, and to them were born children as follows: Frank, died in 1896; Elizabeth, wife of Gustave A. Enzenberger; Joseph, Vice President of Reisch Brewing Company; Leonard, a dry-goods merchant; George, a biography of whom appears in this work. Mrs. Reisch died in 1901. She and her husband were both devout Catholics, and no matter how inclement the weather might be, Mrs. Reisch attended mass every Sunday, unless prevented by serious illness, and frequently attended church week days, as well. The family was prominent socially and delighted to entertain their many friends and acquaintances. Mr. Reisch rose to a position of wealth and prominence through his sheer determination and unswerving purpose to succeed, coming to the United States a poor young man, beginning in a humble way in his struggle and moving slowly at first on his upward way. However, his ability and high courage could not help but advance him in position and power, and his achievements were but the natural outcome of his efforts, alone by the fact that he lived in the midst of large opportunities and knew how to take advantage of them. He delighted to provide his family with the good things of life, was most devoted to them all, and was always solicitous for their comfort. In his business relations he was most upright and conscientious, never breaking an engagement or a promise, and fulfilling the spirit as well as the letter. of all obligations. He was most generous in his contributions to the needs of those who were unfortunate and needy, and gave his support to every worthy cause which came to his notice. He was a man who was most faithful to every friend that reposed confidence in him, and his high sense of right was one of his distinguishing characteristics. In politics Mr. Reisch was a Democrat, though he never cared for public office.

REISCH, George.—The Reisch family has been prominent in the annals of Springfield, Ill., and vicinity for more than half a century, and the name has always stood for progress and public enterprise. They have been most active in securing public improvements, in forwarding the erection of public buildings and developing the resources of the community. They have been instrumental in securing the location of factories in Springfield and have helped to build up many private enterprises. Hardy a church of any denomination has been erected in Springfield for fifty years but has been materially aided by their generosity. One of the most prominent representatives of the family in the business circles of Springfield today is George Reisch, President of Reisch Brewing Company, which was established by his father in 1846. Mr. Reisch is a native of Baden, Germany, born January 3, 1846, son of Frank and Susanna (Maurer) Reisch, both born in Baden, Germany, the father January 24, 1808, and the mother February 11, 1817. Frank Reisch, who was a brewer, came to the United States in 1832, spent about a year in New Orleans, came thence to Cincinnati, Ohio, and later located in Springfield, where he remained until his death in 1875. He and his wife had thirteen children, seven of whom grew to maturity, namely: Franz married Anna Hammon and died, leaving a widow and four children—Christina, wife of Charles Meyer, of Springfield; Susanna (unmarried), Mary (wife of Joseph Zimmerman), and Frank, Jr. (Secretary and Treasurer of the Reisch Brewing Company), Mary, wife of Leonard Mattias, one child—Theresa; George; Elizabeth married Gustave A. Ensenberger, a furniture dealer of Bloomington, Ill., three children—Frank, Gustave and Joseph; Joseph married Mary Stehlin, who died, leaving two children—Albert and Marie, and he is first Vice President of the Reisch Brewing Company; Susie is a nun in the Franciscan Convent, in New York; Leonard, retired, was formerly a member of the dry goods firm of Reisch & Thoma, of Springfield, married a Miss Halliday and they have one child, Linette.

At the age of sixteen years George Reisch had graduated from the common school in Springfield and began to assist his father in the brewery and his brother Frank was admitted to partnership with his father. On May 1, 1875, F. Reisch & Brothers succeeded F. Reisch & Son, and in 1903, the Reisch Brewing Company was incorporated. The business has expanded very much and the firm is well known throughout the central part of the State. The annual output of the plant is 100,000 barrels, the firm occupies five large buildings, and the most modern and best improved machinery is used in manufacturing the product. The most sanitary conditions are always observed. George Reisch has carried out the policy of his father and his brother Frank in most features of the work and is one of the ablest business men of the city. His business dealings, have been characterized by the utmost fairness and uprightness, and the reputation of the firm is of the best. In his able administration of the affairs of the large enterprise of which he is the head, he has shown that he has all the details of the business in hand.

Mr. Reisch has been identified with many public enterprises and has always given his support to every measure he considers to be of interest or benefit to the public. He served four years on the Park Board of the city and was Alderman one term. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Sangamo Club, the Chamber of Commerce, the Men's Club, Western Catholic Union, and many other societies of Springfield, besides the Illinois State and National Brewers' Association. He has always been a Democrat, but has taken no very active or political affairs. He is a member of SS. Peter and Paul's Catholic Church of Springfield. Mr. Reisch inherits to a large degree the ambition and energy of his father, who was a self-made man, landing in America with almost nothing and building up a large business. He is an active worker for any cause in which he is interested and may be counted on for contributing his share in forwarding any movement which has his approval.

On October 10, 1878, Mr. Reisch was married at Springfield to Miss Mary Spity, who was born in Logan County, Ill., February 14, 1859, daughter of Martin and Minnie (Frank) Spity, the former a native of Bavaria and the latter of Baden, Germany. The former was a farmer by occupation and was for many years proprietor of the Spity House at Lincoln, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Reisch became parents of six sons and four daughters, namely: Mrs. Minnie S. Franz, whose husband is a packer of Springfield; Eda M., married Dr. Archauer, of Springfield; George F., in business with his father, is married and living in Springfield; Carl M., unmarried, a graduate of the Law department of the university at Ann Arbor, Mich., and now general manager of the Reisch Indemnity Company; Clara, Christine, Louis Edward, Joseph and Walter, living at home with their parents. The family are prominent in social circles and live in the home which formerly belonged to Mr. Reisch's father, which has been occupied by the family for the past sixty years. Mr. Reisch also owns considerable other property in Springfield and elsewhere, including 4,000 acres in Nebraska, and some Chicago realty.
RENNE, Thomas P.—The majority of the soldiers who won victory for the North were young in point of years, although old in patriotism and buoyed up by enthusiasm. Some were not more than lads, others had barely attained their majority, and all were brave and daring, ready to risk life and limb in defense of flag and country. Thomas P. Renne, of Springfield, now residing at No. 205 West North Grand Avenue, served a short time during the early part of the war. He was born in Clinton County, Ill., October 10, 1840, being a son of James S. and Partheula (Powers) Renne, natives of Pittsfield, Mass., and Arkansas. The father, a carpenter, moved from Clinton County to Ogle County, living there three years and working as a carpenter. He then moved to Sangamon County, where he followed his trade until his death. His home was west of Springfield, and there the mother also died. The father was a guard on the frontier during the Black Hawk War, serving for seven years. The Renne family is of French and Scotch descent, and Mr. Renne inherits the good traits of both nations. He belonged to a family of eleven children, seven sons and four daughters, of whom three now survive.

Mr. Renne went to school in Clinton County and Springfield, attending the old First Ward School in that city. This was the first school building in Springfield. During his boyhood days he worked on a farm, but when he was twenty-one years old, began learning the trade of a brick mason, and has followed it ever since. For twelve years he was employed by Springfield Iron Works in brick-laying parts of their contracts. The last few years he has been engaged in a contracting business. During the period he has been engaged at his trade, Mr. Renne has been employed on many public buildings, as he is regarded as a skilled workman. He enlisted in Company M, Seventeenth Illinois Regiment, Volunteer Infantry, for a ninety days' service, but at the end of thirty days was relieved from service on account of a gunshot wound.

On January 31, 1867, Mr. Renne was married to Emma Bonney, born near Berlin, Sangamon County, daughter of Benjamin and Emi- nee (Sikes) Bonney, who came from Springfield, Mass., to Springfield, Ill., and there the father died, August 22, 1865, the mother surviving him, and moving to Kansas City, Kan., where she passed away August 20, 1898. Mrs. Renne belonged to a family of three sons and two daughters, three of whom are now living: Mrs. Reine; Frank; and Mrs. Mary H. Pal- mer, of Kansas City, Kan. Mr. and Mrs. Renne have had three sons and one daughter, two of whom survive: Allen B., was accidentally killed by an automobile near Chicago, April 26, 1909, having been a merchant of Pontiac, Ill.; Charles B., died in infancy; Vernon W., of Chicago; Bertha M., at home. There are three granddaughters and one grandson in the family. Mr. Renne owns his home, where he has lived for thirty-six years, and takes great pride in it and his surroundings. He is one of the solid, substantial men of the city, and one in whom implicit trust can be placed.

RENSHAW, George M., a farmer, stock-raiser and breeder of Duroc-Jersey hogs, has made his farm on Section 26, Cartwright Township, one of the show places of the county. He was born in a log house on his present farm, Aug- ust 7, 1859, being a son of Wiley P. and Martha (Nesbett) Renshaw, the former born November 7, 1800, near Salisbury, Ga., and the latter born near Lexington, Ky., in 1794. They were married in Bond County, Ill., (both families having come to this State in early days). December 31, 1818, and in 1821 came to Sangamon County. On February 26 of that year, they entered land from the government, their deeds being signed by John Quincy Adams, and were the parents of the seven children in the family who came into the world, in the little rude log cabin on this farm. The eldest, Jane, was born in Bond County, in 1819, and died in Sangamon County, aged eighty-two years, in 1901; Mary A., the next child, became the wife of S. Q. Harris, who died a short time after, his wife, Mary Gardner; Margaret married F. Butler, but both are now deceased; James D. died at the age of twenty-five years; Barbara, widow of A. M. Houghton, resides on a farm in Menard County, Ill.; John S. resides in Springfield; William P. died in 1852; George M. The family comes of Scotch ancestry, the grandfather, Elijah Renshaw having come from Scotland, and he served in the Revolutionary War as an officer. His death occurred in Bond County, Ill. His widow came to Sangamon County with her son, Wiley P., to take up land, and died upon it about 1843. Wiley P. Renshaw was only seventeen when he married, and while he lived his wife worked to im- prove the farm, and the rest of the family. Six of the seven children in the family survived.

When the Black Hawk War broke out he was commissioned First Lieu- tenant by Governor John Reynolds, in the Thirty-first Illinois State Militia, on August 22, 1833, at Vandalia. Before his regiment was called out the war was over. He was a man of sound judgment and held closely to the principles of the Whig party. When he died, in the fall of 1852, he was missed from many circles. His widow survived him many years, passing away in 1885. Mr. Renshaw was one of the first to breed short-horn cattle in central Illinois, and with great skill, believing that blood would tell, and he was rewarded for his work by receiving the highest prices for his cattle. The Methodist Church held his membership and he was a true, Christian man. He never turned anyone away empty-handed, but gave freely of his means and time to help others. He and his wife ministered to the sick and afflicted, and were always sought out in times of trouble.
Before the church was built services were held in his house, and he always entertained the ministers. His fine library was at the disposal of all who needed its use.

Rhea was first located in the Harrison District school and early worked on the farm, beginning so early that the plow handles often bumped him, and he was so small that he could not be seen behind the plow. He continued to help his father until his marriage, which occurred November 22, 1866, when he was united with Matilda Parker, born in Robinson County, September 27, 1840, coming to Illinois with her parents, in 1852. They settled in Sangamon County, but later bought land in Menard County, Ill. There they remained for a time, then sold out, coming back to Sangamon County, where both parents died.

Mrs. Renshaw has two brothers living, Charles and Richard.

Mr. and Mrs. Renshaw settled on the farm where he was born, and there his children were also born, they being: Georgia Etta, wife of W. A. McNeal, a farmer of Minnesota, Issue—Elmer, Guy, Ernest and Bert; Wiley F., born April 28, 1878, operating the farm with his father; Miss Elizabeth, born July 11, 1880, mentioned below; Arthur B., born July 17, 1883, is also assisting on the farm. Mrs. Renshaw died September 27, 1910, aged seventy years and two days. She was one of the active members of the Methodist Church, and a true, noble-hearted, Christian woman.

Kind of heart and good judgment, she was loved by all who knew her. During the early days she never complained of hardships, but nobly bore her share, and gave her life to the care of her husband and children. Yet in spite of her many home duties, no one in distress ever found her lacking with sympathy and material help. Since her demise Miss Jessie has bravely shouldered the responsibilities of the household and is trying to make her father and brothers comfortable. She is a charming young lady, a fine housekeeper and possessed of those characteristics which make women loved by their families.

Mr. Renshaw has witnessed many changes in the county. His farm contains 170 acres, a part of the farm entered from the Government by his father. He inherits the latter's good judgment with reference to stock and has been very successful in breeding. He makes a specialty of Duroc-Jersey hogs, carrying about 150 head of swine at all times. His stock is registered and of standard breed. Like many of those who have passed through pioneer days, he looks back to those times with regret. Forgetting the discomforts he remembers the merry times when the little log cabin rang with gay laughter and hungry boys and girls devoured the food set before them. His father was among the first to bring a threshing machine into the county, and he remembers well the excitement over it, although now that old machine would appear very clumsy. In politics Mr. Renshaw is a Republican, casting his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, in 1860. He is still a subscriber to the Illinois State Journal, for many years published by Paul Selby, editor of this work for the Munseil Publishing Co. of Chicago, to which Mr. Renshaw's father also was a subscriber. He has never sought public office, preferring to devote his time to his private affairs. However, he has always been ready to lead his influence towards securing good government and improvement of existing conditions.

RHEA, Edwin L.—The agricultural interests of Sangamon County are represented by men whose progressive ideas and advanced methods have placed them in the front ranks, and among those one who has already attained an enviable success is Edwin L. Rhea, residing on Section 24, New Berlin Township. He was born in Island Grove Township, April 3, 1868, being a son of Stephen Edwin Rhea, a complete history of whom appears elsewhere in this work. Mr. Rhea grew up on the homestead, attending district school and the schools of New Berlin. Following his inclinations, Mr. Rhea has devoted himself to farming, taking charge of his father's property of 125 acres of highly cultivated land. He has just rebuilt his barns, including a fine dairy barn, having entered the dairy business in 1901. His Jersey cows are of the highest breeding. Many years ago he has been a member of the Methodist Church, but Miss Jessie and Benjamin belong to the Baptist Church.
gan County and the grandfather conducted one of the first taverns, at which stage coach horses were changed in the long trips made across that County. Mrs. Rhea is one of two children born to her parents, but the other, a brother, Milton, died at the age of seventeen years. Mr. Rhea was his parents' only child. Mrs. and Mrs. Rhea have had children as follows: Julia, born June 1, 1855; Louisa, born March 6, 1890; Edwin L., born April 24, 1902; and Margaret, born August 28, 1904.

Mrs. Rhea is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, while Mr. Rhea is connected with the Baptist denomination. Both of them belong to the Court of Honor, while he belongs to the Odd Fellows of New Berlin and has been a member of the Modern Woodmen of America twenty-three years. His political views make him a Democrat, and he has been active in the good work of that party. Being strongly in favor of temperance, he played an important part in the crusade against the drink traffic, and in addition to his farming interests, Mr. Rhea has found time to invent a refrigeration of cans, by means of which milk can be shipped in perfect safety. Kindly, energetic, a good business man and a far-sighted farmer, Mr. Rhea is a man of whom his county may well be proud. He has accomplished much in his life, and is looking forwards to doing much more, for he is in the very prime of manhood and progressive to the utmost. Both he and his wife are popular socially and welcome their many friends to their pleasant home upon the farm where he was born.

RHEA, Stephen Edwin, who owns an excellent property in Island Grove Township which he devotes to farming, is one of the old and honored residents of that part of Sangamon County and a son of one of the first settlers there. He was born November 4, 1843, in a log cabin in Island Grove Township, a son of John Rhea, and a member of the Baptist Church. John Rhea, the grandfather of Stephen E. Rhea, was a native of Barren County, Ky., where he was married to Rachel Jolloff, and came to Illinois prior to the great snow which began falling December 29, 1830, killing man and beast alike. Some of the pioneers attempted to drive their hogs and other live stock to St. Louis to provide shelter for them, and but few of these were saved, one pioneer losing his entire drove of 500 animals. James Rhea had settled first in Jefferson County about 1829 or '31 and engaged in farming government land, but later took up freighting and made a trip to Galena. Returning through central Illinois, he was so impressed with the possibilities of Sangamon County that on his return home he gave his Jefferson County land to his eldest son and came to Sangamon. This son, who was a soldier during the Black Hawk War, died of sickness contracted during his service, and his sword and shoulder straps are now in the possession of Stephen E. Rhea. James Rhea came to Sangamon County in time to be one of those who suffered during the great storm, but with true pioneer grit started all over again, and built a log cabin of hewn logs on his new property in Island Grove Township. This log cabin boasted a huge fire-place in its north end and doors on the east and west sides, and the logs for the fire place were hauled right into the cabin by an old ox named Buck. Greased paper formed the means by which light was admitted to the cabin, which was one and one-half stories high and the finest in the section at that time. Mr. Rhea used pioneer methods in farming his land, but was a faithful, energetic worker, becoming successful and possessed of much property. A faithful member of the Baptist Church, he was ever charitably and hospitably inclined, and in his death Sangamon County lost one of its noble pioneers, who was extensively mourned. During the War of 1812 he served under Admiral Perry on the Great Lakes. Mrs. Rhea was the father of these children: James, Richard, William and Mrs. Mary Aubsbury and Mrs. Nancy Foutch.

John Rhea, father of Stephen E. Rhea, was born July 14, 1811, and was married November 14, 1839, to Julia Starks, who was born June 21, 1826. They had these children: James B., of Midland, Tex.; Stephen E.; Mary Ann, deceased, who was the wife of John H. Wilcox, of Arizona; Thomas, a farmer in Fremont County, Iowa; John H. and Abigail, who died in infancy; and Martha E., widow of J. R. Smith, of Polk County, Mo. John Rhea was born in Barren County, Ky., where he accompanied his parents to Illinois at an early day, becoming one of the leading men of Sangamon County, and a leader in the Baptist Church, which was organized in his father's house, and of which he was the first clerk. Mr. Rhea was a great Bible student and an authority on all matters pertaining to the church, his advice naturally being much sought. Mr. Rhea died June 19, 1883, his wife having passed to her rest April 23, 1879.

Stephen Edwin Rhea was born in the original log cabin on the Rhea homestead, but when he was still a small boy his father erected a more commodious abode. He well remembers the trials and tribulations of pioneer days, as he was rocked in a cradle made of a hollowed log, worked as a lad at the hard, unremitting toil of the sugar camp, and was compelled to use a second-hand corn dropper, by which he was supposed to drop straight, like the present check row drops so that the corn may be ploughed both ways, an invention then undreamed of. His education was secured in the district schools of his day and he was reared to the life of a farmer, remaining at home until he was twenty-one years old. He was married November 2, 1865, to Lucy A. Wilcox, who was born March 9, 1846, in Island Grove Township, a daughter of Joshua and Matilda (Carruthers) Wilcox, early pioneers of Illinois, who now lie buried in the Moore burial ground. One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Rhea, Edwin L., a sketch of whose life will be found in another part of this work. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Rhea spent four years in Iowa, and at the end of that time returned to the farm homestead, of which he took charge. Eventually he purchased the interest of the other heirs of the property, which he has since developed into one of the finest farms in his part of Sangamon County. Mr. Rhea united with the Baptist Church when fifteen years of age and his wife joined that denomination after their marriage. Fraternally he is a Mason, having joined that organization when about twenty-two years old, and he is also a member of New Berlin Camp of Modern Woodmen. He is a Democrat in politics, but of late years has been giving his vote to the man whom he thinks best qualified to fill the office, and he has always been a foe to igniot interests. For two years he represented Berlin Township on the Board of Supervisors, and on two different occasions has been foreman of the Sangamon County Grand Jury.

Personally Mr. Rhea is a pleasant, sociable gentleman, and his strict integrity in all walks of life have gained the confidence of all whom he have come into contact with him, while his fund of experience and reminiscence of early days in the county make him an excellent companion.

RHODES, Clarence M.—Sangamon County, III., has the reputation of turning out good men young. The citizens of the county, and especially of Springfield, are quick to recognize a good man and to gauge his true worth, and they made no mistake when they chose Clarence M. Rhodes to take up the heavy responsibilities incidental to the office of Coroner. Mr. Rhodes is a native of the county, born at Rochester, December 1, 1872, a son of W. H. and Mary Rhodes.

The education of Mr. Rhodes was secured in the public schools of Sangamon County, and until the last four years, he resided on a farm. He served for three years as Assessor of Salisbury Township, and from 1906, until 1908, served as Riding Deputy Sheriff under Sheriff Charles Werner. In 1908, he was nominated by the Democratic party for the office of Coroner of Sangamon County and the majority he received at the ensuing election, proved his popularity. He is a faithful, conscientious public official and in every capacity in which he has served has proven himself the right man for the place. Although his political career has just begun, he has shown the people that he can be relied upon to perform his duties fully and ably, and just as the people are quick to recognize and appreciate a good man, just so are they loath to let a good man go. Mr. Rhodes does not need to fully rely upon his friends in the Democratic organization, for he is one of those rare politicians who have friends in every party. He belongs to the Masons, the Woodmen, Redmen and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in all of which he is immensely popular, and he can depend upon the staunch friendship and support of the majority of the members of the fifty-three labor organizations throughout the county. He is the owner of valuable farming property in Sangamon County and in Texas.

In 1897 Mr. Rhodes married Ethel Hodgzen, at Petersburg, Ill., and they have one son, Glenn. The family residence is at No. 209 North State Street.

RICH, Benjamin.—Perhaps no country has contributed more generously to the best citizenship of the United States than has England. Certainly no higher type can be found in the country than representatives of that older civilization, those sturdy, substantial qualities are shown in their reverence for the law, the founding of homes, their enlightened attitude toward education, their support of religion and their almost universal acquirement of financial independence.

Benjamin Rich, the present Recorder of Sangamon County, III., was born at Trowbridge, Wiltshire, England, March 18, 1854. His parents were John and Eliza (Bush) Rich, natives of England, where the former was engaged in farming. In 1861 the father brought his family to America and they settled at Johnstown, Pa., whence they came to Springfield in 1873.

The first seven years of Benjamin Rich's life were spent in his native land, where he began his education, enjoying good advantages for securing an education after the family located at Johnstown. When the family located in Springfield the young man began working in the rolling mills, where he remained until 1882, then engaged in dairy business, which he continued until 1896, when he was first nominated for his present office. He was elected and re-elected to his fall of that year and has been re-elected three times since, so that he is now serving his fourth term. An ardent Republican, he has pulled through these successive elections, while the bulk of his ticket has been defeated in most of them. He is a warm friend of organized labor and carries a large vote among the laboring classes. The people fully realize that he has given them most faithful service and, following the general rule which is an admirable feature of Sangamon County politics, they have rewarded him by retaining him in office, so that the prospects are that Mr. Rich may confidently expect to be reelected and elected to his present office in 1912. He filled several public offices before assuming his present one, as he served five successive years as President of the Village Board of Ridgeley, two years as Tax Collector of Springfield Township, four years as Supervisor of Springfield Township (being Chairman of the County Board one year) and the Board of School District No. 48, at Ridgeley. Though his life has been a busy one, he has found time to give considerable time and attention to the educational needs of his community. He is considered a most efficient public official and is correspondingly popular. Personally Mr. Rich possesses those sterling qualities and courteous manners which attract and cement friendship.

Mr. Rich was married in November, 1878, at Springfield, Ill., to Miss Annie Mowrey, a daughter of Isaac Mowery, who formerly was a resident of Johnstown, Pa. To this union six children have been born, two sons and four daughters, namely: Florence A., Alice, Lulu, Mollie, Benjamin and Ray. Mr. Rich has prospered in his private undertakings through his good judgment and business foresight. He has acquired some valuable property, part of it in Sangamon County, and also owns some land in Texas and North Dakota. He is a Director of the Citizens’ Loan Association and in the Springfield City Savings & Loan Association.

Fraternally he is affiliated with Springfield Lodge No. 405, I. O. O. F.; Pecival Lodge No. 262, K. P.; the M. W. A., and is a charter member of Capital Tent No. 1, K. O. T. M.

RICHARD, Frank, was born in Germany, in April, 1828. His parents expended their entire lives in Germany, where the father carried on farming in a small way, but was not able to do much for his children in the way of starting them in life. Frank, however, was soon able to provide for himself, after his school days were over, when he learned the excellent trade of a shoemaker.

In 1853 Frank Richard left Germany, and by slow means finally reached the United States. Being equipped with his trade, for which there is always a demand, he easily found work at the bench. He landed at the port of New York, and from there came directly to Springfield and has lived in this section ever since. He worked at his trade until his health failed, then turned his attention to farming, his wife owning an excellent farm on the outskirts of the city, and he has also done considerable gardening.

At Springfield, Ill., on December 15, 1857, Mr. Richard was married to Miss Catherine Schwartz, who was born in Lauderback, Germany, March 26, 1834, a daughter of Michael and Margaret Schwartz. Her parents spent their entire lives in Germany. Mrs. Richard being brought to America when young by her uncle, Conrad Locke. The latter was a shoemaker by trade. Mrs. Richard was the youngest of her parents’ family. Mr. and Mrs. Richard have had nine children and have sixteen grandchildren. The oldest daughter, Mary, is the wife of Martin Schmitz, and they live at Springfield; Mrs. Amelia Case also is a resident of Springfield; Frank: Elizabeth, wife of Thos. Taylor, living on the old farm, having bought the same; August, Louis, Katherine, Julia and Sophia are all deceased. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Richard who reached maturity all married and established homes of their own, and in addition to the sixteen grandchildren who have been taught according to the good old German way, to give obedience and respect to their grandparents, there are two great-grand-children. Mr. Richard is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, but Mrs. Richard belongs to the German Lutheran Church, of Springfield.

RICHARDSON, Clara Belle.—Springfield, as the capital city, is a center of social life, as well as of political interest, and is consequently the home of some of the most charming and gracious ladies in the State. One who is prominent alike in social and church circles, is Mrs. Clara Belle Richardson. She was born in Carlisle, Sullivan County, Ind., October 18, 1850, and is a daughter of the late Squire M. Patterson and his wife, Mary M. (Bennell) Patterson. The former was born in Vincennes, Ind., October 16, 1812, while the latter was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, October 14, 1820. Mr. Patterson was a bookkeeper.

Mrs. Richardson was educated in Terre Haute, Ind., and Mattoon, Ill., and remained at home until her marriage, on April 19, 1871, to James C. Richardson. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Richardson: Gertrude, born February 11, 1872; Mary, born November 9, 1874; Frank G., born July 14, 1876, and Earl A., born September 29, 1878.

For many years Mrs. Richardson has been one of the earnest and effective workers in the Congregational Church, of which she is a member, and many of the present excellent conditions are due to her influence and support. She belongs to the Order of the Eastern Star and the W. C. T. U. Her efforts in behalf of the latter organization have been marked with success, and she is welcomed in any gathering of her co-workers. Earnest and kind-hearted, devoted to the good work she believes in so thoroughly, Mrs. Richardson has been for years an important factor in Springfield life, and her influence has resulted in a remarkable moral uplift.

RICHARDSON, Thomas B., proprietor of the Riverton livery and feed stables, and one of the best known men in all the country round about that enterprising town, was born in Sangamon County, Ill., January 14, 1851, a son of Thomas and Janet (Wilson) Richardson, natives of Dundee, Scotland. His father was a florist and was employed as such in his native land, as well as at New Haven, Conn., where he located on coming to the United States. In 1845 he arrived, with his family, at Springfield, Ill., with a capital of only five dollars. He lived there about a year and in that time helped to lay out the square including the old State House and the present Court House. Later he located in Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, where he purchased 160 acres of land, and fifty-five acres, 215 altogether, on which he lived and farmed till 1802, when he moved a mile further west, where he also became the owner of 240 acres. There he lived until he died, when he was the owner of more than 700 acres of good Illinois land. He had five sons and three daughters, and of the eight children seven are living: William, the eldest, is a farmer in Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, on his father's original home place; James, a retired farmer, lives in Rochester, Ill.; Jane is the widow of the late John W. Beaumont, of St. Louis, Mo., and lives in that city; Elizabeth, who married Erwin Johnson, of Springfield, Ill., is dead; Mary married John W. Nord, now a retired farmer living at Edinburgh, Christian County, III. The subject of this sketch was next in order of nativity; John D. lives on the farm on which his parents passed their declining years and passed away. James served in the Civil War as a member of Company I, One Hundred and Seventeenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and his sister Jane presented a flag to the regiment on its departure for the seat of war.

Mr. Richardson was educated in public schools near his boyhood home and helped on the home farm during all the years of his youth and early manhood. In 1853, when he was twenty-eight years old, he moved to Christian County, Ill., and lived with one of his sisters until 1880, when he went to Colorado to prospect for mineral wealth. After a brief residence in Leadville he returned to Sangamon County and resumed farming, and was so employed till 1886, when he took up his residence in Riverton and engaged in teaming. In 1907 he bought the livery and feed stables which he has since operated with great success. As a Democrat he was elected assessor of taxes in Riverton, an office which he filled with much credit during a period of three years. He is a member of Lake Camp No. 33, Modern Woodmen of America, of Riverton, and is helpfully identified with the Christian Church.

April 14, 1884, at Springfield, Ill., Mr. Richardson married Miss Laura Dickerson, born at Rochester, Ill., February 8, 1864, a daughter of John Dickerson, a native of Virginia, who settled in Sangamon County at a comparatively early date, was for many years a farmer in Cooper Township, and is now living in retirement with his son Todd in Cotton Hill Township, his wife having died. Mrs. Richardson's only sister, Mrs. Addie Olive, wife of Wm. Olive, lives in Riverton, Ill. To Mr. and Mrs. Richardson have been born seven children, three of whom survive: Mrs. Addie Olive, who has all of whom are members of their parents' home circle. Mr. Richardson owns the Riverton livery and feed stables, a home in that village, 100 acres of farm land in Clear Lake Township and 180 acres of coal rights near Riverton. He is a man of public spirit, who has the welfare of the community at heart, a patriotic citizen and a leader in his community.

RICKETTS, Albert L., a retired merchant and honored citizen of Springfield, Ill., was born at Greencastle, Ind., June 27, 1868, and is a son of Daniel D. and Florence L. (Williamson) Ricketts, the former born August 19, 1822, and the latter February 21, 1849. Daniel D. Ricketts was a lawyer and located in Springfield in 1868, remaining about six months, then returned to Greencastle, where he resided until his death, May 14, 1897. He enlisted in 1861, in Company B, Fifty-fifth Indiana Regiment, as Lieutenant, and became a musician of the Sixteenth Indiana Volunteers. Later he enlisted as a private.

The wife of Daniel D. Ricketts was a daughter of Delano E. Williamson, who was born August 19, 1822, in Florence, Boone County, Ky., and died at Greencastle, Ind., May 2, 1903. His father was a descendant of Elliott Williamson, a native of Ireland, who emigrated to America at the time of the Revolution, and fought in the Continental Army under General Washington, from which his descendants are eligible to bear the title of Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution. On his mother's side his ancestry dates back to the Hollingsworth family, who came to America with William Penn. The parents of Mr. Ricketts emigrated to Illinois in 1833 and in 1842, when he was nineteen years of age, he went to Indiana with the intention of entering Asbury (now DePauw) University, but altered his mind and accepted the office of Deputy County Clerk at Bowling Green, Clay County, Ind. Up to this time his education had been only such as he was able to acquire in the common schools of Vermilion County, Ill. In March, 1842, he married Elizabeth Elliott, a sister of the County Clerk, in whose office he was employed. During his residence in Bowling Green, extending over a period of two years, he devoted his leisure moments to the study of law, and returned to Greencastle as lawyer and located in Springfield in 1866, was elected Justice of the Peace, and served for several years, both at a regular and special court. In 1868 he married Miss Florence L. Williamson, and moved to Springfield, where he entered the mercantile business in partnership with his father, and continued the same until the latter's death, when he took his place in the store, the firm being known as Ricketts & Co. He was a member of the old Democratic organization, became a member of the Republican party, and has always been a faithful supporter of its principles and candidates. For many years he was the head of the firm of Ricketts & Co., and is still living in Springfield.

He has been a member of the Board of Education of the city of Springfield, and has held various other business and political offices, but has never held a public office. He is a member of the First Baptist Church of Springfield, and has been a prominent and influential member of that body.

He is a man of fine physique, of strong, vigorous health, with a strong, active, forceful mind, of good qualities, of good judgment, of strong, decided character, with clear, logical mind, of keen business judgment, and an extensive knowledge of facts, have fitted him for the difficulties and duties of his business, and have enabled him to make a large and important fortune. He is a man of broad, liberal views, with a strong, decided character, who is active in the good work of the city and county, and is a citizen of prominence and influence. He is a man of high moral character, who is respected and esteemed by all who know him, and is held in high esteem by all who know him, and is held in high esteem by all who know him, and is held in high esteem by all who know him.
a partnership with Hon. Addison Daggy, which continued for thirty years.

Delano E. Williamson was a Democrat of the old school up to 1860, then espoused the cause of the union with zeal and eloquence, and in January, 1862, attended the Union Convention of Indiana. In 1864, 1866 and 1868 he was elected Attorney General, having been recognized as an able incumbent of the office. He was married, January 3, 1861, to Miss Carrie Badger. He was a devout member of the Christian Church and fraternally was a member of the Masonic Order. At a meeting of the Clay County Bar Association held May 4, 1906, appropriate resolutions were passed upon the death of Mr. Williamson, of which we quote a part, as follows:

"Resolved, That we again feel it our duty to express in the weakness of words our deepest sorrow and lamentations and highest regards for the worthy memory, pure and unsullied reputation, in the fullness of years and honors, of an able and distinguished member of this bar, 'fallen asleep.' An inscrutable Providence in an inmutable order of time, has again received from our midst one of the oldest, ablest, most faithful, honorable and honored in and of the Bar of the State of Indiana, in the person of Delano W. Williamson...."

Albert L. Ricketts lived at home with his father until nineteen years of age, and received his education in Greencastle, Ind. His mother came to Sangamon County September 13, 1862. Upon leaving school Mr. Ricketts spent two years as book-keeper for the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railroad Company, and in 1889 went to Oklahoma, where he took up a homestead and lived five years, locating in Springfield in 1895, and has since been a resident of this city. He embarked in hotel business July 1, 1902, and continued seven years in conducting this establishment in Springfield, which was known as the Jefferson Hotel. He has since lived retired from active life. He is a staunch Democrat and served in 1905-06 as Alderman of the Seventh Ward of Springfield. Mr. Ricketts is well-known in the city and is held in universal respect. He is actively interested in the welfare and progress of the community and is looked upon as a useful citizen. Fraternally he is connected with the Fraternal Order of Eagles, No. 437. He is a member of the Christian Church.

Mr. Ricketts was married, January 25, 1900, in Chicago, Ill., to Elizabeth Gaflgan, daughter of Michael and Margaret (Proctor) Gaflgan, whose biographical record appears on another page in this volume. She was born January 14, 1877. They have no children of their own, but have an adopted daughter, Mary E. R. Ricketts, who was born June 19, 1904, in Helena, Mont. The family reside at 205 Elliott Avenue, which home Mr. Ricketts owns.

RIDGELEY, Charles (deceased), former capitalist, manufacturer and widely-known citizen of Springfield, Ill., was born in that city January 17, 1836, the oldest son of Nicholas Henry Ridgely and his second wife, Jane Maria (Huntington) Ridgely, and died in his native city August 11, 1910. Both parents were members of families well known in State and colonial history, Nicholas H. Ridgely being the youngest of a family of thirteen children of Greenbury Ridgely, a planter of Anne Arundel County, Md., who traced his ancestry to Col. Henry Ridgely, of Anne Arundel County, the latter having held a number of colonial offices, including member of the Maryland Assembly in 1692, of the Governor's Council and Colonel of Militia, Greenbury Ridgely was a man of strong religious temperament, who freed all his slaves and devoted himself to the ministry, while three of his sons became prominent as bankers—Noah and Lot in Baltimore, and Nicholas, the father of the subject of this sketch, in Springfield, Ill. In 1829 Nicholas Ridgely came to St. Louis, Mo., to assume a clerkship in a branch of the United States Bank established there, but in 1835 became Cashier of the State Bank of Illinois at Springfield, where a year later his son Charles was born. The State Bank of Illinois, having gone out of existence, was succeeded in 1852 by Clark's Exchange Bank at Springfield with Nicholas H. Ridgely as President, which in turn gave place in 1859 to the banking firm of N. N. Ridgely & Company. In 1866 the latter became the Ridgely National Bank, which has had continuous existence to the present time. As a consequence no name has been so long identified with the banking history of Springfield as that of the Ridgely family, covering almost the entire period of the city's existence.

After receiving his primary education in the home schools, Charles Ridgely spent some two years as a student in Illinois College at Jacksonville, of which he was a devoted friend and which, in his later years, he served for a time as Trustee. In 1852, at the age of seventeen years, he began his business career as clerk in his father's private banking establishment, being successively promoted to Cashier- and Vice President, also in 1859, at the age of twenty-four years, being admitted to partnership in the Ridgely Banking Company. Other business interests with which he was prominently identified included the Springfield Iron Company, which was organized in 1871 and which did a large manufacturing business for a number of years. Mr. Ridgely retaining the position of President during its whole career. This concern merged with the Republic Iron and Steel Company in 1901. Although it had to meet the competition of large concerns in Pittsburgh, Chicago and elsewhere, it did a large business for a number of years, employing at one time over 1,500 men. It was managed with sound judgment under Mr. Ridgely's administration and, as the first extensive manufacturing enterprise in Springfield, did much to promote the development of the city and attract attention to its advantages as a manufacturing

RIDGEWAY, Norman.—Cooper Township is noted for its well-cultivated farms and the thrifty agriculturists who understand their work and how to get the most from their land. One of the farmers whose prosperity has been gained through hard work, is Norman Ridge\-\way, of Section 15, Cooper Township. He was born in Sangamon County, December 18, 1846, a son of Patterson and Nancy (Hudson) Ridge\-\way, natives of Kentucky and Virginia. The father came to Sangamon County with his parents in 1829, locating at Buffalo Hart Grove, where he lived ten years, and then removed to Cooper Township. He later went to the vicinity of Loami, where he died in 1893, his wife having died in 1851. There were fifteen children in the family, all of whom lived to maturity but are now deceased.

Norman Ridgeway worked for his father until he enlisted in the army, and upon his return engaged with an engineering firm, continuing in its employ for nine years, when he resumed farming, and has thus continued ever since. He owns ten acres where he resides and forty acres in Kansas, and is in receipt of a pension from the government. His people have owned a considerable amount of land in Sangamon County since his grandfather made his first entry from the Government and began farming on a large tract in Buffalo Hart Township.

On January 22, 1865, Mr. Ridgeway enlisted in an Illinois regiment, and was discharged on April 12th of the same year, having been stationed at Camp Butler.

On August 15, 1898, Mr. Ridgeway was married to Alice Dillon, daughter of Ebenezer and Lucretia Dillon. She was born March 22, 1873, in Sangamon County, where her father was also born, but her mother was born in Indiana. Her paternal grandparents came from Kentucky to Illinois at a very early date, and all are now deceased. Mr. Ridgeway has had seven children: Ida May, wife of J. J. James; David L., Lula Hester, Norman E., Joseph W., George R., and Pearl. He has three grandchildren: Merton James, Leona James and Carl Dewey James.

A strong Republican, Mr. Ridgeway has served as School Director in Cooper Township. He belongs to the United Brethren Church. An excellent farmer, a good neighbor and conscientious citizen, he has discharged the duties of his office with honesty and well, and is rightly regarded as one of the representative men of his neighborhood.

RIEFLER, Charles J.—Among the men who have been identified with the progress and welfare of Sangamon County, Ill., for nearly half a century, is Charles J. Riefler, who has lived at Springfield uninterruptedly since his birth. He is well known locally for his keen interest in home affairs and to the people of Illinois through his past association with the labor movement. Mr. Riefler was born at Springfield, September 13, 1862, son of Michael and Eliza-the (Lutz) Riefler, the former born in Eden, N. Y., in 1839, and the latter born in Germany in 1842. The father located in Springfield in 1860 and died there in 1888. The mother came to America with her parents in childhood and now resides in Springfield, her home for over fifty years. They were parents of eight children.

The early education of Charles J. Riefler was received in the public schools of Springfield, and later he secured a business education in the same city. After leaving school he spent two years on a farm. At the age of sixteen years he entered a printing office and followed the trade of printer until 1896, entering into the field of journalism in 1900, as publisher of "The Court of Honor," a publication in which he had been a member of the City Council of Springfield, and although never going into politics with a view to securing public office, has fulfilled his duty to his fellow citizens when called upon to serve them. He is now Secretary of the Lincoln Library, having been a member of its Board of Directors for seven years. He is an enthusiastic supporter of every cause which he believes to be for the general good and is always ready to investigate any public movement.

Mr. Riefler is a member of the Springfield Business Men's Association and Chamber of Commerce, Springfield Mercantile Club, the Court of Honor, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Independent Order of Red Men, Modern Woodmen of America, Tribe of Ben Hur and Typographical Union. In all these societies he is a useful member and an active worker in their good cause. In political views he is a Democrat. He is looked upon with the highest esteem by all who have been associated with him in a social or business way, and has the universal respect of the people of his native city.

Mr. Riefler was married in Springfield, in 1866, to Barbara Kessler, born in Springfield in 1865, daughter of Adam and Mary Kessler. Her family settled in Sangamon County in the early 'fifties. Two sons have blessed the union of Mr. Riefler and his wife, namely: Carl J., born September 5, 1887, and Harold J., born September 6, 1901.

RIEGER, George.—There is no question that the Germans give their young a better practical training than we do. It is a well recognized fact that the workers and professional men of German training rank ahead of many efficient men, therefore, when a German comes to this country to engage in business he is warmly welcomed by the community fortunate enough to secure him as a citizen. An honored resident of Springfield, is George Rieger, now retired and residing at No. 227 West Madison Street. He was born in Germany, December 6, 1858, son of Joseph and Mary (Grimm) Rieger, natives of Germany. Neither of the parents came to America, but spent their last days in their native land. The father served in the wars against the great Napoleon, seeing service in Russia.

George Rieger worked on his father's farm and learned the millwright trade. Like all loyal Germans, he served his military term in the regular army, but after receiving his discharge decided to try his fortune in the New World, so came to America, in June, 1866, with Springfield as his objective point. Arriving there, he found employment at his trade, and continued to work at it until his retirement.

Mr. Rieger was married in his native land, May 15, 1869, to Margaret Phillips, born in Germany. Her parents never left their native land. Mr. and Mrs. Rieger have had two children: Frank M. of Davenport, Iowa, an insurance agent, and Mary, wife of Peter Litrell, who is with the Striffler Ice Company, of Springfield.

Mr. Rieger was brought up a Catholic and belongs to SS. Peter and Paul Church. He is a member of St. Paul's Council, No. 57, Catholic Union. His political affiliations are with the Democratic party, but he has never tried to secure office. A quiet, unassuming man, he has always done what he believed to be his full duty, and has made friends who appreciate his many excellent qualities.

RIGGINS, William Mitchell.—Both the maternal and paternal ancestors of William Mitchell Riggins fought in the Revolution, the War of 1812, the Mexican War and the Civil War, thus having been identified with the history of their country during its four greatest struggles. They have always been patriotic, law-abiding citizens, and active in promoting the welfare and progress in any community where they have lived. William M. Riggins was born in Burlington, Iowa, October 15, 1848, son of Green Washington and Mary Maria (Stafford) Riggins. The father was born in Raleigh County, N. C., son of James Riggins, who came to North Carolina from Virginia. The Riggins family came originally from England and Green W. Riggins was of Scotch and English descent. He was engaged in business at Burlington, Iowa, moved from there to Wapella, thence to Beardstown, Ill., and in 1848 located in Hancock County, Ill., where he again engaged in business. In 1852 he went to California, and afterward returned for his family and located in Colusa County, Calif., where he died. in 1855. His wife died in California, in 1907. They had seven children, of whom three survive. William M. was the third child, having two sisters older. His mother was born in Raleigh County, N. C., daughter of Noah and Mary (Jackson) Stafford, her father being a native of Tennessee, whose ancestors were from Staffordshire, England. Mrs. Stafford was a relative of "Old Hickory" Jackson.

William M. Riggins received his early education in Hancock County, Ill., where he attended subscription schools until he was eleven years of age, then accompanied the family to California and attended excellent public schools there. He worked in the store with his father after leaving school, and upon the death of the latter worked on a farm for a time, where he learned the trade of carpenter. He worked two years in the wholesale and retail store of A. Walker, in Marysville, Cal., then went on a prospecting trip and was fairly successful. He worked some time at the trade of carpenter, then learned the wagon-making trade, and worked for four years constructing wagon parts in a quartz mine, after which he worked fifteen years in the quartz mills and became a millwright.

Mr. Riggins was married, in Sierra Valley, Cal., October 30, 1851, to Miss Louise Adeline Piante, daughter of Paschal and Caroline (Forsant) Piante, both natives of St. Louis County, Mo. Mr. Piante was a farmer and became a mechanical engineer. He acted as engineer of the boat "Gazelle," when it took part in the historic boat race with the "Natchez," which has been much written of in song and prose, and is thus known the world over. By the orders of his superior officer Mr. Piante was crowding the engine of the boat beyond its capacity and her boilers exploded. His wife and child (Mrs. Riggins), the latter about one year old, were aboard the vessel, as it was an excursion day. Mrs. Piante saw the impending danger, caught up her child and jumped into the water, swimming to safety. Mr. Piante, however, remained at his post and was scalced to death. This tragic episode occurred in 1857, and many lives were lost. Mr. Riggins and his wife became parents of four children, of whom but one survives, Alva Leslie.

After his marriage Mr. Riggins worked two years at his trade as carpenter, after which he spent two years in mining. Then coming to Illinois he located at Bath, Mason County, there followed his trade for a time but later moved to Champaignville, where he lived two years, then moved to Jacksonville, where he lived until October, 1890, the date of his locating in Springfield. He has worked at his trade of carpenter since coming to Springfield and is skilled in this line. He is respected and liked by his associates and popular with his many friends. He is a devout member of the Methodist Church and in politics is a Democrat.

RINDT, Rudolph, proprietor of a barber shop in Springfield, is a veteran of the Civil War and well known in the city. He has also conducted classes in music and dancing for forty years. He has been successful in many ventures. Mr. Rindt was born in Germany, July 13, 1839, son of Jacob and Philippina Rindt, both natives of Bavaria. The father was a soldier in the Franco-Prussian War and became an Overseer of the King's Highway. He was a prominent man of Vogelsbach, and became Mayor of the city. His father was a Lutheran preacher in Germany and lived to the age of ninety-five years, and his mother lived to the age of ninety-four years. Jacob Rindt came with his family to America, locating in St. Louis, in 1852, and there spent the rest of his life.

The boyhood of Rudolph Rindt was spent in St. Louis and there he received his education in the public schools. After leaving school he learned the trade of barber, which he has since followed, except during the time he served in the Civil War. In 1867 he came to Springfield, where he has lived ever since. He and his son conduct a barber shop in Springfield and have built up a good custom. Both are skilful at their trade and the father is possessed of many social qualities. He has made a special study of dancing and is gifted as a musician.

Mr. Rindt enlisted, in June, 1861, at St. Louis, in Company D, Fifth Missouri Cavalry, and served until October, 1864, when he was mustered out at St. Louis, having served over three years. He participated in the Battles of Pea Ridge, Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Helena, and many skirmishes. For two years he fought bushwhackers, guerrillas and the like, among them the James boys and the Younger boys, who were living in the hills of Missouri. At the Battle of Pea Ridge, Mr. Rindt was shot in the leg but was never sent to a hospital. He is now a prominent member of the G. A. R. and stands well with his comrades. Mr. Rindt is popular in many circles and is a man of geuinal nature and friendly disposition. He belongs to the Maccabees, the Modern Woodmen, Barbers' Union No. 96, of Springfield, and to the Dancing Teachers' Union. He is a devout member of the Lutheran Church and interested in many charitable and benevolent movements. In politics he is a Democrat.

The marriage of Mr. Rindt took place at St. Louis, Mo., October 29, 1853, when he was united with Miss Caroline Rogers, who was born in St. Louis, Mo., October 28, 1843. Children as follows blessed the union of Mr. Rindt and his wife: Edward F., born July 12, 1870; Daisy, August 12, 1880; Annie, July 25, 1888; Lottie, September 24, 1872. All were born in Springfield and the family reside at 202½ West Cook Street.

RITTER, Nicholas.—The building interests of a city like Springfield are always in an active condition, giving employment to those in any way connected with this branch of industrial activity, and among those who have won a well-deserved reputation for excellent work and careful attention to the terms of contracts, Nicholas Ritter takes a leading position. Mr. Ritter was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, April 27, 1834, a son of John Ritter, born in Germany, January 9, 1808, and his wife, Anna C. (Smith) Ritter, born in Germany, November 27, 1807. The father was a carpenter and brought his family to America in 1846, landing in New Orleans, whence they moved to St. Louis, in 1854. At this time Nicholas Ritter went to the southern part of Missouri, and while he was working there, for about one year, the family came on and lived in Springfield. The father found plenty of work at his trade in the capital city, and was kept busy until his death. He and his wife are buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery. They had one son and two daughters, both of whom survived them when he died May 20, 1855, and his wife some time later.

Nicholas Ritter attended the German schools and for a short time went to school after coming to America. When the family reached St. Louis, he secured employment in a bindery at one dollar a week, out of which he had to board himself. The family were very poor during this time, living for a year in an old log cabin. When he went into southern Illinois, Mr. Ritter worked on a farm and at his trade. In 1855 he joined the family in Springfield, and by 1857 was able to purchase his present home at No. 1143 North Third Street. At that time the land was in the woods, but during the fifty-three years he has lived there he has witnessed many changes, and is now in the midst of a thriving community. During all these years Mr. Ritter has worked on some of the finest residences in the city, also on public buildings, and has always given complete satisfaction, for he was carefully trained in the beginning and takes great pride in his work. Some years ago Mr. Ritter was elected to the Board of Streets on the Republican ticket, and was the only Republican then elected, his personal popularity causing him to run far ahead of his ticket. At one time he was a member of the Springfield Guards. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and is a strong Mason. The Presbyterian Church holds his membership.

Mr. Ritter was married March 27, 1861, in Cape Girardeau County, Mo., to Sophia E. Hagedorn, born in Germany, January 9, 1834, died July 23, 1908. Her parents came to America at an early day, settling on a farm in Cape Girardeau County. The mother died in Cairo, Ill., in 1853, while on her way to Sangamon County, of cholera, which was epidemic in that year. The father came on to Springfield, where he lived with Mr. Ritter until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Ritter had eight children, six of whom now survive: Edward F., who resides north of Springfield on a farm; William F., George H., and Charles G., all carpenters residing in Springfield; Henry L., resides in the Northwest; and Anna, wife of Frank M. Thompson, a carpenter of Springfield. Bernard N. and August are deceased. There are six grandchildren and one great-grandchild in the family. In addition to his home, Mr. Ritter owns other valuable city realty and is in comfortable circumstances. He is an honest, reliable, hard-working man, whose success has been won by steady effort and the practice of careful economy. The death of his wife was a heavy blow to him, for the two were devoted to each other, and she had been an excellent wife and mother.

ROACH, John N.—One of the best known and most highly respected men of Pawnee, Ill., is John N. Roach, who has reason to be proud of his war record, his business record and his position in the Social and public life of his community. He was born in Wilson County, Tenn., July 20, 1843, son of John M. and Elinora (Robbins) Roach, both also natives of Wilson County, where they were married. The father taught school in various places and finally became President of a college at McMinnsville, Tenn., where he died in 1852, his wife having died in August, 1844, the next month after the birth of her son John N. The father of John N. Roach Sr. was a farmer and gunsmith, and a native of Virginia. He moved to Wilson County as a young man, and about 1848 removed to Macon County, Ill., thence to Warren County, from there to Knox County, and finally to Logan County, where his death occurred, in November, 1888. He had been a Captain of Militia in Tennessee and served under Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812. The father of Elinora Robbins was a native of Tennessee, where his entire life was spent.

By his first marriage John H. Roach, Sr., had two children, John N. Jr. and Herschel L., and the latter entered the Confederate army and was never afterwards heard from, it being supposed that he lost his life in Texas. The father was married (second) to Miss Newsome, of Wilson County, Tenn., and they had three children: James, Louisa and Elizabeth, all deceased.

John N. Roach Jr. was educated in the public schools of Atlanta, Ill., and lived with his grandfather until nineteen years of age, then enlisted in Company A, One Hundred Seventeenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, August 5, 1862, at McLean, Ill., under Captain S. B. Kinsey, serving to the close of the war. He was mustered out and received his final discharge and pay at Camp Butler, August 5, 1865, exactly three years from the date of his enlistment. He participated in the Battle of Collinsville, Tenn.; Queen Hill, Old Town and Meridian, Miss.; Pleasant Hill, and Marks ville, La., in the Red River Expedition, participating in the capture of Fort de Russey, also in the battles of Yellow Bayou, Tupelo, Franklin, Nashville, and Fort Blakely, besides numerous other skirmishes and smaller engagements. On December 18, when the army was marching near Nashville, they passed through the cemetery where his mother was buried and he secured permission to visit her grave.

In the Battle of Nashville, December 15, 1864, Mr. Roach was on the skirmish line and was lying with his companions in the weeds near the Confederate lines, when he was ordered to take six men and flank a small party of the enemy. Two Confederate soldiers were on the other side of the log and when he raised his empty gun and ordered them to surrender they threw up their hands to this single man. They laughed and said, "Yank, did you know our guns were not loaded?" He laughed and said, "No, but I knew mine was not," thus turning the joke toward them. He made them prisoners and marched them before the proper officer in his own regiment.

At the close of the war Mr. Roach returned to Atlanta, later moved to Hopedale, Ill., and in 1865 settled in Williamsville, Sangamon County, lived there six years and in 1868 came to Pawnee, which has since been his home. He served on the Board of Supervisors two terms in Tazewell County. He is a member of the Masonic order and of A. J. Weber Post No. 421, of Pawnee. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and his wife belongs to the Presbyterian Church. He is a Republican and in National affairs keeps his party principals strongly in mind, though in local affairs he votes for the man rather than the party.

Mr. Roach was married, at Tremont, Tazewell County, October 6, 1876, to Emma Waldon, a native of that county, born in 1852, daughter of John Waldon, a native of Virginia, who came to Illinois as a young man and settled first in Logan County, but later moved to Tazewell County. Mr. Waldon died on his farm in November, 1875. His wife, Mrs. Lorena Waldon, was a native of Logan County, where she married Mr. Waldon, and died in Tremont, in 1865. They had seven children: Abraham, Joseph, Henry, James, Emma, Angelina and Louisa. There are two sons and one daughter now living, namely: Henry and James, of Tazewell County, and Mrs. Roach. Abraham served in the Mexican War, enlisting at Pekin, took part in the Battle of Cerro Gordo where he and three companions captured the carriage of Santa Ana, from which the old Mexican had just made his escape in the dark of early dawn on the out-rider's mule, when nearly overtaken, and within found his wooden leg, which is now a trophy of war in Memorial Hall in the Capitol Building at Springfield. The large sum of gold money found under the seat of his ambulance-bed, was turned over to the United States Government, and his two little books—the story of Telemec, printed in Spanish and French (on alternate pages), was presented to the commanding officer, Major S. D. Marshall—General Shields having previously been laid low with a supposedly mortal wound. One of those intrepid young Illinois' soldier boys was Elmer Elwood Ellsworth, now of San Raphael, California. John Waldon, the father of Abraham Waldon and Mrs. Roach, was a soldier in the Black Hawk War.

Mr. Roach and his wife have four children: Edith M., born in Tazewell County, October 6, 1875, is unmarried and lives at home; Bessie B., born May 13, 1878, unmarried and living at home; Ruby G., born January 24, 1881, also unmarried and living with her parents; John Neal Logan, born June 24, 1884, is a railroad clerk and lives at home.

Mr. Roach is one of the most popular men of Pawnee and takes great interest and pride in his village. He is proud of his family, who have always been identified with the best interests of any place they have called home, and have served in many of the wars. He is now retired from active business life and is Police Magistrate, which office he has held the past sixteen years. He has a large number of friends and enjoys the confidence of all who know him.

ROBERTS, William P.—In these days of high land values, a man is wealthy who owns plenty of Sangamon County rich acreage, and when it has been accumulated through his own individual effort, he can well afford to retire and live free from the cares of business during his declining years. Illiopolis is the home of a number of retired farmers of this class, among whom is William P. Roberts. He was born in Schuyler County, Ill., January 23, 1831, a son of Normau and Temperance (Lockhart) Roberts, born in South Carolina, October 19, 1800, and Washington County, Ky., November 17, 1796, respectively. The grandfather, Joseph Roberts was born in Virginia, but after several changes, died in Gibson County, Ind., being accidentally killed by a gun shot.

Norman Roberts went in boyhood from South Carolina to Georgia, thence to Kentucky and from there to Indiana. He traded to some extent on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, going as far as New Orleans, but eventually went to Schuyler County in 1830, and from there to Warren County, Ind., in 1831. In 1852, he came to Sangamon County to engage in farming. Finally he went to Macon County, Ill., where he died, near Niantic, in 1890. He was twice married, the first ceremony occurring June 13, 1821, and his first wife, Temperance Lockhart, bore him seven children of whom William P. Roberts was one. His second wife, whom he married September 18, 1840, was Mrs. Orpha (Whittinghill) Lockhart. To this union four children were born. Her husband, James Lockhart, was a brother of the first Mrs. Roberts. The second Mrs. Roberts died February 6, 1870, aged sixty-three years, seven months and twenty-nine days.

William P. Roberts went to the typical log school of his period, sitting on slab benches, and laboring under the usual number of disadvan-
HISTORY OF SANGAMON COUNTY

In 1872, location was made at Pleasant Plains. In 1877, another change was made, and a year was spent in Berlin. Following this Mr. Robertson went west and spent two years on the plains, but returned to Berlin in 1890, and this locality has since been his home.

The grandfather of Mr. Robertson was Martin Robertson, who graduated from the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, in his eighteenth year. The family had been associated with that institution of learning from its foundation, and belonged to one of the important clans which played so aggressive a part in Scottish history, it being the same that claimed the daughty McDonalds and Campbells, and they were also closely related to the Beckwiths. Martin Robertson, doubtless for religious reasons, emigrated in 1736 to the land of promise beyond the seas, where he found a home in Virginia. There he married Mary Morton, daughter of a wealthy Virginia planter. Their son, W. R. Robertson, father of M. B. Robertson, was born there in 1800, coming with his parents to Kentucky in 1815. He was graduated from the Transylvania Medical School of Kentucky in 1821, becoming one of the successful physicians of his day. He was also a large planter and slave holder. In 1855, he moved to Missouri, but at the outbreak of the Civil War, he returned to Kentucky, and from that State entered the Union service as a surgeon. Owing to the war, he lost heavily, and in 1871, moved to Illinois, where his death occurred at Pleasant Plains, March 23, 1876. He was a Whig and Republican in politics. The family faith was that of the Presbyterian Church. Of his three wives, the last was the mother of M. B. Robertson. She was Ann Davis Browning, a relative of Jefferson Davis, born in Harrison County, Ky., in 1819, coming of very good stock. One brother, Orville H. Browning of Quincy, Ill., was a United States Senator, and a member of President Johnson's cabinet, as well as an able lawyer. Another brother, Milton Browning of Burlington, Ia., was a prominent man of his period. Mrs. Browning's mother bore the maiden name of Sally Brown, and was an aunt of Captain James N. Brown of Inland Grove. The Brown family were prominent in legal circles and public life in both Kentucky and Illinois. This most estimable lady died at Quincy, at the home of her brother, O. II. Browning, February 3, 1872.

M. B. Robertson taught school for four terms after his return from the west, and then entering a mercantile line in Berlin, in 1851, was engaged in agricultural pursuits. On June 17, 1855, Mr. Robertson was married to Lou Scott of Berlin, Ill., born there in 1856, daughter of John W. and Martha (Yates) Scott, and granddaughter of Andrew Scott who came from North Carolina to Sangamon County in the early twenties and located in Island Grove in 1824. The Scott family is of Scotch descent. Mrs. Scott was a sister of War Governor Richard Yates, and daughter of Henry Yates, who settled in Berlin in 1831, the family coming originally from Virginia, but later from Kentucky. Nearly all the ancestors on both sides of the Robertson and Scott families were Revolutionary soldiers. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Robertson: William Scott died in infancy; Colin Morton, born November 13, 1888; Harry Yates, born August 7, 1800; Pathe, born October 30, 1802; Thomas Browning, born August 4, 1805; William Beckwith, born July 6, 1897, and Donald Alexander, born April 2, 1901.

Mr. Robertson was reared in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, but united with the Christian Church at Berlin in 1888. In politics he is a Democrat, and his party has honored him by electing him to the following offices: Supervisor, Collector, Town Clerk, member of the Village Board, School Director and Justice of the Peace. He has held that office for ten years, and still occupies it. He is a man of solid characteristics, and high standing, proud of his family and devoted to his wife and children. As a public official, his actions have been governed by justice and sound judgment, and no one is considered as better representative of the best interests of this part of the county, than he.

ROBINSON, James C. (Vol. I, p. 454.)

ROBINSON, John Wesley, M. D., who has built up an excellent practice in the vicinity of New Berlin, Ill., is a self-made man and well deserves the success which has attended his efforts. He is a member of the board of physicians and surgeons who do their best for their patients in a careful, painstaking, way, and always bear in mind the highest principles in their profession. Dr. Robinson was born on a farm in LaSalle County, Ill., August 26, 1871, of Scotch and English descent. His father, Alexander Robinson, married a Miss Day, who died when her son John W. was a child. After his mother's death the boy was taken by his grandfather, James Robinson, to rear, and received his early education in the schools of the locality. He was reared on a farm and lived with his grandparents until he was twenty-two years of age, then rented land and began life on his own account, as a farmer.

After carrying on farming for himself for three years, John W. Robinson decided to begin the study of his chosen profession, and held a sale of his farm implements and horses. In 1895, he entered Illinois Medical College, at Chicago, where he took a four-year course, being graduated in 1900, after which he was appointed intern at St. Elizabeth hospital. He remained in this post eighteen months, gaining valuable experience and rendering excellent service. He then entered the office of one of his preceptors, Dr. McGee, near his old home at Tonica. He had studied with Dr. McGee during his vacations and had received advice from him on difficult problems, at different times. This arrangement lasted until 1903, then the younger doctor began practice by himself, at Berlin, Sangamon County, where he at once met with success, and in November, 1905, he moved to New Berlin, where he has established himself in the confidence and esteem of the community and has an excellent practice.

Dr. Robinson has one of the best equipped offices in the county, and the latest appliances for the practice of both medicine and surgery, as well as a fine laboratory. He keeps abreast of the latest literature of his profession and the times in everything. He compounds most of his own medicines and in this way greatly adds to his success. He is sympathetic and courteous in manner and speech and in all things shows promise of a bright future in his career. He belongs to various medical societies. He is one of the medical examiners for the M. W. A. of New Berlin and also belongs to the I. O. O. F. Every public enterprise finds in him a ready sympathizer and he is much interested in the progress and development of his community. He has for several years been a member of the Presbyterian Church. Readily making and retaining friends, he is well known in his part of the county as an upright, useful citizen. Dr. Robinson has performed several surgical operations during the time he has practiced in Sangamon County, and for this purpose takes his patients to the hospital at Springfield.

ROBINSON, Joseph A.—Lancaster County, Pa., has given Illinois some of its most substantial citizens, and Sangamon County has always been proud to welcome them to her confines. One of the representative families from that locality which has become well known here is that of Robinson, and a prominent member of it is Joseph A. Robinson, of Riverton. He was born in Lancaster, Pa., September 26, 1844, a son of Daniel and Narcissa (Colson) Robinson. The father was a blacksmith and farmer, whose operations extended over Perry and Cameron Counties in Pennsylvania. He was also a local preacher of the Methodist faith and traveled about considerably, dying at last in York, Pa. His wife died when Joseph A. Robinson was but a child, and there were three sons and three daughters in the family in addition to him. Susan, the eldest, married A. J. Gordon, now deceased, and she lives in Lancaster, Ohio; Rebecca married James Howett, of Riverton, now deceased, and she resides in that town; Jesse W., of Marysville, Pa.; Martha J., wife of Robert Boyd, of York, Pa.; William J., of Lancaster, Ohio, and Joseph A.

Joseph A. Robinson was educated in Pennsylvania, working with his father during his boyhood. Later he went into business for himself. When the war broke out he enlisted from Berks County, in Company A, Third Pennsylvania Artillery for three years. In a few months he was transferred to Company A, One Hundred and Eighty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers Infantry, being made Sergeant under command of Colonel Bowen. A little later he was made First Lieutenant of the One Hundred and Eighteenth Regiment of colored troops. After a service of twenty-two months he resigned, on October 1, 1865. During his period of service he participated in the engagements at Dewey's Bluff, Cold Harbor and Fort Harrison, and was wounded September 29, 1864. He was also in the Siege of Petersburg. After the close of the War he re-entered as a soldier, Mr. Robinson returned to Cumberland County, remaining there in Perry County until 1871, when he was attracted towards Illinois, and settled in Schuyler County, but a short time later moved to Sangamon County. For some time Mr. Robinson was engineer in a mill and distillery, and was fireman and engineer on the Northern Central Railroad. Upon locating in Riverton Mr. Robinson became engineer at Howitt's distillery, but later became engineer for the old paper mill, then for the new mill. Following this he acted as engineer for the old shaft. For several years he was engineer for the electric plant, which he built. Still later he returned to the old shaft, which he has since discharged the duties of engineer. He has been prominent in public affairs, being elected President of the Town Board on the Republican ticket, also Assessor, member of the School Board and Alderman, and has faithfully discharged the duties of all the offices he held. He is a member of St. James Episcopal Church, Riverton, Ill. G. A. R., and was Past Commander of Camp Butler Post, which was disbanded. He is a member of Riverton Lodge, No. 786, A. F. & A. M., and its Chaplain; belongs to Clear Lake Lodge, No. 445, I. O. O. F., and is its Treasurer, having belonged to that order for forty-two years. He is very prominent in fraternal matters. The Methodist Church holds his membership and he is one of its Trustees. Mrs. Robinson belongs to the Eastern Star.

In August, 1863, Mr. Robinson was married at Harrisburg, Pa., to Sarah Geisinger, born in Cumberland County, Pa., July 22, 1846, a daughter of Daniel Geisinger, a native of Pennsylvania. They have six children. He was a soldier, Mr. and Mrs. Geisinger had two sons and three daughters, Mrs. Robinson and her brother Joseph, of Marysville, Pa., being the only survivors. The latter served during the Civil War in the Seventh United States Cavalry, for nine months and later for three years. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson became the parents of ten children, six of whom survive: Alice, wife of John Maddox, of Springfield; Rebecca, wife of Vincent Saville, of Riverton, where he is electrician for the town; Joseph, a miner of Riverton; Tennie, wife of Adam Rhode of Riverton; Thomas, at home; Susan, a teacher in the Riverton schools. There are twenty grandchildren and one great-grandchild in the family. Mr. Robinson owns his home and other property in Riverton, and has the utmost confidence in the locality, believing that all realty will show a steady and healthy advance, so that in his opinion it is the best kind of investment.

ROBINSON, William S.—Many of the older residents of Springfield remember well the great Abraham Lincoln, and love to recall him as he was to his fellow-townsmen. One of these men is William T. Robinson, a native of the county, who was born far enough back to remember distinctly when Illinois was not merely names, but realities. He was born in Buffalo Hart Grove, August 2, 1833, a son of John W. and Luchinda Robinson, natives of Virginia and Winchester, Ky. The father came to Illinois at an early day, locating at Buffalo Hart Grove, where he resided until his death, being killed by lightning in 1840, at the home of his mother. A bolt struck the house, which was built of logs, and he was killed instantly, and his sister badly injured. The poor old mother, who at the time was on her deathbed, suffered the shock of seeing these two terrible accidents occur before her eyes. Mr. Robinson left a widow, who lived until about 1890, and two sons and two daughters, one of the latter being now residing in Waynesville, Ill., and is the other daughter. One son, John F., resides in Lincoln, Ill. Mr. Robinson comes from good old Virginia and Kentucky ancestry.

His father being a farmer, William T. Robinson was brought up to agricultural work, attending school in a little building that was also used for religious services. He worked on his father's farm until 1860, when he went to Atlanta, Ill., to conduct a grocery business, but seven years later returned to Springfield, where he has since lived. Upon his return he took a position with the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, working as truckman for a year, then becoming a clerk. For twenty-three years he held this position, when he was injured in the freight house. Upon his recovery the company made him flagman at one of their crossings, and he is now faithfully discharging the duties pertaining to that position. Mr. Robinson never served in the army, although he was offered his services, but failed to pass the examination. His brother John served in Company I, One Hundred and Fourteenth Illinois Infantry. While residing at Atlanta, Mr. Robinson served as Constable, and was also a School Director at Buffalo Hart Grove, being elected on the Republican ticket, as he had always held the principles of that party. His personal friendship for Mr. Lincoln led him to adopt these principles as his own, and he has never wavered. He is a member of the United Brethren Church and is faithful in his devotion to it.

Mr. Robinson was married in Springfield, December 4, 1856, at the old American House, which stood on the corner site of the present dry-goods store, to Julia A. Luneck, born near Courtsville, Ohio, August 24, 1837. Her parents moved from Courtsville to Iowa, residing there until their deaths. Her father was a carpenter and farmer. Six children came to Mr. and Mrs. Robinson, four daughters and two sons, two of whom survive : Ida L., wife of Benjamin Fagan, living on a farm west of Springfield; Clara E., living at home, employed by the Illinois Watch Company. There are four grandchildren in the family: Bessie, Ethel and Roy and Herbert, and one great-grandchild, Helen Binney. Mr. Robinson lives at No. 1251 North Fourth Street. He recollects many interesting events of the days when his father's house was the stopping place of the various lawyers who rode through on horseback on their way from Springfield to Potosi. Among them was Abraham Lincoln, who was attracted to-wards the intelligent young man, and the two became warm friends.

ROCCICCIOLI, Charles, who has been engaged in business in Springfield since 1839, has a fruit and confectionery store at 605 East Washington Street. He has established a large patronage, being considered an upright and honest dealer and highly respected. He was born at Lascana, Italy, January 8, 1800, son of Palo Rocciccioli, a farmer by occupation, who died there. He had almost no educational advantages as a boy, as his parents were not able to send him to school, and he began working on a farm at a tender age. He is largely self-educated, and through study at home and learning in the school of experience is able to carry on his business in an able manner and reap a good profit therefrom. At the age of sixteen years, he wearing the crude wooden shoes he had been accustomed to at home, Mr. Rocciccioli went to London, and there for two years sold statues from door to door. Then he made a short visit home, but returned to England and resumed his former occupation, making another visit home, and in 1841 embarked for America. He landed at New York and went thence to St. Louis, where for three years he sold statues, then came to Springfield. He embarked in business first at 707 East Washington Street and a few years later moved to 825 East Washington Street, where he remained twelve years, and in 1906 came to his present location.

Mr. Rocciccioli was married in Springfield to Zita Muggenti, who was born in Italy in 1872 and came to America with her parents when a child. Her father, DOMINIO MAGGENTTI, kept a store in Springfield some years, but finally returned to his native country, where his death occurred recently. Children were born to this couple as follows: Marie was born in Italy in 1890, while her mother was making a visit to her native country; Charles J., born in Springfield May 31, 1892; Millie, born in 1896, and Yolunda, born in 1903. The family are members of St. Agnes Roman Catholic Church and Mr. Rocciccioli is a Republican in politics. He has a comfortable home on West Washington Street and has many friends in the city.

ROCK, John Francis.—Some of the solid, reliable men of Springfield have lived in the city all their lives, and their interests are closely connected with its growth and prosperity. One of these representative citizens is John Francis Rock, of East Capitol Avenue. He was born in Springfield, July 15, 1850, a son of James and Mary (O'Connor) Rock, natives of Ireland. In 1835, they came to America, and after a residence in New York City that covered only a short period, they came to Springfield, which was then attracting attention as the proposed site of the State capital. Mr. Rock established himself in a grocery business on Jefferson, between Third and Fourth Streets, In which he continued for five years. He and his wife are deceased. They were worthy people, and consistent members of the Catholic Church.

John Francis Rock went to school in Springfield, attended the Lincoln School and St. Mary's institution, leaving to enter the employ of the rolling mills which were located in the suburb of Ridgely. There his faithful and efficient service extended over a period of twenty years, or until the mills were closed. He then connected himself with the large plow works of Springfield, where his efforts are equally appreciated.

Mr. Rock served as patrolman for two years, but otherwise has confined himself to labors as before mentioned. His pleasant home on East Capital Avenue is owned by him, and his wife's taste is reflected in its artistic furnishings. Mr. Rock is a Republican in political faith. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. On June 21, 1887, Mr. Rock was married in Springfield, Ill., to Catherine L. Madden, no issue. While Mr. Rock has never taken an active part in public affairs, he has always been in favor of good government, and has borne his part in securing it.

Mrs. Rock was born at Salisbury, Sangamon County, July 27, 1860, daughter of John and Marguerite (Fitzgerald) Madden, natives of County Clare, Ireland. The parents came from Ireland and settled in Sangamon County, where they became prosperous farmers. Mr. and Mrs. Rock are devout members of the Catholic Church.

RODEMS, Charles E., proprietor of a blacksmith shop at Cotton Hill Station, Ill., is a native of Sangamon County, having been born at New City, January 15, 1855, a son of Peter Rodems. His grandfather was a native of Germany, who spent his entire life in the Fatherland.

Peter Rodems was born in Germany and first came to the United States in 1850, but returned to his native land in 1860, only to come again to this country the year following. His occupation was that of a machinist, and after coming to America the second time he settled in Sangamon County, where he spent the remainder of his life working at his trade. His death occurring December 13, 1890, in Springfield. He was born October 30, 1829, and was married to Marie Lederbrand, who was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, September 18, 1848, and whose father came from Germany to Sangamon County, where he died. She died November 23, 1890, in Springfield. Both she and her husband were buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

Charles E. Rodems received his education in the public schools of his native city, and was always an active, healthy boy, delighting in all manner of out-door sports. At an early age he started working on a small Illinois farm for his father, and he so continued until he was sixteen years old, when, deciding that he could better use his abilities in another field, he started to learn the trade of blacksmith, and being bright and quick to learn, soon mastered this occupation and began to find ready employment in various shops in the vicinity of Springfield.

When he was eighteen years old he went to Bloomington, where he worked for six months in the shops, but returned to Springfield and continued working at his trade for three and one-half years. During the next year he was engaged at his trade in Chicago. After his return to Springfield secured a position with the Illinois Central Railroad Company as a blacksmith, and worked all along their line for ten months. Once more he returned to Springfield, and ten months later decided he was capable of conducting a business of his own, and accordingly invested his savings in the shop and equipment at Cotton Hill Station. He does a flourishing business and his excellent workmanship has given him a high reputation in his trade. He is a Republican in political views, is a member of the German Lutheran Church, and holds membership in the Illinois Life Insurance Company.

On November 18, 1908, Mr. Rodems was united in marriage with Annie Gritens, at Springfield, Ill. Mrs. Rodems was born at Deer Plain, Calhoun County, Ill., August 7, 1891, daughter of Henry and Ida Gritens, natives of St. Charles, Mo., and Calhoun County, Ill., respectively. To this union there has been born a son, Peter Henry, born at Cotton Hill, November 25, 1909.

Mr. Rodems is one of the energetic young business men of Ball Township, and is immensely popular with all who know him. In addition to his business he is the owner of the residences and lots at Nos., 1228 East Stuart Street and 2000 South Thirteenth Street, in Springfield.

RODERICK, John C. (deceased).—In looking back over the history of Springfield, the biographer is struck with the number of its representative men who figured prominently during earlier days, and who have passed away from this life. This city was the home of Lincoln, Douglas, Grant, Logan, and many others who have helped develop the State and make it second in importance in the nation. There are others who, although they did not rise so high in political and military life, bore as just as important a part in making history, for they were part of the great backbone of the State. One who belonged to the latter class was the late John C. Roderick, who was for many years a carpenter of Springfield, where his family still reside. He was born in Madeira, in April, 1842, and was an excellent example of the people of that country. His father was Joseph Roderick, and his mother was Jocintha (Roderick) Roderick, and both were natives of Madeira. Joseph Roderick was a carpenter and contractor before coming to America, but when he located in Springfield, in 1850, he became interested in the iron industry, and was connected with it for thirty-four years.
John C. Roderick was associated with his father in several enterprises in Springfield, even before enlisting, when twenty years old, in the Union Army, in 1861. He served faithfully and well, making a record as a soldier of which his family is justly proud. Mr. Roderick was a carpenter by trade, but also operated a grocery for some years, becoming successful in all his ventures. He was a Woodman, belonging to Springfield Lodge No. 114. A Republican, he took an active part in party life. The Presbyterian Church held his membership and he died in its faith.

Mr. Roderick was married in Springfield, December 24, 1869, to Mary Sylvester, a native of Madeira, born there in 1852, daughter of John A. and Frances C. (Depotas) Sylvester. Mr. and Mrs. Roderick had children as follows: Albert, born in March, 1871, is married and resides in St. Louis; Eva, born August 15, 1873, resides with her mother in Springfield; Joseph A., born in 1875, married and resides in St. Louis; Elmer V., born 1885, and Charles O., born March 26, 1888.

During his long and useful life Mr. Roderick made many friends, and when he was taken away, April 21, 1905, his loss was deeply felt and the bereaved family had the universal sympathy of a wide circle of those who knew and appreciated him. While he was prominent politically, he never sought public office, preferring to exert his influence as a private citizen. Faithful in his church observances, he tried to do his full duty to his God and in his beliefs, and no man stood higher in the estimation of his neighbors and business associates.

RODERICK, Joseph (deceased).—Although Portugal has not contributed as many of its sons to the United States as a number of other European countries, those who have come are excellent examples of sturdy, hard-working men, who become good citizens. One of the best representatives of this class was the late Joseph Roderick, of Springfield, probably born on the Island of Madeira about 1826. When only twenty years of age he came to the United States, landing in New York City, whence he came direct to Springfield, being one of the early natives of his country in this locality.

His first employment after coming was in the line of day laboring. Never neglecting a chance to improve his condition, Mr. Roderick worked hard and saved his money, and after marrying built a house at No. 930 North Ninth Street. Later he built two more north of his residence, which yielded him a good income. When he purchased land in the locality there was but one other house there, but he had confidence in future prospects, and lived to see his foresight- edness justified. His death occurred at his home in 1906, he dying a faithful member of the Fourth Presbyterian Church. In politics he was a Republican.

Mr. Roderick married Clara Mendonsa, also a native of the Island of Madeira, who died in 1894. She bore him the following children: Julia Aua, now Mrs. John DePrates, of North Eighth Street; John, of Springfield, and Lucy, now Mrs. Sidney Westcott, of Chicago. Vasconcellos is a carpenter of Springfield, and he and his family live in a pleasant home at No. 926 North Ninth Street. He was born in Jacksonville, where he was educated in the common schools, but came to Springfield in 1898, finding ready employment at his trade there ever since. In 1902 occurred the marriage of Mr. Vasconcellos and Miss Lucy Roderick, and they have one child, Roland Roderick, a bright little fellow, who can already speak in both English and Portuguese, and is a wonder at counting. The affection existing between members of this family is something that unites them very closely and makes them proud of the father who left behind him a name which stands for hard work and sterling integrity.

RODGERS, Alfred, a retired farmer living at Spaulding, Ill., belongs to an old and prominent family of Sangamon County, where he has spent his entire life. He was born in the county, May 22, 1845, son of Thomas and Mary K. (Lockert) Rodgers, the former born in Pennsylvania and the latter in Virginia. The father was a farmer by occupation and he and his wife came to Sangamon County among the pioneers. He died in 1851 and his widow survived until 1872. They were parents of three sons and three daughters, all of whom are deceased except Alfred.

The boyhood of Alfred Rodgers was spent on his father’s farm in Sangamon County. The school he attended, near his home, was furnished with slab seats. He worked with his father until he was seventeen years of age, then began to work on his own account. He spent one year on his grandfather’s farm near Riverton, then for one year conducted Mr. Yokum’s farm, for one year lived on Mr. Cooley’s farm, a year later removed to Mr. Wilson’s farm, where he remained a like period, and then for one year lived on Mr. Pitcher’s farm. He put in one crop on river land and lost it all by inundation from the river. He conducted a confectionary store and pool room in Spaulding for three years, and some three years ago retired from business life.

Mr. Rodgers was married in Springfield, in October, 1897, to Mary Davis, born in Tennes- see, May 22, 1855. Both her parents died in Tennessee, some five or six years since. By a former husband Mrs. Rodgers had two children: Ellen married John Spoon and living in Peoria, Ill.; and Daniel Morgan, who is living at home, carries on farming and mining.

Mr. Rodgers is regarded with respect and esteem by all who know him, as he is a true friend, a kind neighbor and the soul of honor. He is a man of good habits and high character, industrious and energetic, and fond of his home. He was always very kind and dutiful to his mother in her widowhood, and cared for her well until her death. He is known as a second Abraham Lincoln in regard to the number of rails he has split and the wood he has cut. He has carried a sack of wheat or corn to mill on horseback, waited for it to be ground, and then brought the grist back home. He is an active member of the Methodist Church and in politics is a Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the American Home Circle. He owns four acres of land in Spaulding and his wife also owns some property.

RODGERS, John, a successful merchant and well-known citizen of Dawson, Ill., is a native of Scotland, and has inherited the thrift and business enterprise of his race. He was born in Montrose, in 1836, a son of James and Jane (Thompson) Rodgers. The parents were farmers and spent their entire lives in Scotland. They had five children, of whom three were sons.

The education of John Rodgers was acquired in his native country, and when sixteen years of age he became a merchantman on a ship and followed the occupation of sailor for ten years, then engaged in gold-mining in Australia. He followed mining ten years, then returned to his native country. In 1854, he emigrated to the United States. Mr. Rodgers lived for a time in Chicago, then moved to the vicinity of Covington, Ind., where he engaged in coal mining. In 1877 he located at Riverton, Ill., engaged for a time in mining, then became employed in the company's store, and in 1880 this company started operations in Dawson. Mr. Rodgers severed his connection with the company in 1889 and made a trip to Scotland, where he remained until 1901, then returned to Dawson and engaged in mercantile business in company with Thomas A. Morgan. They carried a line of groceries and Yankee notions, and continued in partnership until the death of Mr. Morgan. In 1905, since which time Mr. Rodgers has conducted the enterprise on his own account. He has established a good trade and carries on his business in a manner to inspire confidence and insure success.

In July, 1874, Mr. Rodgers married Jessie A. Eggo, who was born in the same county in Scotland as himself, and who had come to Covington, Ind., in that year. They have no children. Mr. Rodgers is a Presbyterian in religious belief and a Democrat in politics. His education was acquired in the parish school in his native place, and was rather limited, but he has learned much in the school of experience and is possessed of good business judgment and ability.

RODGERS, Richard, a retired farmer residing in Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, Ill., belongs to a family that has been prominent in the county since 1857, and its members have ever been identified with its best interests. He was born in Wayne County, Ohio, June 5, 1839, and is a son of Robert B. and Catherine A. (Huggins) Rodgers, both natives of Pennsylvania, the former born August 1, 1793, in Westmoreland County, and the latter born February 11, 1800, in Liverpool, Perry County. They were married in Pennsylvania, where eight of their children were born, and moved to Medina County, Ohio, where they resided the remainder of their lives. In the spring of 1837 they arrived east of the river, in what is now Clear Lake Township, and there became parents of two more children. Mr. Rodgers continued to live on his farm near Riverton until his death, which occurred March 25, 1862. His widow died in April, 1894. They were parents of children as follows: Lucetta married Charles McClure and died in Wooster, Ohio, leaving three children; Thomas, married Catherine Hazlett, in Sangamon County, and died in 1852; Jane married William McClure, and both she and her husband died, leaving two children; Rebecca married James Morton, in Sangamon County, and they had eight children; Amanda married William Riverton, in Sangamon County, and they had six children; Mary married J. Mr. Richard Rodgers received his education in the old log school house near his home in Clear Lake Township and in boyhood worked on his father's farm. He later learned the trade of carpenter, which he followed for many years in Springfield and Riverton, and later engaged in farming and gardening. ROE, Edward Reynolds. (Vol. I, pp. 455-456.)

ROHRER, Andrew (deceased), who was a prominent farmer of Section 8, Ball Township, Sangamon County, Ill., was a native of Wurtzburg, Germany, born January 1, 1840, son of Abram and Barbara (Rohrer) Rohr. He was of both natives of Germany, and the former of Wurtzburg. The father was a farmer by occupation and emigrated to the United States in 1852, spending a short time in New Jersey and in Philadelphia, then came to Illinois, where he located on a farm. He died in Sangamon County and is buried in Chatham Cemetery and the mother, who died in Kansas, was buried at Lebanon. They were parents of five children, three of whom now survive.

Andrew Rohrer received his education in Germany, and was twelve years of age at the time he came with his parents to America. After spending a short time in New Jersey, he accompanied them to Philadelphia, and spent six years in that city. At the age of eighteen years he came with his parents to Sangamon County, and spent the remainder of his life in Ball Township. At the time of the Civil War he did all the overseeing and labor for Col. Shoup's family until the Colonel returned from the War.

He married in Springfield, Ill., by Rev. Barthling, February 12, 1867, to Mina Schmidt, who was born in Germany, April 29, 1847, daughter of Gottlieb Schmidt. She accompanied her parents to America as a child. The Schmidt family landed at New York and soon afterward came to Sangamon County. Mrs. Rohrer died February 7, 1904, leaving her husband seven children, namely: Edward Godlob, born April 30, 1868; Emma Louise, February 26, 1870; George William, February 11, 1872; Charles John, April 27, 1874; Benjamin, July 1, 1876; Carrie Ida, November 16, 1878; Francis, October 30, 1888. Three of these children are married and four reside, and all reside in Sangamon County except Mrs. Martin Wagner, of Chicago.

After his marriage Mr. Rohrer spent some time at the home of Col. Shoup, then engaged in farming in Ball Township, where he became a well-known and respected citizen. He was a Democrat in politics and served as County Commissioner from 1895 until 1904. In religious views he was a Lutheran. He was a most industrious farmer and brought his thirty acres of land to a high state of cultivation. He won many friends and was highly esteemed by all. He died at his home in Ball Township August 27, 1910, and his loss was genuinely mourned by all who knew him.

ROKKER, Henry William.—Had it not been for the assistance of its foreign-born citizens, it is doubtful if the North would have ended the Civil War as soon as it did. Almost without exception, those who sought in this country freedom from the exactions prevailing in the lands from which they came, took up arms in defense of their adopted country. One of the men who gave valiant service in this way was Henry William Rokker, now living at No. 1020 West Lawrence avenue, Springfield. He was born at Arnhem, Holland, August 3, 1834, a son of John Peter and Catharine (Gitsel) Rokker, the former born December 25, 1801, and the latter in 1809, both being natives of Holland. The father was a harnessmaker.

Henry William Rokker grew up in Holland, where he attended the city schools of Arnhem, learning the Dutch, German, French and English languages. Leaving school, he was taught the trade of bookbinding, and seeking a wider field of endeavor, came to the United States in 1856. He worked at his trade in Dubuque, Iowa, Madison and Milwaukee, Wisconsin, whence he went to New Orleans, but there spent only a short time, owing to climatic conditions of that city. Going north as far as St. Louis, he remained in that city until war was declared, when, in the early part of 1861, he enlisted in Company F, Third Missouri Volunteer Infantry. During his period of service, Mr. Rokker was stationed at Fulton, Mo., and was wounded four times, including injuries in both arms, the shoulder and lungs, so that he was honorably discharged for serious disability. Returning to St. Louis he started in business for himself, as bookbinder, as soon as his health permitted, and in 1863 came to Springfield, to enter the employ of A. B. Mackenzie. He continued with this establishment until the following spring, when the plant was destroyed by fire. Mr. Rokker once more established himself in business, selling out to the Journal Company, and becoming superintendent of the plant. After a year, he once more started in business for himself, and continued to operate his plant until 1910, when he sold his printing and bookbinding establishment to Colonel Jefferson.

Mr. Rokker was married (first) in St. Louis, in 1860, to Matilda Kowats, and they had three children: Henry, who died in infancy; Kate, who died at the age of thirty-three years; and Minnie, wife of Rev. William Offenbeck. Mr. Rokker was married (second) to Rose M. Liebke of Chicago, in 1894. In addition to the family residence in Springfield, Mr. Rokker owns some farm lands in the West, and is in comfortable circumstances. The German Lutheran Church has in him a faithful and liberal member. During the many years he has resided in Springfield, Mr. Rokker has been identified with those movements looking towards moral uplift and the betterment of civic conditions, and has been a most desirable citizen in every respect.

ROLL, John E. (Vol. I, p. 457.)

of foreign birth have become assimilated in our melting pot of nations until they are numbered among the reliable and substantial citizens. Among those who are Americans by inclination, Andrew Rollet, of No. 1702 South Tenth Street, Springfield, is as good a representative of the Franco-American as can be found in Sangamon County. He was born July 20, 1836, being a son of Joseph and Christina (Hirsch) Rollet, both of France. The parents were farming people, who never left their native land, where they died and are buried. Of the three sons and one daughter born to these parents, only the daughter, residing in France, and Mr. Rollet survive.

Having grown up in France, Andrew Rollet secured a common school education, and worked for his father, but was not satisfied with existing conditions, so, when he was twenty-five years old, enlisted in the army, serving for seven years. When his enlistment expired he re-enlisted for three years. Mr. Rollet is proud of the fact that he fought under such Napoleon, participated in many famous battles of the empire. With the fall of Louis Napoleon, Mr. Rollet turned his eyes towards the land his countrymen a century before had helped to free, and arrived in New York, whence he came direct to Springfield, which has been his home ever since. Upon historical records he secured employment on the construction of the State House, later entering the mines, where he met with an accident that compelled him to retire about 1865.

In February, 1873, Mr. Rollet was married in Springfield to Mrs. Marle (Frye) Rosenzweig, born in Germany, July 4, 1842, a daughter of Jacob Frye, who came to America in 1805, settling in Springfield, where he lived until his death. The mother died in Germany, having borne her husband four sons and five daughters, four of whom survive: Adam, of Springfield; Anton, a farmer of Sangamon county; Mrs. Anna Christman of Springfield, and Mrs. Rollet. Mr. and Mrs. Rollet have had six children: Adolph, a clergyman; Carl. Asa; Charles; George, a farmer; and F. Eunice, who were buried March 1838, in the cemetery at Bloomington, Illinois. Mr. Rollet, his wife, and their children, brought up in Springfield, and educated there, have a large influence in the business world, and are prominent in public and social life.

ROOSA, Charles A.—Some of the most progressive and public-spirited men of Springfield are those who are retired from active life and are consequently able to study carefully the needs of the community. One of these men is Charles A. Roosa, a retired real estate dealer, who was born in South Lebanon, Ohio, March 21, 1838, a son of Matthew and Emuice (Mullin) Roosa. The father, a native of Pennsylvania, came of "Pennsylvania-Dutch" stock, his father having emigrated to Pennsylvania from Germany, previous to the Revolutionary War.

Charles A. Roosa received more than ordinary educational advantages, attending the common schools and later taking a course in Antioch College and having the privilege of studying under Horace Mann, then its President. After leaving college he learned milling and distilling in his father’s mills, and later embarked in the same line of business with his brother-in-law, Joseph W. Rhodes. Meanwhile his father has died, leaving a large estate which was divided among his heirs. Having been married near Xenia, Greene County, Ohio, to Sarah V. De Haven, in 1865 he came to Illinois, establishing himself in a shipping and produce business at Mattoon, where he was able to recover from the heavy losses he and his son had sustained in a venture at Boonville. Mo. He and his wife’s brother had established themselves in a milling business there in 1864, but all their investment was swept away in Price’s famous raid. Owing to lack of educational advantages for his children, he left Mattoon to go to Jacksonville, where he with his sons Frank and Edward, conducted a grocery, hardware and furniture business, and also bought produce. In January, 1895, he came to Springfield, and has been a heavy retail operator there. Some of the finest buildings and residences in the city were put up by him and his sons, including a five-story one of concrete. He is a Democrat in political convictions. Primarily he belongs to the Modern Woodmen and the Knights and Ladies of Honor. Mr. and Mrs. Roosa have had children as follows: Frank, of Springfield, married a Miss Hawkins; Douglass, deceased; Edward D., in the plumbing business in Springfield, married a Miss Schlagle, of Bloomington; Frank, married Eunice C. Oden, of Chicago; Deanie married Samuel B. Stewart, of Jacksonville, who was City Clerk for eight years. Mr. Roosa is one of the substantial men of Springfield, and to his and his sons’ influence and public spirit many improvements are due. Frank, the eldest, has established a vulcanizing plant at three points—Springfield, Bloomington, and Decatur.

ROSS, Hon. David.—The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the State of Illinois, with headquarters in the State House at Springfield, gather information and prepare reports and statistics regarding the laboring classes of the State, as, for instance, the number of persons engaged in the various trades, the number receiving various amounts for wages, the number of hours per day employed, etc. This information is gathered and prepared for publication with great ROSS, Duncan (deceased).—In the death of the late Duncan Ross the village of Dawson, Ill., lost a valuable and highly respected citizen. He was well known in the community and had many warm personal friends who deeply mourned his loss. He was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, from whom he had a high regard.

Mr. Ross was born in Ross County, Ohio, March 31, 1831, his father being a native of Scotland and his mother of Virginia. The parents were early settlers of Ross County, where they engaged in farming and remained there until their deaths.

Duncan Ross was educated in the schools of his native county, took up farming there and continued in that occupation until the beginning of the Civil War, when he enlisted in an Ohio regiment and served throughout the struggle. He made an excellent record as a soldier and at the close of hostilities returned to Ohio, but a short time later went to Kansas and carried on farming there a few years, then sold out and came to Sangamon County. He there engaged in farming and some years later retired from this work and located in Dawson, where he conducted a general store until his weight of years induced him to retire from active life, and he spent his remaining years in the rest he had so well earned. He had in an excellent business, was honest and upright in all his dealings with his fellows, and was greatly loved by his family, of whose comfort he was ever solicitous. He was a member of the Christian Church and a Republican in politics. He served for a time as Police Magistrate in Dawson and was always ready to perform the duties of good citizenship. He was especially missed in the ranks of the G. A. R., having for years been a member of Buffalo Post.

Mr. Ross was married (first) in Ohio to Elizabeth Greene, a native of that State, and to this union eight children were born, of whom four now survive, namely: Isaac, a blacksmith, living in Chicago; David and Newton, of Mechanicsburg; Jasper, of California. Mrs. Ross died in Dawson soon after the family located there. Mr. Ross was married (second) March 15, 1888, to Anna (Mullen) McCormick, born in the northern part of Ireland, December 25, 1859, and brought to America by her parents as a child. The family located at Champaign, Ill., and the parents carried on farming near there until their deaths. Of their five children but two are now living, Mrs. Ross and her brother, John Mullen, residing in Virginia. Mrs. Ross was first married, July 15, 1865, to Duncan McCormick, the union taking place at Jacksonville, Ill., Mr. McCormick being a native of Scotland and came to America as a young man. They lived for a time at Jacksonville, then removed to Dawson, where he died in 1884. They had one son, James McCormick, of St. Louis, Mo. Mr. McCormick served as First Lieutenant of a company that was mustered in at Springfield for service in the Civil War, and acquitted himself honorably in this post. Mrs. Ross owns a comfortable home in Dawson and is well known in the community. The death of Mr. Ross occurred at his home, September 3, 1910.

ROSS, Nathan, a representative citizen of Cooper Township, Sangamon County, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits on his tract of twenty-three acres in Section 6, was born July 22, 1847, in Bourbon County, Ky., the son of William H. and Ellen (Lone) Ross, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Wales.

The mother of Mr. Ross came to America with her parents, and in Kentucky was married to William H. Ross. They carried on farming in that State until 1869, in which year they came to Sangamon County, Ill., settling on a farm in Cooper Township, on which Mr. Ross died in January, 1870, while his widow survived him until 1900. They were the parents of six children, of whom three survive, namely: Nathan; George A., who resides near Breckenridge, Ill.; and Susan, who married Thomas Maddox, a farmer of Clear Lake Township.

Nathan Ross secured his education in an old schoolhouse in Cooper Township which was built of sycamore logs, and during his boyhood and youth worked for his father on the farm. At the age of twenty-seven years he was married and with his wife moved to a farm in Clear Lake Township, but several years later returned to Cooper Township, taking the management of his mother's farm, which he conducted for her until her death. He then purchased his present property, a tract of twenty-three acres located on section 6, and he has been successfully engaged in general farming to the present time. Mr. Ross has been a public-spirited citizen and has served his township as School Director for several terms, being an incumbent of that office at the present time, as well as being Road Commissioner. In political views he adheres to the principles of the Democratic party.

On December 24, 1874, Mr. Ross was married to Leah Huffman, who was born in Sangamon County, daughter of Enoch Huffman, who with his wife came to this country at an early day and here spent his life in agricultural pursuits. Mrs. Ross died in 1877, having been the mother of two children, of whom one is now living: Lucile, the wife of Bert Morgan, of Springfield.

On August 19, 1884, Mr. Ross was married (second) to Elizabeth McIntire, who was born in Sangamon County, Ill., the daughter of Sanford McIntire, an early settler and farmer of Sangamon County, and there were seven children born to this union: Bertha Quinet, George H., living on a farm near Dawson; Elizabeth, the wife of George Purcell, who lives near Breckenridge and is engaged in farming; Elvin, who resides near Buffalo; Herbert Lee, who lives with his father; and Edith and Maryland, at home. In the family there are seven living grandchildren.

ROURKE, William P. (deceased).—Ireland was the birthplace of some of the best citizens Springfield has ever known, there being that in the nature of an Irishman that tends towards good citizenship. The people of that land possess a quickness of perception, a keenness of wit and a loyal patriotism that make them welcome wherever they locate. William P. Rourke, who for many years was a familiar figure on the streets of Springfield, was born May 9, 1849, a son of Thomas and Margaret (Burns) Rourke, both natives of Ireland, who came to America in 1853, locating in Springfield, which remains their home thereafter.

William P. Rourke was sent to St. Mary's Catholic School in boyhood, and when old enough was taught the blacksmith trade, at which he worked until 1874, when he established his own shop on South Eighth Street, where he was in business until his death, which occurred April 9, 1900, and his remains are interred in Calvary Cemetery, he having been a consistent member of Immaculate Conception Catholic Church. While a stanch Democrat, he did not aspire to public office, but discharged the duties pertaining to that of Supervisor for one term. Fraternally he was a Modern Woodman and was much interested in its work. Quiet, devoted to his business affairs, Mr. Rourke was an industrious, true, loyal citizen and a devoted husband and father.

On September 30, 1873, he was married in Springfield, to Frances Craren, born April 20, 1853, daughter of James and Ellen Craren. Mr. and Mrs. Rourke had the following children: Charles J., born in 1875; William, in 1878; Thomas James, in 1881; Robert Francis, in 1884; Ellen, in 1887; Margaret E., in 1889; Francis William, in 1891. Mrs. Rourke owns the family residence at No. 1000 Jackson Street. She is a good mother, devoted to her home and church, and has brought up her children to be a credit to her.

ROUTT, James Jackson.—Most of the veterans of the Civil War who survive have retired from active life and are now living in comparative ease. An honored veteran of Sangamon County, Ill., who has a good war record and is highly respected in his community, is James Jackson Routt, who, during the war years has been a resident of Loami. Mr. Routt was born in Fleming County, Ky., March 15, 1845, a son of Byram B. and Eleanor Charlotte (Riggs) Routt, the former born in Bath County and the latter in Nicholas County, Ky. Byram B. Routt was a son of George Routt, and the family is supposed to be of English descent. They were prominent in Kentucky in early days and were considered members of the aristocracy of that State. Eleanor Charlotte Riggs was of German ancestry and could scarcely understand her Grandmother Riggs.

Byram B. Routt was a native of Bath County, had a large amount of land and was an extensive slave-owner before the war. Byram was a well-to-do farmer and a leader in his community. He was born in 1800 and died in 1850, at which time talk of war was sometimes heard. He left a widow and several children. Mrs. Routt owned many slaves and was a good mistress, keeping the members of a family together and taking a humane interest in their welfare and morals. In 1858 she decided to sell out in Kentucky, as she had considerable trouble managing her estate, but she hated the idea of parting with her slaves. When she left, however, she left the entire number and they were afterward set free by the emancipation proclamation of President Lincoln. They sold their farm, and his wife had sons as follows: Allen, William Bailey, John, Isaac, Byram B. and George. There were three daughters: Sally, who never married; Winnie, who became the wife of Nathan Vice, and died on the home farm; and Lucy, who married Henry Martin. All the children settled near home and all died in Bath County with the exception of Bailey, Byram B. and Lucy.

Mrs. Eleanor C. Routt was the daughter of a large slave-owner of Nicholas County, and her son James J. well remembers his maternal grandparents and events which occurred in his boyhood home. There were no telephones in those days and he can remember when he rode up to the door and called to his mother that her mother was dead, and she immediately started horseback sixteen miles to her mother's bedside. She was one of thirteen children: John, Caleb and Erasmus, sons; Polly, Mahala, Martha, Ruth, Patsy, Mary, Ann, Ritturah, Eleanor and one other, daughters, all now de-
The children of Byram B. Routt and his wife were all born in Fleming County, Ky., and were as follows: Catherine married M. Rodger and died in 1886, her husband having died in a hospital at Louisville, Ky.; George E., John W., James J., Sarah Ann, Eleanor Charlotte, Bryan Lewis Jr., Caleb T. and Patsy L. (twins); Francis M. Mr. Rodger, who married Catherine Routt, was a member of a Kentucky regiment in the U. S. A. service, and his widow moved to Morgan County, I11., where her death occurred in 1868. They had four children: a son, who died in infancy; Kitturah Ellen and Nancy Ann, who grew to womanhood. George E. Routt came to Illinois and from there went to Missouri, where he married Harriet Manulug, and they had one daughter, Lucinda. George died in Kauas and James J. Routt does not know the whereabouts of the daughter. John W. Routt accompanied his mother from Kentucky to Morgan County, I11., in 1858, and was buried in Mason County, I11., in 1897. Sarah Ann was married in Kentucky, to David Hendricks, and they settled in Bolivar, Polk County, Mo., becoming parents of several children. Eleanor Charlotte came with her mother to Illinois in 1858, married (first) Samuel Riggs, and they had a son, Ernest, and Mr. Rigs died at Havana, I11. Mrs. Riggs married (second) Benjamin F. Pullulug, and they had two children, Ralph and Gertrude; Mr. Pullulug and his wife both died in Mason County. Byram Lewis Routt enlisted in the Confederate Army, was captured by the Union Army, afterward joined the U. S. troops and was taken sick and sent to the hospital at Rolla, Mo., which is the last his family ever heard of him. Caleb T. and Patsy L. were twins, and the former, now a resident of Loami, was a member of Company G, Twentieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Patsy married Charles Goodman and had three children: Harry, of Brunswick; and Edward, of St. Louis. They both died in infancy. Mrs. Goodman lives in Erie, Pa., with her son Edward, who is foreman of a factory there. Francis M. Routt came to Illinois with the family and later went West, where he became well-to-do, and died, unmarried, in California.

On May 28, 1858 Mrs. Eleanor Routt brought part of her children to Morgan County, I11., and made her home with her son James J. for many years before her death, which occurred in 1888, at the age of seventy-four years. She had a sister, Ann Lour, who lived near Jacksonville. James Jackson Routt inherited his love of books from his father and grandfather. He was well-educated and intelligent men. He received his education in the district school and applied himself to his studies in earnest, making the most of his opportunities.

Being imbued with a patriotic spirit, Mr. Routt enlisted, January 5, 1864, in Company A, Twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, taking part in many long marches and never failing to perform the duties assigned to him. In Mobile, Ala., he was for sixteen consecutive days under fire, and his hearing was much affected by the explosion of a magazine, which has always been a great sorrow to him. The regiment crossed the Gulf July 2, 1865, and went on to Brownsville, Tex., where they remained until mustered out March 15, 1866, receiving honorable discharge at Springfield May 13th, after which Mr. Routt resumed farming in Morgan County.

One of the most exciting experiences Mr. Routt had during his service in the army was just previous to the flight at Mobile. Theutenantoni, which was a child with her parents to Illinois. She was a daughter of Jonathan and Rachel Sayre, who later became residents of Greene County, I11. After his marriage Mr. Routt followed various occupations for a time, but most of the time was engaged in farming in Sangamon and Morgan Counties. In 1905 he retired from active life and found a delightful comfortable home in Loami. He has been very successful in his operations and has a reputation for industry and integrity. He has many friends in both Sangamon and Morgan Counties, and after locating in Loami was given the contract for mail messenger, performing his duties to the satisfaction of the public.

Children as follows have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Routt: Charlotte E., born in Morgan County, September 2, 1858, married Jay W. McPherson, March 7, 1888, and they had four children. Mr. McPherson died May 31, 1902, after which his widow married (second) John W. Street, by whom she had one child, Lyle C., born June 11, 1906; Emma J., born October 29, 1871, married S. E. Martu, a farmer living near Raymond, I11., and they have eleven children—Bluell, Ernest, Halbert, John, Olaud, Ceci, Alma, Stanley, Harold, Glenn and Lucile; James H., born April 29, 1874, married Bertha Martin, and they have one child, May. Mrs. May died unmarried, at the age of twenty-seven. years; George E., born March 3, 1883, married Stella Dodd, lives on a farm west of Loami, and they have three children—Dorothy, Helen and Martha; Rena B., born April 23, 1889, married George P. Powell, and they have one child, Fred. Mrs. Powell is a devout Christian, having united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of sixteen years. The oldest daughter, Charlotte, had four children by her first husband; Clifford Ray McPherson, born February 23, 1889, is in the livery business at Chatham; Orvill L. J., born December 30, 1891, at home; Truman P., born October 17, 1896, died October 15, 1908; Lole Sayre, born August 15, 1901, died August 24, 1903. Mr. McPherson was a farmer by occupation and a devout member of the Baptist church.

For the past forty-four years Mr. Rontt has been a member of the Odd Fellows, being a charter member of Lodge No. 901, at Loami. He is a Republican in politics and liberal in his views. In 1900 he was elected Police Magistrate and received an appointment, signed by Governor Deneen. He has lived in Loami the past ten years and is considered one of the town's best citizens.

ROWLEY, Timothy W., a well-known and highly respected citizen of Springfield, Ill., is a native of the city, born October 25, 1854. He is a son of Reuben and Minerva Rowley, the former a native of New York and the latter of Illinois. The father disappeared when Timothy was a boy and was never again heard of, and the mother died when he was small. Reuben Rowley was engaged in stock buying and also owned a farm. The boyhood of Timothy W. Rowley was spent on a farm and when a young man he engaged in railroad work, which he followed ten years, after which he engaged in mining in Sangamon County, Ill. In 1884 he moved to Menard County, Wls., where for six years he was engaged in farming, then returned to Sangamon County and has since lived in Springfield. He has been self-supporting since early boyhood and by good management and industry has been able to accumulate some property. As a boy he sold milk to the soldiers in Camp Butler, near Springfield, during the Civil War.

Mr. Rowley was married in Menard County, Ill., September 24, 1882, to Miss Harriet Boring, a native of Morgan County, Ill., daughter of Lee and Nancy B. (Stewart) Boring, both natives of Illinois. Mrs. Rowley's grandmother lived to be ninety-two years of age and passed away in Springfield. Her father is deceased and her mother lives in Wisconsin. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Rowley, of whom six survive: Cornelia B., born in Tallula, Ill., August 19, 1883, married Frank Gallegar, lives in Wisconsin and has four children; John B., born in Morgan County, April 27, 1885, married Vivian Hedrick, and lives in Athens, Ill.; Reuben L., born in Jacksonville, Ill., June 25, 1889, served three years in the regular United States Army and is now farming in Texas; Etta N., born at Jacksonville, December 28, 1891, lives at home; Ralph B., born in Springfield, July 31, 1893, and Arthur B., born in Juneau County, Wis., December 20, 1897, at home. Mr. Rowley has always been honest and reliable in his business transactions and in religion follows the teachings of the Golden Rule, which he tries to carry out in his daily life. He takes great interest in the progress and welfare of the community and in politics is a Republican. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and enjoys the society and companionship of his many friends. The family reside at 1906 South Fourteenth Street, where they have a very pleasant home.

RUDEN, Fred.—Love of country and true patriotism is fostered in the shadow of the Alps, and no people are more loyal than natives of Switzerland. These sturdy people bring with them also, when they emigrate to a new country, a desire to work and a capacity for saving, taught them from the cradle. One representative of this desirable class of foreign-born American citizens is Fred Ruden, a retired printer living at No. 912 East Carpenter Street, Springfield. He was born September 6, 1842, a son of Fred and Anna (Lainge) Ruden, natives of Switzerland. The father was a farmer and he and his wife never came to America, but lived and died in their native land.

Fred Ruden grew up under their firm yet kindly rule, attending school and working hard on the home farm. Later he learned the trade of printer and worked at it before coming to America in 1878. He landed in New York City and came thence direct to Springfield, which has continued to be his home. For eighteen years he was in the employ of the Rochester Printing Company, and also worked in the shops of the Wabash Railroad Company for several years. However, in 1899 he retired, feeling that he had earned a little leisure. Through industry and thrifty habits he had saved enough to purchase his home, and in comfortable circumstances.

Mr. Ruden was married in Switzerland in 1874, to Mary Strobel, also a native of that country, where her parents both died. Ten children were born of this union, three of whom now survive: Fred, Jr., engaged in retail oil business in Springfield; Charles and Louis, both living at home and engaged in conducting a grocery. There are four grandchildren in the family, of whom Mr. Ruden is very proud. He belongs to Trinity Lutheran Church. His political sentiments make him a Democrat but he has never sought office. All who know this kindly Swiss gentleman admire his perseverance and steadfast purpose to make a place for himself in the land to which he came in young manhood.

RUMSEY, Aaron Burr (deceased).—The descendants of the Burr family are very proud of their connection with the distinguished statesman who was at one time vice-president of the United States and one of the most brilliant men the country has produced. One of the men who came of this line was Aaron Burr Rumsey, born in Westport, Conn., May 29, 1803, son of Aaron and Sallie (Burr) Rumsey. The former was born in Fairfield, Conn., July 1, 1772, and the latter in the same place, November 10, 1774. Aaron Rumsey was captain of a merchantman vessel. Sallie Burr was a cousin of Col. Aaron Burr, who was Vice President at the time her son was born, having missed the presidency by but one vote, and the proud young mother was pleased to name him after her distinguished relative.

Captain Rumsey traced his ancestry back to the Mayflower passengers, two of his forebears having signed the immortal act (in the cabin of the little vessel) which was really the birth of the new nation eventually to become the most powerful in the world. Prior to this event, the Rumsey family goes back to William the Conqueror's advent into England, and probably is connected with the Mayflower in France, founded in 1226. With such ancestry behind him and trained by as careful a mother as he was blessed with, Aaron Burr Rumsey grew up into a healthy, normal boy, attending school in Westport and New York City, possessing refined tastes and industrious habits. He became supercargo, probably on his father's boat, which sailed between New York and the West Indies, exchanging the products of both countries. Later he became connected with the wholesale mercantile trade in New York City, and amassed what was then considered a fortune. His grief at the loss of his first born son, Webster, led him to confide too much in his partner, and he had the misfortune to suffer a betrayal of his trust. Having lost his fortune, he came to Illinois, taking charge of the first railroad in the State. Once more he became rich, acquiring large property interests in both city and country, owning over 3,000 acres of land at one time.

Mr. Rumsey took a deep interest in the matters which brought about the Civil War. He had belonged to the New York Seventh, but even before the outbreak of the war he was too old to serve, although he offered his services cheerfully. However, he drilled twenty young men, every one of whom gave gallant service to the country they all loved so dearly. Mr. Rumsey was a member of the first anti-slavery society, with William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips and others of equal prominence, and suffered all the inconveniences and dangers incident to holding such views. This society met at night on a canal boat which ran to Utica, in order to be unmolested in their conferences. Mr. Rumsey lived to send his three sons to the war. In religious faith he was a Presbyterian, was Elder of the Brainerd Church, New York City, and all his life kept the Sabbath Day holy. He voted the Free Soil ticket until the nomination of his friend and neighbor, Abraham Lincoln, for whom he cast his vote, although at that time he had no hope of this election, so he was pleasantly disappointed at the astonishing results.

On August 20, 1833, Mr. Rumsey was married in New York City, to Lucetta Crane, daughter of Morris and Abigail (Sickles) Crane, born in Jersey City, October 30, 1806. She was descended from Robert Treat, Governor of Connecticut for thirty years, and associated with the famous Charter Oak. The Cranes date back to Charlemagne. Mrs. Rumsey was a woman of great beauty and possessed a most tender and affectionate disposition, which gained her the love and respect of all with whom she was brought into contact. Mr. and Mrs. Rumsey had children as follows: Webster, born June 13, 1834, in New York City; Sarah, born February 1, 1837, in the same city; Harriet, born December 5, 1838, in Westport, Conn.; Gerard, born January 6, 1840, also at Westport, as was Charles, born April 8, 1841; Frederick, born October 4, 1842, at Westport; Arthur Wellesley, born May 3, 1844, and Rachel Sickles, born July 28, 1846, both in New York City.

Mr. Rumsey had the confidence and respect of his neighbors. His ideas of manly integrity were of the highest, and he was often consulted on matters of business. It was characteristic of him that he would much prefer to suffer himself than to inflict suffering upon others. He and his wife were fine singers and belonged in early life to the Handel & Hayden Musical Society, of New York City. The death of Mr. Rumsey occurred February, 8, 1875. His wife survived him nine years, as she passed away March 20, 1884.

RUNKLES, John G., a retired miner of Spaulding, Ill., has been a resident of Sangamon County since early childhood. He was born near Elmira, Ohio, October 17, 1852, a son of William H. and Louisa Frances Runkles, the former born in Maryland and the latter in Ohio. William H. Runkles accompanied his father to Ohio and learned the trade of cooper as a young man. He followed his trade many years in Zanesville and vicinity and brought his family to Springfield, Ill., where he engaged in his trade, and later took up mining, moving to Riverton in 1896, and there the family lived several years. He died in 1875 and his widow in 1883. They were parents of five children, two sons and three daughters, and four children are now living: John G., subject of this sketch; Jacob, of Spaulding; Mrs. Minerva Shriver of Peoria, and Mrs. Elizabeth Cone of Springfield.

Mr. Runkles received his education in the school at German Prairie, Sangamon County, where he had come as a small boy, and afterwards learned the trade of meat cutter, which he followed several years. He then engaged in mining, and followed that occupation until a few years ago, when he retired from active life. He has made his home in Spaulding, Riverton and Springfield during this time. He is a Democrat in politics and fraternally is connected with the Red Men. He is well known as an industrious and useful citizen, who has made his own way in life through his industry and perseverance, and has made many warm friends.

He is a man of good principles and is esteemed by all with whom he comes into contact.

Mr. Runnels was married in Springfield, in 1857, to Sarah A. Stark, of an old pioneer family in Sangamon County. Her father, John Stark, served in the Civil War and was an honored citizen of the county. Three children were born to Mr. Runnels and his wife, of whom two survive, Charles and Stephen A., both of Riverton. There are three grandchildren in the family.

RUNNELS, Jesse.—The old soldier of today is in a measure rewarded, not only in the form of a pension by his government, but with the plaudits and admiration of those who know of his past bravery. Yet all this is but small return for what he suffered and risked, and the time will come when the men who fought to preserve the Union will be numbered among the greatest heroes the world ever knew. One of the men who fought bravely and well during the Civil War is Jesse Runnels, of Springfield, now a retired farmer residing at No. 312 South Street. He was born on a farm in Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, October 13, 1840. His parents, Willis M. and Julia Ann (Baker) Runnels, came from Kentucky to Illinois over seventy years ago, locating in Clear Lake Township, where the father died in young manhood. He had two children, Jesse being the elder. His brother Willis now lives in the State of Missouri. Mrs. Runnels had been married before, and had one child by her first husband, named Alfred Waddell, who resides at Fort Scott, Kan. She died when Jesse was but four years old and at that tender age he was taken by his grandmother Baker, and reared by her and his grandfather, Jacob Baker. The latter was a farmer of Clear Lake Township.

Jesse Runnels grew to manhood on his grandfather's farm, receiving the usual educational advantages offered the country boy of that period. When 22 years old, he enlisted as a private at Camp Butler, on July 25, 1862, in Company I, One Hundred and Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years, or during the war. The regiment was assigned to the Western Army, and he participated in many hard-fought battles, including those of Vicksburg, Guntown, Tupelo, Nashville, Mobile, and others. His brother Willis was in the same company. After his discharge Mr. Runnels came back to his grandfather's farm, to resume peaceful operations.

In 1868 Mr. Runnels was married in Clear Lake Township, to Charlotte Haines, of Rochester Township, daughter of Nicholas and Elizabeth (McCarty) Haines, both natives of Ohio, who came to Sangamon County when Mr. Runnels was a small child and died here. Mr. Runnels had purchased 100 acres in Clear Lake Township, and to it took his bride, but soon thereafter sold it and bought a small farm of forty-six acres in the same township. This continued to be his home until the fall of 1898, when, feeling that he had done his full duty, he retired, coming to Springfield. Mr. and Mrs. Runnels became the parents of three children: Flora, Mrs. James Chancellor, of Springfield; Elizabeth, at home, and Willis, a farmer of Clear Lake Township, married Charlotte Miller. Mr. Runnels owns his home, as well as his farm, and is a well-do, prosperous man, who has accomplished much in life. He is a consistent member of the Christian Church. The Republican party receives his loyal support. His connections with the G. A. R. are pleasant and he enjoys meeting old comrades and with them living over the scenes so full of interest to a soldier.

RUPP, Philip.—The young German emigrant coming to America has great hopes of success, and, if he possesses industrious inclinations and frugal habits, is more than likely to attain the height of his ambitions. In this country are none of the restrictions which are placed upon the workman in Germany, and he is able to rise more rapidly. His early training teaches him to save and invest, and he soon becomes a proprietor instead of a workman. A case in hand is that Philip Rupp, of Springfield, now living in a well-earned retirement after years of successful business life as a baker. He was born in Bingen-on-the-Rhine, Germany, February 14, 1855, being a son of Jacob and Mary (Haas) Rupp, natives of Germany. The father was a farmer who lived and died in Germany. His widow came to America in 1858, but four years later returned to her old home. She was born February 5, 1813, and died August 13, 1888.

Philip Rupp was brought up in Germany, leaving home when eighteen years of age, and landing in Brooklyn, N. Y. He worked at an upholstering business for twenty dollars per year, although he was a baker by trade. In 1853 he came west to Detroit, where he followed his trade for five years, coming to Springfield in 1857, working at his trade and going south every winter and returning in the spring. In 1862 he established himself in a confectionery business. In 1865 he rented and later bought the building and established a bakery business on Washington Street and continued his bakery until 1882. In that year he moved to Springfield Township, a mile and a half east of Springfield and became a farmer. He bought sixty acres divided into three fruit farms and built a good house on each place. In 1908 he retired, returning to Springfield, and selling his farms. He owns his beautiful home at No. 200 South State Street and other real estate.

Mr. Rupp was married in Springfield, Ill,

June 16, 1862, to Genevieve Neuer, born in Ulm, Germany, July 15, 1841, who came to the United States in 1860, although her parents never left their native land, dying there at an advanced age. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rupp: John, of Springfield; Mary, who married Adolph Walder, a member of the Chillicothe & Alton railroad; Barbara, who married a Mr. Willey, of Colorado; Victoria, who married R. Richard, a butcher of Los Angeles, Cal.; Jacob, of Denver, Col.; Philip, a clerk in Buck's hat store, and his twin sister, Genevieve, wife of Joseph Stevens, who is living in Fresno, Cal. Five grandchildren and one great-grandchild have been born in the family. Mrs. Rupp died September 11, 1901.

Mr. Rupp is a Mason. In politics he is a Republican but has never aspired to public office. He is one of the best representatives of German-Americans in Springfield, and would be regarded as one of the desirable citizens anywhere he cared to locate. His efforts have always been directed towards the securing of good government and schools, and he can always be counted upon to exert his influence towards these ends. Mr. Rupp was a member of the "Wide Awakes" Republican Club during Lincoln's campaign, which serenaded Mr. Lincoln at his home. Mr. Rupp was a personal friend of Mr. Lincoln and admired him very much.

RUSSELL, James K. P.—In every community are to be found men who rank much higher than their neighbors by reason of superior mental endowments. Many of these men cultivate their natural ability until they are able to command attention in both private and public life. They are to be found in all callings and professions. While their attention during business hours is given to their work, when they are over, these men of intelligence are free to pursue other studies and to further develop their minds. One of the most interesting men of Springfield is James K. P. Russell, whose study of phrenology has made him noted along these lines and afforded him much intellectual pleasure. He was born in Muncie, Ind., July 31, 1844, a son of Elijah and Susan (Anderson) Russell, natives of Ohio and Delaware. The father, a farmer, moved from Ohio to Indiana, in boyhood. Later, he came to Bond County, Ill., where his death occurred.

It was in Bond County that James K. P. Russell grew up, attending school and working on the farm, passing his boyhood as do so many country boys. However, a different spirit burned in his breast, and he resolved to learn something of the great outside world. During his more mature years, he has carried out that ambition, having traveled over nearly all of the United States, and as he is a keen observer, has made good use of his travels. On February 4, 1865, when barely twenty-one years old, he enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Illinois Infantry, and was mustered out November 18, 1865. He served under General Sherman, Colonel Wood commanding his regiment, and participated in the various engagements of the Tennessee and Carolina campaigns. From August to November he was an independent soldier with no government record. On account of his army experience, his associations with the G. A. R. are exceedingly pleasant. Upon his return he interested himself in several lines of business and now owns and conducts one of the best regulated meat markets in the city.

On October 30, 1881, Mr. Russell was married, at Decatur, III., to Lizzie Dowd, born October 10, 1860, in Pennsylvania, daughter of Patrick and Julia Dowd, natives of Ireland. Patrick Dowd was a soldier in the Civil War. One child, John Russell, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Russell, on February 15, 1894, at We-aqua, Shelby County, Ill. Mr. Russell is a consistent Republican and has often been called upon to represent his party in public office, always discharging the duties involved, faithfully and honorably. He is a member of the Christian Church, and finds in that body a congenial religious home. A man of high intelligence, he has pursued the study of phrenology until he is an adept in the science, and believes thoroughly in it and its disclosures.

RUTHERFORD, Newton, a successful farmer of Illiopolis, Ill., is a veteran of the Civil War and highly respected by all who know him. He was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, April 15, 1836, a son of John R. and Elizabeth Rutherford, natives of Kentucky. They came to Sangamon County, Ill., in 1841, as did their parents, who were also natives of Kentucky. The grandfather of Newton Rutherford was a resident during the Revolutionary War, but the latter knows very little further of his ancestors. He received his education in the country schools and then engaged in farming, which he has followed ever since. He came to America when five years old and in 1874 moved to Kansas, where he lived seven years, but returned to Illinois and carried on farming in Montgomery County until 1900, when he came to his present home.

Mr. Rutherford enlisted at Springfield, August 10, 1861, in Company D, Fortieth Illinois Infantry, served two years and several months, and in December, 1863, re-enlisted at Scottsboro, Ala. In the same company, serving until July 24, 1865, when he was mustered out at Louisville, Ky. He served under Captain Samuel Hoofer and later under Captain G. J. George, now residing in Springfield, and participated in the Battles of Shiloh, Siege of Corinth, Iuka, the Atlanta Campaign, Kennesaw Mountain, Griswoldville, Georgia, and many skirmishes. He was wounded in the Battle of Shiloh and was with Sherman on his famous March to the Sea. He is reasonably proud of his record and is a prominent member of the local

RYAN, Charles James, a successful young farmer of Sangamon County and a stockholder in the Farmers' Elevator Company, of Chatham, has spent his entire life on the farm he now owns in Section 18, Ball Township, where he was born November 12, 1878. He is a son of Michael and Anna (Carran) Ryan, natives of Ireland and Pennsylvania, respectively. The father was born in 1835 and died in February, 1880, and the mother, who was born in 1855, died in October, 1879. Michael Ryan came to America from County Tipperary, and spent some time in farming in Morgan County, Ill. Later he came to Sangamon County, where both he and his wife died. His father died in Ireland and his mother was killed on the Wabash Railroad at New Berlin, Ill., in 1883. The parents of Annie Curran were born in Ireland and both died in Sangamon County. Michael Ryan and his wife were married at Auburn, Ill., by Father Hickey, of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, and settled on a farm in Ball Township.

Charles J. Ryan was reared on a farm and educated in the country schools of the neighborhood. He was fond of hunting and playing ball in boyhood and has always been fond of horse racing and other sports. He is an enterprising and progressive farmer and his land is in a high state of cultivation. He owns 240 acres of land, where he resides.

November 20, 1901, Mr. Ryan was married, at Auburn, by Rev. Father O'Conner, to Monica Gertrude O'Conner, born in County Kerry, Ireland, September 8, 1878, daughter of Daniel and Hannah (Hagerty) O'Conner, both natives of Ireland, where the mother still resides, the father being deceased. Her grandparents spent their entire lives in Ireland. Five children were born of this union: Annie G., born October 19, 1904, died in 1905; Monica, twin of the preceding, born October 19, 1904, died three weeks later; Gertrude, born in 1907, died at the age of three weeks; Mary Josephine, born May 1, 1906, at home; Julia, born September 9, 1903. Mr. Ryan is one of the best-known farmers of Ball Township and has many warm friends. He is well acquainted with Father Hickey and James M. Graham, both prominent citizens of Springfield, who have a warm regard for him. Left an orphan at a tender age, he early learned the lessons of industry and self-reliance. He is a stockholder of the Catholic Church and belongs to St. Benedict's Parish, presided over by Father Ryan. In political views he is a Democrat, but votes for the man and principle rather than for party. He is affiliated with the Court of Honor No. 25, of Springfield, of which his wife is also a member.

RYAN, Michael, a retired farmer of Riverton, Ill., has been living on his present place since 1875, and is well known and highly esteemed in the neighborhood. He was born in Ireland, in 1844, son of Michael and Joanna (Burke) Ryan, both also natives of Ireland. The father was a farmer and both he and his wife spent their entire lives in Ireland, he dying as the result of an accident caused by the running away of a team of horses. Michael Ryan Jr. was thus early left fatherless. He was educated in the public schools of his native country and helped his father on the farm during his boyhood, being always a staunch Democrat.

At the age of seventeen years Mr. Ryan came to America, landing at Boston, where he remained two years, then spent five years in New York, after which he came to Illinois, spending one year at farm work near Jacksonville. Later he moved to Decatur, and after spending a few months there, moved to Riverton and for three years was engaged in mining. At the end of this time Mr. Ryan resumed mining in Clear Lake Township, and three years later came to Riverton and purchased the home he has since occupied. He has lately retired from active life, and is enjoying a well-earned rest. He has been a hard-working and industrious farmer and planter and success has attended his efforts. He owns a pleasant home and ten acres in Riverton, where he lives.

Mr. Ryan was married in Springfield, in 1873, to Maggie Ryan, born in Syracuse, N. Y. Her parents came from Ireland to Syracuse, N. Y., and thence later to Springfield, where they lived to the time of their deaths. Twelve children were born to Mr. Ryan and his wife, of whom seven sons and one daughter survive: Michael, living near Pittsburg, Pa.; William, living in Athens; Timothy, Thomas, John, Edward and James, at home; Maggie, living with her brother in Pennsylvania. Mr. Ryan is a faithful member of St. James Roman Catholic Church and is active in its work. In political views he is a Democrat and is interested in the progress and welfare of his community. He is well known in Riverton and vicinity, where he has many friends.

SACK, William F.—Springfield is one of the most desirable places for residence in the country, especially for those who have retired from active life, and are interested in observing from the outside the various incidents of city life. The climatic conditions are excellent, while the advantages offered are unsurpassed anywhere.
One of the men now living from the fruits of their industry is William Sack, of No. 931 North Fifteenth Street, Springfield, who belongs to that reliable class of German-Americans so honored in this country.

He was born December 28, 1847, near the city of Berlin, Germany, being a son of William and Louise (Mundt) Sack, both born in the same locality as their son. A farmer by occupation, William Sack Sr. lived out his span of years in Germany, as did his devoted wife, and both are interred in the Fatherland. They had three sons and one daughter, and the latter, Mrs. Mary Strusberg, of Germany, and William Sack Jr. are all who survive.

Attended the public German schools, William Sack grew to manhood, assisting his father and herding sheep. On November 1, 1871, he sailed from Hamburg for America, on a steam vessel, landing in New York City, whence he came to Altamont, Ill., where he spent twenty years. His first employment there was with the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, and in 1877 he spent two years with the Vandalia railroad, working for them for four years. He was then made section foreman on the Ohio & Mississippi railroad (now Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern), continuing with them for four years. It then was that he moved to Springfield to engage for a short time with the City Street Car Company, but left them to enter the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company's employ. A year later he engaged with the No. 2 North Shaft, continuing there until he entered the DeVereaux mine, where he worked until his retirement.

While residing in Altamont Mr. Sack was married, on May 20, 1872, to Augusta Bauer, born in the same part of Germany as he, December 29, 1849. She was a daughter of John and Wilemena (Schoenwald) Bauer, who never left Germany, where the father was a distiller. Mr. and Mrs. Sack became the parents of sixteen children, nine of whom survive: William Jr., of Springfield; Harvey, of Greenfield; Gustav, also of the city, both being engaged in mining; Anna, living at home; Augusta, wife of Louis Serneman of Stannum, Ill., a carpenter; Marie and Herman, living at home; Caroline, wife of Herbert Keiter, lives in Springfield; and Louise and Henry are at home. Those deceased are: Sophie, Bertha D., Bertha D. and Henry, two of same name.

Mr. Sack is a member of Trinity Lutheran Church, as are all of the members of his family. He owns his beautiful home, as well as other valuable Springfield property, having had confidence in the city and recognized the worth of its property. He is one of the best examples of what the Germans have accomplished in this country, and possesses, in addition to German industry and thrift, other very desirable qualities which have made and retained for him the warm friendship of all with whom he has been brought into contact.

SAGLE, Samuel F. (deceased), was a farmer, of Section 23, Mechanicsburg Township, Sangamon County, Ill., Rural Delivery Route No. 21, Dawson. He was born five miles from Harpers Ferry, West Virginia, October 27, 1833, a son of John and Mary (Wadsworth) Sagle, natives respectively of Virginia and of Maryland. His parents, who married in Virginia, had nine children, all born in that State, all of whom have passed away. The family moved from West Virginia to Ohio and settled in Muskingum County, where the elder Sagle farmed successfully until his death, which occurred in 1872, when he was sixty-seven years old. His wife had died in 1852. John Sagle served his country as a soldier in the war of 1812-14. His father, Peter Sagle, emigrated from Germany to America during the Revolutionary War and fought for the cause of the colonies in that struggle. Mr. Sagle's grandparents in the maternal line were born and reared near Fredericksburg, Md.

Mr. Sagle was educated in Virginia and Ohio and in early life helped his father in his farming operations. In 1853 he went to New Orleans, whence he came in 1854 to Illinois, settling in Sangamon County. He farmed in Rochester Township forty-nine years (1854-1903), then sold out and moved to a farm of twenty-five acres in Mechanicsburg Township, which he owned and occupied. He was a Republican and he and his good wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Sagle married, in Rochester Township, March 25, 1858, Miss Josephine Sidener, born five miles from Lexington, Fayette County, Ky., a daughter of George Sidener, who came to Illinois in 1849, settling on a farm which he bought in Clear Lake Township, where he died in 1866 and his wife in 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Sidener had ten children, six daughters and four sons, of whom three are now living: Mrs. Sagle; Richard Sidener, of Springfield, Ill.; Rebecca, wife of Thomas Nicholson, of Springfield. Mr. Sagle was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln and helped to build the Lincoln home in Springfield, Ill. Mr. Sagle died March 28, 1911, and his widow and his son Harvey live in the old home.
SAMS, Alexander, a useful and respected citizen of Springfield, is a veteran of the Civil War and a man of upright honesty and probity. He was born in Brown County, Ind., August 10, 1841, a son of Amon and Rebekah (Fiske) Sams, both of whom were natives of Brown County, Ohio. The parents moved from Ohio to Brown County, Ind., and thence to Peoria County, Ill., where they spent the remainder of their lives. The father was a soldier in the Black Hawk War, also in the Mexican War. The grandfather of Alexander Sams came to Ohio when that State was a wilderness, and the family is of hardy pioneer stock.

Alexander Sams spent his boyhood on a farm and in the schools of Ripley County, Ind., and Peoria County, Ill., and has lived in the latter State since he was eight years old. He has always worked hard and has been sober and honest. He is now professionally retired, but is able to work if it were necessary, and retains the happy good nature which has been his through life. He has lived in Springfield sometime and has always taken great interest in the welfare and improvement of the community. He is a true friend, a kind neighbor, and ready to anything in his power for the cause of progress. He is a devout member of the Baptist Church and in politics is a Republican.

Mr. Sams enlisted, at Pekin, Ill., in 1862, in Company K, Sixty-eighth Illinois Infantry, served five months, and was mustered out in the same year. He re-enlisted at Peoria, Ill., in 1864, in Company E, One Hundred Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry, was discharged and again enlisted, at Springfield, in Company K, Forty-seventh Illinois Infantry, and altogether served over two years. He first served under Captain Jones, the second term under Captain Odell, and the third term under Captain Rope. He served as picket a great deal of the time and was forced to undergo many trials, hardships, and dangers. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

The marriage of Mr. Sams occurred in Fulton County, Ill., August 12, 1874, when he was united with Sarah Jane Chambers, who was born August 20, 1851, daughter of Robert Chambers and his wife, who were of old Ohio families. Five children were born to Mr. Sams and his wife, namely: Albert E., May 12, 1875; Ada N., in 1877; Edie L. in 1880; Alfred A. and Allen E., twins, born August 1, 1884. The family reside at 1133 North Fifth Street.

SANDERS, Charles Beverly, Jr., one of Sangamon County’s progressive and energetic young business men, who holds the responsible position of Superintendent of the Boynton Telephone Company at Pleasant Plains, Ill., was born in Ashland, Cass County, Ill., September 23, 1874, a son of Charles B. and Mary (Teal) Sanders.

When Mr. Sanders was about four years of age the family moved to Lamar, Mo., and at that place he began his school days. As a youth he carried on the work of a farmer’s boy, and when only sixteen years of age rented land and began farming on his own account, operating a property near Lamar for three years. In 1893 he went to Kansas City and for a time was engaged in work in a nursery, but eventually became employed by the Armour Packing Company, and in 1894 went to Galveston, Tex., where he engaged in selling horses. He was employed as the overseer of a plantation at Richmond, Tex., for one year and in 1895 went to Houston and later to Sherman, Tex., but finally returned to Kansas City and in 1896 came to Pleasant Plains. In 1898 he was foreman of an extra gang on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and in 1900 went to work for the Western Union Telegraph Company, and during the same year became connected with the Boynton Telephone Company. In 1901 he was given the position of Superintendent, which he has ably filled to the present time, having entire charge of the building of a system that has over 700 full-wired telephones, and Sanders has a comfortable home, situated on North Maple Street in Pleasant Plains. He is a Democrat in politics, and has been for six years a member of the Board of Aldermen, as well as being a member of the Board of Education. He is progressive in his views and considered one of his community’s most dependable citizens.

On August 12, 1903, Mr. Sanders was united in marriage with Miss Rosa Kundig, who was born at Pleasant Plains, January 17, 1871, daughter of Henry and Catherine (Volkart) Kundig, natives of Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Kundig came to America in 1868 and settled at Pleasant Plains, where he established a shoe business and later a grocery store, and continued to conduct the latter until his death in 1901. His daughter, Mrs. Sanders, conducted the business for a time after her father’s death and then sold the stock. To Mr. and Mrs. Sanders have been born four children: Amy was born July 19, 1906; William II., December 29, 1905; Harold Eugene, October 12, 1907; and Nina Eloise, November 5, 1910.

SANDERS, Charles B., Sr., who is now living retired at Pleasant Plains, is a representative of one of Sangamon County’s oldest and most honored families. He was born May 2, 1828, in Fauquier County, Va., a son of Albon Nash and Lucinda O. (Powell) Sanders, he a native of Fauquier County and she of Fairfax County, Va., in which latter county they were married in 1826, after which they settled on a farm. There their children were born, as follows: Charles B.; Albert P., who made a trip overland to Colorado in 1850, and has since been lost to the family; Joseph Britton, who enlisted, in the One Hundred Seventeenth Illinois Infantry during the Civil War, contracted illness, was honorably discharged and came home, where he died in September, 1873; Wilson Fenton, also a member of that regiment, served four years, was honorably discharged and died from the effects of army life in 1883, at the home of his brother, Charles B.; Armstrong, born February 3, 1837, died October 12, 1896; Anne Elizabeth, born in 1840, married Bushrod Powell April 9, 1861, and died in November, 1863, he surviving her until November, 1865; William E., born in 1844, is a stock operator of Richland, Mo.; and Mary V., born May 21, 1847, married Abraham Epier, and both are deceased.

The family left Virginia in 1844 and Albon N. Sanders followed farming in Cass County, Ill., for twenty years, at the end of which time he purchased the hotel property at Pleasant Plains and continued to operate it until his death, January 15, 1893, at the age of ninety-two years, his wife having passed away in 1870. For twenty-four years he served as Postmaster, and was well known and highly respected throughout his section. He and his wife were earnest Christian people, he being a member of the Baptist Church, while she was a Presbyterian.

Britton Sanders, the grandfather of Charles B., was of English ancestry and was reared in Fauquier County, Va., where he married Love Gill, February 12, 1798. They made a home in Virginia, he finally locating in Loudoun County, where he died about 1838. His first wife died in Fauquier County, and he married (second) Annie Ekahel, who died in Loudoun County. He was a farmer and an old “Hard Shell” Baptist minister. Of their twelve children, eleven grew to maturity: Robert Henry, who died in Nashville, Tenn.; Albon Nash, father of Charles B.; Charles L., who died in Nashville, Tenn.; Sidney H., who died in Nashville; Samuel A., who died in Loudoun County, Va.; Beverly C., a prominent wholesale merchant in Baltimore, was appointed Collector of Port at San Francisco by Millard P. Fillmore, but returned to Baltimore and there died December 25, 1883; Lewis Fenton, about 1834 emigrated to Illinois, settled in Beardstown, was for several years County Clerk, and died September 27, 1885; John Gill died in young manhood in Loudoun County, Va.; Wilson S. died on the old home farm, was Colonel of a regiment in the Indian war in Florida, and later became a prominent politician, and died August 23, 1885; and Mary Love, who married Fenton Vandewenter, emigrated to Cass County, Ill., about 1854, located in Springfield in 1857, and died there about 1903.

Mr. Sanders’ grandfather was Joseph Powell, who was a German and settled in Virginia in Colonial days, his life being spent in Fairfax County, where he was a man of note, a County Commissioner and later for many years High Sheriff. He was a prominent Mason, and as a member of that order attended the funeral of George Washington. Of his family of seven children all are deceased: Bushrod died about 1838; Edmund died in Fairfax County; Jane E. married William B. Peak, came to Illinois in 1837, settling in Salisbury, where he opened the first store in the town; Walter, for many years Deputy Sheriff of Fairfax County, Va., was the first Sheriff elected under the new constitution; Joseph had made arrangements to emigrate to Illinois but took sick and died; Lucinda O. and Beverly. Beverly Powell came to Illinois with Mr. and Mrs. Peak in 1837 and settled in Springfield, but in 1844 went back to Virginia and persuaded Albon N. Sanders, by means of letters written by Abraham Lincoln, to come to this State. On settling in Sangamon County he became a staunch friend of Mr. Lincoln, although while in Virginia he had been a slave owner. Beverly Powell, who was Mr. Lincoln’s best man at his marriage, went home to settile up the estate and while there died.

Charles B. Sanders came to Illinois with his parents when he was sixteen years of age and settled in Cass County, having received his education in his native State. After the family settled on the farm he took charge of it until 1855, when he went to McLean County, Ill., with his two brothers, Wilson and Joseph, and there they operated a farm until 1862, when the two brothers enlisted for army service and during the following year the farm was sold. Mr. Sanders came to Pleasant Plains in 1861, took charge of the hotel time and went into the hotel business on the old State Road, and successfully conducted it until 1804, when he sold out to his father, at which time Mr. Sanders removed to Litchfield, Ill., and embarked in the insurance business. In 1870 his mother died and he and his wife returned to Pleasant Plains to take charge of the hotel, but in 1874 they went to Ashland, where Mr. Sanders took charge of the Transient House. In 1875 he removed to Barton County, Mo., where he purchased a farm, and remained there until 1893. At the time of the death of his father, Mr. Sanders came back and took charge of the hotel again, and purchased a small piece of land near Pleasant Plains, which he has since made his home. Both he and his wife united with the Methodist Episcopal Church when they were young, and both have always taken a great interest in church work. Mr. Sanders was a charter member of the Masonic Lodge, joining over fifty years ago. In 1846 he heard John Hawkins, of Baltimore, speak on Temperance, and since that time has tasted no liquor. To this he attributes his long life and vigorous health. He walks erect without a cane, reads without glasses and has never had to rely upon the services of a doctor.

On March 7, 1861, Mr. Sanders was married to Mary E. Teal, who was born at Carlisle, Nicholas County, Ky., December 31, 1837, a daughter of Benjamin M. and Ellnor (Bruce) Teal, a lineal descendant of Robert Bruce of Scotland. Her mother’s parents emigrated to Georgia, and from Georgia to Kentucky in early days, and in 1855 came to Sangamon County, Ill., purchasing a farm in McLean County during the following year. Her father died in 1882, aged seventy-one years, and her mother in 1888, in Barton County, Mo, both being buried in McLean County, Ill. To them were born seven children: Mrs. Sanders; Lucian, widow of John Pumpelly, a resident of Bellflower, McLean County; Samuel F., a farmer in North Dakota; George R., a farmer of Barton County, Mo.; Edward H., a farmer of Iroquois County, Ill.; Sarah J., who married William Briggs, and both died in McLean County; and Frances T., widow of William Briggs, his second wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Sanders have had three children: Mabel, born November 5, 1870, in Pleasant Plains, is the wife of G. H. Lange, of Springfield, Ill.; Elinor, born November 9, 1871, in Pleasant Plains, is the wife of William J. Graham, a farmer of Barton County, Mo.; and Charles B. Jr.

SANDERS, Elisha.—Pawnee, Ill., has many residents now living retired from active life after years spent in agricultural operations, who can remember the time when Sangamon County was little better than a wilderness, and who have watched its growth and development year by year until it is now one of the most productive counties in the State. One of these retired citizens who has a large acquaintance is Elisha Sanders, who was born in Pawnee Township, April 26, 1848, a son of Robert E. and Eliza (Funderburk) Sanders.

Mr. Sanders' paternal grandfather was a native of Kentucky and came to Illinois the winter before the deep snow, settling on Spring Creek. Isabel, born November 5, 1870, later located near Pawnee, where he spent the balance of his life and there died, as did also his wife, who bore the maiden name of Elizaethauss. Grandfather Funderburk was a native of Sangamon County, where his life was spent. Robert E. Sanders was born in Kentucky, May 26, 1827, but lived in Sangamon County practically all of his life, engaging in agricultural pursuits there until his death, January 3, 1906, in Pawnee. The children of Robert E. and Eliza Sanders were as follows: Mary E., Margaret A., Eliza J., John E., Thomas E., James W., Sarah, Robert W., Emerson, Dennis and Ezra, all living; and Jennie, Susan, Clarence and an infant, deceased. During the war Mr. Sanders was one of the leading Democrats in his section of the State, and his duties as Collector led him into considerable trouble, several attempts being made to search his house by the enemies of the Democratic party. On March 5, 1865, his brother, J. E. Sanders, was killed by a shot fired by Barney Vanarsdale, who in company with Jim Lemon and another were robbing Mr. James Todge's store in Pawnee. Vanarsdale and Lemon were captured and hung in the jail yard at Springfield by Sheriff Crafton.

Elisha Sanders was educated in the country schools of Pawnee Township, and remained at home, working on the farm with his father until he had reached the age of twenty-two years, when he started to work on various farms in the vicinity and so continued until 1883, in which year he went to Kansas. He farmed there until 1886, then returned to Pawnee and purchased property, and has made his home there to the present time. Mr. Sanders is a Democrat, a farmer, and is County Auditor; he served as Constable of Pawnee for four years and was also on the police force for three years. Fraternally he is connected with the Odd Fellows, the Court of Honor and the Modern Woodmen, while his religious affiliation is with the Primitive Baptist Church, his wife and children belonging to the Methodist Episcopal denomination, and has two children, Helen and Louis; Lillian P., born in Sangamon County, August 2, 1875, married H. O. Barnes, of Macoupin County, and now resides in Springfield, where he is a teacher in the high school; Earl V., born in Elk County, Kan., is now a mail carrier and makes his home with his parents; an infant, born July 7, 1871, who died the same day; James E., born September 16, 1880, died January 11, 1882, in Pawnee; and an infant born and buried December 2, 1882.

SANER, Benedict.—Contracting and building operations assume important proportions in a city like Springfield, and those conducting them reap a large benefit provided their work is honest and they live up to their contracts. One of the many men for many years associated with these lines of endeavor is Benedict Saner, born in Switzerland, January 23, 1826, a son of John and Salile (Hornor) Saner, both born in the same country. The father was owner of a sawmill, but came to America in 1855, locating near Utica, in New York State, to be with his son, Benedict, who had come a year before. After a short stay he returned to Switzerland, where he died, but his widow survived him some years, finally passing away in Sangamon County. There were four sons and two daughters in the family. Benedict Saner is the only survivor. A brother, Edward, died in Springfield February 8, 1911, at the age of eighty-one years. Benedict Saner lived in New York State ten years, and then in 1862 came to Springfield. He had received a good education in his own land and learned the saw-mill business from his father. When only eighteen years old he entered the regular army and was stationed at Naples for four years, and witnessed many marvelous events, including the eruption of Vesuvius. After coming to Springfield he learned the trade of plastering with a brother-in-law, and evolved his own contract plasterer, continuing in this line of business until his retirement a few years since. He has held and carried out contracts on some of the most important buildings in Springfield, including the first Leland Hotel.

Before leaving Switzerland, in 1849, Mr. Sanner was married to Joanna Sanner, a school teacher, and they emigrated to the native of Switzerland, whose parents remained in their native land, where they died. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sanner, six sons and three daughters. Two were born before the family emigration. Those living are: Barbara, who keeps house for her father; Carrie, wife of Matthias Kramer; Mrs. Mary Reece of LeRoy, Ill.; Albert and Charles J. plasterers, who live in Springfield. There are thirteen grandchildren in the family, as well as three great-grandchildren.

Mr. Sanner is a Roman Catholic, belonging to the Church of the Sacred Heart, and is a member of the community and a Democrat. He is one of the oldest residents of Springfield. He was personally acquainted with Mr. Lincoln and remembers that great man reverently and tenderly. The pleasant family home at No. 516 South Eleventh Street has been the residence of Mr. Sanner for half a century, and is his own property. He also has several holdings in the city. A man who stands high in the estimation of those who know and love him, he is one of the representative men of this locality, and his recollections of early days are exceedingly entertaining.

SANNER, John W., a farmer and stock-raiser living near the city water works at Springfield, has occupied his present farm for about sixteen years, and has been successful in his operations. Though he owns but a small tract of land he makes the most of it and makes it yield a fair profit. He is a native of Sangamon County and was born March 1, 1870, son of John A. and Anna A. (Walkus) Sanner, the former born in September, 1823, and the latter April 25, 1837, both natives of St. Mary County, Md. The father was a carpenter and he and his wife came to Illinois in 1865, locating in Springfield, and for a number of years worked as finisher in carpenter work in the employ of James Sutton. He continued this occupation until his death, in 1893. His widow survived him about two years.

John W. Sanner was educated in Sangamon County school and was reared to farm work. When he reached the age of sixteen years he found employment as fireman and later engineer with the Springfield City Water Works, remaining with this company for twenty-three years. In September, 1909, he took up his present occupation, which he finds congenial and profitable. He moved to the city of Springfield in 1893, and two years later came to his present location, where he has a comfortable home. He stands well in the community and is regarded as a man of industry and integrity, carrying on his work to advantage and interest in the progress and welfare of his township and county.

Mr. Sanner was married in Springfield, June 10, 1890, to Katie Smith, born February 6, 1871, daughter of John W. and Nanna A. Smith, the former born December 12, 1859, and the latter June 15, 1891. The former, a farmer, and the latter a housewife, have been married for over thirty years. They have resided in Sangamon County, where they are members of the Methodist Church and in politics is a Republican. He has a fine family of children and is a man who is very fond of his home.

SARGEANT, George, retired farmer of Dawson, Sangamon County, is of English nativity and his life is an illustration of the value of British blood in the building up of sturdy and American citizenship. He was born in Lancashire, December 23, 1837, a son of George Sr. and Jane (Todd) Sargeant, members of old English families. His father, a farmer, brought his family to America in 1845, sailing from Hull and landing six weeks later at Quebec, Canada. From there he moved to Sangamon County, N. Y., where he settled on a farm and lived about ten years. In 1844 George Sargeant Jr. came west to Illinois, and in the following year the family came on, locating in Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, where the elder Sargeant died in 1857. Mrs. Sargeant had passed away in 1856.

The subject of this sketch was educated in England and initiated into the mysteries of good farming under his father's able tutelage. He came to the United States with his parents and lived with them until the beginning of our Civil War. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company A, One hundred and Seventh Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he served till the close of the war. He was mustered out at Benton Barracks, St. Louis, Mo., after having taken part in many battles, notably in the Siege of Vicksburg. After the war he resumed farming near Springfield, Ill., but soon located in Mechanicsburg Township, Sangamon County, where he continued in that occupation successfully till 1906, when he retired from active life and moved to Dawson. Here he bought several pieces of property, and will pass his declining years. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and Mrs. Sargeant is identified with the Woman's Relief Corps.

Mr. Sargeant married Miss Elizabeth Dillon in 1858. She was born in Sangamon County, a daughter of John Dillon, an early settler in this part of Illinois and a farmer in Sangamon County till his death. Mrs. Sargeant bore her husband a daughter, Ada, wife of Peter Pope, of Dawson, and died in 1866. In November, 1870, Mr. Sargeant married Miss Mary Waterman. She was born in Sangamon County, a daughter of Charles Waterman, a native of Kentucky. Mr. Waterman came early to Mechanicsburg, and there worked at his trade of harnessmaker several years, until he abandoned it to become a farmer, following that occupation as long as he lived. Mrs. Sargeant bore her husband nine children: John, the eldest, is a farmer in Missouri; Chester is farming in Sangamon County; Flora is the wife of James Pettit, of Buckhart. Sangamon County; Ethel and Harry are members of their mother's household; the others have passed away. Mrs. Sargeant was born November 15, 1847. There are nine grandchildren and five great-grandchildren in the family.

SARVER, James P., a highly respected citizen of Springfield, and a veteran of the Civil War, has been a resident of the city since 1869, and is an artist of some reputation in Illinois. He was born at Warren, Pa., January 10, 1840, a son of Andrew and Rachel Sarver, of Ohio. The father was first a cabinet-maker and later a painting contractor, and in 1850 came to Illinois, located in Joliet and engaged in painting contracting. Later he moved to South Dakota, took up a claim there, where his death occurred, at the age of eighty years. By his first wife he had eleven children, four of whom now survive, namely: Mrs. Holdeman, of Oregon, Mrs. Fisher, of Illinois; Mary, of Ohio, and James P. The mother died when James P. Sarver was very young. Andrew Sarver married Sarah McCracken as his second wife, and of their six children the following four now survive: William, George, Edward and Martha.

Two years later he went to Chicago and there studied sign painting and spent eight months studying under a scenic artist who worked at McVicker's Theatre. Returning to Joliet at the end of two years spent in Chicago, Mr. Sarver engaged in carriage painting until his enlistment in 1863, in Company B, Twentieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he served until September 1, 1862. After his discharge he returned to Joliet and remained there until 1866, then went to Attica, Ft. Wayne and Logansport, Ind., coming to Springfield in 1869. He has since spent much of his time in sign painting, although he has taken up extensively the painting of portraits in oil from living objects, and has a large collection in oil, some of them ranging in value to the amount of several hundred dollars. He has a natural talent for the higher branch of art and his skill in portraiture is a source of much pleasure to himself and has won the admiration and appreciation of those able to judge of its merits. Mr. Sarver is well known as a man of high principle and strict integrity, and is well regarded by all who know him.

Mr. Sarver was married in Joliet, in 1864, to Lizzie Savage, a native of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., daughter of John Savage. Her parents spent their later years at Ottawa and Gardner, Ill. SAUNDERS, Milton (deceased).—The number of farmers who have succeeded in winning wealth from the soil increases each year as farming methods improve, yet there were many in the earlier days who found no difficulty in earning plenty from the land they wrested from the wilderness. One of the reliable farmers and one who thoroughly understood his work was the late Milton Saunders, whose memory is tenderly cherished by his family and friends. Mr. Saunders was born in Springfield, October 3, 1836, being one of the first white children born there. His father was Jonathan R. Saunders, born near Frankfort, Ky., who married Sarah McKinney, born in Virginia. They came to Sangamon County in an early day, about 1826, and farmed for years in Sangamon County, where they eventually died.

Milton Saunders grew up in Sangamon County, receiving a common school education, supplemented by a course at the Jacksonville Institute. Having learned how to farm with his father, when he began for himself he knew just how to go about it and developed his fine farm of 160 acres, twelve miles north of Springfield on the Peoria Road, into one of the best pieces of farming property in his part of the State. In pioneer days there was a public inn on this farm, and it is yet known as the "Twelve-mile Place." Mr. Saunders also owned some valuable real estate in Sangamon County. In 1892 he retired from his farm and came to Springfield. There he enjoyed a brief period of rest, passing away October 18, 1902, and his remains were interred in Oak Ridge Cemetery. He was a consistent member of the Christian Church, dying firm in its faith. The Republican party claimed his vote and influence, but he was never willing to accept office.

On August 28, 1872, he was united in marriage with Martha Beeley, born in Illinois August 31, 1842, who survives him. They had three children: Lillian, Marcia and Milton, married to Helen Schauerberg, of Hillboro, and they have one daughter, Helen. Three children of Mr. Saunders are a well liked in the community, and his memory is cherished for what he accomplished as a sturdy, reliable, upright man, who always tried to do his duty and governed his life according to the religious faith he professed.

SAXER, George, an enterprising German-American citizen of Springfield, III., has for some years been successfully engaged in gardening. He was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, April 7, 1840, son of Martin and Mary (Capes) Saxer, both natives of Germany, who died in Perry, Ill., the father in 1869 and the mother in 1884. Martin Saxer was a shoemaker by trade and in 1862 enlisted in the Seventy-seventh Illinois Regiment, under Colonel Matthews, serving to the end of the war. He and his wife had one son, the subject of this sketch. They came to America about 1850 and settled at Perry, where they spent the rest of their lives.

George Saxer was educated in the public schools of his native country, and at the age of fourteen years became employed in a patent leather factory. He enlisted, in 1861, in the Prussian Army, and served five and one-half years, two and one-half years as Corporal, being discharged in 1867. After his marriage, which occurred in Germany, August 16, 1863, he emigrated to the United States and located in Springfield, which has since been his home. His wife, Matalline Denchlow, was born in Germany, daughter of Shunon and Mary Denchlow, both of whom lived to be very old and died in Germany. SCANLAN, Edmund J., a machinist of the Wabash Railroad shops, and one of the substantial residents of Springfield, living at No. 1901 South Sixth Street, has been deceased with the Wabash shops since 1856, his long service beginning with an apprenticeship. He was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, December 19, 1838. He came to the United States when only five years old, being brought by his eldest brother William. Three brothers and the parents had already come to the land of promise, locating at Hartford, Conn. The little party sailed from Liverpool and spent seven long weeks on the voyage. The family was reunited at Hartford, but a year later moved to New Haven. Little Edmund received a common school education in the several places they lived and in 1856 came to Springfield.

The father, Thomas Scanlan, was also born in County Tipperary, Ireland, and was a farmer there. After coming to this country he worked as a switchman. After locating in Springfield he obtained the same kind of work, and died there in 1872. He married Bridget Stack, who died at the age of eighty-six years. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Scanlan were: Elizabeth, Mrs. Henry Morley, deceased: Edmund William, of this city, married Catherine Cullen; Mary Monia, at home; John, Thomas and Catherine, deceased. The political opinions of Mr. Scanlan make him a Democrat and he is faithful in his support of his party. Honest, faithful, hardworking, Mr. Scanlan sets many a younger man an example, and is well liked in the shops where he has passed over half a century in arduous work.

SCANLAN, John J.—Some of the very best men of our county, State and Nation, are self-made, and many of these have come to America from foreign shores. Among these representatives of other countries, none rank higher than those from Ireland, which has contributed more than its quota to the intelligent citizenship here. In speaking of such men none are more worth the consideration in a work of this character than John J. Scanlan, who is engaged in a real estate business in Springfield. He has been a lifelong resident of this city, and now lives in his beautiful home at No. 1401 South Eighth Street. He was born on East Capital Avenue, Springfield, February 25, 1861, a son of James and Honora (Griffin) Scanlan.

James Scanlan was born in Ireland and as a young man left County Tipperary for the United States. On locating in this country he secured employment as a railroad conductor and for several years was in the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company. He died in Springfield in 1867, his widow surviving him for some years. John J. Scanlan was their only son.

The latter received his education in the parochial school of the Immaculate Conception, and when he was but eleven years old went out to work on farms, receiving seven dollars per month for his services, and continuing thus for five years. He then drove a grocery wagon for several years and was engaged in various enterprises for several years more, including mule driving and mining. Meanwhile his father had died, and the mother mortgaged her little home in order that the boy might have a chance to go into business, and he accordingly invested the money in a grocery at the corner of South Grand Avenue and Eleventh Street. He rented for a few years, then bought the property on the southeast corner, across the street, where he put up a brick building and continued in business for twelve years, but finally sold it. For the past few years he has been engaged in real estate business and has business in many counties. Besides his home, he owns a number of other dwellings and a valuable farm of 240 acres in Woodside Township.

Mr. Scanlan was married in Springfield, May 14, 1890, to Cecilia A. Merrick, daughter of Michael and Bridget Merrick, and they have one child, Gertrude, born February 19, 1891, who is a teacher of music. The family attend the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

In his business dealings Mr. Scanlan has always been actuated by motives of honesty and integrity, and has reached his present enviable position through open-handed transactions. Having a reputation unsullied by doubt of his sincerity of purpose, and being a man of upright character, he stands high in public esteem. He is a great lover of his family and has always had their interests at heart. Genial and kindly of manner and nature, he has made hosts of friends, among whom he is very popular. Always interested in the cause of education, and maintaining high ideals with regard to everything of a public nature which he believes will advance the moral, financial or intellectual welfare of the community in which he lives, he wields a strong influence for good. To such men as he is due the credit for the remarkable growth and development of Springfield, Sangamon County and the State of Illinois.

SCHAAF, Anton.—German emigration has not ceased, fortunately for this country, for it has no better citizens than those born in the Fatherland. In both war and peace the German-Americans have proven their worth. One of the younger generation of this reliable class of men in Springfield is Anton Schaaf, born in Uber Ruhr, Reiland, Germany, September 11, 1880, being a son of William and Minnie (Bloomer) Schaaf, the latter born in Rothausen, Germany. The parents were born in 1854 and 1858. The mother died in Germany, in 1883, having borne to this earth three children. Three years after the mother's death the father married Theresa Dietz, in Germany, and three daughters were born of this union. The father came to Springfield, arriving Thanksgiving eve, 1889. This continued to be his home until his death, January 19, 1911. He was a man of sober, industrious habits, and became a responsible citizen of this community. His religious affiliations were with St. Vincent's German Catholic Church. He belonged to the Catholic Order of Foresters, and the German Society. tis; Fannie, wife of Jesse Basket. Mr. and Mrs. Schaaf became the parents of two children, Rosie, born July 29, 1903, and Josephine, born April 17, 1905. Mr. Schaaf is a member of the U. M. W. A. In religious faith he is a Catholic and politically a Democrat. He owns his own home at No. 2185 East Jefferson Street. While his life has not been eventful, he has steadfastly adhered to his work, carefully saving his money, and now has a pleasant home and enjoys the respect of those with whom he associates.

SCHAEFFER, Michael, a retired farmer and a veteran of the Civil-War, who owns a comfortable home at 1020 South Sixteenth Street, Springfield, is one of the many enterprising German-American citizens of the city who have identified themselves with its welfare and progress. He was born in Germany, February 18, 1836, and came to the United States with his parents in 1844. He received his education in the country schools of St. Clair County, Ill., and as a boy assisted with the work on his father's farm. He is a son of John H. and Christina (Gield) Schaeffer, natives of Germany. The parents emigrated to the United States and lived on a farm in St. Clair County until their deaths.

After leaving school Michael Schaeffer worked at farming until his enlistment, August 25, 1861, in St. Clair County, in Company B, Forty-third Illinois Infantry, under Captain Samuel Shimmer, serving one year. He was wounded at Shiloh, the bloodiest battle of the war, sent to a hospital in St. Louis, April 17, 1862, then home until his wound was healed, and was discharged August 5th. He returned to St. Louis, and re-enlisted, January 5, 1864, at Belleville, Ill., in Company H, Eighth Illinois Cavalry, under Captain Dowd. He joined the Eastern Army, being sent to Washington, D. C., and was mustered out of the service at St. Louis. He took part in many skirmishes and was one of the nine men of his company who came out of the battle of Shiloh with their lives. He had many narrow escapes but was never captured by the enemy. He proved a brave and faithful soldier and has reason to be proud of his record. He is a prominent member of the G. A. R.

At the close of the war Mr. Schaeffer returned to St. Clair County, where he resided until 1876, then moved to Jackson County, and thence to Springfield, where he enjoys the rest he has earned by long years of toil and endeavor. He was a most ambitious and enterprising farmer and became successful through unremitting hard work. He is a member of the Lutheran Church and in politics is a Democrat. He is well known among those with whom he has had business dealings for his uprightness and integrity, and has many warm personal friends.

Mr. Schaeffer was married (first) in Jackson County, Ill., to Mary Berger, a native of St. Clair County, daughter of George and Eva (Maron) Bergner, both natives of Germany and early settlers in Illinois. Mr. Bergner was a soldier in the Mexican War. Four children were born of Mr. Schaeffer's first marriage, namely: Caroline, born in Jackson County, February 11, 1871; Annie, July 16, 1872; Minnie, December 25, 1873; Elizabeth, died May 18, 1877. To Mr. Schaeffer's second marriage one child was born, Albert, May 21, 1881, in Jackson County.

SCHAMEL, Albert (deceased), a successful carpenter and builder of Springfield for many years, was a native of that city, born April 24, 1849, a son of Conrad and Maria (Kritzer) Schamel, both natives of Bavaria, Germany, the mother born at New Stot. The father was born May 26, 1811, and the mother December 7, 1823, and both were the only issue of their parents. He was a miller by trade, and upon coming to America settled four miles north of Springfield, in 1848. remaining there until his death, which occurred March 6, 1868. The mother died March 9, 1867. The father had secured 320 acres of land, which is still undivided, and is cultivated by the children. There were five sons and five daughters born to Conrad Schamel and wife, namely: Conrad, Jr. who died about twenty-one years ago, being a wealthy farmer of Taylorville, Ill.; George J. a wealthy farmer of South Dakota, died March 6, 1904; John G., a wealthy ranchman of South Dakota, and a veteran of the Civil War, died November 8, 1910; Catherine, wife of Jenson Thompson, died twenty-six years ago; Thomas; Elizabeth, on the home farm; Mary married Jenson Thompson as his second wife, and he was a wealthy farmer, but is now deceased; Ida, wife of George Stormsfer lives on the home farm; Albert; and two who died in infancy.

The education of Albert Schamel was acquired in what was known as the "Liberty School," a log building about four miles north of Springfield, and he worked on his father's farm until he was about fifteen years of age when, having a strong inclination in that direction, he began learning the trade of a carpenter and joiner. In 1876 he moved to the city of Springfield, which continued his home until his demise. He erected his home in 1895, on two forty-four-foot lots, pleasantly located at No. 1440 North Third Street. He retained his interest, which was one-sixth, in the old home farm of 320 acres, and was prosperous in a gratifying degree in the career he chose to follow. He acquired a reputation for ability and integrity in business and built up a good patronage.

1873, the Rev. Father Hulé officiating, Anna Elizabeth Schwarberg, who was born at Girard, Ill., February 21, 1854, a daughter of Christian Henry and Rachel (Way) Schwarberg, both of whom live with their daughter, Mrs. Schamel. Mr. and Mrs. Schamel became the parents of one child, Maude Elizabeth, born March 5, 1870, living at Macom, Ill., where she holds the position of Supervisor of Music in the Macom Normal College. Mrs. Schamel was a member of the Woodmen, the Fraternal Army, the Loyal Americans, Federation of Labor, and Carpenters’ Union, and in politics was a Democrat. He was a Lutheran in religious belief. He was always ready to do his part to promote any public measure. He served as Paying Inspector for three years, under the Woodruff administration, and during 1905-07, inclusive, was Business Manager for the Carpenters’ Union. His maternal grandfather, Mr. Kritzer, was a stonecutter by trade, and cut stone for the old State Capitol, the Marine Bank Building, and the Episcopal Church. Mrs. Schamel is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Royal Neighbors. Mr. Schamel died December 8, 1911.

SCHARF, George Philip (deceased).—There is no way in which a man can better demonstrate his faith in the future of any community, than to invest in it. In its reality. Those investing in Springfield property during the early days have their faith gloriously justified, and can now reap the benefit of their foresightedness and loyalty. The late venerable George Philip Scharf was one of those keen, shrewd Germans who, coming there over fifty years ago, understood and appreciated the great future that lay before the little Illinois town, whose only distinction at that time was the fact of its being the State capital. Mr. Scharf was born near Heidelberg, in Baden, Germany, November 11, 1821, a son of George and Margaret (Hildebrandt), both natives of Germany. The father was a farmer and worked on his land until his sons killed by lightning, in 1847, and his widow, after struggling on there until 1853, in that year came to America, landing in New York on December 10th. From there she came directly to Springfield, choosing the home where Mr. Scharf resided until his death. The boyhood days of Mr. Scharf were spent in the country in his native land, where he was well educated and became a prosperous farmer. Upon coming to this country he began investing in Springfield reality, and before his death, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years, became one of the wealthy men of the county. During the Civil War he enlisted, but at the expiration of three weeks was honorably discharged on account of disability. His political affiliations made him a Democrat and he was always an excellent representative of the doctrines of that party. At one time he received from its nomination to the office of County Commissioner and was elected and performed his duties to the entire satisfaction of all. The German Lutheran Church, of Springfield, was his religious home after coming to Springfield. Mr. Scharf was married in Germany, December 15, 1850, to Roseana Long, born in Baden, Germany. Her parents never came to America, dying in their native land long ago. Mrs. Scharf died October 1, 1865. He passed on a long and useful life, filled with kindly, Christian acts. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Scharf: Adam, of Springfield; Will, deceased; Philip, who is engaged in teaming; Mrs. George Sourwine, whose husband is dead; and Elizabeth Milbers, the youngest of the family, who kept house for her father, and to whom he willed the home at 1230 North Ridgel Street. During his long residence there, Mr. Scharf was identified with many business interests of Springfield, as stockholder and director, in addition to owning much realty, and was naturally regarded as the city’s friend. The home he occupied is on the site first selected, and the house was built by him for his family two years ago. His children did well and were a credit to him. Mr. Scharf died December 5, 1910.

SCHEIBNER, John H.—Among the successful coal-mining operators in the vicinity of Springfield, Ill., John H. Scheibner, President and largest stockholder of the Springfield Cooperative Coal Company, takes a leading place. Mr. Scheibner has been in business on his own account since 1875 and before that time worked at mining for others, so he has had long years of experience in the business. He was born in Askolitz, Ersdorf, Germany, December 13, 1844, son of John Gottlieb and Christiane (Ginder) Scheibner. The father was born April 27, 1813, and the mother in 1815, and both spent their entire lives in Germany, where he died in 1896 and she in 1891. John G. Scheibner was a stockcutter. One son came to America in the fall of 1870 and died in 1885. A daughter came in 1883 and died in 1889, and both she and her brother are buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery, Springfield. The former was Secretary of the Springfield Co-operative Coal Company, and a partner of his brother, John H. He had eight children, four of whom are deceased and buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

John H. Scheibner received his education in the public schools of Germany, and after leaving school worked in an office until sixteen years old, then took up coal mining. He enlisted in the Saxony army in 1806, serving two years in the Austrian war with Prussia. In the fall of 1868 he emigrated to America, landing in New York, and proceeding directly to Springfield. He worked for a time in the old North Shaft mine, and in 1875 began operations on his own account, under the present firm name. He began business in rather a small way and has been able to increase it from time to time until he has one of the large enterprises of its kind in the community. He has been successful from the start, and is well known in business circles in Springfield. In 1883 he made a trip to his native land to see his mother, spending three months with her. He spent eleven days on the water on his way there and seventeen days on the return trip.

Mr. Scheibner was married, at Petersburg, Ill., October 21, 1880, to Miss Bettie Schmidt, born October 4, 1855, daughter of Leutwick and Lizzie (Bromlo) Schmidt. Her father came to America in 1871 (the year of the great Chicago fire), and located in Springfield, where he lived four years, then moved to a farm west of the city. Later he bought eighty acres of land in Cass County, Ill., and died there in 1907. The mother died in Germany in 1880. The daughter of Dr. J. J. Scheibner (brother of John H.), Christi Schiebner, was born in 1882, and for the last thirteen years has lived with her uncle and aunt. Mr. Scheibner owns a home at 1725 Sangamon Avenue and has seventy-three acres of land in the neighborhood. He is honest and upright in his business dealings and is highly respected by all who know him. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church and in politics is a Republican. He was a good soldier in the defense of his native country and participated in two most important battles, those at Kielch, Austria, and Kelkingrath, and was discharged in 1867, at Saxon, Germany. Mr. Scheibner and his wife have no children.

SCHIVERS, William David, who has recently purchased a blacksmith shop in Springfield, is a native of that city, born January 9, 1857, son of George Frederick William and Elizabeth (Walsh) Shevers, the former a native of Keokuk, Iowa, and the latter of Sangamon County, III. George F. W. Schevers came to Illinois as a boy and drove a grocery wagon for some time, then took up railroad work and was employed twenty-one years as railroad engineer. In 1894, on account of the strike on the Wabash road he left this line of work and became Assistant Fire Chief of Springfield, in the capacity of W. T. Kirby, at 463 East Jefferson Street, which is known as headquarters for horse men, and has been enjoying a good trade. He is industrious and prosperous and has a good business reputation, being honest and reliable and giving good service to his patrons. He is ambitious to succeed financially and seems to have the requisite push and energy to build up his present enterprise to larger proportions.

Mr. Schevers was married, in Springfield, October 30, 1906, to Miss Gertrude E. Thomason, of Alden, Ill., daughter of Richard and Elizabeth A. Thomason, who came from England to Illinois many years ago and settled at Alden, where Mr. Thomason engaged in wall building in a mine and lost his life in this work, in 1874. Mr. Schevers and his wife have no children. They reside in 1522 Peoria Road, Springfield. Mr. Schevers is a master horse-shoer and an expert in his line.

SCHILSKY, John.—During the past forty or fifty years Springfield has so materially changed that those who knew the place then can scarcely realize that it is the same now. One of the men who has witnessed these changes and has done his part in effecting them, is John Schils-ky, a German-American of the city. He was born in Germany, January 31, 1837, being a son of Joseph and Barbara (Judge) Schilsky, both of Germany. The father was a man of means, who rose to be Supreme Judge in Miesckowo Posen, Germany, and lived to be ninety-nine years of age, while his wife attained the unusual age of one hundred and ten years. They had eight children, of whom John is the only survivor that we know of. The paternal grandfather served fifty years in the Prussian army, Neither Joseph Schilsky nor his wife came to America.

John Schilsky was educated in Germany and was taught gardening. When only seventeen years old he enlisted in the German navy, and was on a gun-boat seven years, traveling to many ports. In 1864 Mr. Schilsky came to America, landing in Baltimore, where he remained for a short time, then came on to Springfield, which has been his home ever since. He worked for General McMahon for two years, and then went into gardening on his own account. He also assisted in the construction of the State House.

In 1876 was married, in Springfield, to Mary Schleder, born in Germany. Her parents lived out their lives in Germany, being farming people. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Schilsky: Joseph., in the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company at their round house; Albert, in the employ of the George J. Connelly Grocery Company as buying manager; and Anna, wife of Zephyr Rawling, of Springfield. There are two grandchildren in the family and one step-son, who has two children. The pleasant family residence at No. 963 West Jefferson Street, is owned by Mr. Al- bert Schilsky, his son, and he also owns other property. Being a consistent Roman Catholic, Mr. Schilsky is a member of SS. Peter and Paul parish. Politically, he is a Republican. Houest, industrious, a man of thrifty habits, Mr. Schilsky has worked hard and saved carefully, investing to good advantage, so that now he is in comfortable circumstances.

made cigar has gained in popularity on account of its cheapness in price, the fastidious smoker prefers those made by hand in factories owned by men who have spent their lives in the work. In spite of the fame of Havana cigars, those of domestic manufacture are equally good, and some of the leading cigar men of the country have their own specialties which they are ready to place in line with any which came from Cuba. One of the men thus ready to prove the superiority of his product is Fred J. Schlenker, of Springfield, a native of the city, born August 11, 1853, a son of Philip J. and Elizabeth Mary (Schmidt) Schlenker, who were born in New York City. The father was born August 16, 1825, and the mother, May 25, 1856. Coming to Sangamon County, Ill., the parents settled in Springfield in 1878. The maternal grandparents came to the county in 1850, where the grandfather passed away in 1892, but his widow survived until 1910. Both grandfathers served in the Civil War, being brave and efficient soldiers in the defense of the Union.

The education of Mr. Schlenker was secured in the public schools of Sangamon County, and at an early age he learned the cigar-making trade. He has worked at this ever since, becoming very proficient and making a success of his undertaking. Thus far he has found nothing that promised as much to him as his own line of work, consequently, has shown no desire to change it. He belongs to the Cigarmakers' Union. The Methodist Church claims his membership. Mr. Schlenker is married to his father, in considerable city reality, and has great faith in the future growth of Springfield. His life record has been a good one, and he is a young man of whom any community might well be proud.

SCHMIDT, Anton, one of the old retired German-American citizens of Springfield, Ill., has spent most of his life in farming and gardening, and has been industrious and thrifty, winning the respect of all who know him. He is a veteran of the Civil War, and having lived in Springfield since 1854, has seen many changes and improvements in the community. He remembers Abraham Lincoln well, having often seen him when first locating in Springfield. Mr. Schmidt was born in Westphalia, Germany, in November, 1829, son of John Schmidt and his wife, both natives of Germany, where they died. His father was a farmer and the boy was reared on a farm, attending school until fourteen years old, after which he was occupied in various ways until his emigration to America, in 1854. He was several weeks on the voyage and landed at Galveston, Tex., where he spent a short time, then came direct to Springfield, his home ever since.

July 28, 1861, Mr. Schmidt enlisted at St. Louis, Mo., in Company E, Third Missouri Volunteer Infantry, served three years and then returned to Springfield, where he again engaged in farming. He is a member of Stephenson Post, G. A. R., of Springfield, and much esteemed by his comrades. He belongs to Sacred Heart Roman Catholic Church and is active in church work. In politics he is a Democrat. He has been retired a number of years, and is one of the most popular men among his acquaintances. He owns the family home at 1014 East Edwards Street.

Mr. Schmidt was married, in Springfield, in 1859, to Miss Mary Woller, who was born in Germany and died in Springfield, in 1892. Her parents were farmers and both died in Germany. Nine children were born to Mr. Schmidt and his wife, of whom five are living.

SCHMIDT, Stephen, one of the oldest and best known German-American citizens of Springfield, has for several years been retired from active life. Mr. Schmidt was born in Westphalia, Germany, September 6, 1832, son of John Schmidt and his wife, both natives of Germany, who spent their entire lives in that country. They were farmers and Stephen Schmidt spent his boyhood on a farm, attending school until he was fourteen years of age. After leaving school he was employed at various occupations until 1853, when he emigrated to America and lived in New Orleans, where he spent a short time, then came north to St. Louis, making the journey on an old river boat which traveled up and down the Mississippi. After working a few months in St. Louis, Mr. Schmidt came to Springfield, his home since 1855.

All his life his home was here, and to Mr. Schmidt has worked hard and at rather small wages, but has been industrious and thrifty, and has been able to accumulate some property, having a nice home at 1501 East Cook Street. He is a devout Roman Catholic and belongs to Sacred Heart Parish. In politics he is a Democrat and takes considerable interest in public affairs. He is a thrifty, industrious, and considerate man. He greatly enjoys the society of his many friends and is of a kindly, optimistic nature.

Mr. Schmidt was married, in Springfield, to Miss Kate Otto, who was born in Germany and died in Springfield a few years since. Her parents spent their entire lives in Germany. She and her husband had no children.

SCHMIENZ, Martin, of Springfield, Ill., has all his active life been engaged in gardening and is very skillful in this line of work. He was born in Gottbus, near Berlin, Germany, December 25, 1844, son of Martin Schmienz, a tailor by trade, who died in Germany in early life. He and his wife had five children, four girls and one boy. One daughter married and lives near Melbourne, Australia. Others still reside in Germany.

Martin Schmienz was educated in his native country and there took up the study of gardening, which he followed until emigrating to America. He landed in New York City June 11, 1809, and proceeded to Milwaukee, Wis., where he was employed one year on a farm. He has been a resident of Springfield since March 27, 1850, when he entered the employ of Dr. F. J. Schneider, one of the best settlers in the city. Mr. Schneider is now living retired. He is conscientious and ambitious and has become the owner of a comfortable and pleasant home at 927 South College Street, where the family has resided since 1897.

Mr. Schneider was married in Springfield, May 1, 1875, to Miss Marie Richards, who was born in Germany, February 22, 1854. Her mother, Catherine Swartz, was born March 27, 1835, and her father in 1828. They were rather early settlers of Sangamon County, where they still reside. Two sons and two daughters were born to Mr. Schneider and his wife, namely: Katherine, born August 13, 1876; Rosa, born July 15, 1878; John A. Treasuerer of the Raine-Sattley Plow Works, at Springfield, is married and has a daughter, Marie Charlotte; Martin, clerk at the Raine-Sattley Plow Works. Mr. Schneider is a member of the German Lutheran Church and in politics is a Democrat. He is a man of ability and high standing and is highly respected by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance. He takes no active part in public affairs, although he is interested in the progress of the community.

SCHNEIDER, Daniel (deceased).—Many of the more progressive Germans have left their native land to come to the United States, where, owing to the careful training they have received, they are able to engage profitably in almost any line of work, and in time become as devoted to their adopted country as to the Fatherland. The late Daniel Schneider, of Springfield, belonged to the best class of German-Americans, and during the quarter of a century he lived in the city made many friends, who grieved with the family over his demise. He was born in Baden, Germany, December 8, 1826. After a six-year service in the German army, he came to the United States, in 1854, sailing from Havre to New Orleans. Coming north to St. Louis, he worked in that city for a year, then left it for Springfield, where for twenty-five years he worked at his trade of stone-cutting. During all these years he was in the employ of but two men, and was regarded as one of the most upright and steady of men, conscientious in his work and devoted to his family. He was a consistent member of SS. Peter and Paul Roman Catholic Church, and in politics a Democrat. He died May 3, 1882, being survived by his widow, who is now seventy-six years old.

Mr. Schneider was married in Springfield, May 24, 1857, to Louesa Andrews, born April 28, 1835, in Baden, Germany. She came to the United States in 1855, landing in New York, whence she came to Springfield. Mr. and Mrs. Schneider became the parents of thirteen children. Louesa, the oldest child, married Constantine Schuessler, and they had three children: Josephine, who married Hugh E. Prickett, lives in Springfield and has two children, Theresa Susannah and Mary Louesa; Frank J., and Mary Louesa, who died at the age of three months. The other children and wives of Mr. Schneider were: Fred, Charles, William, Emil, Henry, Sophia, Auau, Josephine and Frank, all now deceased; Henry (2), who married Gertrude Howard and died, leaving one child, Elizabeth Louesa; Theresa is unmarried and lives at home; Joseph, of Springfield, married Etta Baumann, and they have four children—Kate, William, Franklin and George, and one deceased. The family is well known in Springfield and the children are a credit to the sturdy, hard-working, honest father, who did his best, both by precept and example, to bring them up in the way he thought was right.

SCHNEIDER, John (deceased), who was for several years a resident of Springfield, was an enterprising and useful German-American citizen, and became actively interested in the local affairs of the community in which he lived and in the public affairs of his adopted country. He was born in Germany, of German parents, February 26, 1851. His father, Peter Schneider, was a farmer, and both he and his wife, Annie (Rice) Schneider, spent their entire lives in Germany.

John Schneider was educated in the country schools of his native country and lived on the farm with his parents until 1880, when he emigrated for America, landing in New York City. Soon afterward he went to the State of Arkansas, where he met and married Miss Annie Mary Corredel, and soon afterward brought his wife to Springfield. He entered the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company, and worked in their shops until his death. He was very industrious and thrifty, devoted to his family and popular with his friends. He was a devout Catholic and was a member of a church in Springfield. His widow owns the home at 1132 East South Grand Avenue, where she and her husband began housekeeping in 1881, and where she reared her family.

The marriage of Mr. Schneider occurred in Arkansas, June 20, 1881. His wife is a daughter of George and Anna Mary (Vaper) Corredel, both natives of Germany. Four children were born of this union, namely: Anna Mary, unmarried and living at home with her mother; Nicholas, a miner, unmarried, living in Seattle, Wash.; John, married and living in Jackson ville, Ill.; Charles, the youngest, living at college in Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Schneider was a Democrat in political views. His death occurred in Springfield, November 17, 1894, and his remains were interred in Calvary Cemetery. His memory is tenderly cherished by his family and his loss was mourned by many friends. He passed away in the prime of life, when the future seemed to hold many bright prospects for him, leaving a growing family and in the midst of a useful, busy life.

SCHNEPP, George, whose faithfulness and devotion to duty make him valuable not only to his employers but also to his community, is one of the substantial men of Springfield, and a brother of his Honor, Mayor Schnepp. He was born on a farm in Tazewell County, Ill., April 24, 1830, a son of Diebold Schnepp. When George Schnepp was but a lad, the family moved to South Fork Township, Christian County, and there he grew up, attending country school in the winter months and in the summer assisting in farm work. Before leaving the farm, through his earnest and good management, he acquired two farms of rich black soil, one of 200 acres, eight miles southwest of Taylorville, Ill., and one of 160 acres, one and one-half miles southeast of Lincoln, Ill. In 1862 Mr. Schnepp moved to Springfield, to become interested in the printing establishment of Schnepp & Lauer Company, incorporated for $21,000. Stockholders were George Schnepp, Wm. H. Schnepp and Albert Lauer, but later George Schnepp, not wanting to be annoyed by business cares, sold his interest to Wm. H. Schnepp and Andrew J. Barnes, now sole owners of the Schnepp & Barnes Printing Company.

In December, 1887, Mr. Schnepp was married to Miss Edith May Halnes, of Christian County, daughter of Fletcher and Lydia Haines. They have two children, Ernest F. and Carroll D. Mr. Schnepp built the pleasant family residence at No. 110 West Cook Street, since coming to the city.

The Lutheran Church holds his membership and he gives it an enthusiastic support. In politics he is a Democrat, but he has contented himself with giving his brother his support, and has not aspired to political honors himself. Public spirited, loyal to his party, and anxious to see the city advanced in every way, Mr. Schnepp is a good citizen, and an excellent business man, and enjoys the confidence of those with whom he is brought into contact.

SCHNEPP, Mayor John S., representing the moral, intellectual, financial and material interests of the City of Springfield during more than two years last past, has been the subject of much comment and self congratulation on the part of the citizens of the Capital City of Illinois, and it is conceded by every one that the elevation of the morals and the betterment of the financial condition of the City can be laid, in a large degree, to the ability, untiring efforts and conscientious application to official duty of Mayor John S. Schnepp, under whose business administration the best interests of the City have been conserved.

John S. Schnepp was born, on August 20th A. D. 1860, in a log cabin on a farm eight miles west of the City of Springfield, a son of Diebold and Mary A. Schnepp. His father was a native of Alsace-Lorraine, which at that time belonged to France, but was subsequently ceded to Germany. His mother was a native of Baden, Germany. They both came to America when quite young and were married at Atlanta, Logan County, Illinois. After a short residence near that city, they came to Sangamon County, purchasing a farm eight miles west of the City of Springfield, on which they resided for several years. Some years before Mr. Schnepp's death the family removed to Christian County, where the father passed away in 1884, at the age of fifty-two years, leaving an estate consisting of 420 acres of fine farm land and considerable personal property. To Diebold and Mary A. Schnepp there were born seven children: Jacob, a shoe dealer of Springfield; George, a retired farmer; Mary C., wife of Leonard Fry, of Springfield; Louisa F., wife of Henry Neu, of Christian County; John S. and William H. of Springfield, and Edward, who died in infancy.

Educated in the district schools and knowing the hardships of farm life at that time, John S. Schnepp came to Springfield at the age of nineteen years and for a year studied German and Latin at Concordia College. He next attended the Central Normal College of Danville, Ind., from which he was graduated with the class of 1887, and then taught school for a year. He next took the law course at the Wesleyan University, Bloomington, Ill., being graduated in June, 1890, receiving the degree of LL. B. His diploma admitted him to the bar, and he returned to Springfield and opened an office for the practice of his chosen profession, building up one of the most lucrative practices in the city.

In April, 1909, he was elected on the Democratic ticket to the office of Mayor of the City of Springfield, after one of the most spectacular elections in the history of the city, and during his term of office, he has done more towards regulating the moral, intellectual and financial condition of the city than any other chief executive in the city's history, and through cutting down unnecessary expenses has saved the municipality many thousands of dollars. Although he made no promises prior to his election, he immediately, upon taking office began the working out of the civic reforms that have won for him the respect and esteem of the city's best people. Naturally a man who uses such drastic measures in bringing the law breakers to justice, must make some enemies, but the better element of the citizens are with him to a man, and have applauded his fearlessness in the discharge of his public duties.

When the City Treasury was depleted, on Christmas, 1909, rather than see the city employees and their families forced to forego the pleasures of the holidays, Mayor Schnepp vouched for their salaries, a matter of several thousand dollars, thus proving not only his generosity and kind-heartedness, but also his faith in the future of the city which he governs with so capable a hand. Mayor Schnepp, who is deservedly known as the best Mayor Springfield ever had, was again prevailed upon to become a candidate for Mayor under the Commission Form of Government, which law was but recently adopted by the city, and he was at the April election, 1861, elected by the largest majority ever accorded any candidate in the history of the city, receiving 6,786 votes, while his opponent received only 3,876 votes. His contribution to this work bearing the title "Municipal History of Springfield," will be found upon another page of this publication, and is decidedly interesting.

On December 31, 1860, Mayor Schnepp was united in marriage with Hattie B. Calloway, daughter of James and Amelia Calloway, of Taylorville, Illinois, and to this union there have been born three sons: Delmar F., H. LaVerne and Chester Clyde, and three daughters Gladys M., Vera I. and Velma O. The Mayor is justly proud of them, and they are now being educated in the ward and high schools of the city.

SCHROLL, Edward A.—The younger farmers of Sangamon County are quick to take advantage of improved methods, and are constantly experimenting with their crops and stock raising. As a result they have raised the value of land and livestock and amassed considerable wealth. One of these progressive young men is Edward A. Schroll, farming on Section 26, Curran Township, born in Ball Township, October 19, 1866, a son of Henry and Amelia (Garlo) Schroll, natives of Germany. Henry Schroll came to America in 1860. He came direct from New York City to Sangamon County and located in Ball Township, bringing up his family of eight children on the farm he bought there. All the children survive, and they are numbered among the substantial people of the several communities in which they are located. The father eventually bought 100 acres of land in Curran Township, where he still resides. The grandfather Schroll, who died in 1868, was a soldier in the German Army, and was seventy-six years old when he died. His widow resides with her son Henry, being now seventy-two years old.

Edward A. Schroll grew to manhood on his father's farm, attending the country schools and thus securing an excellent training for his life work. In 1908 he bought eighty acres of fine farm land in Curran Township, which he is operating at a good profit. His farm was formerly known as the Workman farm, and is regarded as a valuable piece of property.

The marriage of Mr. Schroll took place in Auburn, Ill., January 26, 1908, to Sophia Ludke, born in Chatham Township, in August, 1887. Her parents, who were Germans came to that township, where they are now engaged in farming. Mrs. Schroll is one in a family of seven children, having two brothers and four sisters. Mr. and Mrs. Schroll have one child, Richard.

ing that he has made a success in his chosen calling, while so many who began with him have failed.

SCHUCK, J. H.—A prominent German-American resident of Springfield, whose energy and business ability is a source of pride to the city, is J. H. Schuck. He was born in the city of Heidelberg, Germany, March 1, 1830, being a son of John and Anna Schuck, who lived and died in Heidelberg, where the father was a furniture contractor. Having been educated in Germany and taught the trade of cabinetmaking, J. H. found permission from his father to leave home, and after traveling in Germany, at the age of seventeen years came to America, landing in New York City, where he worked at his trade for a short time, then came west to Chicago, and from there to Springfield, arriving in 1848, after a journey of ten days from Chicago. For a year he found employment in Springfield at cabinetmaking, where there came the news of the discovery of gold in California, and he was one of those who made the long and toilsome trip across country on horseback. Unlike many, he was successful. Coming back, he formed a partnership in Logan County, about Springfield, with his brother, for only five months. In 1854 he returned to Springfield and worked again at his trade, being foreman of the lumber yard of G. L. Huntington. In 1860, in partnership with Wm. B. Baker, he embarked in a lumber business. This association lasted fourteen years, when he took over Mr. Baker's interest, and although eighteen years old, is still as active and actively engaged in his business. Mr. Schuck started the first building of Springfield in connection with Charles F. Herman. This was the first organization of its kind in the State. He was also one of the promoters and founders of the second street railway, and did much to insure its ultimate success. He has been one of the old directors of the First National Bank, of Springfield, and founded the Lumbermen's Association. For many years he has been a member of Springfield Lodge No. 4, A. F. & A. M. In politics he is a Republican.

In 1853 Mr. Schuck was married, in Springfield, to Mary E. Lightfoot, who died in 1856. The following year he married Kate Bruker, of Springfield. Mr. Schuck has had children as follows: Charles, who is in partnership with his father, married Josie Buscher, and they had a son, Charles W. H., and his son in turn bears the name of Charles, has two children, which are now in his fourteenth generation. Another son, Mr. Schuck, who married Klin Haynes, has four children, two of whom are married. Mr. Schuck is one of the sound, conservative men of Springfield who have done so much in building up the city's present prosperity, and in restraining undue extravagance in placing public improvements before the city's finances would warrant the expenditure.

SCHUCHARDT, Frank.—The vocation of fireman is one that calls forth courage and nervous energy, and demands all a man's strength. Frank Schuchardt, a member of Fire Company No. 1, Springfield, was born in Germany, December 1, 1863, a son of Joseph and Katriona (Jurnemann) Schuchardt, the latter of whom died in Germany in 1879. Two years afterwards the father came to New York City, landing Feb-uary 23, 1881. He came direct to Springfield, where he found employment in a rolling mill, and during that same year was killed in an accident. He had married as his second wife Helen Schomberg, who survived him some years. Of the eight children of Joseph and Katriona Schuchardt, but two survive, Frank and Jacob.

Frank Schuchardt attended the schools of his native country until he was fourteen years of age, when he started to learn the trade of cabinet-maker, working at it for one and one-half years, when he came to America. His first work in this country was on a farm. Later he was employed in a rolling mill in Springfield, and for eight years was connected with the watch factory, after which he entered the saloon and grocery business, at Eleventh and Markee Streets, and continued there until joining the Fire Department in 1909. Mr. Schuchardt is a member of SS. Peter and Paul Roman Catholic Church, and in political views is Independent.

On May 28, 1889, Mr. Schuchardt was united in marriage with Miss Rosa Dresch, daughter of the late John Dresch, and to this union there have been born eight children, namely: Anne, Elizabeth, Frank, Leonard, Joseph, Edward, Katriona and Charles.

SCHUESLER, Constantine.—Few lines of industrial activity make such substantial returns as does farming. From the soil a man can always get a living, and if he understands his work, knows how to rotate crops and adapt them to the possibilities of the land, he is sure to become well-to-do. Investments in farm lands seldom prove unprofitable, and never worthless. This fact was early recognized by the sturdy Germans who flocked to Sangamon County in the 'fifties and 'sixties, when land was cheap and opportunities plenty. One of the well-known and prosperous retired farmers now living in Springfield, who for years made Sangamon County the scene of their labors, is Constantine Schuessler, of No. 910 West North Grand Avenue. He was born in Baden, Germany, August 15, 1841, a son of Frantz J. and Catherina (Lentz) Schuessler, both natives of Baden. The father was a farmer, who spent his life in Germany, but his widow came to America in 1859.

After a boyhood spent in Germany, where he was educated, Constantine Schuessler came to America in 1859, locating in Menard County, Ill. There he bought a farm of 110 acres, which he still owns, and remained there fifteen years, but then came to Sangamon County, farming west of Springfield for Frank Reisch, Sr. This place he developed into one of the finest pieces of property in that part of the State. In 1883, feeling that he had rounded out a life of endeavor, Mr. Schessler retired, moving to Springfield, which has since been his home. He is a member of SS. Peter and Paul Roman Catholic Church of Springfield, and in politics is a Democrat.

Mr. Schessler's first marriage was with Louisa Schnecker, daughter of Daniel Schneider, and to them were born these children: Josephine, married Hugh E. Prickett, and they live in Springfield and have two children—Theresa Susannah and Mary Louna; Frank J., and Mary Louna, who died at the age of three months. Frank J., now residing in California, served three years as a soldier with the army in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Schessler married (second) Josephine Reisch, February 27, 1884, who was born in Springfield, April 4, 1856, daughter of Joseph and Josephine (Buselmaney) Reisch, now deceased. The children of the second marriage were: Sister Gertrude, a nun in the Effingham Convent; Helena, and three deceased.

Mr. Schessler has made a success of his life work, and not only has accumulated considerable property that insures him comfort and happiness in his declining years, but has the satisfaction of knowing he has done his full duty to his community and has reared a nice family of children, who reflect credit on him and their community.

SCULLER, John N., a successful carpenter and contractor of Springfield, Ill., now practically retired from active life and living in his home at 1920 North Eighth Street, was born in Paris, France, February 2, 1842, received his education in his native city and there learned his trade. He is a son of John and Margaret (Goeman) Schuller, the former born in Luxembourg, Germany, and the latter in France. The father was a carpenter and spent most of his life in Luxembourg. He was born in 1805 and died in 1880. The mother lived out her life in Luxembourg. The maternal grandfather of John N. Schuller served under Napoleon in the Franco-Prussian War.

Mr. Schuller, the subject of this sketch, emigrated to America in 1861, landing in New York City. He proceeded to Chicago, where he spent a few months, then went to Dubuque, la., and thence, a few months later, to St. Paul, where he remained a short time and then returned to Dubuque. After locating in Springfield, Ill., his place of residence since that time. He has followed his trade very industriously until a few years since, and now spends but little time in actual labor, although he has many interests demanding his attention. He has been rather active in public affairs and served four years as Trustee of the village of Ridgely, of which he was one of the founders. He has contributed largely to the progress and growth of the village and has been active in its interests. He is a Democrat in politics and is a Roman Catholic in religious views, being a member of St. Joseph's Parish. Mr. Schuller is an enthusiastic and useful citizen of his adopted country and shows his patriotism in many ways. He has the respect and esteem of his associates, who have most of them learned to appreciate his good qualities of mind and heart. He owns other city property besides his present home.

Mr. Schuller was married in Springfield, Ill., October 1, 1867, to Margaret Weaver, born in Hanover, Germany, February 10, 1846, daughter of John and Margarete Weaver, Iowa. Weaver died in Germany and his widow afterward came to America, passing away at the home of Mrs. Schuller at the age of ninety-six years and twenty-three days. Of the eleven children born to Mr. and Mrs. Schuller, seven are living, namely: Bertha, wife of Michael Bowen, of Springfield; Josephine, married James Iphen, of Springfield; Pauline, wife of James Woods; Margaret, wife of Nicholas Longen; and John, Joseph and Nicholas, all of Springfield. Mr. Schuller and his wife have seven grandchildren.

SCOTT, Charles, a retired farmer of Springfield, Ill., has recently located in the city and purchased the pleasant home he and his family occupy, at 2054 East Edwards Street. He was born in Miami County, Ohio, May 4, 1832, and is a son of William and Ruth (Mooney) Scott, both natives of Ohio. William Scott was a farmer and moved from Ohio to Jasper County, Ind., and lived a number of years on a farm there, then moved to Clarke County, Iowa, and, a short time afterwards returned to Indiana and lived there until his death. He was a soldier in the Black Hawk War.

Charles Scott spent his boyhood on his father's farm and was educated in Ohio. He has spent most of his life in farming, but has now retired from active life. He has been for a time a blacksmith, and for about ten years was an enterprising and successful farmer and developed a fine estate, which he sold and bought his present home. He moved to Springfield February 1, 1910, and has since lived retired. Mr. Scott enlisted in 1862, in Company C, Sixty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at Mt. Sterling, Ill., and served seven months, after which he was mustered out and returned home to Morgan County.

Mr. Scott was married, at Franklin, Morgan County, Ill., in November, 1853, to Mrs. Elizabeth (Johnson) Nichols, widow of Wiley Nichols, by whom she had four children, of whom three survive, namely: Alfred, of Des Moines, Iowa; Margaret, wife of Charles B. Howard, and Miss Amelia, of Springfield. There are two grandchildren in the family. By her second marriage Mrs. Scott had no children. She is a great-granddaughter of John Sevier, the first Governor of Tennessee. Her father came from Kentucky to Morgan County in an early day and settled near Waverly, where he lived on a farm until his death, and her mother was born in Tennessee. Mr. Scott and his wife are devout members of the Methodist Church and are much interested in benevolent and charitable work. He has always been a Republican since the organization of that party and has always taken an active interest in public affairs. He has spent most of his life in hard work and is now enjoying the fruits of his toil in ease and comfort.

SCOTT, John Hamilton (deceased), was in his time recognized as one of the enterprising and progressive farmers of Sangamon county. His parents, Timothy and Amanda (Montgomery) Scott, were Kentuckians and farmers. They settled west of Springfield, many years before the Civil War. Mr. Scott labored as a farmer and as a gardener till after the beginning of the war, then enlisted under the Federal flag. After a few months’ service he was taken sick and discharged for disability. Later he settled in Logan County, where he farmed as long as he lived and where his good wife also passed away. They had four sons and two daughters. The daughters have died and only two of the sons are living, Richard, one of the latter, being an insurance man in Iowa.

John Hamilton Scott was born April 14, 1845, was educated in public schools in Sangamon County and learned farming as his father’s assistant. February 12, 1864, he enlisted in Company I, Fifty-sixth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served as a soldier until the close of the struggle. After having taken part in numerous engagement, he was honorably discharged at Little Rock, Ark., August 12, 1865. Returning to Springfield, he resumed farming, which he has followed most of the time since. It should be noted, however, that during his residence in Springfield he was employed upon the construction of the State House. He lived there for some years, then resumed farming and died at Buffalo, near Grove, November 13, 1888. He was a member of the Christian Church; of Buffalp Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, and of the Republican party, with which he voted consistently for many years.

Mr. Scott married, at Springfield, Ill., March 20, 1868, Miss Mary L. Williams, born at Chillicothe, Ohio, whose father, a farmer, brought his family to Springfield in 1853. Later the family moved to a farm near the old hemp factory south of Springfield, where they lived many years. Mr. Williams enlisted for soldier’s service in our Civil War, but was rejected because of physical disability. He died at the residence of Mrs. Scott, in Buffalo, February 12, 1903, aged eighty-nine years. His wife died in Springfield in 1878. They had fifteen children, ten of whom grew to manhood and womanhood. Four of the sons and two of the daughters are living: Jacob Williams, a carpenter, lives in Springfield; Moses B., also a carpenter, is a citizen of Quincy, Ill.; Charles B., physician and surgeon, practices his profession in Springfield, and James F., is a merchant there; Ann, Mrs. Parr, lives in Menard County, Ill.; Mrs. Scott.

Mr. and Mrs. Scott had ten children, six sons and four daughters, all of whom are living: Emma, the eldest, is the wife of Rodney Hutchinson, farmer, of Bald Knob, Sangamon County; Belle married Samuel Rising, a blacksmith; William T. is a Sangamon County farmer; John lives in Buffalo, as does also James E., a farmer; Samuel D. is farming in Sangamon County, as is Matthew; Logan B. is a farmer; Mary C. is the wife of Frank Dill, a farmer near Roby, Ill.; Laura, Mrs. Centrall, lives in Springfield. Mrs. Scott has twelve interesting grandchildren. She is a woman of ability, who has associated with some of the best people in the Middle West, and one of the most cherished recollections of the days that are gone is that of her personal acquaintance with Abraham Lincoln, "the great Emancipator."

SEARS, John V. Jr. (deceased).—The late John V. Sears Jr., who passed away at his home in Springfield, Ill., April 5, 1898, was born in the Azores Islands, in June, 1852, and was a son of John V. and Mary Margarette Sears, both natives of the Azores, and who spent their entire lives there. The father was a school teacher and held the position of professor in a large school. The education of John V. Sears, Jr., was received in his native place, a possession of Portugal, and when seventeen years of age he emigrated to America, landing in Boston, where he spent some time. Later he came to Springfield, and had been a resident of that city twenty-four years at the time of his death, fifteen of which he spent as watchmaker in the employ of the Illinois Watch Company. He was a good workman and was much esteemed by his associates. He died at the family home at 1117 North Ninth Street, which his widow still owns, and was buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

Mr. Sears was married, in Springfield, January 11, 1878, to Miss Mary Augusta Fernandes, who was born in Springfield, October 11, 1850, daughter of John A. and Mary A. (Desilva) Fernandes, both natives of Madeira Island, who were early settlers in Springfield. Mr. Sears and his wife became parents of children as follows: John V., born March 4, 1880; Elsie A., May 17, 1882; Ernest V., May 25, 1886; Alfred V., August 5, 1887; Rita A., December 5, 1889; Sana A., January 27, 1891; Herminda A., August 9, 1896; Francis V., July 29, 1899. Mr. Sears was a member of the Presbyterian Church and in politics was a stanch Republican. He was a member of the Modern Woodmen of America of Springfield. He had won many friends during his residence in Springfield and was looked upon as an honest, representative citizen. He was industrious and hard-working, and made the most of his opportunities to better himself.

SEARS, William E.—Springfield has attracted some of the capitalists and wealthy men of the country, who find there the conditions they best like. They have all the advantages of a larger city, without the many annoying drawbacks, and are glad to give their support in bettering existing conditions. One of the best known men of this class, and one who has exerted a vast amount of influence upon the financial life of this part of the State, is William E. Sears. He was born in Daviess County, Ind., July 15, 1811, a son of B. R. and Lucy (Payne) Sears. B. R. Sears is a carpenter and contractor, and he and his wife are among the prominent people of their part of Indiana. Their lives have been spent in Daviess and Lawrence Counties, of that State. William E. Sears is a lineal descendant of Governor George A. Sears, who arrived at James-town in 1850. He became one of the extensive planters and prominent men of Virginia, and his descendants are scattered all over the country today.

After receiving an excellent education at Bedford, Ind., where he graduated from the high school, and having attended college in Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Sears became a contractor in woodwork, and made a success of his calling. His attention was early attracted towards mining, and after several profitable investments, he now owns 10,000 shares of the famous Cactus gold mines, thirty miles east of Goldfield, Nev. He has great faith in the future of this valuable property which is daily being justified, for the mines are proving a bonanza. His residence is pleasantly located. He is a Republican and a member of the Christian Church. He is unmarried. He is an excellent example of the enterprising young business men of Springfield, who are rapidly forging to the front in every walk of life.

SEELEY, Roy M.—None of the learned professions are as exacting as that of the law, and its followers are ever reaching upward and onward to attain higher honors. The keen, analytical mind required of the lawyer must be trained by years of reading and hard study. The man who hopes to follow in the footsteps of the great legal lights of the day must keep himself thoroughly posted on all jurisprudence and be prepared to handle whatever cases come into his hands. The safety of the nation lies in the hands of the lawyers of the age. They enforce the laws and bring the guilty to punishment, as well as clear the innocent. It must be thought necessary that a successful man of law must have passed many milestones of life, but this has changed and some of the most brilliant legal exponents are in the very prime of life. One of the distinguished lawyers of Springfield is Roy M. Seeley, born in West Bloomington, Oakland County, Mich., a son of Major H. and Helen (Moore) Seeley. Major Seeley was born at Novi, Oakland County, Mich., May 10, 1843, while his wife was born in West Bloomfield, Oakland County, Mich., September 15, 1842, and died at Springfield, Ill., April 12, 1900. Major Seeley was in early life a farmer, but later entered the grader and buyer of wool for woolen mills, living in Michigan until 1892. At that time the family moved to Illinois, so that the father could become buyer for the Des Plaines Mills, at Des Plaines, Ill. This latter place remained the family home until 1885, when removal was made to Springfield, and there the father graded wool until the mills closed. Both the Seeleys and Moores were early settlers of Michigan, coming there from New York State.

Roy M. Seeley grew up in Michigan, attending the schools of his locality and later entering the Northern Illinois College of Law, at Dixon, Ill. He earned the money for his law course by working as a clerk and in the woolen mills of Columbaville, Mich.; Sonth Bend, Ind.; Sheboygan Falls, Wis.; Lacon, Ill.; and Springfield, becoming an expert in the manufacture of woolen cloth. Mr. Seeley was admitted to the Bar October 12, 1900, and has been actively engaged in practice ever since. After graduating from college he entered the law offices of Palmer, Shutt, Hamill & Lester, and clerked for W. E. Shutt, Referee in Bankruptcy for the Southern District of Illinois. This experience has been of inestimable value to him, his associations with these great men of his profession having left their mark on him.

Mr. Seeley is an ardent Republican, and since the time he attained his majority has taken an active part in public affairs. In April, 1905, he was elected on the Republican ticket to fill the office of City Attorney of Springfield, and was reelected to that office in 1907 and again in 1909. He was Secretary of the Sangamon County Bar Association for four years, seven-termly he belongs to the Elks, Knights of Pythias, and Capital City Cycling Club, and has held high offices in both lodges. At present he is Past Chancellor of Percival Lodge No. 202, K. P.

Without doubt the highest type of character is displayed by the judicial mind. He who can carefully weigh evidence, separate the unimportant from the vital, bring to bear upon it the experience gained through the conduct of many similar cases, and present it to the jury according to proper jurisprudence, yet in such a manner as to carry conviction of the truth, is the true lawyer. A review of Mr. Seeley's work in the past clearly demonstrates that he belongs to that class of self-made men who, through their own efforts and perseverance, have reached the topmost rung of usefulness, and have contributed materially to the welfare of the county, State and Nation.

SELY, Paul. (Vol. I. p. 474.)

SELF, James M., a well-known citizen of Pawne, Ill., who for the past ten years has identified himself with the mining interests of his section, was for a long period engaged in agricultural pursuits in Sangamon County. He was born October 3, 1852, in Port Conway, Va., a son of John and Mary (Carver) Self, the former of whom was born in King George County, Va., in 1832, and spent his entire life there, and she in 1803. His wife, who was born in 1824, remained there for several years after his death, but in 1876 came to Sangamon County, where the remainder of her days were spent, her death occurring in 1887 in Cotton Hill Township. Three children were born to this couple: Robert S., born January 1, 1847, married Sarah Smith (first) and (second) Maggie Kelsacker, and lives in Pawnee, having one child; John; Cornelia B., born February 11, 1861, married Louis Curry and lives in Cotton Hill Township, having seven children—Annie, Mabel, Walter, Lulu, Ruth, Harry and Louis; and James M., the subject of this sketch.

Mr. Self resided on the home farm until he was twenty-one years of age, at which time he went to Washington, D. C., and secured a position as official in an insane asylum. In 1873 he came to Sangamon County, where he started to work on a farm, and continued to be interested in farming until 1900, in which year he engaged in mining, which has been his occupation from that time to the present. He is connected with the Mine Workers Union, and his politics are those of the Democratic party, although he usually gives his vote to the Temperance candidate. He is a devoted member of the Baptist Church, in which he serves as Deacon.

Mr. Self was married (first) in Bear Creek Township, Christian County, Ill., November 20, 1879, to Mariah A. Clark, who was born in Tenessee and died September 26, 1881, in Cotton Hill Township. There was one child, Lillian, born to this union, August 3, 1880, who is now residing in Sangamon County and is unmarried. Mr. Self's second marriage occurred November 26, 1885, when he was united with Rebecca J. Pfeitz, born October 31, 1848, in Dawson County, Pa., daughter of William E. Pfeitz, who was born in Pennsylvania May 10, 1807, came to Illinois in 1832 and died in Lincoln, Logan County, at the age of one hundred years, having spent his active life at the carpenter's bench. Her mother was Margaret Myers, also a native of Pennsylvania, who came to Illinois in 1832 and died in Springfield at the age of fifty-two years. There were children as follows in the Pfeitz family: Savilla E. married Lee Jones, of Springfield, Ill., and has one son, Willie; William, a resident of Taylorville, married Lizzie Blankenship, who is now deceased; Mary A. married Abe Peters, of Brown County. Ill.; Charles now resides in Chicago, Ill.; Barbara E. married Fred Sedoff and now resides in Emden, Ill., and has one child, Clara M.; Emma, married Pete Fogel and now lives in Missouri; Clara, married George Aren and now lives in Chicago; Clara, Matilda married Charles Kent; George W. and Oswald S., both of whom died in infancy; and Rebecca J. Mrs. Self was previously married to William Clark, by whom she had one son, Frank Clark, born in Springfield, Ill., April 18, 1879, married Carrie Bean and has three children: Beulah, Violet and Clifford. While not by any means one of the oldest citizens of Pawnee, Mr. Self has a large acquaintance and a host of friends in the city who admire his sterling qualities of character. He and his wife have a very comfortable home where their friends are welcome, and where they keep two highly treasured articles, a coffee mill and a waffle iron, which have been in constant use in the family for seventy years.

SEMPLE, James A.—The records of Sangamon County show that some of its representative men are engaged in tilling the soil, and to judge from their present condition they have found such work profitable. One of the prosperous farmers of the county is James A. Semple, of Mechanicsburg Township, who is devoting his eighty acres of fine farm land to general farming and stock raising. He was born in Calhoun County, Ill., August 10, 1883, a son of Thomas and Decelia (Harper) Semple, natives of the North of Ireland. In either 1847 or 1848, the parents came to the United States, via the Gulf of Mexico, and up the Mississippi River to St. Louis, where the father did some teaming and worked in a general merchandise store for several years. He then proceeded to Calhoun County, buying land which he developed into a fine farm. This he sold in 1867 to come to Mechanicsburg Township and purchase 170 acres, eighty acres of which was prairie, and the rest timber. He worked on this until his death, in April, 1893. His widow survived him until August 25, 1898. Their children were as follows: Ann, Mrs. Stephen Correll, deceased; Fred, Mrs. S., married Constant, deceased; Eliza, Mrs. David Correll, a widow, of Buffalo; Clark, of Mechanicsburg Township, and James A., who was the youngest.

Mr. Semple lived with his parents until their deaths, when he married, on December 2, 1893, Hannah Jackson, born in Posey County, Ind., daughter of Joseph Jackson, of that State. Their children were as follows: Arthur, born March 28, 1895; Ruth, born February 9, 1898; and Joseph, born March 8, 1899. Mrs. Semple died at the birth of her youngest child. On December 1, 1901, Mr. Semple was united in marriage with Ida Haight, born at Lawrenceville, Ind., December 22, 1872, daughter of William L. and Margaret (Stanton) Haight, the former born at Crawford, Canada, in 1858, and the latter at Marshville, Wis., in 1848. The spring following his second marriage, Mr. Semple moved to Dawson, where he rented land for a year, at the same time renting the eighty acres of the homestead which was his share of his parents' estate. In 1903, however, he moved back to this farm, which he now operates, also breeding short horn cattle, hogs and road and draft horses.

While his educational advantages were confined to the common schools, Mr. Semple has made good use of his opportunities and is well informed. In political faith he is a Republican and he has given the people of his district efficient service as School Director for a period of two years. Since young manhood he has been a conscientious member of the Methodist Church, giving it a liberal support in both time and money. He and his wife are very hospitable, making their friends feel welcome whenever they enter the Semple home, and they have friends both in their neighborhood and at Dawson, who appreciate their many excellent traits of character.

The work a farmer accomplishes is not always understood. Each forward movement means an advancement in his calling and the standard of the neighborhood, so that all good citizens of Sangamon County ought to be interested in the progress made by their practical farmers, among whom Mr. Semple occupies a prominent place. Both his parents and those of Mrs. Semple bore their part in the development of the communities in which they lived, and left to their children habits of industry and thrift, as well as spotless names to be handed down to posterity.

SEVIER, John W., for the past seven years retired from active life and residing in his comfortable home at 2012 South Fourteenth Street, Springfield, Ill., is a man of sterling character and good habits, and is well and favorably known in the neighborhood of his home. He was born in New Salem, Pike County, Ill., July 10, 1850, son of Valentine and Martha (Woodams) Sevier, the father born in South Carolina in 1829, and the mother in Illinois in 1833. The father of Valentine, John Sevier, was born in Scotland and was an early settler in North Carolina, went thence to Tennessee and was the first Governor of that State. He died in Birmingham, Ala. Valentine Sevier went from North Carolina to Tennessee with his father, and later located in Illinois. He learned the trade of wheelwright and after settling in Illinois for several years ran a stage line from Griggsville and Perry to Naples, Ill. He now lives in Champaign, Ill., but his wife died about five years ago.

John W. Sevier passed his childhood on a farm in Brown County, Ill., and upon leaving home became employed as a fireman on the old I. B. & W. Railroad, now a part of the Big Four system. He left Illinois and worked in Colorado, where he found employment on the construction work of the Rio Grande Railroad, which was being completed from Denver to Mexico, and was thus occupied three years; then (in 1873), moved to Louisville, Ky.; where for five years, he was engaged in railroad work. In 1878, Mr. Sevier located in Nashville, Tenn., and in 1882, came to Illinois and entered the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company, worked a short time for them and the Illinois Central Railroad Company, as engineer. About 1883, Mr. Sevier purchased a farm in Tennessee, and carried it on successfully several years, then came back to Illinois and settled in Springfield, where he has since resided, retired from active life. He has maintained his present home which he owns, for the past seven years. He is well known in railroad circles and has many personal friends. He is an attendant of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternally belongs to the Yeomen of America, being affiliated with the Order of Railway Conductors and the Order of Railway Brakemen. He has always been a strong Republican. Mr. Sevier was connected with the building of many railroads and remembers when the Wabash road hauled cars and switched on wooden rails.

Mr. Sevier was married in Nashville, Tenn., February 22, 1876, to Hannah L. Tate, a native of Tennessee, born in 1852, a daughter of Daniel Tate, a native of Scotland and his wife, Larind (Collins) Tate, a native of Tennessee. Mr. Tate was a prominent citizen and had taken several degrees in Masonry. He held slaves in Tennessee, was in prosperous circumstances, and his death occurred in that State. His widow later married Lewis Campbell, an old soldier, who served his country in the Civil War, and was wounded at the Battle of Shiloh, and died at Mound City Hospital. Her own death occurred at Thebes, Ill. Mr. Jessie Tate, a brother of Mrs. Sevier, was wounded twice in battles in the Civil War and was a Judge of the Circuit Court, Huntington, Tenn., where he lives, being wealthy. Another brother, Leisch, now deceased, was a prominent citizen of Huntington, Tenn., where his widow and children now reside. Her two brothers Jasper and John were killed on the battle field during the Civil War. Five children were born to Mr. Sevier and wife, of whom the only survivor is Violet, born in Sangamon County, February 29, 1884, wife of Edward Guiss, of Holland, Ind., and they now reside at Holard, Ind., Mr. Guiss being connected with the railroad. Mrs. Sevier owns eighty acres of valuable land near Forsyth, Taney County, Mo.

SEXAUER, Benjamin Franklin, the enterprising editor of the "Staats Wochenblatt," of Springfield, Ill., is a prominent and well-known citizen and successful in a financial sense. He is a native of Fountain City, Wis., born April 18, 1871, son of George Jacob and Anna Magaret (Hangen) Sexauer, the former born in Baden, Germany, June 10, 1826, and the latter born in Rheinhessen, Germany. George Jacob Sexauer joined the Revolutionists at Baden, in 1848, fought under Hecker, Sigel, Strube, and others, and escaping to Switzerland, came to America in 1852. He settled first at Buffalo, N. Y., where he was married, and in 1857 came to Chicago, going thence to Galena, Ill., and later to Fountain City, Wis., which he has made his home since 1860. He was a carriage-maker by trade, but has now retired from active life. Mrs. Sexauer died March 15, 1909, at the age of eighty-two years.

The education of Benjamin F. Sexauer was obtained at Fountain City, and he attended the high school there. As is customary in German families, his parents encouraged him to begin work young, and he learned the trade of carriage maker, which his father followed, but not being suited with this occupation, learned the trade of printer and in 1896 became part owner of a German publication issued at Fountain City, known as the "Republikaner and Alma Blatter," selling his interest in 1899. He then located in Springfield and May 1, 1900, purchased the paper which he now publishes. He has met with gratifying success in this enterprise and has won many friends in the county. Mr. Sexauer is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Business Association, and fraternally is connected with the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the National Protective Legion. In political views he is a Democrat.

Mr. Sexauer was married, at Fountain City, Wis., April 10, 1890, to Miss Callie Allg., who was born in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, daughter of Chris and Christina (Fry) Allg. Mr. Allg was born in Switzerland and his wife in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Sexauer have no children.

SEWARD, Charles Henry, (who has Americanized his name from Suhra to Seward) is a native-born citizen of Springfield, where most of his life has been spent. He has established a large and prosperous business in the line of contracting and building, and operates almost exclusively in the capital city of the State. He is prominent in business circles and has won his present success, through his own efforts and ability, having been left fatherless at an early age, and being obliged to help in the support of the rest of the family. Mr. Seward was born September 27, 1864, at the corner of Sixth and Carpenter streets, a son of Charles and Dora (Miller) Suhra, both natives of Germany. The father was born at Altenburg, in 1825, and came to America as a young man, having previously learned the trade of cabinet-making, and served in the German Army. His marriage occurred in New Orleans in 1856, his wife being a native of the same province as he, and born in 1832. They were the parents of eight children, namely: two daughters and a son who died in infancy; William, who died at Alton, Ill., April 2, 1880; Gussie, wife of William Canfield, of Springfield; Charles H.; Dora, wife of Charles Hancock, both deceased, Hancock, dying December 24, 1904, Dora, dying March 28, 1905; and Katie, wife of E. L. Hardin.

Charles Suhra enlisted in August, 1861, as a private in Company A, Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and in November of the following year, was discharged on account of a wound in the knee, which compelled him to enter a hospital at St. Louis, and later one at Cairo, Ill. In 1864, he purchased the property at No. 554 West Caudy Street, which has since been the family home. Here he died April 30, 1872, and his remains were buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery. He was a faithful and devout member of St. John's Lutheran Church, to which his widow also belonged. She died January 4, 1909.

Charles H. Seward received a good common school education in the public schools and a German Lutheran school, and took up special studies in a night school. As a youth he worked at various occupations to help in the support of the family, and in 1880, began learning the trade of a carpenter, spending four years in the shop of William Deffenbaugh, and seven years as foreman of construction, during which time he did some work on the Illinois State House. He took his first contract on his own account in 1891, and on many of the buildings he erected, also acted as architect, looking carefully into all the details incident to the undertakings. Some of his best known work in the city was begun during the last of the year 1903, when he and T. C. Baker, Jr., purchased a block on South Walnut Street, near his home, and there erected seven handsome residences. Among the contracts, he has satisfactorily filled are included those for the erection of homes, business blocks and flats for some of the most prominent people of Springfield, his business of making plans and erecting buildings during the last two years alone aggregating $70,000. He is now engaged in erecting the St. John's German Lutheran Church, corner College and Monroe streets at a cost of $31,000. His business has constantly increased in volume from year to year. His beginning was very small but as his promises were scrupulously kept and the interests of his patrons well cared for, his name came to inspire confidence and he soon won a reputation for reliability and integrity which has been the basis of his chief business assets. He purchased the family home in 1889, rebuilt it and has since bought the residence adjoining on the corner and the house next to it on the east, and has reason to be proud of the results of his carefully planned and executed efforts along this line.

Mr. Seward was married August 14, 1889, to Miss Carrie Malter, born in Springfield May 28, 1889, a daughter of John Malter who died during the year of her birth. The mother, whose maiden name had been Mary Kern, was married a second time, to Herman F. Bergner and resides in Springfield, near her daughter. John and Mary Malter had children as follows: Kate married Henry Stark, of Joplin, Mo.; Mrs. Seward; and John, who died in infancy, Mr. and Mrs. Seward have had ten children: Clara J. Marie, married August 18, 1909, Frank A. Larson, a carpenter and contractor who began as an apprentice in 1905, under Mr. Seward, and is now one of the leading young men of Springfield, one son—Wayne Francis; Charles E.;
Robert, John, Pearl, Gertrude, George, Thurman Curtis, Florence Iola, and Samuel LaRue. Robert died in infancy. Mr. Seward is a member of St. John's Lutheran Church and fraternally is connected with Central Lodge No. 71, A. F. & A. M.; Camp No. 1554, W. W. A.; Banner Lodge, F. C. L.; Lodge No. 58 Order of Owls; Sangamon Lodge No. 2758, M. B. of A.; Guiding Star Court, No. 271, T. B. H.; Improved Order of Red Men, No. 117; and Capital Life Association, of Springfield. He is a public spirited and enterprising citizen. Interested in the improvement and development of his native city and county, and ready to forward the interests of any worthy cause which comes to his attention.

SHAFER, William H.—There is a tendency to specialize in every direction, for men have realized by long experience that the most money is made in this way. Especially is this true of farming in such regions as Sangamon County, where land values have increased to such an extent that each square inch of ground must be made to produce to its fullest extent. For this reason a number of the most progressive farmers are operating small tracts as fruit and truck farms, with splendid results. One of the representatives of the new order of things, is William H. Shaffer. He was born in Morgan County, Ill., August 10, 1842, a son of Henry and Emeline (Tracy) Shaffer, born in Washington County, Md., the former born March 10, 1798, and the latter June 14, 1794.

Henry Shaffer came to Illinois, locating near Jacksonville in the early thirties, where for twenty-four years he operated a farm, but later sold it to come to Sangamon County. Upon arrival there, he located on the old Cross farm. In 1854, but three years later moved to the old Jake Miller farm on Sand Prairie. After four years more he moved to the vicinity of Mount Auburn, buying eighty acres of land. At the expiration of two years, he returned to Sangamon County, where his death occurred, May 10, 1861. His widow survived him until November 18th of the same year.

William H. Shaffer was educated in the primitive log schoolhouse of the period, remaining with his parents until their deaths. At that time, he began farming on the Ed North farm, but after a year there went to the Phil Michler farm. The next year he operated the Kane farm, and continued on it for ten years, when in 1866 he purchased twenty acres in Springfield Township, which has continued to be his home. This is a valuable piece of property, and his home and buildings show what kind of a farmer he is.

On September 24, 1862, Mr. Shaffer was married three miles south of Mechanicsburg, to Martha A. Staglen, born December 14, 1844. Her parents, Simpson and Margaret Staglen, born in Kentucky in 1794 and 1827, came to Sangamon County in the fall of 1800. The following year Mr. Staglen died in February 4th, but his widow survived until August 14, 1878. The former is buried in Morton Cemetery, and the latter in Cooper Cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Staglen had seven children, all born in Kentucky, four of whom survive. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Shaffer: Henry lives in Springfield; Frank is a farmer of Clear Lake Township; Mary L. married James Colburn, of Christian County, and died in 1899, leaving a daughter, Pearl Colburn, born February 27, 1890. There is also a grandson in the family, Edward Shaffer, born September 6, 1898, who lives with his grandfather.

Mr. Shaffer is a consistent member of the Methodist Church, in whose good work he is much interested. For many years he has given his vote to the candidates of the Democratic party. Earnest, steadfast and hardworking, never shirking a duty, no matter how unpleasant, Mr. Shaffer sets an example to his children and his neighbors, which they would do well to follow. He is a true Christian, striving to model his life according to the teachings of his Master.

SHANKLAND, John H. (deceased).—In the death of John H. Shankland, which occurred June 21, 1860, Sangamon County lost one of its representative citizens, a man who had done much towards building up the town of Dawson, Ill., in more than one sense. He was a veteran of the Civil War, in which he received wounds, scars from which he carried to the time of his death. John H. Shankland was born May 6, 1826, in Montgomery County, Ky., son of Benjamin F. and Margaret Lucinda (Ferguson) Shankland, the former a native of Maryland and the latter of Pennsylvania.

The parents of Mr. Shankland, in early married life, moved to Kentucky, where they were engaged in agricultural pursuits, and eventually removed to Warren County, Ind., and followed the same occupation up to the time of their deaths. They had the following children, all of whom are now deceased: John Thomas, Jesse, Sarah H., Ellen, Amanda and Mary Ann.

John H. Shankland was educated in Kentucky and during his boyhood days worked for his father on the home farm, but in 1856 came to Illinois and settled in Springfield, where he started to work as a carpenter and builder, a trade he had learned in his native State. In 1861, when the call came for 100-day volunteers, Mr. Shankland was one of the first to offer his services to the Union cause, enlisting in Company I, Seventh Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Col. Babcock and Gen. John C. Gans, and after his time had expired he volunteered in the same company and regiment, enlisting for three years. He was First Sergeant of his company and took part in many battles, among them being Fort Donelson, Benton, Shiloh and Corinth, at which latter battle he was wounded in the shoulder and jaw, and carried a bullet in his head all the rest of his life. He was taken prisoner by the Confederates May 7, 1864, and served eight months in the prisons.
at Andersonville, Calhoun and Florence. After being paroled July 7, 1865, Mr. Shankland was mustered out of the service at Washington, D. C., the 25th of the same month.

After completing his services to his country, Mr. Shankland returned to Sangamon County and located in Dawson, where he followed the trade of carpenter until 1874, then went to Riverton, but two years later went back to Dawson, his home until his death. He also spent a little time engaged in farming. He served as Police Magistrate for sixteen years, was a Notary Public, and was School Director for twelve years consecutively at one time and for sixteen years consecutively at another. He was a popular comrade of Buffalo Post, G. A. R., and at one time was the Commander of his post; had been Grand Master and High Priest of Dawson Lodge No. 556, A. F. & A. M., several times, and was also a member of the Odd Fellows and the Eastern Star. Mrs. Shankland is a member of the Eastern Star and the Woman's Relief Corps. She is a faithful member of the Methodist Church. In politics Mr. Shankland was a Republican.

On December 29, 1877, Mr. Shankland was married in Dawson, Ill., to Mrs. Mary Constant Rinker, who was born September 25, 1839, the daughter of Jacob and Amella (Crocker) Constant, a native of Montgomery County, Ky., and the latter of the State of Georgia. The father removed from Kentucky to Ohio, settling in Clermont County, and in 1826 removed to Sangamon County, where six children were born: Mrs. Shankland, David, James H., Thomas S., Ira and John. Mrs. Shankland also has three half-brothers and six sisters, the father having been again married after the mother's death in 1847. Mr. Constant continued to farm in Mechanicsburg until his death in 1885.

The first marriage of Mrs. Shankland occurred to John Rinker, in 1861, he being a native of Pennsylvania and a blacksmith by trade. He enlisted during the Civil War in Company H, Tenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Col. J. H. Rhodes, and died in Vicksburg from a congestive chill, September 13, 1863, though previously having been wounded at Pittsburg Landing. Mr. and Mrs. Rinker had one child: Antoinette, the widow of William H. Metcalf, who has one son, Don R. She makes her home with Mrs. Shankland on the Dawson farm.

SHARP, George, a farmer of Riverton, Sangamon County, Ill., is of that excellent German blood which has ever been potent in the upbuilding and strengthening of our American citizenship. He is a son of Henry and Mary (Rubley) Sharp, Germans, and was born near Croton Falls, N. Y., November 20, 1852. It was at Croton Falls that his parents settled on coming to the United States. They soon moved to New Haven, Conn., whence they went eventually to Seymour in the same State, where they lived out their remaining days and passed from earth.

All of their three children, two sons and a daughter, are living: George; Eliza, who married Henry M. Manweiler, of Seymour, Conn., and Henry, of the same place.

Mr. Sharp was educated in Seymour and as a boy was from time to time, variously employed there. He left that place March 27, 1870, for Springfield, and soon became a Sangamon County farmer, in which line he has been successful ever since. He now owns a fine farm of thirty acres on the border of Riverton, where he has made his home for the last nineteen years. He is a Republican and a Congregationalist, and Mrs. Sharp is a Methodist. She was Miss Elmina Fox, born at Pleasant Plains, Sangamon County, September 2, 1852, daughter of Aaron and Pheobe (Buck) Fox, farming people. They were natives of New Jersey, who were then living on the old Peter Cartwright farm, having had ten children: Charles W., Millicent, Sommers, Smith, Frank, Coleman and Elmina, living, and Hannah Jane, Emily and Hannah Jane, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp were married in Springfield by Rev. Albert Hale, December 9, 1873. They have had a son, Robert F., now a soda manufacturer at Iola, Kan. He served in the Spanish-American War, as a member of Company H, Second Nebraska. Robert Sharp and his wife (whose maiden name was Alice Farley, and who was a native of Sangamon County) have had five children: Frieda, Alleta, George and Robert, and Elmina, who is deceased.

SHARTZER, Alfred A. (deceased).—Some of the representative Sangamon County agriculturists have passed from this life to the reward they richly deserved, after a life filled with hard work and many good deeds. One of these most excellent men, who for many years was connected with farming interests in this locality was the late Alfred A. Shartzter, formerly of Illiopolis. He was born in Dauphin County, Pa., February 22, 1841, a son of James Shartzter, also a native of Pennsylvania, James Shartzter was a farmer, who came to Illinois at an early day, settling in Macon County, where he operated a farm until his removal to Illiopolis. After coming there he entered the Baptist ministry, continuing in it until his demise.

Alfred A. Shartzter was educated in Dauphin County and during his boyhood worked for his father on the farm, but came to Illinois a year before the rest of the family, and after they arrived, resumed his work of assisting his father. This state of things continued until his enlistment in Company I, Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years. At the expiration of his term of service, he re-enlisted in Company E, Fifty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry. During their first campaign the regiment, with which Mr. Shartzter enlisted was nearly decimated and the remainder consolidated with the Fifty-third Regiment. Mr. Shartzter served in many bloody engagements, including the Siege of Vicksburg, and was with Sherman in his famous March to the Sea.
Fort Donelson, during the earlier part of the war, he was shot in the head, and he saw active service at Shiloh, Chattanooga and, in other important battles. When he was mustered out at Chicago he was Sergeant.

Following his discharge Mr. Shartzer went to Sangamon County, where he began farming, thus continuing for several years, then entered the employ of the Wabash Railroad, being section foreman for seventeen years. Retiring on account of poor health, he opened a cigar factory, operating it for some time, finally dying July 16, 1891. For some years he served as a member of the Town Board of Illiopolis. He was a Mason, belonging to Illiopolis Lodge No. 208, and being at its head for some time prior to his death. He also belonged to Morgan Post, G. A. R. The Methodist Church held his membership, and his wife also early connected herself with that denomination.

On May 3, 1863, Mr. Shartzer was married, at Memphis, Tenn., to Mary E. Johnson, born near Little Rock, Bradley County, Arkansas, December 23, 1844, a daughter of Rhenen Johnson, born in Alabama, as was her mother. Mr. Johnson was a farmer in Arkansas, living there until his death, but his widow came to Sangamon County, living there until her death. Her remains are buried in beautiful Cemetary. She had four sons and two daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Shartzer had one child, James Lee, now working at the Sangamon County poor farm. Mrs. Shartzer owns her pleasant home in Illiopolis, and is in receipt of a pension from the Government on account of her husband's services in defense of his country.

Although he never obstructed himself upon public notice, Mr. Shartzer was a man of considerable force of character and possessed a sincere nature, which found expression in his church work. He was a devoted husband and father, a kind neighbor, a loyal citizen, and all his life worked hard to provide for those dependent upon his exertions. His memory is tenderly cherished and he is remembered as one who never shirked a duty or sought to avoid a responsibility.

SHARTZER, Atkinson M., a retired farmer residing at Illiopolis, III., and a veteran of the Civil War, is a native of Dauphin County, Pa., born December 13, 1844. He is son of Rev. James and Elizabeth (Alinser) Shartzer, natives of Pennsylvania, the former born in Dauphin County, February 19, 1815, and the latter born in Cumberland County. The father, on coming from farming in Dauphin County and in 1858 came to Macou County, Ill., where for five years he carried on the same occupation, and in 1863 located in Illiopolis, where for the remainder of his life he served as a minister of the Baptist Church, filling that position until his death, February 17, 1899. Six sons and one daughter were born to him and his wife, of whom the following survive: Atkinson M.; Joseph, a farmer of Greeley County, Neb.; John W., a painter and decorator living at St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. Shartzer was educated in the country schools of his native county and worked on a farm in his boyhood. He accompanied his parents to Macon County in 1858 and attended school there for a short time. In 1862 he heard the call of his country and enlisted in Company E, One Hundred Sixteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving to the end of his term and participating in eighteen battles. He was mustered out at Washington and honorably discharged at Camp Butler, near Springfield. He is a member of the G. A. R., being affiliated with Morgan Post, No. 208.

Mr. Shartzer was married at Lake Fork, Ill., February 14, 1867, to Sarah P. Hall, who was born in Toledo, Ohio, April 20, 1850, daughter of William Hall, who carried on farming in Ohio for many years. In 1856 Mr. Hall brought his family to Sangamon County, where he conducted a farm until 1864. Mrs. Shartzer was a widow survived until 1894. Mr. Shartzer and his wife became parents of eleven children, of whom the following seven survive: James H., an electrician of Georgetown, Ill.; William J., of Illiopolis; Minnie A., married George Davis, an engineer residing in Springfield; John F., a farmer living near Illiopolis; Mary E., wife of William R. Twanet, who conducts a barber shop at Illiopolis; Anna L., wife of George S. Prater, a barber of Illiopolis; Hattie L., wife of Vernon Jackson, an electrician living at Newman, Ill. There are thirteen grandchildren in the family. Mrs. Shartzer died August 16, 1905, at her home in Illiopolis, having been a good wife and mother, and mourned by a large circle of friends. Mr. Shartzer is interested in many public movements he believes is for the betterment of his community and is a member of the Methodist Church. In political views he is a Democrat. The family is one of the older ones of the village, where they have an excellent standing and enjoy the respect of all.

SHEEHAN, Thomas.—Springfield is fortunate in the officers in whose hands are placed the safety and life of its residents. One of the most popular parts policemen whose efficiency has been proven during long years of faithful service, is Thomas Sheehan. He was born in Waterford, Ireland, March 2, 1848, a son of James and Ellen (Flynn) Sheehan, both natives of Ireland. The parents, who were farming people, came to the United States in 1849, landing in New Orleans, where they remained a few days, when making their way to Naples, Ill. From there they went to Jacksonville, but after a short time there, once more made a change, this time selecting Springfield as their home, and there they remained until they died, the father passing away March 19, 1872, and the mother October 25, 1909. There were seven sons and three daughters in their family, and Thomas Sheehan was the oldest. Only six of this family now survive, Thomas Sheehan was educated in Ireland and the United States, which he reached in 1867, not having made the trip with the rest of the family. He came direct to Springfield and entered the employ of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, working in the freight house. Two years later he was transferred to the roundhouse, and, after four years in all, became fireman. He worked twenty-four years for this company, and one year in the rolling mills, when he entered the Wabash Railroad shops, where he remained a short time, leaving to enter the City Engineer’s office. After three years there, he was appointed park policeman, served a year, then returned to the City Engineer’s office. However, popular demand made him return to his position as park policeman, and he is now guarding the interests of the people in this capacity.

Mr. Sheehan was married in Springfield, in May, 1872, to Bridget Tobin, born in Troy, N. Y., April 29, 1850. Her parents, coming from Ireland, located in Troy later coming to Springfield, where they died when their daughter was but five years old. She was brought up by her grandmother. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sheehan: Catherine, wife of Edward Davelin, of the fire department; Ellen, wife of A. R. Connelly, an insurance agent, of Springfield; Mary, in the employ of the Illinois Wabash Company; Margaret, living at home, and James, a painter of Springfield. Mr. Sheehan has a pleasant home at No. 121 West Reynolds Street, and is in comfortable circumstances. He is a member of the Court of Honor. A good Catholic, he belongs to St. Agnes Roman Catholic Church, of Springfield. In political convictions he is a Democrat, and he lives up to his views, genial, courteous and with the chivalry of his race, Officer Sheehan has friends all over the city and is one of the most popular men on the force.

SHEEHAN, William Patton, proprietor of the Hotel Wabash, located on the corner of Teut and Washington Streets, Springfield, Ill., is a well-known and popular citizen and successful in business. He was born in Ashland County, Ohio, December 25, 1853, and through his father is of Irish descent. He is a son of William and Mary (Patton) Sheehan, and grandson of John Sheehan, a farmer of Covington, Ky., who married Mary Putnam. The great-grandfather, John Sheehan, was a Revolutionary soldier.

William Sheehan was a native of Tuscarawas County, Ohio, and became a Captain in the Mexican War. He located at Perrysville, Ashland County, where he died at the age of sixty-four years. His wife, who was a native of Lexington, Ky., died in Perrysville, in 1897, at the age of ninety-two years. She was a daughter of John Patton, who was a native of New England and a soldier in the Revolution, participating in the Battles of Lexington, Concord, Cambridge and others. He was wounded at Lexington by two bullets which penetrated his left shoulder, and he carried them to his grave. John Patton moved from Massachusetts to Ohio, and later went to Keutucky with Daniel Boone, locating in Lexington, where his death occurred.

William Patton Sheehan spent his childhood at Perrysville, Ohio, and when fifteen years old volunteered his services as a soldier in the Civil War, being refused on account of his extreme youth. When sixteen years of age he became a water boy on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago railroad, became a brakeman, later a fireman, and eventually a locomotive engineer. After being hurt in a railroad wreck he became a conductor, in 1881, on the Wabash railroad, and filled this position until the strike of 1894, when he became freight conductor for the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis road, working for this company until 1905, when he accepted a position as passenger conductor on the Gulf Coast road. He was at Brownsville, Tex., at the time of the trouble, with which he hauled in and out. After working two and one-half years for this road he resigned his position and returned to Springfield. He was appointed as Inspector for the Board of Health and served in this office until December, 1906, when he resigned and took hold of his present business. He is enterprising and successful, and his methods and has established a good patronage. His parents were members of the Episcopal Church, but he is not connected with any church. In politics he is a Democrat, and he is affiliated with the Order of Railway Conductors of America, and is a charter member of Camp No. 454, Modern Woodmen of America, and Massasoit Tribe of Red Men.

Mr. Sheehan was married (first) in Steubenville, Ohio, in 1870, to Miss Jennie Parr, who died in Fort Wayne, Ind., in 1884. He married (second) in Fostoria, to Miss Ada Herald, daughter of William Herald. Her father and brother William were both killed in the Civil War. Mr. Sheehan had one child by his first marriage, Lillian, Mrs. Victor Wise, of Los Angeles, Cal. By his second marriage he had no children. Since his marriage Mr. Sheehan has made his home at different times at Crestline, Ohio; Fort Wayne, Ind.; and Springfield, Ill. He is well known in railway circles and is Secretary of Lincoln Division No. 204, O. R. C.

SHEPARD, James R.—It seems almost impossible to give any account of the life of a veteran of the Civil War that will give him full credit for his bravery and loyalty. It was no easy matter for a man to leave all he held dear and offer himself as a target for the bullets of the enemy, as well as subject himself to all the dangers attendant upon life in camp, yet how many did it, and few, if any, escaped perfectly unharmed. One of the honored veterans of Sangamon County is James R. Shepard, a retired farmer of Illiopolis, who was born May 27, 1839, three miles east of Decatur, Macon County, Ill.
He is a son of Stephen and Mary (Hawks) Shepard, the former born in Westmoreland County, Va., and the latter in Kentucky.

Stephen Shepard was a farmer, who came to Macon County in 1828, taking up eighty acres of the raw land. Afterwards he bought sixty acres one mile west and one north of this city of which he made a fine farm, operating it until his death, in 1858. During the Black Hawk War he defended his home and community by serving as a soldier. He and his wife had thirteen children, but none survived except James R. The Shepard family is of English origin, although the records are not definite enough to permit their insertion here.

James R. Shepard not only attended the district schools of Macon County, but graduated from Brush College, and is a well educated man. He worked on the farm for his father, growing up among healthy surroundings, and was still engaged in farming when the war cloud burst, and he enlisted on June 27, 1861, at Springfield, in Company A, Twenty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving six months under the command of Colonel (afterwards Brigadier General) Grant. The regiment left Springfield July 3, going to Missouri, and participated in many battles. Mr. Shepard participated in those of Frederickstown (Mo.), Corinth, Perryville, Knob's Gap, Stone River, Chickamauga, Liberty Gap, Pine Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin, and Nashville as well as many skirmishes. He was made First Lieutenant, and was mustered out with that rank at San Antonio, Texas, in December, 1863, and discharged at Camp Butler, Springfield.

Returning to Macon County, this brave soldier quietly resumed his farming, thus continuing until 1906, when he located in Illinois, although he still owns eighty acres of valuable Macon County farm land, as well as his home in the township of Corin. In Macon County Mr. Shepard served as School Director. He belongs to Morgan Post No. 208, G. A. R., and to Camp 265, Modern Woodmen. For twelve years he has been a consistent member of the Christian Church.

On December 1, 1868, the former brave young lieutenant was married at Decatur, to Maria Anderson, born in Ross County, Ohio, August 27, 1842, a daughter of William Anderson. The latter came to Illinois in 1859, buying a farm in Macon County that was the site of Brush College, and there he lived for many years, but later sold it to return to Ross County, Ohio, where he died. Mrs. Anderson bore the maiden name of Nancy Hall and was a native of Kentucky. Of the nine children she bore her husband, not one survives aside from Mrs. Shepard, Mr. and Mrs. Shepard have had three daughters: Minnie and Edith live at home; Grace married James Dennis and they live on a farm in Piatt County. Mr. and Mrs. Dennis have two children, Ross and Myra, who are the pets of their grandparents and aunts. Miss Minnie and Miss Edith are charming ladies, who assist their mother in making the Shepard home one of the most pleasant in the neighborhood. Mr. Shepard is justly regarded as one of the representative men of Sangamon and Macon Counties, and has many friends in both localities.

SHEPHERD, Louis Pittner.—It is due to the efforts of energetic, progressive and intelligent farmers that agricultural conditions in Sangamon County are now in such a healthy condition. Intelligent cultivation of the soil, recognition of the value of crop rotation, tilling, grading, draining and ditching, and the use of modern machinery, have improved conditions wonderfully, and one of those who have assisted in the advancement of farming in the county is Louis Pittner Shepard, who is operating a valuable farm in Woodside Township. Mr. Shepard was born in Sangamon County, July 1, 1884, a son of Charles Miller and Sarah (Ford) Shepard.

Charles Miller Shepard came as a boy from Virginia and settled in Sangamon County. He was educated in the common schools and Concordia College at Springfield. He enlisted as a soldier in the Civil War, being mustered in with the Eleventh Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry. For three years he was in partnership with his father and brothers, and then branched out on his own account, and spent the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits in Sangamon County, accumulating a large property, becoming a man of affairs in his community and being the owner of the Straw Bridge farm, on which he died. He was the father of three boys, all of whom are now carrying on agricultural operations in Sangamon County.

Louis Pittner Shepard attended the common schools of his native place and later secured a college education, attending the University of Illinois. He and his brothers, Charles, Raymond and Alva Ford, were brought up to lead farming lives. As soon as he left school he at once engaged in agricultural pursuits, and has continued to follow this line to the present time. His politics are those of the Republican party, but he has never desired to hold public office, preferring to give his time and attention to his excellent farm. His religious faith is that of the Methodist church.

Mr. Shepard was married, November 25, 1908, in Glenarm, Sangamon County, III., to Geneva Fountain Lard, a daughter of Jacob F. and Estella (Lench) Lard. He was born in Sangamon County, but grew up in Pike County. Mr. Lard is a prominent farmer of Ball Township. Mrs. Shepard was born July 16, 1887, in Sangamon County, where she has spent her entire life. They have no children.

SHEPHERD, Thomas A., a leading farmer and business man of Ball Township, Sangamon County, is one of the largest landowners of the community, and has spent much of his life on the farm he now occupies, where he was born.
December 4, 1860, being of Welsh descent. He is a son of Thomas B. and Arminda (Pyle) Shepherd, the former born in Maryland, and died February 2, 1911. Mrs. Shepherd, who was born at St. Clair County, Ill., October 13, 1828, died in Sangamon County, January 30, 1907, and both she and her husband are buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery, Springfield. Thomas B. Shepherd was an early settler in Sangamon County, where he became a prominent and successful farmer. A sketch of his life succeeds.

The boyhood of Thomas A. Shepherd was spent on his father's farm and he received his education in the country schools of Ball Township, where he applied himself to good advantage. He has always been fond of outdoor life and sports of all kinds, and as soon as he was old enough looked up farming on his own account, specializing twenty-three acres on the farm owned by William Patterson, which he has since purchased. He came to the old home farm to live in 1906 and has since carried on the farm. He owns 550 acres of land in Ball, 100 in Divernon and 200 acres in Pawnee Township. He is progressive in his methods and pays considerable attention to raising stock, having his farm well stocked with cattle.

Mr. Shepherd is an enterprising business man, and September 1, 1900, in company with E. A. Baxter and M. C. White; organized the Pawnee State Bank, of which he is President. The bank is patronized extensively by the farmers of the locality, and has a capital stock of $25,000. Mr. Shepherd is recognized as a man of ability and good judgment, and has won success through his own efforts, making the most of opportunities that have come his way. He is interested in public affairs in the community and supports various measures which he considers will be of benefit to the people in general. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally a member of the Masonic Lodge at Pawnee. The family to which he belongs is well known in Sangamon County, where they are held in high esteem by all.

Mr. Shepherd was married in Ball Township, December 24, 1852, to Miriam M. Weber, the ceremony being performed by Rev. William Poe, of Oak Ridge Methodist Church. Mrs. Shepherd was born in Sangamon County, October 5, 1834, and is a daughter of George P. and Vienna (Meader) Weber, both natives of Sangamon County, the former born in Springfield. Three children have blessed this union: Stella M., born December 27, 1855; George W., August 15, 1890; Thomas C., November 7, 1893.

SHEPHERD, Thomas B. (deceased).—To have lived in one county for three-quarters of a century is to have seen and participated in almost unbelievable changes, to have watched the country grow from a wilderness into a farm. In a farming, abundant farming section, to have seen the little towns develop into large cities and new towns and villages spring up, and to have seen the wilds of nature conquered by the onward, progressive march of man. There are few people in Sangamon County who can look back over seventy-five years spent there, and recall with anecdote and reminiscence the early days of this June. And this is the anniversary of the late Thomas B. Shepherd, who during the last years of his life, retired on North Fifth Street, Pawnee, Ill., who came to Sangamon County in the spring of 1836. Mr. Shepherd was born in Washington County, Md., September 25, 1835, a son of Thomas C. and Ellen (Miller) Shepherd.

The progenitor of the family in America was Thomas Shepherd, a native of Wales, who came to Virginia. He settled on the south bank of the Powhatan River, near Blue Ridge, and took up several thousand acres of land, and the place was named Shepherdstown. In his honor. He sold lots and acre tracts, and required that an annual quit-rent be paid on the farm, petually. The will which granted this land to him is now owned by Thomas B. Shepherd, covers eight pages of foolscap, and is dated August 20, 1776, being of much historic value.

Thomas C. Shepherd, father of Thomas B., was born in Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, Va., June 28, 1806, and was married there July 3, 1834, to Ellen Miller, who was born June 24, 1813. They made their home at Blackford's Ferry, Washington County, Md., until 1836, when they, with Grandfather Shepherd, Joseph, Arminda, James and Thomas B. Shepherd, started for Illinois in wagons, and, after a journey of six weeks, reached Sangamon County November 17, 1836, locating on a farm six miles south of Springfield that had been purchased by Mr. Shepherd the spring previous. Five children were born to Thomas C. and Ellen (Miller) Shepherd, namely: Thomas B.; John H., born February 21, 1838, married October 6, 1863, to Ann Pyle, and the one child of this union, Arminda, lives in Pawnee; Mary E., who died in Sangamon County; William B., born June 6, 1840, married October 23, 1867, Elizabeth H. Brown, who was born October 20, 1848, near Wheeling, W. Va., and now lives in Woodside, Ill., and has one child; and Charles M., born November 18, 1841, served three years in Company B, 11th Missouri Volunteers, married November 11, 1867, Sarah E. Ford, and died June 15, 1910, in Pawnee, leaving three children—Charles Raymond, Alva and Louis.

Thomas B. Shepherd is the only survivor of the party that made the wagon trip across the country in 1836. He was educated in the country schools until eighteen years of age and then took a course in the Illinois State University (its buildings now being the property of Concordia College), at Springfield, Ill. He lived at home until his marriage, at the age of twenty-four years, at which time he went to live on a farm in Ball Township. He lived on the same farm for forty-seven years, but after the death of his beloved wife left it and came to Pawnee, where he lived retired until his death. On October 26, 1859, he was married to Arminda Pyle, who died January 30, 1907. Her father, Alfred Pyle, was an early settler of Sangamon County, and both he and his wife died in Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd there were born three children: Thomas A., the eldest, born December 4, 1850, residing on the old homestead, married Miriam M. Weber, daughter of George P. Weber, and has three children: Stella M., married, June 19, 1911, to Chester Baker, of Pawnee Township; George W. and J. C., all living at home. Ann E., the second child, born December 12, 1852, married George W. Davidson, of Divernon, son of Samuel Davidson, and has three children: Flossie S., Lelia S. and George, Jr., all at home, and Mary E., the youngest child, born October 24, 1864, married Charles W. Anderson, and they lived with Mr. Shepherd in his beautiful Pawnee home, and have two children, Leslie and Nellie.

Mr. Shepherd was a member of the Methodist Church and in political views he was a Republican for many years, but later acted with the Prohibition party. He died February 2, 1911, and both he and his wife are buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery, Springfield.

SHEPHERD, Thomas D., a retired farmer living at 1506 East Capitol Avenue, Springfield, Ill., and an honored veteran of the Civil War, was born at Lawrenceville, Ill., March 27, 1843, son of Henry Harrison and Adeline (Hackley) Shepherd, both natives of Virginia. The maternal and paternal grandfathers were soldiers in the War of 1812 and the father of Henry H. Shepherd came to Illinois, where he died at the age of one hundred and eight years. Henry H. Shepherd was a merchant all his life and became cashier of a bank in Lawrenceville, the second bank organized in central Illinois. His wife died in 1853.

The education of Thomas D. Shepherd was received in Lawrenceville and Olney, Ill., and his childhood was spent on a farm. He began working in a drug store after leaving school and lived in Lawrenceville until after the war, then moved to Washington, D. C., and until 1870 was employed in drug stores there. In that year he came to Sangamon County, Ill., and later located on a farm in Christian County, where he spent nineteen years in farming, since which he has lived in Springfield. He was an energetic and prosperous farmer and has the respect of all who know him. He has never married, but is of cheerful disposition, friendly manner and social tastes. He is a Methodist in religious belief and has always been an active adherent of the Republican party. He belongs to A. J. Weber Post No. 421, G. A. R.

Mr. Shepherd enlisted, first, in Company K, Seventieth Illinois Infantry, was given rank of Sergeant, served three months, and was mustered out, October 20, 1862, at Alton, Ill. He re-enlisted in Company K, Ninth Indiana Cavalry, at Vincennes, Ind., served three years and was mustered out at Vicksburg, Miss., in 1865, at the close of the war. He then was appointed in the regular army, becoming Second Lieutenant of Company K, Eleventh United States Infantry, served a year and was promoted to the rank of First Lieutenant, after which he served another year. After the war he was Commander of Libby Prison and was the last officer in charge of Jefferson Davis before he was sent back to Richmond. He received his final discharge at Richmond, Va., having been in the Government service nearly six years. He was wounded in the shoulder at Franklin, Tenn., and was also shot in the head and arm. He was taken prisoner at Sulphur Treble, Ala., and escaped while crossing Dutch River. He spent some time in the Tennessee mountains with nothing to eat save corn bread. At one time he was hit on the breast with a bullet, but was saved by an album which he was carrying in his pocket, so that although every face was punctured and every picture ruined, it did not penetrate his body. Among the battles in which he participated were Nashville, Franklin, Sulphur Treble, Spring Hill, and others too numerous to mention. He has every reason to feel great pride in his record as a brave and faithful soldier.

SHERMAN, Lawrence Y., lawyer, former legislator and Lieutenant Governor, and present head of the State Board of Administration, was born in Miami County, Ohio, November 6, 1853; at three years of age came with his parents to Industry, McDonough County, Ill., but when ten years old went to Jasper County, where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in the public schools of that locality and in the law department of McKendree College, at Lebanon, Ill. Meanwhile he was engaged in teaching for a time in both Jasper and St. Clair Counties and, after graduating at McKendree College in 1881, located in Macomb, McDonough County, where he began the practice of his profession in 1882. Later he served one term as City Attorney of Macomb, and in 1886 was elected County Judge, at the expiration of his term in this office entering into partnership with George D. and Damon G. Tuallcliff, the latter serving for a short term as Justice of the Supreme Court by appointment as successor of Judge Pinkney H. Walker.

In 1894 Mr. Sherman was a candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative in the General Assembly from the McDonough District, but withdrew to prevent a division in party ranks. Two years later (1896) he was nominated for that office and elected, and subsequently reelected for three successive terms, during the last two terms (the Forty-first and Forty-second General Assemblies) serving as Speaker of the House. In 1904 he was nominated and elected Lieutenant Governor on the Republican ticket, serving during Gov. Deneen's first term. At the expiration of his term as Lieutenant Governor in 1909 he was appointed by Gov. Deneen President of the newly created State Board of Administration, a position to which he was reappointed in 1811, for a full term of six years. This board has general supervision of all State Charitable Institutions in Illinois (seventeen in number), a position for which Mr. Sherman, by his integrity, benevolent temperament and executive ability, is especially well suited, and his administration has met with marked success.

SHOCKLEY, Uel Hickman (deceased), was a resident of Springfield, Ill., thirty-one years before his death, and was for some time engaged in business in the city. He was born near Columbus, Ohio, July 10, 1825, son of Archibald and Susan (Hill) Shockley, the former a native of Ohio and a farmer by occupation. They were parents of two sons and three daughters. The boyhood of U. H. Shockley was spent on his father's farm near Columbus, and he received his education in the country schools. After leaving school he remained with his father until his marriage, in 1844, and then carried on farming on his own account several years, but later built up a business as carpenter and contractor, and in this connection erected many houses and other buildings in Sangamon County. He was an energetic and successful business man and took no active part in politics, although he was a Republican after the organization of that party and staunchly supported its principles. He belonged to no secret organizations of any kind, but was zealous in the work of the church and Sunday School with which he was connected, and after coming to Springfield united with the Second Methodist Episcopal Church. For several years before his death he lived retired from active business affairs and made his home with his daughter, Mrs. W. B. Coleman, at 1411 Pasfield Avenue.

June 20, 1844, Mr. Shockley was married to Miss Charity Bowman, who was so abundantly attended by Reverend Kilner, of Springfield, to William B. Coleman, who was born in New York city, January 16, 1855, son of Benjamin and Mary Francis (Glennan) Coleman. Mr. Coleman is a Check Clerk with the Chicago, Pennsylvania and St. Louis railroad company, and he and his wife own their pleasant home in Springfield. He was a man of excellent character and kindly disposition, and his loss was widely mourned. He was known and missed in many circles and was always active in any movement connected with the good work of the church of which he was a member. His wife is still living and resides with her daughter, at the age of eighty-five years.

SHOUP, Samuel.—Sangamon County will always be a strongly agricultural center, for the fertile lands of this section, under the magnificent climatic conditions, and by the abundant rainfall that there will always be, the black soil will produce the most abundant crops. Some of the progressive farmers of this locality is Samuel Shoop, born in Cotton Hill Township, Sangamon County, March 28, 1864, a son of Henry and Ruth (Knotts) Shoop, the former born in Ohio, and the latter with his parents to Cotton Hill Township, and he and his wife were married in Springfield. Following this he bought land, owning at one time 18 acres in Cotton Hill Township. He was a Democrat and a consistent member of the Baptist Church. His wife died in 1906, and he in 1904. There were seven children in the family: Elbert, of Springfield; Sarah, wife of James Milliner, a farmer near Glenarm; Jacob, of Michigan; Elijah, a farmer near New City, Ill.; Leander, of Cotton Hill Township; Samuel; and Lilla, wife of Leonard Lowley, a farmer of Cotton Hill Township.

Samuel Shoup attended Crow Mill School in his native township, at the same time working for his father and thus gaining a practical knowledge of farm work. In 1903 he married and went on a farm of his own. The following year he bought his present farm of thirty-nine acres, which he has placed under a fine state of cultivation. He raises stock of all kinds for the market.

On December 2, 1903, Mr. Shoup married Sally McKee, daughter of James McKee, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Shoup: James Henry, born April 17, 1906; Ruth Geneva, born April 19, 1909, and an infant, deceased. Mr. Shoup is a Democrat and has served most acceptably as School Director and Road Commissioner. He is liberal in his religious views. His wife belongs to the Methodist Church. An excellent farmer, a good citizen and successful business man, Mr. Shoup is one of the representative men of Sangamon County, which has been his home all his life.

SHROYER, Abel, an enterprising and representative citizen of Capital Township, Sangamon County, conducts a blacksmith shop and owns six acres of land. He was born at Troy, Miami County, Ohio, August 14, 1843, son of John B. and Mary A. (Sullivan) Shroyer, the former born in Pennsylvania and the latter in Maryland. The father was a farmer by occupation and for many years lived in Ohio, but in 1880 came to Illinois. Settling in Girard County, he bought a farm there, and later moved to Macoupin County. He died in 1896 and his widow now lives on the old home place in Macoupin County, with her son, Eber Shroyer, having reached the age of ninety-four years (1910). There were eight children born to John B. Shroyer and his wife, of whom seven now survive.

In the early boyhood Abel Shroyer attended the country schools of his native county, and he was reared to agricultural pursuits. In youth he learned the trade of blacksmith, in Carlisle, Ohio, and afterward worked at this trade in Tippecanoe. Later he worked fifteen years at his trade in Peru, Ind. He came to Sangamon County in 1865 and has since continued to work at his trade near the city, in 1904 purchasing six acres of land where his present business is located, and where he has built up a good trade. He is conscientious and painstaking in the work he turns out and has the confidence of his patrons. He carries on farming to a small extent, and is fairly successful in that line of endeavor as well. He owns a pleasant home and has many friends in the community.

Mr. Shroyer was married, in Girard, Ill., in 1875, to Frances Doty, who was born in Macoupin County. Her parents were from the East and were early settlers of Macoupin County, where both died. Three daughters and one son were born of this union: Theodore, a brakeman on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, lives in Girard, Ill.; Etta, wife of Charles Clark, a contractor living at El Paso, Tex.; Gussie, wife of Samuel Weaver, clerk for Swift & Company, and living in Chicago; Stella, living in Bloomington, Ill. Mr. Shroyer has two grand-children.

Mr. Shroyer is a member of the Dunkard Church and his wife is a Presbyterian. Both are much interested in church work and every worthy object meets with their ready approval and support. Mr. Shroyer is a Democrat in politics. He is an industrious, hard-working man, fond of home and family, and makes the most of his opportunities for advancement in life. He and his wife have reared a family of children who are a credit to them.

SHUMATE, Hiram H., retired farmer, Riverton, Sangamon County, is one of the few re-
maning citizens of his part of the State who are distinguished as having personally known Abraham Lincoln during the active years in Illinois of that distinguished, martyred and universally lamented President. Mr. Shumate was born in Andrew County, Mo., April 3, 1849, a son of Hiram and Eliza Jane (Beachum) Shumate, natives of Kentucky. His father, a blacksmith, came quite early to Illinois, locating first in Macoupin County, whence, after some years, the family moved to Missouri where the elder Mr. Shumate farmed and worked at his trade till 1849, when he set out for California in quest of gold, dying en route. His widow survived him until March 10, 1857, when she died in Calhoun County, Ill. Of their four sons four are living: Hiram H. Shumate; Joshua B. Shumate, of Havensville, Kan.; Joseph M. Shumate, of Frankfort, Marshall County, Kans.; and William H. Shumate, of Eskridge, Kans. Joshua B. is a mail carrier; Joseph M. is an insurance agent, and William H. is a minister of the Christian Church.

Mr. Shumate came to Sangamon County, in 1853, when he was about four years old, and his education was secured there. He gave the active years of his life to farming and was so employed until a few years ago, when he moved to Riverton to live in retirement from active life. However, his experience since has demonstrated that idleness is no rest for a man who has long been busy. Tiring of having nothing to do, five years ago he assumed the position and duties of janitor of the public school buildings of the village. He was President of the local Board of Education one term and has been a member of the Board three years.
There is another chapter of Mr. Shumate's life which must not be overlooked. When the Civil War began he went to the front as Captain's boy, with Captain Davis, of Company H, Seventy-third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was on duty with that organization until after the battle of Stone River. Returning home, he enlisted in Company E, One Hundred and Thirty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, which was stationed at Rock Island on guard duty. He was discharged at Springfield, Ill., September 12, 1864. January 3, 1865, he re-enlisted for three years or during the war in Company C, Thirteenth Regiment, United States Infantry, in which regiment he served against Indians of the West, taking part in many exciting engagements and skirmishes, and having many arduous, dangerous and interesting experiences. He was finally mustered out in Illinois, January 2, 1868. His four brothers also did duty as soldiers under the stars and stripes in the War of the States. He is prominent as a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, a Red Man, a Methodist and a Republican.

November 19, 1874, Mr. Shumate married, at Curran, Ill., Miss Louisa Drennan, born near Curran, the daughter of a farmer. She lived until July 21, 1908, and bore him children, of whom Herman, now living with his father, is the only survivor. Mr. Shumate owns a fine home and considerable other valuable property at Riverton. He is a man of education, amiability and much force of character, who has made and retained many warm personal friends.

His life has spanned the modern development of Sangamon County, and he has witnessed many changes all around him and helped to bring about some of the most important ones.

Mr. Shumate has also been Justice of the Peace and Notary Public for twenty-two years. He has heard hundreds of cases during this time, many appeals have been taken from his judgment to the County and Circuit Courts, but he has never had a decision reversed.

SHUMWAY, Hiram P. (Vol. I, p. 480.)

SIDENER, George P., Jr. (deceased).—The men who were able to look ahead and foresee the values which would be attached to farming land in Sangamon County, reaped large harvests, for the property they secured at nominal prices now are held for amounts that in those days would have appeared impossible. However, these values are but the legitimate results of concentrated effort on the part of the farmers to develop and improve not only their farms, but the more congested sections, and now they and theirs are profiting manifold. One of the most advanced and prosperous farmers of his time was the late George P. Sidener, Jr., who for years operated a farm in the vicinity of Rochester. He was born in Bourbon County, Ky., December 10, 1853, being a son of George P. Sidener, who was also a farmer, and a native of Kentucky, who spent his life in his home state.

George P. Sidener, Jr., grew up in his native city, receiving an excellent education. His inclinations led him to adopt farming, but he felt he could not make the progress he desired in Kentucky, so he moved to Sangamon County, Ill., about half a century ago, locating on a farm near the South Fork, where he reeled forty acres of land. Later he purchased a farm near Rochester, Ill., where he passed the remainder of his life. His death occurred on the home farm, December 30, 1900, and his remains rest in the Rochester cemetery.

On February 9, 1858, Mr. Sidener was united in marriage in Rochester, Ill., with Hannah R. Elder, born in Rochester, July 1, 1841, daughter of Samuel and Phoebe (Clinkenberd) Elder, natives of Kentucky and Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Sidener became the parents of the following children: Phoebe Ann, born December 29, 1858, deceased; Charles L., born July 24, 1860; Ada Amelia, born January 29, 1862; James E., born May 14, 1864; Flora A., born June 14, 1867; Edward Benjamin, born November 14, 1868; William A., born February 20, 1873, and Fred E., born December 26, 1877.

Mr. Sidener, while not a politician in any sense of the word, took an active interest in local affairs, casting his influence with the Republican party. The Christian Church held his membership, and he was liberal in his contributions to it, attending service in Rochester. After his death his widow, renting the farm, moved to Springfield where she now resides at No. 101 East North Grand avenue. She is a lady well known in the city, and universally respected. Mrs. Sidener owns the home farm near Rochester. Mr. Sidener lived out a quiet, uneventful life, honorably and well. Whatever came to him to do he did honestly, and always tried to give the other man a fair deal. Although a decade has elapsed since his demise, his memory is tenderly cherished, and honored in the county where he spent the greater part of his life.

SIDENER, Richard Allen, a prominent and well-known business man of Springfield, Ill., was born in Garrard County, Ky., August 20, 1849, son of George P. and Anna (Smith) Sidener, both born in Lancaster, Garrard County, where they lived until 1857, then moved to a farm near Breckenridge, Sangamon County, Ill., and three years later purchased a farm near Springfield, where the father died in 1867 and the mother in 1868. The parents of George P. Sidener and those of his wife were all natives of Kentucky. He drove a Government team at Camp Butler during the Civil War.

The education of Richard A. Sidener was acquired in a little log school-house east of the city of Springfield, and he remained on his father's farm until he was fifteen years of age. He then followed agricultural pursuits until he was thirty, then for three years followed the occupation of contract painting. He subsequently took up the tiling business in Sangamon County and vicinity, and has been very successful. He has built up a good business and is one of the representative business men of Springfield. He is a self-made man in every respect and has made the most of his opportunities for improvement and advancement. He has spent most of his life in Sangamon County, where he has become well known and highly respected.

Mr. Sidener was married, in Taylorville, Ill., to Luella Utterbach, who was born in Clay County, Ill., October 22, 1859, daughter of B. W. and Floretta (Mitchell) Utterbach, both natives of Clay County, where they spent most of their lives. The Utterbach family moved to Springfield about 1880 and are living there. Mrs. Sidener was one of six children, of whom four survive. Her grandparents were natives of Illinois and Virginia.

Thirteen children were born to Mr. Sidener and his wife, of whom seven survive: William F., born in Taylorville, Ill., August 21, 1857, married Alice Hoepfinger, who was born in Springfield, May 17, 1861, and they have one child, Wilma May, born in El Paso, Tex., November 9, 1909, and they now reside in Springfield; Robert Allen, born October 6, 1889, is unmarried and lives at home; Floretta, born December 18, 1892, married Carl Langston, a native of Menard County, and they had one child, Nellie May, deceased, and now live in Springfield; Albert, born October 13, 1894, died in 1895; Ora June, born June 4, 1897, died March 21, 1902; Bertha Leona, born in Springfield, May 22, 1900; Nina Luella, born January 18, 1902; Richard Earl, born May 20, 1903; Harvey Ray and Margaret May, twins, born April 13, 1905, are deceased; Elfreda, born August 14, 1908, and Mr. Sidener deceased.

SIEBERT, Gustav A.—A live, energetic young man of Springfield, who has devoted his energies to the building up of large business enterprises for others, is Gustav A. Siebert. This young man, who is so well and favorably known to everyone in the city and the large territory contiguous to it, was born in Altamont, Ellingsham County, Ill., May 30, 1878, a son of William Siebert.

After a boyhood spent in Altamont, where he attended the parish school of the neighborhood, as well as the public schools, when only thirteen years old, Mr. Siebert commenced working for farmers. He learned many valuable lessons of industry and economy, but was not satisfied with his outlook, and in 1895 came to Springfield to engage with his brother as a clerk. Almost immediately his value was recognized by his employer, who depended upon him more and more during the succeeding years. Perhaps no other man in his position is better qualified to serve the people than he, for he understands every detail of the business and the needs of the customers.

On December 10, 1901, occurred the marriage of Mr. Siebert, in Springfield, when he was united with Sophia Biesenthal, who was born in Sangamon County, a daughter of Frederick and Sophia (Kuhn) Biesenthal, farmers of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Siebert have no children. In religious faith Mr. Siebert is a Lutheran and he is one of the loyal supporters of his church. In politics he is a Republican and his party places implicit trust in him. Honorable, hard-working and conscientious, Mr. Siebert is a young man who deserves the confidence he has always inspired. He owns his pleasant home, located at No. 1125 South Spring Street.

SIMON, Prof. John S., well known in educational circles, has been connected with Concordia College, of Springfield, for the past twenty-three years, and educational work for fifty-one years, and is regarded with reverence and respect by all the pupils who have come under his supervision and instruction, although many of them are now far from the scene of their former studies. Prof. Simon was born at Augsburg, Germany, on March 5, 1832, a son of John S. and Sabine (Kuehlreuter) Simon, both of German birth. The father was a merchant and conducted a store at Augsburg, where both parents died. They had four sons and two daughters and the only one of the family now surviving is the subject of this sketch.

As a boy, John S. Simon attended the public schools of his native place, and afterward entered college there, preparing himself for the profession of teaching, which he has followed all his life since. He began teaching in Germany, and in 1852, was sent by the German Commission to erect a Teacher Seminary in Sagnaw, Mich. One year later he was called to Monroe, Mich., where he lived and labored twenty-eight years in a parochial school with great success. In 1881, he was called to Concordia College, where he has taught both English and German and has made a specialty of the subjects of general history, geography, grammar, bible history, pedagogy and literature. He also lectures in mission work and music. On account of the illness of his wife, Prof. Simon was compelled to resign in 1904, from active teaching, but is still a member of the faculty, and for the past twenty years has had charge of the financial affairs of the institution and synod. He is a member of the German Lutheran Trinity Church, and for the past thirty years has held various church offices. He is also Secretary of the Springfield Hospital.

Prof. Simon was married at Monroe, Mich., in April, 1853, to Catherine Anweller, a native of Monroe, Mich., born December 1, 1839, of German parents. Her father engaged in farming after coming to America, owning a big farm near Monroe, and both parents died in Michigan. Mrs. Simon died June 26, 1905. Ten children were born to her and her husband, of whom seven now survive: John, a merchant and owner of a farm, of Arcadia, Mich.; William, a druggist of Unioto, Ill.; Henry, proprietor of a hotel at Detroit, Mich.; Edward, M. D., practicing in Calro; Julia, wife of Fred Yazzel of Springfield; Bertha, wife of Anton Piper living with her, her husband being employed in the Wabash shops; Hedwig, wife of William Vose, her husband being superintendent of a mine. Mr. Simon has a nice home at 1000 South Eleventh street, and has many friends in the city, county and state. He is very proud of his children and twelve grandchildren.

While residing in Monroe, Mich., Mr. Simon was drafted into the army, during the Civil War, but the people of the congregation induced him not to serve, for they felt they needed his services in the schools there, and so he continued teaching in compliance with their wishes. Not only has he given his life to teaching, but he has written a number of books on educational matters, which have proven very valuable to the profession. Among them may be mentioned “Paed. Schulkunde.” Lehrplan for academies. Lehrplan for parochial schools. Lehrplan for one class schools, and others. In these books he displays a wonderful acquaintance with his subjects, and is regarded as an authority on pedagogy and kindred matters. For more than half a century was Professor Simon active in educational work, and many of his scholars are now engaged in mission work, not only in different parts of this country, but also in Canada, in South America, Australia, Argentina, New Zealand and other parts of the world.

(Babcock) Sims, who lived eighteen years on a farm in Muskingum County. The father was born in Rappahannock County, Va., and the mother in Muskingum County, Ohio. The father of Reuben J. SIX, H. A.—Realty values in Springfield have risen steadily from the days when the Capital City was but a little hamlet and the imposing State House was only a dream of the future. Now city lots are held for prices that would have been made the pioneers wept, and the farms and lands adjacent are benefited thereby. Because of this activity the realty business has enlisted the services of some of Sangamon County's repre- sentative men, and one who has specialized on it and the handling of horses is H. A. Six, an important factor in the life of Springfield. He was born at Winton, Va., December 31, 1870, son of John W. and Nancy (Clifton) Six, natives of Scott County and Na- ples, Ill. The Six family have been residents of Scott County since pioneer days. The parents of H. A. Six lived there until fifteen years since, when they moved to Moultrie County, Ill., which is now their place of residence. They are farming people and own a nice farm.

H. A. Six went to the country schools, and grew up in Scott County. He came to Spring- field in 1906, establishing himself in a boot and shoe and gents' furnishing goods business, but in 1907, realizing the better opportunities of his present line of work, he sold out and entered this field. He has been remarkably successful in all his business dealings and owes much of his prosperity to the fact that he always gives the "other man" a square deal and can be im- plicitly trusted.

On June 19, 1895, Mr. Six was united in mar- riage. In Macon County, Ill., to Maud Bromley, born near Decatur, Ill., daughter of F. D. Brom- ley, a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Six are the parents of three children: Roy, fifteen years old; Joe, thirteen years old, and Frank, ten. In politics,
Mr. Six is a Republican. His life has been so filled with business details that he has had no time for fraternal diversions. His business and home round out his time, but his friends always find him genial and ready to lend a helping hand whenever they are in trouble or affliction visits their homes. Such men as he tend to raise the standards of morality and to develop good government.

SMELLEY, William F., one of the representative citizens of Sangamon County, who, after many years of active endeavor in various lines of business all over the country, is now living retired in his comfortable home at Breckenridge, is a native of Illinois, having been born at Vandalia, August 6, 1832, the son of John R. and Sarah (Hutchison) Smelley, natives of North Carolina and Tennessee respectively. John R. Smelley, who was a tailor by trade, came to Illinois in 1830, at the time of the “Deep Snow,” and settled in Vandalia, where he conducted a tailoring establishment and also operated a hotel for some years. He was a soldier during the Black Hawk War, and participated in the Battle of New Orleans. Two brothers of William F. Smelley were also soldiers, one serving in the Mexican War and the other in the Civil War. John R. Smelley died in 1839, his widow surviving him but two years, and they were parents of six sons and four daughters, of whom there are but two survivors: William F. and a daughter, Mrs. Alice A. Clark, a resident of Olathe, Kans.

William F. Smelley was educated in the subscription schools of Fayette County, and later attended a business college at Indianapolis, Ind., also being a pupil in the school that was held in the old State House at Vandalia. At the age of fourteen years he started to learn the trade of carpenter, which he followed for a long period in Vandalia. About the time of the Civil War he started for Texas with a drove of horses, but sold out before reaching his destination and went to Kentucky, where he was engaged in farming for a short time. He then returned to Indiana, but eventually went to Vandalia and later to Paris, Ill., where he engaged in contracting, erecting many houses. He lived in Paris for some time, and eventually went to Indianapolis, but about the time of the organization of Guthrie, Okla., he traveled overland to that place and opened a restaurant, which he conducted successfully for a period of several years. Later, going to Kansas City, Mo., he engaged in business there for two years, at the end of which time he opened a restaurant business in Springfield, which occupied his attention up to the time of his retirement, and since then he has made his home in Breckenridge. He has been a member since 1853, and has held every office in Friends Lodge of Odd Fellows. He is a Methodist in religious belief, and adheres to the principles of the Republican party, having always taken an active interest in public matters. Mr. Smelley has been successful in his business ventures, and now, in the evening of his life, can look back over a well-spent career.

On November 23, 1862, Mr. Smelley was married at Vevay, Ind., to Elieu J. Protsman, who was born in southern Indiana, the daughter of farming people of that State. One child, now deceased, was born to this union. Mrs. Smelley died March 4, 1883, and Mr. Smelley was married (second) in June, 1886, in Madison County, Ind., to Mary Brookins, who was born in Indiana in 1838. Her father, who was a native New Yorker and a dairyman farmer, came down the Ohio River to Indiana at an early date. To this union there were born five children, of whom three now survive: John R., a farmer of Cooper Township, Sangamon County; Berlin, who is a resident of Boninterre, Mo.; and Laura, a schoolteacher at the Sand Hill schoolhouse, who keeps house for her father. There are three grandchildren in the family.

SMITH, Albert.—A number of the farmers of Sangamon County, after spending a number of years in agricultural pursuits, have retired from their farms to take up some other line of work. This is true in the case of Albert Smith, one of the reliable men of Springfield, now engaged in house-moving and teaming. He was born at Burlington, Iowa, August 10, 1848, a son of Evans and Mary M. (Church) Smith, natives of the States of Iowa and Indiana, respectively. The father was a farmer, who early settled near Burlington, where he farmed until his death, and his widow died in Springfield in 1898. There were four children in the family, three daughters and a son, but Albert Smith and his sister, Mrs. Hackett, of Springfield, are the only survivors.

Albert Smith went to school in Iowa and worked on his father's farm. In 1850 he moved to Christian County, Ill., where he worked on various farms, eventually coming to Sangamon County. He farmed until he located in Springfield, where for thirteen years he has conducted a flourishing house-moving and teaming business.

In 1893 Mr. Smith was married in Springfield, to Carrie Young, born in Macon County, Ill., daughter of Frank Young. He was an early settler of Illinois, who engaged in farming in Macon County, continuing there until his death. Mrs. Young is also deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Smith had a son born to them, Albert, of Chicago. In 1900 she passed away, having been a most sweet and lovely woman, and a true Christian in every way.

Mr. Smith is a Roman Catholic. Politically he is a Democrat, but was a personal admirer of Abraham Lincoln from the time he first saw him and made his acquaintance. Mr. Smith was one of the many who gathered to pay their last respects to Mr. Lincoln at the saddest funeral Illinois ever knew. The pleasant family residence at No. 2305 East Kansas Street is owned by Mr. Smith. He has always been devoted to his own, and has been hard to do what he believed to be right, consequently, Smith has prospered, for nothing profits more in the end than strict honesty and fair dealing.

SMITH, Andrew V., a retired farmer residing at 2014 East Washington street, Springfield, was born in Knox County, Tenn., April 27, 1839, his parents being natives of Virginia and Tennessee. He is one of six children who were born to William M. and Ann (Greer) Smith, who located in Tennessee after marriage, but later moved to Decatur, Ala., where the father died, being survived by his widow and four children.

Andrew V. Smith, who was the third child, grew to manhood in his native State, receiving a common school education and being reared to farm work, which he followed on his own account in later life. On December 20, 1860, he married Mary E. Hart, daughter of George and Ellen (Akins) Hart, a native of Monroe County, Tennessee, July 23, 1811. After spending four years in Biount County, Mr. Smith and his wife came to Greene County, Ill., in 1864, and five years later, in the fall of 1869, went to Arkansas, coming back to Cooper Township, Sangamon County, in 1874. Here they engaged in farming. Mr. Smith became the owner of 283 acres of good farming land in Cotton Hill Township, and one of the most successful farmers of his part of the county. He erected substantial buildings and worked with untiring energy to improve his land and bring it to a state of high cultivation. He took an active interest in public matters and served as School Director and in other offices, being always ready to advance the interests of the community. He and his wife joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1876, and both were earnest workers in its interest. Mr. Smith is a Republican in political belief. Mrs. Smith died September 1, 1910, at the present home and her remains were interred in Burkhart Cemetery, Sangamon County. While Mr. and Mrs. Smith had no children of their own, they reared the three children of his brother Arthur, who had died and left them. Alice, born October 30, 1870, married Robert Ayers, lives on the Smith farm, seven children.—Goldie, Andrew, Arthur, William R., Elmer, Ray and Velma M.; William, born December 14, 1872, lives in Douglas County, Ill.; married Susie McDonald, no issue; Nicholas A., born August 19, 1876, married Bertha Abel, and lives on part of the Smith farm, one child,—Hazel. To Mr. Smith these children are just as his own, and as they have never known another father, they love him as though he were their actual parent.

Probably no family in Sangamon County is more entitled to special mention in a work of this character than that of Andrew V. Smith. Always public-spirited, he has certainly done his duty, and is now enjoying life in a retired way. He is no longer actively engaged in farming, having retired in 1907, but still owns his farm in Cotton Hill Township. He erected a handsome residence at 2014 East Washington street, recently purchased a $8,000 home on Seventh street, and also has other city property. He is well known as an upright and public-spirited citizen, and has many friends in Springfield.

SMITH, Charles Harvey (deceased).—The late Charles Harvey Smith, of Springfield, was born near Jacksonville, Morgan County, Ill., August 9, 1862, son of Grandiston and Melissa (Masters) Smith, natives of Illinois, the former born near Jacksonville. The father was an extensive farmer and stockman, and after being educated in the schools of his native county, Charles H. Smith helped his father on the home farm for many years. In 1895 he moved to Springfield and entered the employ of the Cudahy Packing Company in that city. He subsequently entered the employ of Schwartzchild & Sulzberger, in a similar line. He had also worked for a time for the Hammond Packing Company in Springfield. He was a shrewd and active business man, caring for the interests of his employers as he would his own.

Mr. Smith was married, at Jacksonville, August 25, 1881, to Miss Nannie Sparks, born in Macoupin County, Ill., July 27, 1861, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Harp) Sparks. Thomas Sparks was born in Tennessee and came to Morgan County as a young man, finding but one log house where the city of Jacksonville now stands. His wife was born at Jacksonville. Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith: Ethel, unmarried, lives with her mother; George Parnell, married, living in Missouri, has two children—Thelma Florence and Earl Parnell; Catherine Maud, unmarried and living in Springfield; Ethel Fay, unmarried, living at home; and Lorraine, Charles K. and Beatrice M., in school. Mrs. Smith owns the family residence at 1508 East Brown Street, Springfield. Mr. Smith died at the home now occupied by his widow, July 1, 1904, and his remains were buried at Pisgah, Morgan County, Ill. He was deeply mourned by his family and many friends, and left the reputation of an upright, honorable life. He was a member of the Baptist Church and in political views was a Democrat. He cared little for public life or honors, being absorbed by his business and domestic affairs.

SMITH, DeWitt Wickliffe.—In every community are men who stand out as examples of the highest type of intelligent and public-spirited citizens, who are not only willing to work for the betterment of the community or State, but who also have the ability and requisite ambition to carry their plans into execution. Such a man is Honorable DeWitt Wickliffe Smith, who has spent his life in Sangamon County, Ill., and has for many years been a resident of Springfield. Mr. Smith was born December 13, 1844, on his father's farm, eleven miles west of Springfield, in what is now Cartwright Township.

His father, Joseph Smith, was born in Loudoun County, Va., October 29, 1732, the son of Temple Smith, born in Virginia, April 4, 1744, and his wife, Lydian (Lane) Smith, born in Virginia in 1751, both of whose ancestors were among the earliest English settlers of Virginia and Maryland. He came with his father's family to Harrison County, Ky., in 1800. On April 9, 1822, Joseph Smith and Sally Taylor were married near Frankfort, Ky. Sally Taylor was born in Gallatin County, Ky., November 22, 1807, the daughter of Rev. John Taylor, born in Faulkner County, Virginia, October 27, 1752, and his wife, Elizabeth Kavanagh, born in Virginia, June 18, 1761. John Taylor being of Scotch and Elizabeth Kavanagh of Irish descent. The Rev. John Taylor was a preacher of the gospel in Virginia and Kentucky for more than sixty years. In 1823, was published his "History of Ten Churches," being the annals of ten Baptist Churches which had been under his ministry, which is one of the most notable and interesting histories of church extension during the pioneer days of Kentucky.

To Joseph Smith and his wife were born in and near Frankfort: Temple, born January 18, 1823, drowned January 2, 1833; John Taylor, born March 6, 1825, married in Springfield, Ill., March 27, 1850, to Sophla Rhdgley, died January 25, 1892 (see his name and family group in this work); Joseph Sidney, born July 21, 1827, served as a soldier in the Civil War (1861-65), with the rank of Major, in the Tenth Illinois Cavalry, was a prominent and useful citizen of Sangamon County, and died unmarried, in San Antonio, Tex., April 9, 1902; Elizabeth Jane, born January 21, 1830, died October 1, 1901, married, December 8, 1852, David Allen Brown. After the family moved to Illinois in the year 1834 there were born: Bradford Temple, born January 8, 1840, died in infancy; DeWitt Wickliffe, born December 13, 1844.

Joseph Smith entered the mercantile business as a clerk, at the age of fifteen years, in Paris, Ky., and at the age of twenty-one established himself as a merchant in Frankfort, Ky., the capital of the State. He remained in business seventeen years, but during most of the time resided on his farm, "Langollan," near Frankfort. Wishing to remove his children from what he believed to be the evil influences of slavery, he came to Illinois to view the country in 1834, and purchased a considerable tract of land in the western part of Sangamon County. Returning to Frankfort, he sold out his mercantile business and his farm home, but with characteristic business prudence, retained his lands in Harrison and Daviess Counties until the day of his death. Central Illinois was in 1834, a somewhat uncertain proposition, and there was a current proverb of that time to this effect: "It is good riding at two anchors, men have told, for if the one fail, the other may hold." After settling his family in Sangamon County, Mr. Smith engaged again in the mercantile business in Springfield with his relative, Col. James M. Bradford, as a partner, but until the close of his life in 1853, he spent the greater part of his time in improving and developing his lands, and in frequent business trips to Kentucky.

While on one of these trips, in the year 1844, he was nominated and elected, by the Whigs of the Sangamon District, to the Illinois Legislature, being then, for the first time and only time in his life, a candidate for office. He was, however, an active and ardent Whig in politics, and was a personal friend of Henry Clay, with whom he enjoyed a close intimacy for many years.

Mr. Smith was a man of good education and fine mental endowments, much given to habits of study and thought, and of unusual business sagacity. When he departed this life he left his family not only well provided for in worldly goods, but with a far richer heritage in the memory and preceets of a father who had done good and not evil all the days of his life, and whose children could, with just and commendable pride, rise up and call him blessed. Mrs. Sally Smith survived her husband nearly forty-two years, going to her final reward in April, 1895, in the eighty-eighth year of her age, and until a few hours before her death, in the possession of all her physical and mental powers. It was said of her, and of the wonders that had come to pass during her lifetime: "She was a wife and a mother when the first railroad passenger train made its initial run, and was twenty-four when the first Lucifer match was manufactured. Five years later, in 1838, she might have been a passenger on the first steamship that ever sped from America to Europe. She was thirty-five when the electric wire flashed the first message from Washington to Baltimore. Since then have come in bewildering rapidity the more modern inventions, such as the telephone, the electric light, the phonograph, and a host of other appliances of science which are considered necessary to our busy life. Through all these marvelous years she passed sweetly, serenely and graciously, a blessing to all who were so fortunate as to come within the charmed circle of her inspiring influence."

DeWitt Wickliffe, the sixth and last child of his parents, was born on his father's farm, eleven miles west of Springfield, in what is now the eastern part of Cartwright Township. After the death of his father in 1853, he came with his mother to Springfield, where he attended the private schools of Rev. Francis Springer and the Rev. John F. Brooks; he afterwards attended the old Illinois State University (now Concordia College), and for two years the Springfield High School. In 1863-64 he took a business college course and training in Chicago and in St. Louis.

On September 1, 1864, he was married to Miss Adella McConnell, who was born near Springfield, February 22, 1845, daughter of Andrew
B. McConnell and his wife, Augusta Saulsbury McConnell. Mr. McConnell and his wife were both born in the State of New York. Mr. McConnell was one of the charter members of the Illinois State Board of Agriculture, was for many years its Vice President and its President; was Sheriff of Sangamon County for four years, and held other positions of honor and trust. After his marriage, Mr. Smith settled on his farm in what is now New Berlin Township, and there were born to him and his wife the following children: Sidney, born February 17, 1866, married October 8, 1894, to Gertrude Lapsley, of Kansas City, Mo., is now living near Bayliss, Ill., and has no children; Eliza Adelin, born December 8, 1867, married October 29, 1800, Henry M. Pindell, of Peoria, Ill., where they now reside, and their children are—Frances Adella and Elizabeth Augusta; Temple DeWitt, born January 2, 1870, died unmarried March 19, 1883; Augusta, born September 18, 1875, married January, 1886, to Charles Carroll, of Springfield, Ill., where they now reside, and have one child, Edith.

Mr. Smith lived on his farm, "Boskymead," for twenty-six years, during which time he was somewhat extensively engaged in farming, in breeding pedigreed livestock, and in cattle ranching in Wyoming and Montana. He was connected with various agricultural and livestock associations, and by reason of these connections and a membership for several terms of the Illinois Legislature, was instrumental in securing the enactment of various State and National laws (of several which he was the author) designed to promote and protect the great farming and livestock industries of the country, industries upon which, more than all others, the welfare of the people is dependent. While having other business interests, he has been at all times proud to stand up and be counted as a Sangamon County farmer. He was for nine years President of the Illinois National Bank, and for twelve years Vice President of the Ridgely National Bank, of Springfield, and has held various other positions of responsibility and trust. In 1890, he moved back to Springfield where he has since resided, at 625 South Second Street.

On February 19, 1895, Mr. Smith married (second) Gertrude Moore, born in Champaign, Ohio, December 23, 1873, the daughter of William Eaton Moore and his wife, Mary Bishop Moore, both of whom were born in Cincinnati. Mr. Moore, while he lived in Cincinnati, was engaged with his father, William H. Moore, in the book publishing business. He afterwards had various business interests here and on the Pacific Coast. In July, 1907, he became seriously ill in San Francisco, Cal., and with his physician started on the overland journey, hoping to reach his home and family, but he died within sight of his home, but before reaching it. His widow, with her daughters, Willa and Mrs. (Jeanette) Russell Yates, reside at the family homestead in the southwest suburbs of Springfield. To DeWitt Wickiffe Smith and his wife, Gertrude Moore, have been born: Mary Temple, born November 12, 1886; William Lane, February 22, 1900; Elizabeth Wilde, March 12, 1902, all of who are now attending school in Springfield.

SMITH, Edward William, formerly employed many years in the rolling mills of Springfield, has lived retired for several years. In his younger days he provided for old age by industry and thrift, and now has a comfortable home at 1507 Monument Ave., Springfield. He was born in County Cavan, Ireland, May 14, 1847, a son of Arthur and Mary (Leonard) Smith, natives of Ireland. The mother died in Ireland and the father afterwards moved to England, where he lived several years with his son Edward, and also lived for a time in Scotland. He was a farmer by occupation.

As a boy Edward W. Smith attended the public schools of his native county, and after his father moved to England the son worked on the farm. The young man afterward worked in the iron works at Northumberland and afterward became employed by the Armstrong Gun factory, the largest plant of the kind in the world, where he spent three years. He also spent a few years working in English mines and lived for a time in London. In 1851 he sailed from Liverpool for America, landing in Quebec and proceeding from there to Toronto, where he worked nine months on a farm. He then went to Hamilton, Canada, and after spending a year there emigrated to the United States. He worked three years in the rolling mills of Wyan- dotte, Mich., then for a few years worked in steel mills south of St. Louis, whence he moved to Edwardsville, Ill., and worked two years in the mines, went from there to Carlinville, and shortly afterwards to Springfield, which has since been his home. He worked several years in Springfield rolling mills, also worked in the city water works, but some years since retired. He has resided in the same house more than twenty years.

Mr. Smith was married, December 15, 1874, in Northumberland County, England, to Elizabeth Cornell, who was born in Durham County. Her father started for Australia, but the vessel on which he embarked was lost and no one on board was again heard from. His widow moved to America and lived for some time in Wyan- dotte with her daughter, and also came with Mr. Smith and his wife to Springfield, where she died in 1893. Six children were born to Mr. Smith and his wife, namely: Mary, wife of Noah Roll, of Springfield, where he holds the office of Constable; Catherine, wife of William Smith, an employee of the Illinois Watch Company; Margaret, wife of Charles Smith, a carpenter by trade; Arthur, of Springfield; and John, living at home. Mr. Smith also has four grandchildren. Mrs. Smith died March 17, 1898, having been a dutiful wife and mother, and was sincerely mourned, not only by her family, but by a large circle of friends.

Mr. Smith is a Republican in politics and by nature a member of the United Americans. He is much respected as a man of stability and uprightness of character, and a useful citizen of his adopted country.

SMITH, Elbert S.—Memories of the two greatest lawyers Illinois ever knew—Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas—cluster around the city where they once made their homes. While Springfield would, as a matter of course, have become prominent as the seat of the State Government, the fact that these two mighty men lived there and practiced their profession in the shadow of the State House, centered attention upon this city, brought men to it, and assisted very materially in its development. It is also true that the profession followed by these two men is one that has attracted many young men who have been desirous of following in their footsteps. Elbert S. Smith, former State's Attorney, and a resident of Springfield since 1851, was born in Summit County, Ohio, March 8, 1847, a son of Richard T. and Louisa (Herrick) Smith. The ancestors of Mr. Smith located in Connecticut, and one of them came to New England in the historic Mayflower. His grandparents moved from Connecticut to Ohio in a very early day, settling in the wilds of the Western Reserve, and there his father was reared, amid pioneer conditions and privations. A brother of the grandfather hauled the first printing press from Pittsburg to Cleveland, being a man of resourcefulness and ability.

Like many of his predecessors, Elbert S. Smith taught school while studying law and graduated from Williams (Montgomery) College, following which he went to Champaign County, Ill., and in 1874 engaged in the practice of his profession. He came to Springfield in 1881, to accept a position in the Attorney General's office, under James McCarty, and also held a similar position under Attorneys Generals George Hunt and H. F. Herrin. Being one of the most active exponents of the Republican party in his part of the State, Mr. Smith became its candidate for State's Attorney, and was elected in 1886, being the first Republican elected to that office in Sangamon County. During his incumbency Mr. Smith ever endeavored to meet every requirement of his position. Never did he show favor to either side, and he was fearless in his prosecutions, bringing to justice those who were guilty, regardless of what their rank or how influential they might be. On the other hand, he never permitted his natural sympathy to weigh with him, but was guided entirely by his realization of the duties of his office. In safeguarding the people he displayed his ability as a lawyer and his conscientiousness as a man. Few public officials of any locality have had as spotless a record as Mr. Smith, and it is difficult to imagine any improvement in the management of the affairs of his office, as he conducted them.

Mr. Smith is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is also a member of the Odd Fellows and the Woodmen. A Protestant in religion, he attends the Methodist Church, in company with his wife. His marriage occurred at Geneva, Ohio, when he was united with Jeanie E. Klusley, daughter of Rev. Hiram Klusley, a Methodist minister and a member of the Erie and Ohio Conferences. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have had three children: Sidney B., a farmer of Sangamon County; and Elida and Elberta, both at home.

SMITH, George (deceased), who spent his entire active life in mining operations, was for some years before his death a mine manager in Sangamon County, Ill. He was a useful, public-spirited citizen, performing well his duties in public and private life, and enjoyed the good-will and esteem of all who came into contact with him. Mr. Smith left a widow and several children to mourn his loss, and his memory is tenderly cherished by all the members of his family. He was born in England, October 3, 1837, son of John and Mary (Homsey) Smith, both natives of England, where the father worked in the mines. The parents were both reared in England, where both died, the father about 1800 and the mother about 1857. They were parents of seven sons and two daughters, the only survivor being a daughter living in Australia, who is the wife of Adam Gray, a stockholder in gold mines there. George Smith was educated in the public schools of England and lived with his parents until his marriage. He took up mining as an occupation and was associated with different mining companies in different parts of England, and is credited with having been instrumental in the various methods and processes of carrying on the work, finally becoming a mine manager. He came to America about 1874, and for four years was engaged in mining at Riverton, Ill. He spent eight years in similar occupation at Dawson, and then spent thirteen years in Springfield, latterly purchasing stock there and in Clear Lake Township. He came to the place now occupied by his widow in 1897, and lived there until the time of his death.

Mr. Smith was married, in Durham County, England, in July, 1863, to Ann Todd, born January 23, 1838, daughter of John and Anna Todd, who spent their entire lives in England, and died many years ago. Mrs. Smith has one brother who lives in Henry County, Ill., and is engaged in farming. Four sons and one daughter were born to Mr. Smith and his wife, namely: Ralph, at home; James, living in the country; Oliver; George, living in Bissell, and Lizzie, at home. Mr. Smith died March 12, 1910, and was buried in Oak Grove Cemetery. He was a devoted member of the Methodist Church, and in politics was a Republican. Fraternally he was a member of the Order of Foresters and the Loyal Americans. His widow now owns the comfortable home where they resided for many years, and owns forty acres of fine farming land.

SMITH, George H.—A large number of the soldiers of the Civil War, upon returning home, directed their energies towards farming, continuing thus through succeeding years, until ultimate success permitted them to retire. Some of them were never without a painful reminder of the days when they were the nation’s sons, and this did not deter them from bearing their part in life, and too much honor cannot be accorded them. One of the representative veterans of Sangamon County is George H. Smith, now living retired at Dawson, near which is located his fine farm. He was born in Springfield, July 15, 1841, being a son of John L. and Rebecca (Cumings) Smith, both born in Kentucky.

The parents came to Illinois at an early day, first locating east of Springfield, where the father entered some land from the Government and conducted it for several years. Later he moved to Logan County, Ill., buying a half section near Elkhart, and farming this until his death, which occurred in January, 1890, his widow surviving until 1895. There were six sons and seven daughters in the family, of whom six children now survive: Robert L., of Lake Fork, Ill.; William A., of Des Moines; Sarah married John Myers, of Mt. Pulaski; Mary married John Coyle, of Missouri; Clara married Charles Davis, of Sangamon County; and George H. The family has always been patriotic, the grandfather having been a soldier in the Revolution, while the father served during the Black Hawk War, and young George H. Smith grew up prepared to defend his flag whenever there was need of him.

The education of Mr. Smith was received in Logan County, and until the outbreak of the war he remained with his father on the family farm. Eager to prove his loyalty, Mr. Smith enlisted in the fall of 1862, in Company I, One Hundred and Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at Elkhart, under the command of Captain John Shockey, serving all through the remaining years of the great struggle, and participating in many engagements. He was mustered out at Little Rock, Ark., and honorably discharged at Springfield. Returning home after a short stay in Sangamon County, he resumed his farming, continuing thus for twenty years, when removal was made to the vicinity of Dawson. Still later he retired to Dawson, where he owns a comfortable residence, and can take an interest in his farm, which is still in his possession.

The marriage of Mr. Smith occurred in Logan County, June 14, 1852, to Sarah M. Glose, born near Sandusky, Ohio, July 22, 1861, daughter of Martin Glose. Mr. Glose was born in Germany, but his wife, who was Nancy Full, was a native of Pennsylvania, her father having come to America at an early day, eventually settling in Ohio, where he was engaged in farming until his demise. Mr. Glose moved to Indiana and then to Sangamon County, where he was a farmer until he died, in February, 1907. His wife preceded him, dying in October, 1893. There were seven sons and four daughters in their family, all of whom survive except the eldest, they being: Mary married Joseph Martin, who died, and she resides in Springfield; Daniel, of Springfield; Henry, living in the vicinity of Mt. Pulaski on a farm; Chauncey, of Decatur; David, living on a farm near Topeka, Kan.; Grant, of Mt. Pulaski; James, of Springfield; Amy married Albert Sievers, of Kaukaue; and Mrs. Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have one son, Leslie, of Clinton, Ill., who married Gertrude Milan, born in Illinois. They have three children: Vernon, Kenneth and Elouisa.

Mr. Smith has long been a member of the Methodist Church and is earnest in his devotion to its good work. He is a man who has always done what he believed to be his duty, no matter what the cost, and his reward has been not only a material one, but also the approval of his conscience.

SMITH, Gustavus Adolphus. (Vol. I, p. 486.)

SMITH, J. Emil.—Among the newspaper men of Springfield may be numbered J. Emil Smith. He is one of the live, energetic young men of the day, and his ability to judge quickly and correctly with regard to news items makes him a valuable acquisition to any paper. He was born in Springfield September 1, 1880, a son of John S. and Charlotte A. (Johnson) Smith. His father was a native of Sweden and came to Illinois in 1859.

J. Emil Smith secured an education in the Springfield schools, and upon leaving them entered at once upon his journalistic career. Having always been a Republican, he took an active part in party affairs and was the logical candidate for City Clerk in 1907, being elected by a large majority. So efficient did he prove that he was reelected on the same ticket in 1909.

On July 9, 1900, occurred the marriage of Mr. Smith to Lydia P. Mackber, born in 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Smith had two children: Mayne Jeanette, born July 28, 1901, and Griffith, now deceased, born March 21, 1908. Mr. Smith is a member of the Elks and he and his family are Presbyterians.

SMITH, John.—Sangamon County farmers are not only noted for their skill in agricultural work, but for their abounding hospitality. They welcome their guests with a cordiality that savors of the Southern States before the war. One of the older farmers, who have passed through many phases of life there, is John Smith, of Section 12, Williams Township. He was born in Sangamon County, March 14, 1837, a son of Phillip Smith and his excellent wife, Rebecca (Hendricks) Smith, the former born May 13, 1813, in Montgomery County, N. C., and the latter in Kentucky.

Philip Smith was a farmer and came to Illinois with his father, who bore the same name, in 1822. They located in what is now Cooper Township, Sangamon County, but later settled in Williams Township. In the latter home the younger Philip Smith spent the remainder of his life and there his ten children were born. Four of them still survive: John; Henry, of Kansas; Laura, wife of George Ash, of Williams Township, and Mrs. Mary Dolan, of Williamsburg, in which Mrs. Smith also participated, but with less fatal results. Mr. Smith was also in a number of other engagements, including that at Jackson, Miss. At the close of the war, he returned to Sangamon County and resumed his farming, which he has since continued. He now resides on the old farm place of seventy-nine acres, which he owns.

In 1844 Mr. Smith was married to Martha Williams, born in Indiana, October 3, 1841, and a son and daughter were born to them: Ida Belle, who later died, and Ulysses F., who is a resident of Springfield. Mrs. Smith died at Quincy, Ill. On October 8, 1874, Mr. Smith married Amanda Yocum, born near Williamsville, in Sangamon County, October 18, 1842. She is a daughter of George Yocum, born in Kentucky, who at an early day came to Sangamon County, and there continued to farm up to his death. She was one of nine children, four sons and five daughters, of whom three sons and two daughters survive. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith: Alice, wife of Taylor Mathias, of Dawson; Maggie, wife of Frank Brest, a farmer, of Buffalo Hart; LeRoy, at home, and Lorin, a farmer of Lilliput. There are eighteen grandchildren in the family. In addition to his homestead of seventy-nine acres, Mr. Smith owns forty acres of land in Logan County.

Having served his country so bravely in its time of need, Mr. Smith is now enjoying pleasant associations as a member of the G. A. R. He and his wife are charming, pleasant people, who have friends all over the county. They have reared a family of whom any parents might well be proud, and enjoy their society and that of the grandchildren who are growing up to carry on the name. Both in war and in peace Mr. Smith has proven himself a loyal, brave citizen, and one who never shrunk from the duty that lay before him.

SMITH, John Taylor (deceased).—The services rendered to any community by safe, sound, conservative bankers cannot be overestimated. They establish and maintain the financial standing of the city and its business men, and heavy responsibilities rest upon their shoulders. The late John Taylor Smith, who at the time of his death was Vice-President of the Rigdey National Bank, of Springfield, was one of the best examples of this class of men the city ever knew, having been well fitted by natural ability and business experience for the position of trust which he so well filled. Mr. Smith was born in Frankfort, Ky., March 6, 1825, a son of Joseph and Salie (Taylor) Smith. Joseph Smith was a merchant in Frankfort, and later became one of the early settlers of Sangamon County, Ill., where he bought and developed a large amount of land and carried on a mercantile business in Springfield. He was a successful business man, and was prominently identified with the progress and improvement of the community. He spent the closing years of his life on his farm, where he passed away, January 26, 1854, and was buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery. He was well known and highly esteemed, being a representative of the enterprising pioneers who have done so much for the State of Illinois.

When his parents located in Illinois John Taylor Smith was a boy nine years old. He received his education in the schools of that day. His early youth was spent on his father's farm and, upon attaining his majority, he came to Springfield, where he engaged in partnership with Ninian Edwards. He continued in business until the year 1874, when, having attained a comfortable fortune, he retired and became Vice-President of the Rigdey National Bank. The men at the head of this financial concern managed its affairs with such wisdom and judgment that it became one of the best known institutions in that part of the State of Illinois. Mr. Smith was connected with the bank many years and continued with it until his death, January 26, 1892.

Mr. Smith was in politics a Democrat and his services in behalf of his party received recognition in his appointment to the office of Postmaster of Springfield, but aside from this he never held public office. Though not as a rule interested in fraternity affairs, he enjoyed his connection with the Sangamo Club, of Springfield, of which he was one of the organizers, and of the Iroquois Club of Chicago. Mr. Smith was liberal in religious views and his family were Episcopalians.

On March 27, 1850, Mr. Smith was married in Springfield, to Sophia Niles Ridgley, who was born in Baltimore, Md., October 29, 1829, a daughter of Nicholas Henry and Jane (Vinece) Ridgley. Five children were born of this union, namely: Julia Vincent, died August 6, 1871; Frederick, died January 26, 1904; a son and daughter who died in childhood; Jessie Taylor, widow of John Howe Brown, Frederick Smith, a young man of whom his parents and the entire community were proud, entered West Point Military Academy and in 1876 graduated from that institution, afterward serving at various military posts. On account of failing health he was forced to resign from the service. He studied law at Columbia University, from which he was graduated in 1881, and practiced his profession several years in his native city, but his health again failing he went to Canon City, Colo., where his death occurred. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mabel (Oldams) Smith, and one son, Vincent. The four deceased children are buried with their father in Oak Ridge Cemetery. Mrs. John Howe Brown was married January 8, 1851. She is the comfort and companion of her mother's declining years and delights to minister to her every need with a loving daughter's care. She and her mother have a delightful home at No. 611 South Fourth Street. Mrs. Smith has always been a most devoted wife and mother, and has the esteem and affection of a host of warm personal friends. She is a woman of great intelligence and refinement and has been the central figure of the home life of the family since her marriage. It is a real pleasure to meet such a type of the true woman, and be favored with her views upon any topic.

Mr. Smith was a useful and representative citizen of his community, never sparing himself or stopping to think of the energy and hard work he expended. In business upright, honorable and farseeing, his good judgment was valuable to all with whom he associated. He advocated many movements which then appeared to be in advance of the times, but which later have been successfully carried out. In charitable work, he was most helpful, giving away much money of which no one knew except himself and those benefited. His home life was especially happy and his loss was keenly felt. Although many years have elapsed since he was called from his busy life, he is still remembered and his memory cherished by those who knew and loved him. He was the central figure in many circuses and his loss was felt in many gatherings.

SMITH, Richard B.—Retired, living in his comfortable home at 1221 North Eighteenth Street, Springfield, Ill., was born at Bedford, L. I., February 8, 1837, son of William and Margaret A. (Rhodes) Smith, both of whom were also natives of Bedford. The father worked for a transfer company and both he and the mother died on Long Island. They were parents of three daughters and one son, and all are deceased except the latter. The grandfather of Richard B. Smith was a soldier in the Revolution.

Mr. Smith received his education in a country school at Bedford, six miles from Brooklyn, and after leaving school worked for a time in a store in Brooklyn. He also became employed on a boat on the Hudson River, and later on one running from New York to Baltimore. In 1861 he moved to St. Louis, Mo., and a year later took a position with the Government as driver of a supply wagon, and held this position six months, then drove a wagon through Alabama and Tennessee about a year, after which he returned to New York and worked another year on a Hudson River boat. He again went to St. Louis and entered the employ of the Government, and after the assassination of President Lincoln again returned to New York. After spending a short time in New York he came West again and located at Athens, McLean County, Ill., and was engaged in farming there for thirty years. He was a successful farmer and in 1906 was able to retire from active life, at which time he came to Springfield. He owns his home in Springfield. He is much respected and has made many friends. He is actively interested in public affairs and is a staunch Democrat. He has seen much of his native country and is a well-read, intelligent man, ready to do his duty as a citizen and promote the welfare of his community.

Mr. Smith was married in 1874, four miles from Springfield, Ill., to Miss Caroline Weese, who was born in Tennessee and died in 1898. Her parents were early settlers of Sangamon County, where they secured a farm and lived on it until their deaths. One child was born to Mr. Smith and his wife, Ruth, wife of John C. Roth, of Springfield, who has three children, two sons and one daughter.

SMITH, Richard C.—Prosperity has attended the efforts of many of the farmers of Illinois, rendering them independent and affording them leisure during their latter years. A well-to-do retired farmer of Springfield is John C. Smith, residing at No. 616 South English Avenue. He was born February 12, 1833, on the old Smith farm, situated on Lick Creek, in Curran Township. He is a son of John and Jane (Dremaun) Smith, the latter being a daughter of Joseph Dremaun, an old pioneer of Sangamon County, who came from Kentucky. She died when Richard C. was an infant, having borne her husband the following children: William C., deceased; Thomas died on his farm; Rebecca, the first wife of William Barbre, is deceased; Elizabeth Caroline, Mrs. William Poor, deceased; Lucy, the second wife of William Barbre, and Richard C. The second wife of John Smith was Rebecca Enochs, daughter of William Enochs, who came to this county from Tennessee. They had two children: Mahala J., Mrs. David Miller, of Curran Township, and Martha H., Mrs. A. J. Dremaun, of Curran Township.

Richard C. Smith attended a subscription school held in a log house, his first teacher being Luther Talbot, and later ones being: Mr. Pearson, Mr. Smiley, Mr. Eaton, and Mr. S. B.
SMITH, Samuel A. (deceased).—Some of the bravest of the soldiers who fought for the preservation of their country and the spotless honor of their flag, have answered to the last roll call, and all that is left for their grateful fellow countrymen to do in their honor is to pay tribute to their memories on Decoration Day. A veteran of Logan County, who is no longer in our midst, the late Samuel A. Smith, whose widow now lives at Williamsville, Sangamon County. Mr. Smith rightfully belongs to Sangamon County, for he was born there, June 19, 1835, a son of Roland and Elizabeth (Goldsmith) Smith, natives of North Carolina and Indiana, who were farming people. The parents came to Sangamon County at an early day, going thence to Logan County, where they spent the remainder of their useful lives.

The education of Samuel A. Smith was secured in the Sangamon County schools, as well as those of Logan County, and even in boyhood he evinced a taste for work, spending his leisure moments in the saw-mill of his locality. When he commenced farming he farmed in the summer and worked in the saw-mill in the winter. Just prior to the war he went to Logan County, but his loyal spirit could not rest content with giving the cause he loved so dearly his moral support, so he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Shockey, participating in the battle of Little Rock, as well as several skirmishes. He was taken sick at Little Rock, came home and died in three days.

Mr. Smith was married in Logan County, Ill., September 9, 1858, to Sarah A. Miller, born in Indiana, April 27, 1836, daughter of John J. and Martha J. (Jenkins) Miller, the former born in Pennsylvania, May 5, 1813, and the latter born in Kentucky, September 10, 1817. The family came to Indiana, thence to Sangamon County, in 1850, and eventually to Logan County. By trade the father was a cooper. His wife passed away in 1851. Mr. and Mrs. Smith became the parents of two children, both deceased. Grace E., born July 10, 1859, married W. P. Sparrow, eight children, all deceased, and Zeno E., born March 16, 1862, died in infancy.

When the Republican party was formed Mr. Smith espoused its principles, and had he lived would have been one of its heartiest supporters. The Methodist Church held his membership, and he died firm in its faith. He was a man of great strength, both of body and character, and was in the very prime of life when taken from his loved ones. He was well thought of in his community, having already accomplished much through his industry and his quiet habits he earned. In 1863, Mrs. Smith moved to Williamsville, where she bought a pleasant home on Pine Street, and there she now resides, devoted to the memory of her gallant soldier husband who died so many years ago, just when life held so much for him, but whose patriotic spirit could not rest in peace when his country had need of his services. Mrs. Smith has been left a beautiful heritage that cheers her lonely years, and that is the realization that in everything her husband.
proved himself a true man, a real Christian and one of whom she can ever be proud.

SMITH, Sherman T., was born in Champaign, Ill., September 12, 1874, son of Levi and Emeline (Patterson) Smith, and grandson of John Smith. The latter was a tanner, born in Pennsylvania, who moved to Ohio in an early day, making the trip overland in an old prairie schooner drawn by an ox team. Following this he went for a short time to Iowa, then moved back to Ohio, dying at Attica, that State. His wife was Barbara Jackson, who was born in Ohio, daughter of Jacob and Polly (Tracy) Jackson, farming people of prominence. Jacob Jackson served in the War of 1812. John Smith and Polly Jackson were married in Ohio. There were children as follows in the family of John Smith: Levi; John, married, and had five children—Monte, all living; Fred, married and had six children—Maud, Lettie, James, Bernie, and two who died in infancy; Hattle, married, and had one child, Edward; Frands was never heard from after he enlisted in the Civil War; Marissa, and two who died in infancy.

The Patterson Patterson, the maternal grandfather of Sherman T. Smith, was born in New York State, October 3, 1805, and married Mariah Purdy, born September 21, 1807. She was reared by her grandparents, remaining with them until her marriage. Her great grandfather died on the ocean and was buried at sea. Both her parents died when she was a child and little is known of them. By this marriage there were children as follows, all born in Attica, Ohio: Mary, born April 12, 1830, married Dr. T. W. Davis, now deceased, and lives at Wapella, Ill.; issue—Hypocrates, Arzilla, Burzy, deceased, and Bose, living at Wapella, Ill., where he is practicing medicine; Fred, born and reared; Maud, Lettie, James, Bernie, and two who died in infancy; Hartlie, married, and had one child, Arthur; Frands was never heard from after he enlisted in the Civil War; Mary, and two who died in infancy. Sherman T. Smith was educated in the Springfield schools, and like any healthy, well reared boy, was fond of outdoor sports and enjoyed his excellent home. After leaving school he engaged in various lines of business, meeting with more than a fair measure of success. He is now in a real estate business and feels satisfied with its results. He is an expert on city and farm realty and his services are often demanded. Whenever occasion has arisen Mr. Smith has been found ready to contribute more than his share towards securing public improvements and the betterment of the community in general, and is one of the reliable, first-class men of his locality. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen and Eagles. In religious faith he is a Methodist and lives out the faith he professes. His political sentiments make him a Republican, but he has never aspired towards public advancement.

On September 3, 1906, Mr. Smith was married at Louisville, Ky., to Maud May Smith, born at Decatur, Ill., June 22, 1882. Her father, Fred Smith, was one of Decatur's best known citizens who was a painter and decorator by trade. The mother of Mrs. Smith bore the maiden name of Millicent Patterson. She and Mr. Smith were married in Decatur, where she died, but he passed away in Memphis, Tenn. Their children were: Maud May and Lettie, surviving, and James, Bennie and Lloyd O., deceased. From Ohio to Illinois in 1854, locating at Genesee, where he spent six years. At the expiration of that period he returned to Ohio, whence he went to Dixon, Ill. From there he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and there enlisted in the navy, in June, 1863, serving under Admiral Porter. He was mustered out in 1865, at Cairo, Ill. He then went to Mansfield, Ohio, and thence to Attica, where he married. In 1866 the young couple moved to Galion, Ohio, and thence to Mansfield, where they remained until 1870, when they went to Wapella, Ill. In 1873 they went to Champaign, and thence to Fulton, where they lived until 1882, when removal was made to Springfield, which has since been their home. The various changes were made necessary by the father's employment, he being connected with several railroads. The parents had nine children, six now living in Springfield: Laura Bell, born February 4, 1866, married; Berriman, now deceased; Arol, born September 14, 1869, married Blanch Foster, issue—Lulu; married Sidney Eckhart of Peoria, Ill., where they now live; Jennie, Arthur; Roy, Violet, Clara, Blanch, Rolla and Benjamin, living, and Otis and Edith, who died in infancy; Edmer, born January 27, 1872, married Lucy Lee; issue—Irene, deceased, and Ernest and Lester at home; Sherman T., born September 12, 1874; Effie May, born February 16, 1878, married Bernhardt Thelken, issue—Ella and Leonora, deceased, and Gradly and Emma at home; Raymond, born November 16, 1880, married Anna Keys, issue—four children who died in infancy; and Inez, Dorence and Fred, who died young.
Mr. and Mrs. Sherman T. Smith have had four children: Leota May, born January 17, 1904; Sherman T., born March 6, 1906, both at Springfield; Girard Stowe, born June 12, 1908, at Girard, Ky.; and Dorothy Bell, born November 2, 1910, at Springfield, Ill. Mr. Smith may well be said to be an excellent example of what a man should be. Sociable and genial, he makes and retains many friends, but, above all, lets nothing interfere with his love of his family, and their gatherings are delightful events, whether they take place in his home or at the several residences of the younger generation. Such a family, bound together as closely as it is, is a powerful influence for good in any community, and Springfield is all the better for the residence in it of such men as Sherman T. Smith, his father and his brothers.

SMITH, Sylvester B.—Sangamon County is proud of the fact that many of its residents have settled there, after years spent in other localities, satisfied that within its confines are to be found more advantages than elsewhere. Such citizens are well worth having and become important factors in any community which they may select as a permanent home. A representative of this class is Sylvester B. Smith, a farmer residing at Illiopolis. He was born in Danville, Ky., May 1, 1849, being a son of Larkin H. and Mary A. (Van Arsalia) Smith, both natives of Kentucky, where he was a farmer, and his remains were interred on the place where he had the misfortune to lose his wife when Sylvester B. was eight years old, she having borne him five children, three of whom survive. The grandfather on the paternal side of the house was a soldier in the Mexican War.

The education of Sylvester B. Smith was secured in Kentucky, and like most country boys, he helped his father on the farm. Living as he did in the south, his sympathies were with the Confederate cause, and he entered the service, acting as teamster for a short time, until taken prisoner at Bowling Green, and sent to Louisville, Ky. There he went into the Federal service in which he spent about two years. He made a trip from Camp Nelson to Atlanta, Ga., with a team and three trips to Nashville, Tenn., with 1,000 head of cattle each—one trip under Captain Yuke, one under White and one under Thurman. Returning home, he farmed with his father until 1869, when he moved to Scottland County, Mo., remaining there for three years, during which time he was engaged in farming. Following this he spent one year in Marion County, coming to Illinois in 1872. For four years he worked on a farm in Morgan County, returning to Missouri to marry, after which he came back to Illinois and settled in Cass County. For two years he farmed there, going then to Jerskov, June 12, 1868, at Girard, Ky.; and remaining there for three years still farming. Not satisfied with conditions in Texas, he returned to Cass County, and farmed there for three years; then farmed in Mason County and spent two years in Virginia, Ill. The following three years were spent by him in Springfield and for two years he was a gardener in Louisville. Having tried many places, he finally located in Illiopolis, where he has lived for the past seventeen years.

Mr. Smith was married (first) in Fairmount, Mo., in 1874, to Frances Duell, born in Scotland County, that State. Her father was a Captain in the Confederate army. In 1890, Mr. Smith was married for the second time, his bride being Fronia Lybarger, born in Edingham County, Ill. Her father, an old settler of that county, moved to Sangamon County in 1889, where his death occurred. Mrs. Smith passed away January 21, 1907, having been the mother of four children, two of whom survive: Everett E. and Howard R., both at home. Mrs. Smith was a lovely lady, of devout Christian character, and her loss is deeply felt by her family.

Mr. Smith is a Democrat and has been active in the work of his party, being elected on its ticket as Tax Collector of Illiopolis Township, and serving one term. He is a member of the Christian Church and is one of the substantial, reliable men of the congregation. His neighbors have always found him a man of honor, upright in his dealings, and ready to respond to a call upon his sympathy, and he numbers friends wherever he has lived. Those who know him best appreciate his many excellent qualities, and are proud to be counted among those whom he honors with his esteem and confidence.

SNIVELY, Ethan A.—In these days when any item relating to Illinois' greatest man is seized upon so eagerly, it is very interesting to note that there is a resident of Springfield whose first work in a printing office was helping to get out an extra announcing the first nomination of Abraham Lincoln. Ethan A. Snively is this man and his name is with various journalistic efforts in this part of the State. He was born in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., February 17, 1845, a son of Henry and Sarah (Stevenson) Snively. The father was a merchant at Cuba, where the son Ethan attended school until he was fifteen years of age. He learned the printer's trade, and in January, 1866, issued his first copy of the "Times," at Rushville, Ill. In 1868 he sold this and established another paper at Galesburg, Ill., under same name, the "Times." In May, 1869, he sold this and in October, 1871, became the publisher of the "Macoupin Inquirer" at Carlinville. In 1883 he sold this and retired from journalism.

Mr. Snively has always been a prominent Democrat and his services were recognized by his election in 1878 to the office of Clerk of the Supreme Court for thirty-five counties comprising the Central Grand Division, he being re-elected in 1884 and again in 1890. He was appointed minoritv member of the Board of Par at 1877 by Gov. Tanner, and returned by Gows. Yates and Dennis, his suitability for that office being recognized by the several chief executors of the State.

On February 23, 1870, Mr. Snively was married at Carlinville, Ill., to Catherine McKim DnBois, no issue. Mr. Snively belongs to the Episcopal Church of Springfield, and has always been one of its firm and generous supporters. In his official life he has shown himself to be a man of unswerving integrity of purpose, who steadily adheres to what he believes is right, and the work he has accomplished cannot be easily overestimated. He has long been one of the men of whom Springfield is justly proud, realizing that he is representative of its best and highest interests. Mr. Snively is the author of the article in this work entitled "State Properties."

SNODGRASS, Nelson (deceased).—In the death of the late Nelson Snodgrass, Clear Lake Township, Sangamon County, lost a prominent and well-known citizen, who had spent most of his life there. He was born near Vincennes, Ind., in 1834, and was a son of William Snodgrass, also a native of Indiana and a farmer. The parents were early settlers of Sangamon County, having previously lived for a time in Logan County, Ill., and lived many years on a farm in Clear Lake Township, where both died.

In his boyhood Nelson Snodgrass helped his father develop and cultivate the farm, and recieved his education in the country schools of Clear Lake Township. When he was old enough to choose his occupation in life he chose farming, and began working for himself in Clear Lake Township, moving to the farm now occupied by his widow April 18, 1868. He was an ambitious and energetic farmer and reaped excellent results from his work. He was prominent in the bouncils of the Republican party, casting his first Presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. He served several years as Road Commissioner in Clear Lake Township.

October 4, 1855, Mr. Snodgrass was married in Mechanicsburg, to Parthenia Viar, who was born in Clear Lake Township, September 23, 1838, daughter of Richard Viar, born May 9, 1809, in Kentucky, and his wife, Julia A.
(Henry) Viar. Mr. Viar came to Sangamon County at an early day and settled on a farm near Rochester, carrying on farming there until his death, March 11, 1855. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Snodgrass: Samuel H., born December 22, 1856, died July 30, 1894;
Deleena Bell, born November 29, 1858, married
Ed Baker, and they live on a farm in Clear Lake Township; Rachel Ann, born April 22, 1861, died February 20, 1865; John W., born August 4, 1864, lives in Springfield; Laura C., born October 6, 1865, died April 3, 1870, and Julia E., wife of Samuel Waddells, a farmer of Clear Lake Township. There are three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren in the family. Mrs.
Snodgrass owns the farm of ten acres in Clear Lake Township, where she has lived over forty years. She was a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, attended his funeral, and has a clear memory of many incidents connected with his life in Springfield. Her father furnished many ties for the construction of the Wabash railroad.

Mr. Snodgrass was an active and devoted mem-er of the Christian Church, to which his widow also belongs. He won many friends by his high dcharacter and sterling worth, and his loss was deeply felt, not only by his immediate family, but by many others as well. He continued actively engaged in farming until his death, which occurred on his farm February 7, 1900.

SNODGRASS, William Henry Harrison (decased), who was for many years prominently identified with the agricultural and official life of Sangamon County, and whose widow now res-sides on the original 100-acre tract in Cotton Hill Township, entered by Mr. Snodgrass's father, in pioneer days, was born November 27, 1842, in Sangamon County. He was a son of James and Nancy (Moon) Snodgrass, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Kentucky. The parents came to Illinois and settied in Sangamon County at an early date, long prior to the "Deep Snow," the father entering 160 acres of land from the Government, and later purchasing more property, continuing to farm on this land until his death. There were two sons and five daughters in the family, all of whom are now deceased.

William H. H. Snodgrass was educated in a log schoolhouse in Cotton Hill Township, and during his boyhood days assisted his father in the work of the farm. He spent his entire life on this property, and at the time of his death, which occurred July 15, 1907, was the owner of the original 100-acre tract. Mr. Snodgrass was for eight years Deputy Sheriff of Sangamon County, was for ten years a Justice of the Peace and also served for several terms as Assessor and Collector of his township. His father had been for some years Constable of the township in which he lived. He was a Trustee in the Methodist Church, which his widow and family have always attended. Both Mr. and Mrs. Snodgrass were personal friends of Abraham Lincoln.

On January 2, 1862, Mr. Snodgrass was mar-rried in Cotton Hill Township, to Miss Sarah Hall, who was born in Franklin County, Ohio, February 19, 1844, the daughter of Lennuel and Hannah Hall, the former a native of Delaware and the latter of Maryland. Mr. Hall, who followed the occupation of farming, went to Franklin County, Ohio, at an early date, but several years later moved to Sangamon County, and in 1854 located in Cotton Hill Township, where he engaged in farming and continued at that occupation until his death, which occurred in 1886, his wife having died in 1854 in Ohio.
Mr. Hall was a soldier during the Black Hawk War and was well known and highly respected in his day. Of his family of three sons and five daughters all are deceased with the exception of Mrs. Snodgrass. To Mr. and Mrs. Snodgrass there were born nine daughters and three sons, and of these five are now living, namely:
Dora, the wife of Charles Dewese, living on a farm in Sangamon County; Mary, the wife of Albert R. Carey, also in Sangamon County; Eva, living at home; Hester, the wife of M. J. Sanders, living near Pawnee, Sangamon County; and William B., who lives with his mother on the farm on Section 10, Cotton Hill Township. There have been eight grandchildren in the family, all of whom are living.

SONGER, Mrs. Lydia M., widow of the late Thomas J. Songer, has lived for the past twenty-three years in the home she owns at 1730 East Kansas Street, Springfield, Ill. She was born in Callaway County, Mo., January 28, 1852, daughter of William and Eliza J. (Freeman) Walls, both natives of Callaway County. The parents lived on a farm in Missouri and afterward moved to Illinois, where they took up their permanent residence. The father died when she was about twenty years of age. The ancestors were early settlers of Missouri.

Mrs. Songer spent her childhood on a farm and was educated in her native State. She came to Illinois with her parents and was there married to Thomas Jefferson Songer, who was born in Marion County, Ill. Mr. Songer enlisted about 1862, in Company G, Twenty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving to the end of the war. He took part in many battles in the southern campaigns but was never wounded nor taken prisoner. He was a farmer by occupation and a progressive, public-spirited citizen. He was a devout Methodist and in politics was a Republican. He died at his home in Springfield, May 18, 1904, and is buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

Seven children were born to Mr. Songer and his wife, namely: Eugene E., born April 4, 1872, living in Jersey County, Ill.; Arthur L., born February 7, 1876, died August 18, 1910; Stella, born February 7, 1875, wife of John Randeth, living in Peoria, Ill.; Fayette M., born April 4, 1882, living with mother in Springfield; Myrtle L., born December 6, 1886, widow of Henry Slim, residing near Springfield; John F., born April 27, 1892, lives in Springfield, is with the Springfield Gas Company; Willie F., born March 2, 1889, lives in Ohio. Arthur L. Songer enlisted at Springfield, April 27, 1861, in Troop D, First Illinois Cavalry, was mustered out and re-enlisted as Sergeant, at Indianapolis, September 17, 1863, in Company C, Forty-first United States Volunteer Infantry, and went to the Philippines, where he served in Northern Luzon, and then returned to Angel Island, Cal., where he re-enlisted in Company D, Twenty-first United States Volunteer Infantry, served eighteen months in the Philippines and returned to the United States, and to Springfield, where he died.

Mrs. Songer is beloved by her family and many friends and is a woman of strong character and kindly disposition. She is a devoted mother and has given her children all the advantages within her power.

SOUTHER, Mrs. Nannie (Latham).—There are few men who have attained prominence in life who do not attribute much of their success to the influence and fostering care of their mothers. One of Springfield's representative men, Latham T. Souther, is frank in confessing the part his honored mother, Mrs. Nannie (Latham) Souther, has borne in his life. Mr. Souther's able article on banking and other financial institutions, of Springfield, has awakened considerable interest in this History of Sangamon County.

Mrs. Souther was born in Elkhart, Ill., a daughter of Richard and Margaret (Stevenson) Latham, farming people, who were associated with agricultural interests at Elkhart and in the vicinity of Springfield. Mrs. Souther came to Springfield at an early age, and there was educated. She remained at home until she was married, in Springfield, in September, 1873, to George H. Souther, a native of Massachusetts, born in 1840. Mr. Souther was a soldier in the Civil War and a good and brave man. Later in life, with the formation of the Grand Army of the Republic, he joined that order, and continued with it until his death in 1906. After the war he was appointed Pension Agent, being regarded the best man for that position, and discharged his duties faithfully and conscientiously. Mr. Souther was one of the early bankers here, being for many years at the head of the Sangamon Loan and Trust Company. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Souther: Latham; Lucy Abbott (now Mrs. W. J. Galbraith), of Tucson, Arizona; and Elizabeth. Mrs. Souther is a consistent member of the Christian Church. She is a true type of the tender, gentle, Christian woman, who makes the ideal wife and mother. Her family revere and love her, and her neighbors appreciate her many virtues.

SPARKS, Elijah.—And in Sangamon County is so valuable that many of the farmers are devoting it to specialities, realizing that this method of farming produces a larger income than those which involve the handling of larger acreage. One of the progressive farmers of this class is Elijah Sparks, of Section 32, Williams Township. He was born in Tennessee in 1822, a son of Truelove and Polly (Anderson) Sparks, natives of North Carolina and Tennessee. Truelove Sparks went from North Carolina to Kentucky with his father at a very early date, settling on a forty-acre farm, which they operated for several years, but not being suited, they moved on to Sangamon County, locating on a farm west of Springfield. Truelove Sparks there entered 320 acres from the Government, located near Williamsville, and held possession of it for ten years, then sold it, moving to Missouri, where he bought a small farm. As this was during the disturbed period of the Civil War, he returned to Sangamon County, resuming farming in the vicinity of Sherman. Still later he went to Nebraska, where he farmed for several years. Once more he came to Illinois and for five years farmed there, then returned to Missouri, where he bought eighty acres of land. This he operated until the time of his death, which took place when he was ninety-six years old. His second wife also died on this farm, his first wife having died when Elijah was a small child. There were eight children, four sons and four daughters, in the family of Truelove Sparks, and three of the sons served during the Civil War, two being wounded in the siege of Vicksburg and dying from the effects of their wounds. Of this large family Elijah Sparks is the only survivor.

The education of Mr. Sparks was received in Sangamon County, and he worked on the several farms owned by his father, finally adopting agriculture as his calling. For the past few years he has resided on his present property, but in early manhood worked for a short time at blacksmithing. Although now in his eighty-ninth year, he is hale and hearty, carrying his age lightly.

The marriage of Mr. Sparks occurred in Williams Township, October 23, 1862, to Mary Ann Garner, born in Indiana, January 11, 1843, daughter of Andrew Garner, of Tennessee. The family moved to Indiana, where Mr. Garner engaged in farming until his death. There were five sons and three daughters in his family. His father was a soldier in the Revolutionary War and the family has been prominent in the history of the several communities in which its representatives are to be found. Mr. and Mrs. Sparks became parents of the following children: Polly, wife of Thomas Renfor, residing on a farm near Sherman; Laura A., wife of Gilbert Moore, also on a farm near Sherman; Matthew, on a farm north of Sherman; Lydia, wife of John Mills, residing in Williams Township; Flora, widow of James E. Mills, lives with her sister, Mrs. John Mills; Noah, at home; Oliver C., on a farm in Williams Township; Jane, at home. There are thirty-one grandchildren in the family and one great-grandchild.

Mr. Sparks is a fine specimen of the farmer of early days. Although he has worked hard all his life, and has been subjected to many of the hardships incident to pioneer days, he has enjoyed excellent health and has accomplished much of which he may well be proud. He has lived to see his children grow up about him, developing into useful men and women, and is very proud of them and his many grandchildren. The old home is becoming too small to hold all the connections. When there is a gathering, as there often is, but the warm, cordial welcome which each member receives from the grand old man and his wife compensate for a little crowding.

SPEED, Joshua Fry. (Vol. I, p. 492.)

SPIES, Gustavus.—The Germans are great homemakers and rejoice in being able upon special occasions to gather about them the different generations of their families. A venerable married couple of Springfield who have already celebrated their golden wedding, and can look back upon long, useful and prosperous lives, and who are now crowned with the satisfaction of seeing their children succeed, are Mr. and Mrs. Gustavus Spies. Gustavus Spies was born on the Rhine, in Germany, September 6, 1828, being a son of Philip and Catherine (Steffis) Spies, both natives of Germany. Philip Spies served in the seven years' war with Napoleon, and five years under the old King William. By occupation he was a carpenter and found ready employment in his native land, but after the death of his wife, decided to emigrate, coming to America in 1856. He came on to Springfield, which remained his home, and he resided with his son Gustavus until his death.

After a boyhood spent in Germany, where he was educated, and having worked in the ship yards of his native place, Gustavus Spies came to America in 1852, remaining in New York eighteen months after landing. At the expiration of that period he came on to Springfield, where he soon identified himself with the city's business interests. For seven years he was connected with the city police department, and gave an efficient service. He has always been a Democrat and belongs to SS. Peter and Paul Catholic Church.

Mr. Spies was married in Springfield, September 17, 1856, to Katie Banman, born in Baden, Germany, January 3, 1831. Her mother died in Germany, following which the father came to the United States, locating in Springfield, which continued his home until he, too, passed away. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Spies: Mary, wife of W. R. Grubb, of Chicago; Katie, wife of Frank Noff, of Springfield; Leona, now Mrs. Mark McAllister, who are deceased. There are four grandchildren and one great-grandchild in the family. On September 17, 1906, Mr. and Mrs. Spies celebrated their golden wedding, and the occasion was celebrated by a reunion of the family. The lives of these two most excellent people are filled with pleasant memories of the past and they can recall many events of the times when Lincoln and Douglas were every-day figures in the life of the city. They remember the stirring events of the Civil War and the no less important ones of later days, and in recalling them live over again their youth and middle age, and of the listener with them. They reside at their home, 231 West Edwards Street. Mr. Spies also owns a residence on the opposite side of the street and one on West Washington street, besides city lots and other real estate.

SPIKRE, Noah W. (deceased), who carried on farming all his active life, lived retired in Springfield, Ill., a few years before his death. Mr. Spikre was born near Terre Haute, Ind., September 18, 1855, and after receiving his education in the country schools near his home, engaged in farming with his father. He was a son of Samuel and Eliza (Lister) Spinkre, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Virginia. Samuel Spinkre spent most of his life on a farm near Terre Haute. He served two years in the Civil War, was wounded and brought back home, where he recovered.

As a young man Noah W. Spinkre removed from his native State to Greene County, Ill., where he engaged in farming and continued until his retirement from active life. He was an enterprising and ambitious farmer and became fairly successful in his operations. He located in Springfield, but on account of failing health moved to the country, where he died, May 9, 1891, on a farm near Roodhouse. His remains were interred at Richwoods Cemetery. He was a devout member of the Christian Church and was affiliated with the church in Springfield located at Fifth and Jackson Streets. In politics he was a Republican, though he never took a very active part in public affairs. At the time of his death he had hardly reached the prime of life, and left a widow with a family of small children to care for and rear. Mr. Spinkre was loved by many friends and his loss keenly felt by all who knew him. He was a man of strict integrity and reliability, actuated by high principles in his dealings with his fellow men.

The marriage of Mr. Spinkre occurred February 21, 1881, in Richwoods, Ill., when he was united with Miss Alice Hopper, a native of Pike County, Ill., born February 20, 1865, daughter of John and Mary (Lingo) Hopper, the former born in Greene County and the latter in Tennessee. John Hopper's father, Joshua Hopper, was one of the first settlers of Greene County, coming there from Kentucky with an ox team, in 1830, and at the time of his death owned 1,400 acres of land in Greene County. He became a prominent citizen in the community and the family was highly respected. Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Spinkre: Roy Lee, unmarried and living in Wyoming; William F., is married, lives at 318 East Mason Street, Springfield, and has one son—Lloyd; Jesse C., a tailor, living at Litchfield, Ill., is married and has one daughter, Bettie L.; Noah F., unmarried and living with his mother, who owns the home at 705 East Cook Street.

SPINDEL, Eugene F., an enterprising farmer of Rochester Township, Sangamon County, is a native of Illinois and has spent a large part of his life in Sangamon County. He was born in Christian County, November 21, 1865, son of James W. and Mary E. (Tucker) Spindel, the father born in Loudoun County, Va.; October 14, 1827, and the mother born in Ball Township, Sangamon County, June 3, 1849. James W. Spindel was a farmer by occupation and came to Peoria County, Ill., at the age of seventeen years, two years later made a visit to his old home, then came to Sangamon County and located on the Vandevere farm near Edinburg, soon afterward. He purchased land and became actively engaged in farming in Christian County and in 1871 moved to Missouri, where he remained six years. There are eight children in the family, those besides Eugene F. being: John William; Aquilla H., a farmer of Cooper Township; Mary E., wife of M. D. Langley, of Taylorville, Ill.; Joseph E., of Sangamon County; Minnie, wife of O. C. Campbell, of Sangamon County; Charles D., a farmer of Taylorville; James V., a farmer of Charleston, Ill. The father of these children had five sisters and three brothers and has a sister now living in Oklahoma.

Eugene F. Spindel worked on farms by the day and month until he reached his majority, receiving his education in the public schools of Sangamon County, Ill., and Greene County, Mo. In 1893 he went to Churdan, Iowa, spent about seven years there and returned to Illinois in 1900. He has been a farmer all his active life and about ten years ago began farming for himself, making a specialty of raising corn and wheat. He has had much experience and carries on his work with an energy and care that insures his success. He is recognized as a man of excellent business judgment and an independent citizen. His mother was a member of the Christian Church and his father was a Methodist. Mr. Spindel is a Democrat in political views. He is unmarried, as is his brother, J. W., and the two rent land from George E. Ross and operate it in partnership.

SPRINGER, (Rev.) Francis. (Vol. I, pp. 495-496.)

SPRINGER, Frank S., the enterprising Secretary of the American Berkshire Association, is connected with various other stock and breeders' organizations, and has contributed not a little to their progress and success. Mr. Springer was born in Woodford County, near Ebina, October 29, 1870, and came to Springfield with his parents in 1880. He is a son of John G. and Frances Amanda (Stratton) Springer, he a native of Sangamon County, Illinois, she of Sebastian County, Arkansas. John G. Springer served as Quartermaster of the Tenth Illinois Cavalry, from 1861-65, and his father, Francis Springer, served as Chaplain in the same regiment.

The education of Frank S. Springer was received in the public schools of Springfield and he graduated from high school in the Class of 1890. He worked for a time in 1889 as clerk in the employ of the Springfield Coal Association, and after leaving school worked for one year in a clerical position with the Danison Brick & Tile Company. From 1892-95 he worked for the American Berkshire Association, in 1896 for the American Southdown Breeders' Association, from 1897-1900 for the American Short-Horn Breeders' Association; May 10, 1900, was elected Secretary of the American Southdown Breeders' Association, and January 28, 1903, was elected Secretary of the American Berkshire Association, while still holding the office of Secretary for the American Southdown Breeders' Association. He is well known in business and social circles and takes an active interest in public affairs. In political views he is a Republican. He is an active member of Grace Lutheran Church, of Springfield.

Mr. Springer was married in Springfield, July 1st, 1864, to Laura B. Lyons, a daughter of John and Sarah (Davis) Lyons, who was born in Montgomery County, Ill., April 27, 1854, and the father of New York city. One child has blessed this union, Katherine Frances, born May 10, 1900.

STANTON, Samuel M., a carriage and wagon maker, carpenter and general builder, who established himself at Loami, Ill., in the fall of 1808 is an experienced and skillful man in his line of work and enjoys a liberal amount of patronage. He resides at No. 701 W. Washington Street, and his residence is a two-story dwelling built of brick. Mr. Stanton was born amid quiet, country surroundings but a naturally adventurous and inquiring spirit led to his early changing his environment, and before he had reached manhood he had visited different sections of his native land and also had gained considerable experience as to the practical side of life. He was born on a farm near the village of Loami, April 29, 1879, a son of Benjamin and Susan (Cook) Stanton.

Benjamin Stanton, the father, was born at Chattanooga, Tenn., March 4, 1838, and on January 11, 1864, was married in Sangamon County, Ill., to a Miss Cook who was born at Hillham, Ill., August 6, 1842. A daughter, the Cook, Bilyeu and Lyons families, all settled in the same section of Sangamon County at the same time, although the Cooks subsequently returned to Tennessee. Mrs. Stanton has reached her sixty-seventh year and resides on the old homeplace in Loami Township, where she is still the center of the domestic circle, occupying the place that none but a good mother can fill. Of the twelve children born to Benjamin and Susan Stanton, four died in infancy. The brief record of those who reached maturity is as follows: Sarah is the wife of Edward Hayes and they reside at Loami; Jesse is a railroad employee and resides at Loami; James is a machinist and lives on the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis Railroad, and lives at Loami; Joseph is a farmer in Sangamon County; Edward resides on the old home place and married Linnie McMan; Lydia, who is now deceased, was the wife of W. D. Hayes, a resident of Loami, and she is survived by three children—Myrtle, Verna and Elmer; Samuel M. is further mentioned. On both sides of the family Mr. Stanton can trace an honorable ancestry. His great-grandmother came from Scotland. His paternal grandparents were Jesse L. and Annie (Bilyeu) Stanton, the former of whom was born at Sparta, Tenn., October 8, 1804, and survived until October 8, 1880. He was reared in times and among surroundings that gave him a strong physique, as well as a taste for military life, and in 1824, when troops were required by the United States Government to place certain Indian tribes on reservations, he was a soldier in Florida, and later, who as a man of fifty years, was ready to shoulder his musket and fight for a cause at that time to be right. In 1861 he became a private in a regiment of cavalry commanded by Col. Sidney Stanton, under Gen. Bragg, C. S. A., and participated in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Murfreesboro and Franklin, and at the latter place was one of the first to go over the breastworks that day, and in his brave relative, Col. Stanton, who fell in this charge. Mr. Stanton was honorably discharged in August, 1863. The fortunes of war left his old southern home in ruins, and with a number of his kindred he then turned his eyes to the North and finally invested in land and Loami Township, with his relative Benjamin, settling on the same September 27, 1867. The remainder of his life was one of comparative comfort and both he and wife survived until they were about seventy-one years of age. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was always a Democrat in political views. He had two sons and two daughters: Benjamin, James, Mary and Lydia, James, who resides at Loami, being the only one now living.

Benjamin Stanton grew up in his native place, and when Civil War was precipitated followed his father's example. In 1861, he enlisted for service in support of the Confederate cause. He first entered Capt. Bilyeu's under Col. Sidney Stanton, but was later transferred to Gen. Morgan's command and participated in the battles in which his honored father also fought. In 1863 he accompanied the party herefore mentioned and settled in Loami Township, Sangamon County, Ill., where he passed forty-four peaceful years, his death occurring on January 29, 1900. As noted above, he and Lydia still survives. Her parents were Sanford and Laura (Rooks) Cook, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. They had five children, namely: Samuel, who died in the Confederate Army; and Sarah, Margaret, Susan and Lutha. Two Samuel M. Stanton attended the common schools and helped in a boyish way with the farm duties until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he decided that he would like to see something of the world beyond the environment of the farm. He did not stop to gain his father's permission, but very shortly afterward was glad to have his hearty welcome when the wanderer had realized that home was the best place after all. During the next two years Mr. Stanton faithfully performed all the duties falling to his share in conducting the farm. About 1897 he and one of his friends concluded to join the U. S. army, and went to St. Louis, Mo., for that purpose, but the former was not accepted on account of his age and then bought a ticket for Rochester, N. Y., intending to try his fortune in that State. Want of space prevents an extended telling of the interesting story of how he placed confidence in a stranger and in that way lost his ticket and found himself alone in St. Louis, with a capital of thirty cents in his pocket and of his subsequent make-shifts until he once more reached home. For three and one-half months he was ill with a fever and after he recovered again went south. A natural mechanic, he soon gained a first-rate knowledge of the carpenter's trade and had no trouble in securing work. In Tennessee he built houses and barns, and acquired land, still owning a farm of sixty acres situated in Overton County.

On September 1, 1908, Mr. Stanton returned to Sangamon County and bought a building in Loami, which he fitted up as a carriage, wagon building, and repair shop, and is doing a fine business. Being well acquainted with his own and contingent trades, he is able to contract, build and paint any kind of vehicle, or repair the same and has developed into one of the practical and successful business men of the place.

On October 18, 1899, Mr. Stanton was married (first) to Miss Ora Judson, a native of Illinois, who died August 15, 1903. She was a consistent Christian and had been a church member from the age of twelve years. Their one child died in infancy. He was married (second) in April, 1904, to Miss Grace Wright, of Waverly, Ill., and they had two children, Frances E., born in 1905, and Elizabeth, born in 1907. His third marriage took place March 1, 1908, to Miss Dovie Buck, a native of Hillman Township, Sangamon County, both being members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He votes with the Prohibition party. He belongs to the fraternal order of Maccabees, and Mutual Protective League.

STARK, Hardin B. (deceased), was a farmer of enterprise and success and a citizen of more than average influence. He was born in Kentucky, April 29, 1829, a son of Benjamin and Elizabeth Stark, natives of the Blue Grass State and farmers. Of three sons and two daughters only the subject of this notice survives. He was educated in Kentucky and during his boyhood days worked on his father's farm. On coming to Illinois he settled in the southern part of the state, where he farmed for a time. Later he was employed on a steamboat plying between Golconda and New Orleans. Soon after the beginning of the Civil War he enlisted, in Alexander County, Ill., in Company G, Sixth Illinois Cavalry, with which he served in the rank of Sergeant. After having participated in many engagements, great and small, he was mustered out at Camp Butler, near Springfield. Settling at Mechanicsburg, he farmed there until his death, which occurred January 30, 1869, and is resting in the Mechanicsburg cemetery. In his political affiliations he was an ardent Republican. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and was identified with the Masonic fraternity.

Mr. Stark married, in Saline County, Ill., June, 1852, Miss Frankie Reynolds. She was born in Tennessee, September 5, 1833, a daughter of David Reynolds, a farmer in that county, where he and his wife died. The mother also was a native of Tennessee. She bore her husband ten children and of these only Mrs. Stark, one son and another daughter are living. The Isaac Reynolds, lives on a farm in Lanseville Township, and one daughter, Mrs. Lucy Moore, lives in Springfield. Mrs. Stark, now seventy-eight years old, owns a fine home and other property at Mechanicsburg. To her late husband she bore eight children, seven of whom survive. Fannie, the eldest, is the wife of Albert Hutchison, of Rochester, Ill., and they have four children. Belle is Mrs. John Herman; Bertha is the wife of Charles Bullard of Springfield. Earl was the next born. James, of St. Louis, Mo., married Miss Emma Behymer, of Mechanicsburg, and they have children named—Charles, Alta, Frank and Bertha, Nora, Mrs. Shultz, lives in Mechanicsburg. Sarah married Allen Webber, of Fayetteville, Ark., and they have five children: Cora, the eldest, is Mrs. James Maybury; Frederick was the next born, and after him Margaret; Georgia is the wife of Lonk Cowen; Grace is the youngest. Mrs. Stark's daughter Mary is dead. Her son, Thomas, of Muskogee, Okla., married Miss Alice Munch, of Poplar Bluff, Mo. Hardin Stark, of Miles, Texas, has a son named Thomas, Minnie, the wife of William Hale, of Spaulding, Ill., has eight children; Pearl married Charles Duffy, of Bradford, Ill., Frederick married Miss Laura Isley, of Spaulding, Ill., and they have children named: James, Maude, Bessie, Catharine and Grace. The children of Nora, wife of Alfred Shultz, engineer of a coal mine at Mechanicsburg are named: Ralph, Thomas, Benjamin, Ellis, Francis, Lafayette, Alice, Louis, Geraldine and Donald. Loved by children and grandchildren, respected by all who know her, Mrs. Stark is passing her declining years in peace and plenty and looking forward with a Christian's confidence to a happy reunion with the husband of her youth, in a bright land where there is no parting.

STARKWETHER, Daniel H.—Prominent among the agriculturists of Sangamon County, may be mentioned Daniel H. Starkwether of Section 22, Township 13, Range 5, Divernon Township, who although he has passed his seventy-second year is still carrying on active operations. Mr. Starkweather was born in Morgan County, Ill., November 13, 1838, the son of Asa Starkweather. Asa Starkweather was born January 9, 1807, in Vermont, and came to Illinois by wagon in 1834, entering land in Greene County. In 1839 he moved to Jersey County, where he carried on farming until his death, September 23, 1845. Just before coming to Illinois, he married Louisa Harvey, who was born in Vermont August 7, 1812, and died December 12, 1866.

Daniel H. Starkweather was educated in the schools of Jersey County, attending subscription school the first year and when he was seventeen years of age, he started farming with his sisters and brother. In 1864, he went to Greene County, where he remained for two years, and on March 8, 1866, located on the farm on which he now resides, and where he has continued to carry on operations to the present time. He now has a property comprising 160 acres of excellent farming land, valued at $200 per acre, on which the most extensive improvements have been made. The buildings are in the best condition, the land is properly fenced and graded, and Mr. Starkweather operates his land in a scientific manner, paying attention to crop rotation and using modern methods throughout. Mr. Starkweather is a Republican in politics and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, but since voting for President McKinley he has favored the Prohibitionists, being a staunch member of the Temperance party. For many years he was a Justice of the Peace in his township, as well as a member of the school board from 1873 to 1885, and for some time clerk of that body. He also served as Road Commissioner and in lesser offices. His religious affiliation is with the Baptist Church, and he has always been active in church and charitable circles.

Mr. Starkweather's first marriage occurred in Jersey County, Ill., August 21, 1862, when he was united with Lucinda S. Kirkpatrick, who was born in New Jersey and died April 3, 1865, in Greene County, Ill., having been the mother of two children: Amanda, who died in Greene County, December 22, 1864; and Emily W., born in Jersey County, May 28, 1865, was married July 10, 1866, to P. S. Hulett, of Montgomery County, Ill., by whom she had six children.—Helen, Elou C., Park S., James E., Dow D. and Don H., the latter two twins. Mr. Starkweather was married (second) in Jerseyville, Ill., February 25, 1866, to Sarah A. Utt, who was born in Greene County, Ill., December 9, 1841. Her father, Adam Utt, was an early settler in Greene County, coming thence from Pennsylvania, her grandparents having come to the latter State from Germany. Her mother, who bore the maiden name of Amelia Baxter, was born in Kentucky in 1814, and came with her brothers to Greene County, Ill., by horseback during the early days. She was married to Adam Utt, January 14, 1841, by Moses Lemen, the pioneer Baptist preacher. Mrs. Starkweather's grandparents on the maternal side were of Irish descent and came to Kentucky in the early days, both dying in that State. There were six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Starkweather: Walter, born February 23, 1867, died November 12, 1888; Charles, born November 24, 1871, died December 31 of that year; Harry, born February 18, 1873, died February 24, 1873; Asa E., born March 9, 1869, residing on the old homestead, married Pauline S. Rechards, March 16, 1893, and they have four children,—Lela C., Sarah B., Ivez M. and Harvey C.; James A., married December 23, 1881, resided on his father's farm and until he emigrated to the United States, in 1851. He made the voyage on the sailing vessel "Northumberland," which took forty-five days to cross. He landed in New York with but about ten dollars in his possession, and soon went to work for a show-case manufacturer, receiving his board and clothes and twenty-five cents every Sunday for spending money. At the end of six months he went to the Isthmus of Panama and began working on a railroad, but at the end of another six months returned to New York on account of fever, and spent some time in a hospital.

In 1855 Mr. Stein enlisted for five years in the Regular United States Army, and was stationed at Fort Lynch, Fort Clark and Fort Davis, Tex. He was discharged at Camp Hudson, Tex., and returned to New York. He was married, in October, 1860, to Miss Susan Rittman, and they removed to Springfield, Ill., where he found employment, first sawing wood and afterwards in various capacities, being employed for spending money. At the end of six months he went to the Isthmus of Panama and began working on a railroad, but at the end of another six months returned to New York on account of fever, and spent some time in a hospital.

Mr. Steln is a stanch Democrat and has adhered to the principles of his party since becoming a citizen of the United States. He resides at 842 South Second Street.

STEWARDS, Henry C., now living retired in the comfortable home at 1153 North Fourth Street, Springfield, Ill., was for many years identified with mining enterprises in that city and vicinity. He was born in Jacksonville, Ill., October 25, 1836, son of William J. and Margaret (Dodd) Stephens, the former a native of the West Indies and the latter of Kentucky. The father went as a boy from the West Indies to Eng- land, where he received his education, and came to America as a young man. He spent a short time in Chicago, then came to what is now Vir- ginia, Ill., and taught in the community. He platted and named the town of Virginia, and in this enterprise was assisted by Dr. Hall, a wealthy land owner of Cass County. Later Mr. Stephens moved to Jacksonville, Ill., and for many years taught school in that city. His speciality was the teaching of grammar, and he also taught writing, being considered one of the most learned scholars of the State of Illinois in the line of rhetoric, composition and similar subjects. Among his pupils after he located in Springfield were the sister and brother of Gov- ernor Yates, whom he instructed in grammar and writing by private lessons. He was ap- pointed by the elder Governor Yates to a position in the Adjutant General’s office, and during his residence in Springfield was often employed by public speakers to correct their addresses. In later life he returned to Jacksonville and engaged in farming, and also taught school at a town called Little York. He was employed for a time in the office of the County Clerk in Jacksonville, Ill., and finally moved to Virden, Macoupin County, Ill., where his death occurred. He and his wife had nine children, six daughters and three sons, and seven of these children are now living. The father reached the age of ninety-two years.

Henry C. Stephens was educated in Jackson- ville, Ill., and after leaving school worked on a farm and afterward engaged in teaming. He located in Springfield about 1888 and worked as “company man” for various coal mine opera- tors. He spent most of his active life in work in the mines, and he and his brother, William, did the excavating for the reservoir at Spring- field, which is located in the northern part of the city. He has witnessed many changes in this city and vicinity and has done his share to promote its welfare and growth. He was recog- nized as a man of ability in his line of work and had the full confidence of all who had busi- ness dealings with him. In politics he is a Re- publican and he is a member of the United Brethren Church. He served three years as a member of the Illinois National Guard.

Mr. Stephens was married, May 25, 1851, at Springfield, Ill., in the house where the family now lives, to Miss Hanna Solomon, who was born in St. Louis, Mo., daughter of Thomas and Catherine M. (Jones) Solomon. Her father is a native of England and her mother of Wales, and both now reside with Mr. and Mrs. Ste- phens. He was a farmer for many years, but the last few years has been engaged in mining. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ste- phens, of whom five survive, namely: Elsie, wife of Charles Simms, of Springfield, in the employ of the Illinois Watch Company; Kittie and Etta, in the employ of the Illinois Watch Company; Edgar, a conductor in the employ of the Consolidated Street Railway Company; Or- ville, living at home. There is one grandchild in the family, Mr. Stephens has been fairly successful in his business enterprises.

STEWENSON, (Dr.) Benjamin Franklin. (Vol. I, p. 507.)

STEWART, Captain Theodore A., is a well-to- do farmer of Sangamon County and a veteran of the Civil War. He was born in Champaign County, Ohio, in 1844, and is a son of Lewis M. and Hannah (Harbor) Stewart, who were farmers. About 1849 the parents moved to Indiana, and there both Mr. and Mrs. Stewart were reared. Captain Stewart received his early education in the public schools of Indiana, and after his service in the war attended the university at Ann Arbor, Mich., where he studied law. He was admitted to the Bar and began the prac- tice of his profession in 1876, but on account of poor health was unable to stand the confined- ness of what was then thought a dangerous line of profession. He spent one term teaching school in Sangamon County. He then engaged in farming and secured possession of 290 acres in Sections 28, 29, 32 and 33, and 320 acres in Section 34, all in Town 14 North, Range 4 West, part of which extends into Christian County, though the most of it is in Sangamon County. He has been very successful in his agricultural operations and is an enterprising, progressive citizen. He served in the Forty-fourth Illinois Infantry, as Fort Wayne, and served four years and six months. He partici- pated in the Battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge in the Atlanta Campaign, then went back to Franklin, and was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., receiving his final discharge at Indianapolis, Ind. He proved himself a good soldier and has always been the friend of any enterprise which he thought would be of public benefit.

Captain Stewart was married, in Sangamon County, December 24, 1874, to Miss Maria Co- lean, daughter of Joseph H. and Maria Colean, who came to Sangamon County from Jersey

County, Ill., in 1855. The father died in October, 1888, and both parents are buried near Pawnee. Five children were born to Captain Stewart and his wife, namely: Alma, born November 22, 1872; Audy, November 14, 1877; Albert T., February 26, 1880; Frank A., August 25, 1882; Joseph L., July 24, 1889. Captain Stewart was a Democrat in politics and fraternally is a member of Pawnee Lodge No. 675, A. F. & A. M.

STICKEL, Alexander Wesley (deceased).—"He never allowed his anger to master him; his life was not show—very unpretentious—and we who knew him best feel our lives are the better for having known him." The foregoing simple tribute paid to his memory by a friend who had known him throughout life, while not set in glowing terms or smooth-flowing phrases, is as great a eulogy as any man could hope for. Alexander Wesley Stickel, who is well remembered by business men and agriculturists of Sangamon County, always impressed men in just that way—that they were better for having come into contact with him. A self-made man, who had gained an education only through the strictest economy and honest labor, his father on the home farm, when his brothers had gone to the war, he could sympathize with those who were not so fortunate as he, and this, with his other sterling, lovable characteristics, made him one of the most esteemed and respected men of his day and locality. Alexander Wesley Stickel was born near Decatur, Macon County, Ill., February 9, 1849, and died in Springfield, March 23, 1908.

Joseph Stickel, the father of Alexander W., was born in York County, Pa., August 26, 1814, and later moved to Macon County, Ill., in 1857 purchasing a farm near Hillsboro, on which he carried on operations until the time of his death, in 1886. Mr. Stickel purchased a farm near Monmouth, Sangamon County, of Joseph Stimson, who was born in Tennessee, August 21, 1816, and to them were born a family of children, of whom Alexander Wesley was the youngest of several boys. The youth was but twelve years of age when the outbreak of the Civil War occurred, and after trying to enlist and being refused, he followed his brothers (who had been more successful) as far as he might and then trudged bravely back to the farm, determined to fight it out there. Between times when it was necessary for him to help his father in the duties of the farm, he managed to acquire a good education in the public schools and Hillsboro Academy, in which latter institution he had received a scholarship, and later attended Auburn University (now known as DePauw), at Greencastle, Ind. After leaving the latter institution he returned to the home farm, where he remained until his marriage, after which he moved to the O'Neal farm and gave his entire attention to the cultivation of the soil for about ten years longer, when he removed to Auburn, owning an interest in a coal mine at that place for five years. In 1887 he located in Springfield, and after traveling for a Minnesota flour firm for several years, engaged in the grain and hay business. His death was caused by an attack of pneumonia, after only one week's illness.

After his marriage and subsequent settlement on the O'Neal farm in Ball Township, Mr. Stickel became a leader in township politics, and was elected to several responsible offices on the Republican ticket, his popularity being shown by the fact that the township had always been a Democratic stronghold up to that time. When quite young he became affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church, was an official member at McMurray Chapel, where he remained from 1872 to 1877, at Auburn from 1881 until 1886 and holding the office of Member of the Official Board of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Springfield, at the time of his death, having been a member of this congregation for twenty years.

Mr. Stickel was married on the O'Neal farm in Sangamon County, December 24, 1872, to Elia O'Neal, born on this farm, which is situated twelve miles south of Springfield. Her father, Samuel O'Neal, was an early settler of Sangamon County, entering some of the land on which he settled, which is now the property of Mr. Stickel. He was a soldier in the Black Hawk War, being in Captain Iles' company. To Mr. and Mrs. Stickel were born four children, of whom the son, the youngest child, died in infancy; Lillian died September 4, 1887; Florence, living with her mother at No. 1211 South Sixth Street, Springfield; and Bertha, who married E. B. Lyons, connected with the State Insurance Department.

STICKLEY, Henry H.—To the younger generation whose day has come since the comforts brought by easy communication have been available, it is a marvel that so much glory, wealth and comfort have been wrested from the soil within the lifetime of men who stand among us today—that men now living fought the wild beasts of the wilderness and saw the smiling farms of a later day change into cities, where the roar of traffic and the heavy tramp of iron wheels have so lately drowned the voices of primeval nature. Every year the white-haired band that led the van of civilization grows smaller, yet there are many years to come before the last of those who heard the first scream of the brazen-voiced locomotive which brought final prosperity, will be silenced in the sleep that comes to all. Henry H. Stickley, who belongs to a pioneer family of Sangamon County, has grown up with the locality. He was born in Springfield, July 14, 1845, a son of Jacob and Minerva (Hand) Stickley, natives of Ohio and Kentucky. The father was a carriage painter, who came to Springfield at an early date. Later he returned to Ohio, where he died, but the mother returned to Springfield and there passed away. The two families were important in Kentucky and Ohio.

Henry H. Stickley was educated in Springfield and later worked on a farm, finally engaging in agricultural operations for himself. He has spent all his life in Sangamon County, with the exception of three years spent in Christian County. During the Civil War he proved his worth by enlisting in Company H, Thirty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on August 23, 1861, remaining with his regiment until August 3, 1865. He was in many important engagements, including the campaign with Gen. Sherman. On March 5, 1862, he had the misfortune to be captured, and was confined in the infamous Libby Prison for three months. He is a very enthusiastic member of Stephensau Post, G. A. R. While always voting the Republican ticket, he has not otherwise taken an active part in public events, although he can be counted upon to support any measure he believes will help his home city.

On July 5, 1867, Mr. Stickley was married at Springfield to Sidney A. Beligard, who died leaving four children: John A., born in 1868; Henry H., born in 1870; Sidney Ann, born in 1872, and Mary M., born in 1874. Some years after Mrs. Stickley's death, he was married July 5, 1885, to Rosa L. Doherty, by whom he has one child, M. Stickley is a Baptist and is stanch in support of his church. As a citizen and as a soldier, Mr. Stickley has done his full duty, and he enjoys unbounded respect, both socially and in his church.

STIEREN, William.—To those of foreign birth seeking better opportunities to earn a living and secure land of their own, America has always offered advantages that are hard to resist. For many years Germany has sent some of her best citizens, who have adopted this country as their own, and realized many of their dearest hopes and given to their communities much that is good and true. A prosperous and progressive farmer of Sangamon County, who has brought his sixteenth-acre truck farm to a high state of cultivation, is William Stieren, of Spaulding, Clear Lake Township. He was born in Germany March 1, 1845, being a son of John and Lena (Schmidt) Stieren, also born in Germany. The parents did not share the enthusiasm of their son with relation to the United States, living and dying in their native land. All of their eleven children are now dead, with the exception of William.

Receiving a thorough German training and education, Mr. Stieren grew to manhood on his father's farm, but having resolved to broaden his scope, came to America in 1883, sailing from Hamburg and landing in New York City, whence he came direct to Springfield, arriving there on December 29th. After a short stay in the city he moved to Riverton, where he spent eight years, then began mining, thus continuing until he located at Spaulding in 1898. His truck farm is one of the most highly developed in the township, and from it Mr. Stieren gains a good income. He purchased it in 1898, and his house, which is a comfortable one, has been largely rebuilt. During his residence in Germany Mr. Stieren served his term in the German Army, participating in the Franco-Prussian War.

On April 20, 1872, Mr. Stieren was married in Germany to Catherine Holtzer, born in Germany. Like the elder Mr. and Mrs. Stieren, Mr. and Mrs. Holtzer never came to America, dying in Germany. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Stieren, five sons and five daughters, six of whom survive: Lena, wife of Otto Ketzenberger, a gardener, lives east of Springfield; Sophia, wife of Michael Raylotts, lives in Springfield, as do William and Charles; Louis lives at home, as does Matthias. Mr. Stieren is a civil engineer. There are seventeen grandchildren in the family. In religious faith Mr. Stieren is a Roman Catholic, belonging to St. James parish, of Riverton. He is a Democrat but has never sought office. Conservative and thrifty, Mr. Stieren has carefully saved his earnings, invested them wisely, and is proud of what he has accomplished since arriving in this country. Honorable in all his transactions with his fellow men, he has firmly established himself in the confidence of his community and is regarded as representative of the best interests of his township.

STILLSMAN, Stephen. (Vol. I, p. 508.)

STOCKDALE, Wallace Tappen (deceased), was for many years a leading business man in Springfield, Ill., where most of his life was spent. He was born at Wapakoneta, Auglaize County, Ohio, January 3, 1843, son of Joseph and Melissa (Elliott) Seresto. His father was born in Yorkshire, England, and the mother in Piqua, Ohio, November 5, 1818. Joseph Stockdale came to Ohio before his marriage, which occurred in 1840, and moved to Springfield, Ill., in 1855, when his son Wallace was about three years of age. He was a dealer in fine stock, especially horses, and a successful business man. He formerly owned a farm that extended from what is now Allen Street to Washington Park and other farm land and city realty. He and his wife spent the remainder of their lives in Springfield. They were parents of four children, who were educated in the public schools of Springfield. William Stockdale served four years in the Illinois Light Artillery during the Civil War and died as a result of exposure in the army, on his return to Springfield.

Wallace T. Stockdale was one of three boys who graduated with the second class from the Springfield High School. He also graduated from Bryant & Stratton's Business College in St. Louis, and was a graduate of Wesleyan College at Bloomington, Ill. He had a natural taste for books and learning, and as a young man taught school several years in Sangamon County, earning the money with which he pursued his later studies. He received his legal education in the office and under the assistance of Gen. John A. McComb, a prominent man of Springfield, and was admitted to the Bar in that city.
in 1808. He was well educated along many lines, became an expert accountant, and was well fitted to pursue his chosen work.

Mr. Stockdale was married at Springfield, May 19, 1869, to Miss Etta T. Wood, who was born in Belleville, N. Y., December 28, 1846. She is a daughter of Alva and Tryphenia C. Wood, the former born in Jefferson County, N. Y., November 1, 1810, and the latter born in New Hampshire, January 5, 1810. She was one of fourteen children and the youngest daughter. Mrs. Stockdale taught school twenty-five years in Springfield schools. Children as follows were born to Mr. Stockdale and his wife: Alice M., a teacher in the Edwards School in Springfield; Thomas W., machinery superintendent in the employ of the Tiger Gold-mining Company, at Harrington, Ariz.; Mabel, a stenographer, lives at home with her mother. Wallace T. Stockdale died at his home, 101 East Allen Street, Springfield, October 27, 1907, and was buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery. He was an earnest member of the First Methodist Church, of Springfield, and interested in many heavevolent and charitable movements. He was a strong Democrat all his life and was active and prominent in party affairs. Mr. Stockdale was an example of the higher type of American citizen, interested in the welfare of the community and ready to forward any beneficial public movement. Mrs. Stockdale owns the family home and other property located in the same block. She was formerly a member of the Woman's Club, is an officer in the Missionary Society and member of the Illini Historical Club, as are both her daughters.

STOGDELL, George W.—In naming the representative citizens of any community, we invariably find that among the most prominent are men who started in life with little or no advantages, either of an educational or financial nature, and worked their way to the top through their own industry and perseverance. One of the successful agriculturists of Sangamon County, who are self-made men, is George W. Stogdell, a farmer of Section No. 5, Range 3, Cooper Township. He was born February 6, 1847, near Georgetown, Scott County, Ky., a son of Simeon and Margaret (Moses) Stogdell. Simeon Stogdell was born in Virginia, April 3, 1794, and his wife in Kentucky in 1816, and they came to Sangamon County, Ill., in 1860. On October 11th of that year they located at Berry, but after one year there, spent a year on the North farm, and a year at a place one mile east of that property. In 1863 the family removed to the William Coe farm, and in 1864 located on the present site of George W. Stogdell's farm where they bought one acre of land. The father died February 4, 1863, his widow surviving until August 14, 1877. Of their seven children four are now living: Benjamin F., residing in Christian County; Martha, residing in Clear Lake Township; Sarah, who makes her home in Kansas; and George W. George W. Stogdell's education consisted of seventy-five days spent in school when he had reached the age of twenty-seven years, as he was too busy with the work of the farm as a lad to get any chance for schooling, and whatever knowledge he has gained since that time he has picked up by observation and reading. As a youth he worked by the month during the summer and did odd jobs in the winter. In 1869 he began farming and has continued this occupation ever since. To the little one-acre property as a nucleus he has added from time to time and has managed to accumulate a fine property of 123 acres, located on Section 5, where he follows farming and stockraising. Mr. Stogdell is a Democrat in politics, and in 1910 was elected to the office of School Director, having served in that capacity for six years previous to that time. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he is serving as a Trustee, and helped to build the present church in Cooper Township.

On September 9, 1877, Mr. Stogdell was married in Dawson, Ill., to Eliza A. Clark, who was born January 3, 1856, daughter of Smith and Katherine Clark, the former born in 1822 in Kentucky, and the latter in 1823 in Pennsylvania. Mrs. Clark died in Crawfordsville, Ind., in 1879, and the father left Indiana and came to Illinois on the day of President Lincoln's assassination. Mr. Clark died March 21, 1902, at Exeter, Mo. To him and his wife there were born six children, of whom three survive, namely: Mrs. Stogdell; Philip E. Clark, who lives in Georgetown, Vermilion County, Ill., and one other. Of the seven children of Mr. and Mrs. Stogdell there are now five living: Susan Ann, the wife of James Outerback, a farmer; Mary K., wife of Frank Toft, a farmer of Sangamon County; George C., living at home; John, who lives near Dawson, where he is farming; and James B., who lives at home. There are four grandchildren, namely: Blanch, Ruth, Neal and Dale Outerback.

STONE, Daniel. (Vol. I, p. 509.)

STONE, George L., is an honored veteran of the Civil War and a highly esteemed citizen of Springfield, Ill., where he lives retired from active life. He has spent most of his life in farming and was fairly successful in this occupation. Mr. Stone was born in Greene County, Ill., February 15, 1841, son of Daniel D. and Jane (Scroggins) Stone, both natives of Kentucky, the former born July 12, 1814, and the latter in 1822. The father was a farmer in Greene County and the family moved to Texas in 1845, not long before the Mexican War, remained there two years, and then returned to Greene County. In 1850 Daniel D. Stone went to San Francisco, Cal., and remained two and one-half years. He made a trip to Sangamon County in 1860 to attend the Lincoln-Douglas debate, remaining a few days in Springfield before returning home. He and his wife both died in Greene County, he in 1868 and she June 5, 1854.

The education of George L. Stone was acquired in the old subscription schools of Greene County, Ill., where he occupied a slab seat, and after leaving school he worked for his father on the farm until he reached his majority. He enlisted, February 25, 1862, in Company E, Sixty-first Illinois Infantry, under Colonel Fry, and served three years. Their first hard fighting was at the Battle of Shiloh, and they went from there to Vicksburg, where they participated in the long siege. They spent nine months near Jackson, Tenn., guarding a bridge over the Hatchie River, then went to Helena and to Little Rock, Ark. Mr. Stone being flag bearer in the last-named battle. He was wounded at the Battle of Shiloh and sent to the new House of Refuge Hospital at St. Louis, Mo. He spent four months, then rejoined his regiment at Jackson, Tenn. He was captured at Murfreesboro, December 16, 1863, taken to Andersonville Prison, and held there until April 17, 1865. He weighed one hundred seventy pounds at the time of his incarceration, and but ninety-eight pounds when released in very weak condition. He served as Corporal two years. He was discharged with an enviable record and had discharged every duty entrusted to him. He is a member of Post No. 516, G. A. R., at Girard, Ill.

Mr. Stone was married, in Jersey County, Ill., October 13, 1860, to Sarah A. Williams, who was born in August 28, 1845, and died June 8, 1896. She was a daughter of Solomon and Enulce Williams, who came to Illinois from New York in 1852, locating in Jersey County. The father died there in 1889. Five children were born to Mr. Stone and his wife; namely: Harvey, born February 28, 1869, lives in Girard; Emma T., born August 2, 1871, married John M. Lynard, a carpenter and contractor of Springfield; Daniel L., born May 23, 1878, a painter and paper-hanger of Springfield; and Claude died at the age of two years and nine months. Mr. Stone has fourteen grandchildren, all living in Illinois. He owns a lot in Girard, Ill., which contains 62 front feet and is 100 feet deep. He now lives with his daughter, Mrs. Lynard, at 1002 South Second Street. Mr. and Mrs. Lynard have four children: Goldie, Paul, Claude and Lucille. Mr. Stone is a staunch Republican and actively interested in public affairs. He served eight years as School Director while living in Greene County. He is a member of the Baptist Church. He is much interested in the history of his State and country and feels reasonable pride in the service he rendered in defense of the union. He is a public-spirited and useful citizen, and highly respected by his acquaintances. He has in his possession an almanac, published in Hagerstown, Md., in 1823, which he prizes very highly.

STOUT, Joab P.—Pioneers of Sangamon County have every reason to congratulate themselves upon the sagacity which prompted the selection of that locality as a place to which to found new homes. Climatic conditions and other natural advantages and the cheapness of land combined to offer tempting prospects to the hardy farmers who sought a place in which to rear their growing families. They did not stop to worry about the lack of schools and churches, for they knew they could easily provide them, and they did, first erecting rude log-shacks, which served as school houses during the week and as gathering places for religious services of all creeds on Sunday. In time these were improved, together with other things, and today Sangamon County has some of the finest church edifices and best schools in the State, outside of Chicago. The sons of the pioneers, growing up to hard work, developed fine characters and resourceful habits which now make them among the wealthiest men there. One of them who belongs to a distinctively pioneer family is Joab P. Stout, a large landowner of Section 10, Ball Township. Mr. Stout was born in the house he now occupies, April 3, 1860, being a son of Philenon and Louisa P. (Brasfield) Stout, the former born in Fayette County, Ky., April 19, 1822, and the latter in Madison County, Ky., August 9, 1825. The parents married in Menard County, Ill., the ceremony being performed by the Rev. William Crow, a Baptist clergyman. The Stout family came to Sangamon County in a wagon, arriving October 5, 1836, and the grandfather bought land comprising property still owned by the family. Philenon Stout ever left this homestead, dying on it October 1, 1910, and his remains being interred in the family cemetery. The paternal grandfather was a native of New Jersey, who moved first to Kentucky and later to Sangamon County, where he secured land for ten dollars per acre and died upon it, in 1846. The Grandfather Brasfield went from Virginia to Kentucky, and thence to Menard County, Ill., in 1834, dying, however, on the Stout farm in 1844.

Joab P. Stout attended the Union district school in Ball Township, later spending ten months at the university at Lincoln, Ill. His life has been spent on his present farm and he now owns 670 acres in Sangamon County. He has always been fond of outdoor sports and enjoys his farming because he knows how to do it profitably and thoroughly. The marriage of Mr. Stout took place in Coles County, Ill., September 15, 1886, to Ida Frank Sawin, born in Coles County, Aug. 14, 1863, daughter of John Gilbert and Lovisa (Jones) Sawin, the former born in Edinburgh, Ind., March 1, 1838, and the latter in Coles County, Ill., May 26, 1846. Both survive, residing at Mattoon, Ill., where Mr. Sawin is a dealer in grain. The paternal grandfather was a native of New York, who died in Coles County, as did the maternal grandfather, who was a native of Kentucky.
The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stout are as follows: John P., born December 21, 1857; Frank L., February 3, 1890; Edith L., March 9, 1892, and George D., July 30, 1893. While Mr. Stout is a Democrat he prefers to cast his vote for the man he believes best fitted for the office, irrespective of party lines. Although not a member of any religious organizations, he generously supports the Baptist Church, to which his family belongs. Mr. Stout has always taken a foremost place in any movement calculated to be beneficial to his community, and is counted among its progressive men. He has been successful in his life work, and at the same time has kept the friendship of those whom he has attached to him.

STOUT, Philemon (deceased).—In the annals of Sangamon County no name occurs more frequently than that of Stout, for not only was the family bearing that name one of the first to be founded here, but its representatives have always been men of high character, active in the promotion of educational, material and spiritual matters, and there are many of them still left here, while numerous others have gone out into other parts of the country to aid in developing and advancing civilization. The history of the Stout family is very interesting and has been compiled and issued in pamphlet form. It was founded in what is now Middletown, Monmouth County, N. J., in 1848, by Richard Stout, a son of John Stout, both of whom were born in Nottinghamshire, England. Richard Stout married, after his arrival in the Colonies, a young widow whose maiden name had been Penelope Van Princes. Her husband had been killed by the Indians, and she suffered mutilation from their hands, but fortunately recovered, and made her second husband a good and faithful wife. They had seven sons and three daughters, and through the seventh son, David, are descended the Sangamon County Stouts.

David Stout, born in 1706, married Elizabeth Larrison, and they had four sons and five daughters. One of these was Benjamin, who married first a Mrs. Ketchem, and later Mary Higgins, and his second son Jedediah is the fourth in the line of the Sangamon County Stouts.

Jedediah Stout had a son Philemon, born in New Jersey, May 18, 1785. When a lad, the family move to Fayette County, Ky., and on February 8, 1810, he married in Woodford County, Ky., Penelope Anderson. In 1838, animated by the spirit which seems to have inspired members of the Stout family to constantly move further westward, removal was made to Sangamon County, Ill. In this year, therefore, the family was founded here, settlement being made in Ball Township on 350 acres of land. Later this passed into possession of Philemon Stout, Jr., son of the elder Philemon Stout, and is now owned by Joab P. Stout. Philemon Stout, Sr., died in Sangamon County, on his new farm, January 31, 1846, but his widow survived him until November 23, 1890, when she too passed away.

Philemon Stout, Jr., was born in Scott County, Ky., near Georgetown, April 19, 1822, and was only fifteen years old when the family located in Ball Township, this county. He had attended school in his native county, but after coming to Illinois was only given four weeks schooling, as the demands of the pioneer farm taxed his energy. After his father's death, much of the responsibility of the farm work fell upon his shoulders, and eventually he became owner of the homestead, adding to his holdings until at one time he had over 2,000 acres. The present beautiful farm residence was erected by him, and he made many improvements, believing in enriching his land and using the latest improvements.

In 1848, Mr. Stout was married in Ball Township, to Melissa Shoup, born in Piqua, Ohio, daughter of Jacob and Sarah (Downing) Shoup. Mr. Shoup came from Pennsylvania to Ohio, and thence, in 1832, to Sangamon County, where he died in 1848, his wife surviving him. The children of this marriage were Samuel J., Sarah P. and George W. who died in early childhood, and John P., who died when ten years old. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Stout married, near Athens, Menard County, in 1856, Louisa Brasfield, born in Madison County, Ky., daughter of James E. Brasfield. Mr. and Mrs. Stout had the following children: James, deceased; Joab P., whose biography occurs elsewhere in this work; Melissa M., wife of William T. Lewis.

Mr. Stout was a Democrat, and served as School Director, Highway Commissioner, Supervisor and Justice of the Peace for many years, giving an honorable, conscientious attention to the duties of the several offices. In the Baptist Church he was not only a consistent member, but an earnest worker and Deacon. His death occurred October 1, 1910, and his remains were interred in the little family cemetery on the Stout home farm, where the dust of others of the same name await the resurrection call. No man stood higher in the estimation of the people of Sangamon County than this kindly, genial gentleman who never forgot the Christianity he professed, but took his religion into his everyday life, and gave to every one the treatment he asked in return. Charitable, he never openly spoke of his benefactions, preferring to keep them to himself, and he not only aided many materially, but gave sage, moral advice that steaded many and set wandering feet in the right path. Mr. Stout has passed from this mortal life, but the influence of his upright, moral life remains, and his children delight in recalling his good deeds, and profiting by his example.

STOUT, Samuel J.—The Stout family is one of the oldest in Sangamon County, and its representatives have borne an important part in the remarkable development of this part of the State. One of them who has attained to a well-deserved prosperity through excellently-directed efforts along agricultural lines, is Samuel J. Stout, of Sections 24 and 25, Ball Township. He was born in this township, August 22, 1849, being a son of Philemon and Melissa (Shoup) Stout, the former born in Kentucky, April 19, 1822, and the latter in Madison County, Ky. They were married in Sangamon County, Ill. The paternal grandfather moved from New Jersey to Kentucky, and thence to Sangamon County, farming for many years, dying at the home of his son in 1846. The maternal grandfather moved from Pennsylvania to Sangamon County, dying on the farm now owned by John P. Stout, in 1894.

Philemon Stout, whose biography occurs elsewhere in this work, came with his father to Sangamon County, the trip being made in a covered wagon, in 1836, settling on the farm now owned by John P. Stout, there passing away October 1, 1910. His remains were interred according to his request, on the farm that had been in the family for so many years, beside the graves of other members of the family. This farm now so valuable, was purchased for ten dollars per acre.

Samuel J. Stout attended the district school in Ball Township, later going to a school in Mason County, and the University at Lincoln, but after finishing his education, he settled down to farming, having always been fond of stock. Since then he has devoted his life to farming and stock raising, now owning 2,000 acres of rich farm land.

Mr. Stout was first married in Sangamon County, June 31, 1870, to Emma Brasfield, born in Menard County, Ill., and died December 19, 1875, being buried in the family cemetery. Her father, John Brasfield, was a native of Kentucky who died in Menard County, where her mother, Sarah (Culver) Brasfield, also died, she too having been a native of Kentucky. The three children of this marriage are all deceased, two dying in infancy, and Edna May, born May 24, 1871, dying March 8, 1874. On August 31, 1881, Mr. Stout was married in Sangamon County, to Emma A. Davidson, born in the county, March 25, 1858, and died September 13, 1891, also being buried in the Stout cemetery. She was a daughter of Samuel Davidson, born in Tennessee, October 19, 1821, brought to Sangamon County in 1827, and is now living on a farm in Divernon Township. He married Amanda Nuckolls, born in Sangamon County, who survives, being now seventy-nine years old, while he is ten years older. Four children were born to Mr. Stout by this marriage: Nellie V., born June 12, 1852, married November 18, 1907, Robert J., Folonie, a lawyer of Chicago; Samuel P., born June 9, 1854, married August 31, 1910, to Blossom Stanley, and lives in Sangamon County; Emma Melissa, born September 1, 1857, and Ray Davidson, born March 9, 1861, at home. Mr. Stout was married for the third time, March 8, 1895, to Miriam M. Davidson, born in Sangamon County, October 4, 1808, a sister of his second wife. One of the two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stout died in infancy, the other being James Howard, born June 3, 1901, a very promising little fellow, bright in his studies, and the pride of his father's heart.

Mr. Stout has always been prominent in the ranks of the Democratic party, and has served as School Director as well as Supervisor for two years from Ball Township. He belongs to the Blue Lodge, A. F. & A. M. of Chatham; the Royal Arch, R. A. M. of Auburn, and Elwood's Commandery of Springfield, K. T. While not a member of any religious denomination, his family are members of the First Methodist Church to which he contributes liberally. In addition to his farming interests, Mr. Stout has found time to act as Director of the Farmers National Bank of Springfield for the past quarter of a century, and has been its Vice-president for ten years. He owns one of the most beautiful homes in Springfield, in addition to his magnificent farm of 2,000 acres of the best land in the county. Not only has he achieved remarkable success in his business operations, but he is so genial and pleasant in manner that he makes friends wherever he goes, and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

STOUT, Samuel Philemon.—Some of the most enterprising of Sangamon County's young farmers have been free to experiment as to the best methods of farming because of the liberality of their parents, who have given them property with which to begin their life battle. Because of this the agricultural interests of the county have prospered, many following along the lines laid down by those who were progressive enough to seek better ways to perform old tasks. One of these thoroughly scientific and up-to-date farmers is Samuel Philemon Stout, of Section 26, Woodside Township, who belongs to the old-established Stout family, prominent there since 1836, Mr. Stout was born in Ball Township, June 9, 1855, a son of Samuel J. and Emma A. (Davidson) Stout, the former born in Ball Township, August 29, 1849, and the latter, also a native of Sangamon County, was born March 25, 1822. She died September 13, 1891, but the father survives and is one of the richest men in the county. The grandfather, Philemon Stout, was born in Kentucky, April 19, 1822, but came to Sangamon County in 1836 with his father, and died there October 1, 1910. The maternal grandfather was born in Kentucky, October 19, 1821, came to Sangamon County at a very early date, and is now residing in Divernon Township with his wife, he being eighty-nine and she seventy-nine years of age.

Samuel Philemon Stout was educated in the schools at Pleasant Plains, Ball Township, Sangamon County, and in the University of Illinois, spending two years in the latter institution. Returning home he began farming and has con-continued in that line ever since. His fine 100-acre farm was a gift from his father, but since he received it he has improved it materially until it is now one of the best properties in the county.

Mr. Stout is fond of traveling, having made two extended trips to western States, and while on the last, was married, at Helena, Mont., August 31, 1910, to Blossom Stanley, a beautiful girl, highly accomplished and well educated. She was born at Wichita, Kan., June 10, 1887, a daughter of Edward B. Stanley, who was born at Alton, Ill., January 18, 1861, and was in the office of the Secretary of State under Gov. Altgeld, but later went prospecting in Alaska, later to Oklahoma, and died at Guthrie, February 17, 1904, where he was buried. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Phyllis Dohrer, was born at Morris, Ill., May 22, 1863, and survives her husband, living in Springfield. The paternal grandfather, Jesse Stanley, was born in Kentucky in 1825, and died in Guthrie, Okla., June 25, 1889. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Stout, Joseph Dohrer, was born in Bavaria, Germany, February 22, 1844, but moved to Missouri at an early day, dying at St. Joseph, September 20, 1908.

Mr. Stout, like his father, is a strong Democrat, and has been called upon to fill the office of Tax Collector of Ball Township, being elected in 1909. His college fraternity is the Phi Kappa Psi, and he is a Mason, belonging to Lodge No. 500, of Springfield. He is a member of the first Methodist Church, of Springfield, while his wife is a member of the First Baptist Church, of that city. While too young to have had any military experience, Mr. Stout took a two-year course in military training at the university, and if his country had need of his services, he would without doubt be one of the first to raise a company. Happy in his home life, successful in his business, owning one of the best farms in the township. Mr. Stout has a bright future before him, and as he stands so high in the estimation of his fellow citizens, he will doubtless be sent to represent them in some of the high offices within their gift. If such a demand for his services should ever arise, it is to be hoped he will respond to the call, for the country has need of such men as he, resourceful, honorable, possessed of a sense of the true value of things, and connected with men of high integrity, who will make good laws and see that they are enforced.

STREET, Joseph M. (Vol. I, p. 511.)

STRICKLETT, John G., M. D. (deceased).—Those who had the good fortune to be ministered to by the old time physician contend that the present schools are not producing the kind of doctors who graced the profession years ago. These physicians had no well-equipped hospitals in which to gain a costly experience, but were forced into general practice, where the lives of their patients hung upon their own individual efforts. They had no runabout or automobile to take them from one patient to another, nor did they sit back in richly appointed offices and conduct an office practice only. The physicians of an older day rode on horseback or drove behind a plodding mare, to patients miles apart, in all kinds of weather, never thinking of their own comfort, but anxious to reach the suffering ones. They brought countless children into the world, put them in many modern appliances, and kept the sick and aged alive without calling upon experts and specialists to aid them. This class of physician is passing, but here and there one is still found. One of those most honored for his past work and genial affability, was the late venerable Dr. John G. Stricklett, who during his last days lived in well-earned retirement at No. 1023 North Ninth Street, Springfield. He was born in Lewis County, Ky., January 16, 1823, a son of Jacob and Frances (Griffith) Stricklett, natives of Kentucky. The father, who was a farmer, died in Kentucky, but in 1825 the widowed mother came to Illinois with her family of five children, settling on a farm in Clark County. The sons, four in number, grew up hardy and strong, and three of them helped her conduct her farm. There the mother passed her declining years. The Stricklett family had been founded in Kentucky by the grandfather, Jacob Stricklett, a native of Pennsylvania, a soldier in the Revolution, and a member of the military and civil service of George Washington. The Great-grandfather Stricklett was born in Holland, while the Grandfather Griffith was a native of Sweden.

Dr. Stricklett attended the country schools of Lewis County and worked on a farm during his boyhood. Later he learned the shoemaker's trade, but worked only a short time before he began studying medicine under Dr. Thomas O'Marshon. He later attended medical college in Cincinnati, Ohio, taking the eclectic course and receiving his diploma from this college. He then went to Clark County, Ill., and practiced there for several years, then moved to Linn County, Iowa, locating at Cedar Rapids. Soon thereafter, however, the war broke out and he enlisted in Company G, Fifth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, serving until he was mustered out November 16, 1863, at Jackson, Tenn. Returning to Iowa, he practiced at Palo that State, for fifteen years, during which time he held the position of Town Clerk, being elected on the Republican ticket. His next change was made when he moved to Oakford, Ill., but after three years there he moved to Clark County, Ill., where he continued in practice until 1903. In that year he came to Springfield, which was his home up to his death, May 8, 1910. He was a Mason and a consistent member of the Christian Church.

Dr. Stricklett was married in Burlington, Iowa, to Virginia David, on November 27, 1862. She was born in Burlington, in 1840, and her parents were natives of Kentucky, who moved to Iowa at an early date. They made Burlington their house until death claimed them. Dr. and Mrs. Stricklett became the parents of five sons and one daughter: Sherman, Harry A., and Roy, of Springfield; and Minnie, wife of Samuel Watkins, of Petersburg, Ill. Dr. Stricklett owned his home. He was one of the most charming of gentlemen, with the native courtesy of Kentuckian, and had a host of warm, personal friends wherever he had resided.

STRODE, John A., for many years a farmer in Fancy Creek Township, Sangamon County, and now living retired from active life in the city of Springfield, is honored as a veteran of the Civil War and respected as a public-spirited and useful citizen. He was born January 4, 1834, in Sangamon County, a son of John and Mary (Stringfield) Strode, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of Kentucky. The father moved to Kentucky as a young man, lived there several years, and became one of the earliest settlers of Sangamon County, coming there in 1818 and settling near the Sangamon River, which he crossed, and there entered 200 acres of land from the Government. He spent the remainder of his life on this farm, passing away in 1866, and his wife in 1851. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, and was with Gen. Jackson at the last battle, at New Orleans, after which he returned to Kentucky and spent a few years there. He and his wife had six daughters and five sons and the only one now surviving is John A. One son, James, served in the One Hundred Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers and was killed at Chickamauga.

Mr. Strode was educated in the country schools of his native county, which were held in log buildings, with rude furniture, meanwhile working on his father's farm until the death of the latter. He then engaged in farming in Fancy Creek Township for himself, buying some land and continued to operate it until moving to the city, in January, 1898. In 1862, he enlisted in Company K, One Hundred Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Col. Moore, in the Methodist Preacher Brigade, and served until 1864, being discharged at Nashville. He participated in many important battles, and spent four months in the hospital at Nashville. He won the respect of his fellows and performed every duty faithfully and well. He is now a member of Stephenson Post No. 30, G. A. R., of Springfield. Mr. Strode was a personal acquaintance of Abraham Lincoln and entertains the kindest memories of that great man.

Mr. Strode was married at Bloomington, Ill., February 29, 1856, to Miss Letitia Gilmore, a native of Ohio, born September 19, 1836, daughter of John Gilmore. Her father was born in Scotland and her mother near Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. Gilmore came to America as a young man, spent several years in Pennsylvania, and later moved to Ohio. Both he and his wife died when Mrs. Strode was a small child. He was a contractor for the construction of canals, mills and turnpikes, and the family came to Vermillion County, Ill., when their daughter was very young and there the father built a mill on Vermillion River. The mother died there and the father took his family to Lexington, McLean County, where his death occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Strode had five children, of whom but two survive: Alice, wife of Jesse Mills, a farmer of Fancy Creek Township, and Minnie, wife of Edward Gentry, of Mason City, Iowa. Victoria, wife of A. Birdsell, died leaving no children. There are fourteen grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren in the family. Mrs. Strode's parents had two sons and three daughters and she is the only survivor of the family. Mr. Strode is a member of the Methodist Church and his wife of the United Brethren. They own a nice home at 1118 East Reservoir Street and also retain a farm in Fancy Creek Township, which they formerly occupied, and which is now managed by his son-in-law.

STUART, John Todd. (Vol. I, p. 511.)

SUTTILL, John, a successful farmer and stock-raiser living at 2220 East Laurel Street, Springfield, Ill., was born in Burrrill, Yorkshire, England, April 22, 1854, and is a son of Francis and Margaret (Millen) Suttill, both natives of Yorkshire, the former born in 1823 and the latter in 1834. The parents lived and died on their farm in England, the father August 28, 1901, and the mother in November, 1896. They were parents of eight children, of whom seven survive. One son, James, lives at Camden, N. J. Francis Suttill was a son of a stonemason, who worked in the Dells of Yorkshire, and was a minister in the Wesley Methodist Church. One brother of Francis, Matthew Suttill, is a coachman, and lives at Washington D. C. Mr. Suttill is a member of the Washington D. C. Washington Railroad Company. He afterward learned the trade of carpenter, at which he worked until he set sail for America, July 26, 1881, being twelve days on the water. He landed in Philadelphia, where he remained several months, working for the Reading Railroad, in the department where coal cars were manufactured. He left there March 3, 1882, and on March 6th reached the Wabash Depot in Springfield, Ill. After leaving the train he was walking up Jefferson Street and accidentally stepped off the walk, sinking in mud up to his knees. Mr. Suttill's first position was with the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, with whom he remained one year in the capacity of bridge carpenter. He then worked eighteen years as carpenter for the Wabash Road. He has traveled thousands of miles in connection with his work and has never met with an accident or been in a wreck. One reason of his safety and success is that he has never during his life tasted intoxicating liquors. He stands well in the estimation of his employers and fellow-workmen and is worthy the utmost confidence. For several years Mr. Suttill lived with an uncle, John Milieu, in the village of East Springfield. John Milieu died two years since and his wife six years ago.

Mr. Suttill was married, in Springfield, August 27, 1901, to Miss Pearl Haycroft, who was born in Kentucky, February 10, 1880, a daughter of John M. and Jenny (Norton) Haycroft, natives of Grayson County, Kentucky. Her parents came to Illinois about 1851, locating first at Tinea, and later at Centralia, finally at Springfield, and Mrs. Haycroft now resides on Fifth Street. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Suttill: Francis, March 22, 1902; Celia, January 15, 1904; Margaret, February 6, 1906, and Pearl, November 22, 1909. Mr. Suttill is known as an upright and reliable man, a public spirited citizen and loyal to his friends and principles. He has a pleasant home and is very fond of his family. He is held in high respect and esteem by his fellows and served one term as Treasurer of the village of East Springfield. He is a member of Central Lodge No. 71, A. F. & A. M., of Springfield, and for the past twenty years has belonged to the Springfield Armory. He owns eleven and one-half acres of land in the city and has forty acres in his present place. He is industrious and prosperous and has won success through his own efforts. He is now engaged extensively in the hog business with Col. James W. Jefferson. They have erected some of the most extensive buildings for the purpose in the county, and are buying and shipping all the time.

SUTTON, Francis M.—Cultivating the rich Sangamon County soil has proven a profitable occupation for those men who have known how to do it correctly and to market their products' so as to make more than a bare living. The present prosperous condition of the farmers has been brought about by a few progressive spirits, who would not rest content until they had changed the conditions that forced a man to produce food stuffs at a loss. One of the Sangamon County farmers, who was always ahead of his time in his work was Francis M. Sutton who spent the last days of his life in Springfield. He was born in Madison County, Ill., July 7, 1835, a son of Josiah and Nancy (Swane) Sutton. The parents came from North Carolina to Madison County, at an early date, and from there moved to Bond County, where both died, having always been farmers.

Francis M. Sutton was educated in Madison County, and worked on his parents' farm until he began farming for himself. For twenty years he farmed in Macoupin County, then bought land in Sangamon County, which he brought to a high state of cultivation. On August 4, 1883, he retired and located in Springfield where the family made a permanent home. He was a member of the Christian Church and in politics was a Democrat.

On March 5, 1888, occurred Mr. Sutton's marriage, in Madison County, to Louisa J. McVey, born September 16, 1849. Her father was born in Madison County, in 1824, while her mother, whose maiden name was Calma Guthrie, was born in 1832, and now lives in Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Sutton had the following children: Walter J., lives in Colorado; Mayme E., married Oliver West, employed by the Electric Light Company, of Springfield; and Rosetta, wife of Henry Baird, traveling salesman for bicycle works, of Rutland, Ill. There are two grandchildren; Catherine Baird, born October 4, 1900, and Carter R. West, born April 15, 1903. Mr. Sutton's residence is at No. 1307 East Phillips Avenue, where the family friends are always made welcome. They are all well known in Springfield and are highly respected. Mr. Sutton is remembered with respect by all who knew him.

SWEENEY, Arthur T.—Springfield has a reputation that extends all over the State, for the excellence of its hotels. No better accommodations can be found in Illinois, than those given in the hotel men who know how to make their guests comfortable and to provide for them in every way. One of the best known, and most popular hostelries of the city is the one presided over by Arthur T. Sweeney, who, during a somewhat extended experience as a traveling man, learned just what was lacking in many hotels, and what was needed to make them homelike and comfortable. This experience is now being put to good use, and his patrons are glad to return to him when they are brought back to the city on business.

Mr. Sweeney was born in Johnson County, Mo., August 17, 1870, a son of William H. and Sarah Sweeney, the former born in Ireland, May 10, 1838, and the latter in Christian County, Ill., June 15, 1835. The father was an engineer, who upon coming to this country located at Pana, Ill., but after five years there went to Johnson County, Mo., and spent thirty-two years within its confines. During the Civil War, he enlisted, serving bravely from 1861 to 1865.

After a boyhood spent in Christian County, Ill., and Johnson County, Mo., Mr. Sweeney went to St. Louis to attend school, and upon leaving went on the road for the Deering Binder Company. Later he engaged in farming, then obtained employment with the Water Department of Springfield, remaining until he took charge of his present hotel. He is an Odd Fellow and Modern Woodman. In politics he is a Republican, and he has been of service to his party.

Mr. Sweeney was married at Taylorville, Ill., November 19, 1897, to Eva Ada King, born in Beatrice, Neb., December 26, 1872. The family moved from Nebraska to Girard, Ill., in 1888.
HISTORY OF SANGAMON COUNTY

Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sweeney: Elana F., born April 6, 1900; Pearl L., born May 30, 1904; Arthur D., born October 24, 1906, and Elisworth J., born February 2, 1908. Mr. Sweeney is a genial man, whose pleasing manner and knowledge of the world make him eminently fitted for his present work. He is well known all over his part of the State and his business is in a flourishing condition.

TACKETT, Jesse.—Many of those whose energies have been directed towards pursuits in various parts of Illinois, when ready to retire, settle in Springfield, where so many urban advantages are offered. There they can enjoy the comforts of city life, without foregoing those of a more rural community. One of the men who has proven his faith in Springfield, is Jesse Tackett, now living retired at No. 2303 East Kansas Street. He was born in Menard County, March 3, 1850, a son of John and Elizabeth (Helvesta) Tackett, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. The father, who was a farmer, came to Menard County at an early date, entering 100 acres of land, but later sold it for one hundred dollars per acre. He farmed in the county for many years, but went to Johnston County, Mo., where his later years were spent, and there he died in 1878. He lost his wife when Jesse was an infant. There were five children in the family, of whom Jesse and a sister, Mrs. Truelia Stephenson, of Washington, Ind., are the survivors.

Jesse Tackett attended school in Menard County, and later the one at German Prairie, Sangamon County. During his boyhood days he worked for his father, and continued to farm all his life, until his retirement. While retaining an interest in his farm, he also engaged with the Springfield Rolling Mills, and later with the Springfield Boiler Company. He owns his pleasant home, as well as other property in the city, and is a man of means.

On November 7, 1896, Mr. Tackett was married in Riverton, to Nettie McCarty, born in Springfield July 4, 1885. Her father was a Sangamon County farmer, but both he and his wife are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Tackett have no children. Politically Mr. Tackett is a Republican. His religious convictions make him a member of the Christian Church, of which he is a liberal supporter. He is a reliable, responsible man, whose sympathies are always with conservative methods, and who is anxious to see the preservation of good government and the advancement of the city.

TALBOTT, W. A.—The records of Springfield show that the city is the home of a number of reliable, industrious men, engaged in various lines of activity, who realize the advantages offered by residence in the Capital City. Those who have families often choose it as a home because of the excellent schools, where their children can secure a good education. Among those who are helping to make the city better in every way, by living upright lives and exerting well-meant influence in the right direction, may be numbered W. A. Talbott. He was born at Curran, Ill., September 2, 1871, a son of David C. Talbott and his wife Elizabeth, farming people. They located in Woodside Township in 1879, and since then have made that locality their home, developing and operating a farm that has become valuable.

W. A. Talbott supplemented his common school education with a course at the Springfield business college, after which he went into the service of the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad. Later he engaged with the Buffalo & Ohio Railroad, and proved himself so efficient that he was made conductor. He is careful and conscientious, and no man has done more in his way than Mr. Talbott to make his road as near perfect as possible.

On January 29, 1896, Mr. Talbott was united in marriage with Frankle E. Gattan, born in Sangamon County, July 25, 1874. Her father was a farmer and stockman, who accumulated considerable property in this work. Two little ones have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Talbott, Dorothy Jane, on October 2, 1898, and Georgetta E., on March 10, 1901. Mr. Talbott is a Republican, but has never sought to come before the people in any public capacity. His fraternal relations are with the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and they are pleasant ones. The Methodist Church holds his membership, and he has always given liberally of his means towards its support. Taking him all in all, Mr. Talbott is a man whom any community might well be proud to claim as a citizen, for he belongs to that class which forms the backbone of the nation.

TARBET, Dr. William L.—Probably no man in Sangamon County is better known than the Rev. William L. Tarbet, who is now retired after many years of service as a preacher of the Gospel, and the oldest member of the Presbytery of Springfield, of which he was head for a long period. Dr. Tarbet was born in Blount County, Tenn., August 8, 1825, a son of Hugh and Margaret (Kelly) (Engleton) Tarbet. The paternal grandfather of William L. Tarbet came from Virginia and located in Tennessee, where he became a farmer and slave-owner, and where his death occurred, while the maternal grandfather was of Scotch birth, a native of Edinburgh, and came to Tennessee during the early days in its history. Hugh Tarbet was born in Augusta County, Va., December 17, 1791, and his death occurred in Paducah, Ky., October 19, 1872. As a young man, he went to Tennessee, where he met and married Margaret Kelly Engleton, born in Blount County, Tenn., March 24, 1800. After their marriage, the couple went to Hardin County, Tenn., where Mr. Tar-

William L. Tarbet received his education at Jackson College, Tenn., from which he was graduated in 1847, and for one year following, he engaged in teaching school at Savannah, then for two years he taught in the male academy in Lawrenceburg, Tenn., during which time he was licensed and ordained. He then became stated supply to Brick Church and Counersville in Giles County, Tenn. At this time the Synod sent him to Nashville on Synodical work and after nine months he returned to Giles County, and took charge of Bethany Church for three years, in 1859 going to Virden, Ill., where he continued as pastor of the Presbyterian Church until 1881. Dr. Tarbet then went to Carrolton, Greene County, and spent three years in the same capacity, and following that was pastor of the Psgah and Unity churches in Morgan County for sixteen years, after which he went to Jacksonville, III., and remained there three years, then became stated supply at Diveron for three years, where he has since lived retired, only filling the pulpit when there was a vacancy. For twenty-five years, he was trustee of Blackburn University at Carrollville, when the Hon. John M. Palmer was chairman of the Board. Originally, an Old Line Whig, he is now a Republican. He was commissioner to the General Assembly on five occasions. After the nomination of Abraham Lincoln for the presidency, Dr. Tarbet called on him after his nomination, and after the President’s assassination, he was on the Reception Committee when the body was brought to Springfield for burial, he standing at the casket when the public were viewing the remains. Dr. Tarbet was also a great friend of Uncle Dick” Oglesby. In 1855 he made a trip abroad and was in Brussels, Geneva, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Venice, Florence, Antwerp, Brussels, Cologne, Heidelberg, Baden Baden, Milan and many other places of interest, as a member of Frank C. Cook’s party.

Dr. Tarbet was married in Bowling Green, Ky., in June, 1855, to Emma Hall Covert, who was born in Giles County, Tenn., and died April 14, 1885, in Morgan County, Ill., having been the mother of five children: Mary L., born in Nash- ville, Tenn., January 22, 1855, died in Virden, April 6, 1874; Ellen G., born in Giles County, Tenn., August 12, 1857, died August 13, 1887; William L., born in Giles County, January 21, 1859, married Allela E. Bishop of Lincoln, Ia., and now lives in Chicago; Harry B., born in Virden, November 18, 1861, died in Vandalia, July 18, 1887, being at the time Principal of the city schools; and Emma II., born in Virden December 5, 1864, residing at West Tisbury, Mass., but has been teaching music at Buchanan, W. Va., and divers other places.

On September 2, 1891, Dr. Tarbet was married (second) in Jeffersonville, Ind., to Martha Ann Potter, born in Butler County, O., August 17, 1838, daughter of Samuel and Fannie (Bry-
HISTORY

TAYLOR, Edmund Dick. (Vol. 1, pp. 519-520.)

TAYLOR Family, The, is prominent in the history of Westport, Conn. The first John Taylor located in Windsor before 1640, and his name is found in an ancient publication called "Connecticut Historical Collections," page 127, owned by the writer of this article, who wishes thus to make a connected history between the new one in which this will be found, and the old one. John Taylor was a person of property, character, and influence; his will is to be found in the probate office. Hartford, Conn., dated Nov. 24, 1644. He was among those West Country People who, in Plymouth, England organized what is now the "Congregational Church" of ancient Windsor, Conn., the oldest Congregational Church in New England. They had embarked on the "Mary and John," which sailed two weeks before the rest of Governor Winthrop's fleet. After five or six years' residence in Dorchester, Mass., they removed to Windsor, Conn., one of the original towns in the State in 1639. In January, 1643, John Taylor, of Windsor, sailed from New Haven for England, to transact some private business. The ship in which he took passage was the first one built in the Colonies. Its name seems to be lost but it was known in Colonial History as "The Phantom Ship" for it never was heard from again, as none of those who sailed returned to tell the tale. John of Windsor was born in England. He was twice married and had two sons, one of them John of Northampton, Mass., born at Windsor, Conn., 1644, and married November 18, 1662, to Thankful, daughter of Henry Woodward of Southampton. He was "Captain of Militia" and very prominent in town affairs. He was killed May 13, 1704, by Indians, of whom he was in pursuit after they had destroyed the village of Pasemuck, which is believed to have been near Westport, Conn. Their son, "Lieutenant John," married Waffe Clapp. It is asserted of him that he built the "Taylor-Finch" house in the early part of 1700. Later Judge Finch married Miss Taylor, hence the present name. At this date, 1805, the house is wonderfully well preserved, with rooms on either side of the little square front hall, up from which runs the narrow winding stairway, which is a feature of all New England colonial houses. The paneling of wood in the front rooms extend from the floor to ceiling, and the windows are placed without regard to size, or spacing or height, but evidently as it must have seemed most convenient to the builder. Going up the front stairs, one finds a delightful little cubbyhole, just the place for odds and ends, and so easily reached. The sun shines brightly through the windows of the parlor chamber; here are the original doors and paneling, and from the windows the same magnificent view over rolling hill and meadow, which John and his wife must often have enjoyed. Down two steps we go into a little low room under the sloping roof, with just space for a trunk at the farther side. From here a door opens into a dark room where a great white-washed chimney, "the warm heart of the house," occupies most of the space. Part way up the garret stairs the steps branch off to the north and south attics, lighted by the little four paneled windows at either end. The hewn oak beams are overhead, and one can see the worn eaten roof boards under the shingles, which have been in place about 200 years. In the dining room which was the original kitchen, the ceiling is just six feet high with a broad beam through the center. The great fireplace is in this room, and when the family gathered in long winter evenings, here the apples were roasted, and the cider warmed on the hearth and the nuts and stories were cracked. No doubt the "Country Stick" was sometime brought into requisition, a hollow tube six or eight feet long with a mouth piece at one end and an ear trumpet at the other, where the young men and maidens might carry on their love making without seriously disturbing the rest of the family—not very satisfactory, perhaps, but they had to adapt themselves to their environments then as now. In the King Street Cemetery, Westport, Conn. is the moss covered double-stone that marks the graves of himself and wife and which tells us that Lieutenant John Taylor died November 18, 1724, aged seventy-seven years, and that "Mistress Waite, ye wife of Lieutenant John Taylor, died January 23, 1721, aged fifty-one years."
Lieutenant Josiah Taylor, second son and child of Lieutenant John and Waite Clapp Taylor, was born October 17, 1701, and died February 11, 1781. He was married August 2, 1729, to Thankful French. Their son Ahijah was born September 22, 1740, married Isabella Wyley. From "Connecticut Colonial Homes" the following description is taken referring to Westport: "Across the highway a few rods east of "Washington Inn" may be seen an old Elm Tree stump, near which until two or three years ago stood the home of Ahijah Taylor, grandfather of Mr. Theodore Taylor of Westport. We have a valuable record of Ahijah's loyalty and courage while he was serving in a Connecticut regiment in 1764, under Israel Putnam, in the French War at Detroit. Bradstreet's little army had been sent to relieve Detroit. Israel Putnam was Lieutenant Colonel and gave to Ahijah Taylor at this time his "warrant as Second Sergeant in the Fifth Company, a Battalion, where I am Colonel. Given under my hand and Seal at Arns at Detroit, this 13th day of September, 1764. Signed by his own hand, Israel Putnam, Lieut. Colonel. This commission was found among the papers of Charles Wiley Taylor, M. D., son of Ahijah, about the year 1854, and is now in the "Norwalk Historical Society."

Dr. Charles W. Taylor, brother to Captain Dan Taylor, taught school for awhile in Fonda, N. J., and boarded with the father of William H. Seward, and had William H. for a pupil. W. H. was Secretary of State in Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet. Among the children of Sergeant Ahijah and Isabelle Wiley Taylor was Dan (not Daniel), who was afterward called "Captain Dan" by virtue of his Captaincy in "The Home Guards" of Westport. He was born January 18, 1775, married November, 1804, to Sallie Adams. She was born September 28, 1787, and was a daughter of Aaron and Rhoda (Hanford) Adams, of Westport, Conn. Her father was one of the wealthiest and most influential men of that section of country.

Captain Dan and Sallie Adams Taylor began housekeeping in a pretty new home built for them. It is plainly visible in the picture of Westport, page 414, in the above mentioned Historical Collections, and is now marked with a cross, so that the descendants may know it. It has since been beautified by a Mansard roof and fine porch, and a picture of it as it now looks, hangs in the writer's room, and is called "The Old Homestead," owned still by one of the family. It stands on a high hill in Westport and commands a fine view of the surrounding country as well as the Saugatuck River. Here the young men and maidens enjoyed the great "House Warming" that was held there after the wedding at the home of Sallie Adams, a hundred years ago, Sallie Adams Taylor was one of the loveliest of women, calm, sweet, and serene, as her picture indicates, loving a bit of fun, too, as well as any one could. Her son testified of her that he never saw her angry in his life, but then you and I know she must have been angry a good many times, but had a fortunately sweet way of not showing it. She died July 1st, 1865, aged seventy-eight years, ten months. Captain Dan died in July, 1859, aged eighty-one years, seven months. He was almost one hundred years older than his youngest grandchild, a son, his only living namesake, Frederick Dan Taylor, born 1876.

Francis Taylor, youngest son of Captain and Sallie Adams Taylor, is the connecting link between the old "Connecticut Historical Collections" and this new history.

TAYLOR, Francis.—There is particular satisfaction in reverting to the life history of the honored gentleman whose name introduces this review. His life history illustrates most happily what may be attained by faithful and continued effort in carrying out an honest purpose. Integrity, activity and energy have been the crowning points of his success. His birth occurred at Westport, Fairfield County, Conn., November 27, 1821. His father, Capt. Daniel Taylor, was also a native of Connecticut. The family is of English origin and was established in the Charter Oak State, at a very early (1640) epoch in its development. Francis Taylor was reared and married in Connecticut. He wedded Henrietta B. Morehouse, also a native of Connecticut, and, for some years he carried on agricultural pursuits there. After the birth of two of his children, however, he came to Illinois, locating at Bates in 1851. There he followed farming for a few years and in 1855, he removed to a farm near New Berlin. He commenced with eighty acres of land, but subsequently added to his property from time to time until within the boundaries of his farm were comprised 500 acres. He was very successful as an agriculturist and stock-raiser, and spent the last years of his life in New Berlin and died there in November, 1888. His was twice married, his first wife passing away in Sangamon County about 1863. Later he married again, his second wife being Harriet Runsey, second daughter of Aaron Burr and Lucetta (Crane) Runsey. She was born on Como Bench near Westport, Conn. By this union, four children were born. There were also four children by the first marriage—Mary, the wife of Frank G. Coulter, a resident farmer of Sangamon County; A. J., residing in New Berlin; Francis I. also resides in New Berlin and owns and operates a farm; and Edward H., a farmer residing at Bates, Illinois. The children of the second marriage are Charles R., an agriculturist of Sangamon County, also a lawyer by profession, having been admitted to the Sangamon County Bar; William, who died in his twenty-fourth year; Harriet S., who is a physician of Springfield; and Frederick D., who is engaged in business in Chicago.

Mr. Taylor was a man of many sterling qualities, his tastes being strongly domestic, and all of his leisure hours were devoted to his family and in social relations. He manifested qualities which gained for him the good will, confidence and friendly regard of those with whom he was associated. He watched with interest the progress and improvement of the county, co-operating as he found opportunity, in its upbuilding, and he received the veneration and respect which should ever be accorded to one of his years.

TAYLOR, Francis L., a representative farmer of New Berlin, Ill., a man of sterling integrity, prominent in the business and social interests of his community, is a native son of Sangamon County, born on his father's farm at Bates, July 26, 1837. His father, Francis Taylor, was born at Westport, Conn., November 27, 1821, married Henrietta B. Morehouse, a native of the same place, and came to Illinois in 1851. He spent some time on a farm near Bates, which was owned by Morris Ketchum, of New York, and subsequently moved to the neighborhood east of New Berlin, where he occupied an eighty-acre farm. He engaged in mercantile business in the village about 1851, and his son, Francis L., became his partner in this enterprise after he had completed his education. Francis and Henrietta (Morehouse) Taylor had three sons: Francis L., Albert J. and Edward H. Albert J. Taylor was born at Westport, Conn., and is unmarried. Edward H. Taylor was born May 7, 1850, and March 1, 1891, married Minnie E. Coulter. There was also one daughter by this marriage, Mary, wife of Frank G. Coulter. Mrs. Taylor died in Sangamon County about 1863 and Mr. Taylor married a second time, there being four children born of this union. The Taylor family is of English descent and was early established in Connecticut. Francis Taylor was a son of Dan. Taylor, also a native of Connecticut. Francis Taylor died at his home in New Berlin, in November, 1888. He had purchased eighty acres of land upon coming to the vicinity of New Berlin and had been able to add to his holdings until he owned 500 acres. His last years were spent in the village.

For a number of years, Francis L. Taylor was engaged in mercantile business with his father and after the latter's death continued the business until the destruction of the building and stock by fire in the summer of 1884. His brother Albert J. afterwards erected a building to replace the old one, but Francis L. then turned his attention to farming. He is one of the leading farmers of his county and owns land in Sangamon, Christian and Macon counties, Ill., amounting to about 1,000 acres, besides farm land in Nebraska, being a man of remarkable judgment in his business investments and an enterprising, energetic farmer. He received excellent business training under his father's supervision and has turned his ability in this direction to very good account.

In political belief, Mr. Taylor is a stanch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and although the township is overwhelmingly Democratic, he was elected to the office of Supervisor in 1900. He served twelve years as Postmaster of New Berlin. He is popular among his neighbors and identified with the best interests of his township and county. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and active in its work.

June 25, 1884, Mr. Taylor married Miss Minnie L., daughter of Henry and Louisa (Arenz) Yates, who is a cousin of Richard Yates, her father being a brother of the older Richard Yates, the noted War Governor of Illinois. Mrs. Taylor was born at Berlin, Ill., October 9, 1859. Her father was born March 7, 1835, also at Berlin, son of Henry Yates, who was born in Caroline County, Va., October 29, 1786, and her mother was born at Beardstown, Ill., June 14, 1836, a daughter of Hon. Francis Arenz. Five children were born to Mr. Taylor and his wife: Nellie Y., March 19, 1855; Frank M., April 6, 1857; Harry Y., June 29, 1880; Thomas Rhea, August 16, 1892; William L., November 17, 1895.

TAYLOR, Prof. John Edward—To be an instructor means much in these days of aggressive methods, and Springfield has some of the best men in this line to be found in the entire state. One who has been attracting considerable attention on account of his ability, strength of purpose and excellent methods, is John Edward Taylor, Principal of the Trapp School, of Springfield. He was born near Williamsville, Ill., March 30, 1856, being a son of Isaac Jefferson Taylor.

Long before the Revolution three brothers—Isaac, James and William Taylor—came from England. Where James and William settled we are unable to find out but Isaac settled in Maryland. He moved to Chester District, S. C. One of his sons, John, moved with his family to Barron County, Ky.; to White County, Ill.; to Wayne County, Ill.; in 1829 to Sangamon County, and in 1849 to Davis County, Iowa, where he died in 1856. Seventeen children were born to him, three of whom—Simeon, Isaac and James—remained in Sangamon County, near where Barclay now stands, where they reared large families.

James was the father of twelve children, one of whom, Isaac Jefferson Taylor, was the father of John E. Taylor.

After attending school at Williamsville and the National Normal of Lebanon, Ohio, Mr. Taylor began teaching at the Lakeside School near Elkhart, in Logan County, Ill. He taught there for one term, then taught five terms at the Smith school near Williamsville, in the district where he was born. For a year he taught at Buffalo Hart, and for two years at the Knockoff's school near Auburn. For a year he taught at the Jordan school near Dawson and for a year was at the Woolsey school near Auburn. For the following three years he taught the Fletcher school at Auburn. He was then made Principal of the Cantrall school at Cantrall, Ill., where he remained three years, and for one year was Principal of the Athens school but resigned the second term to take the same position with the Williamsville school, which he held for two years, resigning in 1904, the third year, when he was called to the Trapp School, a ward school of Springfield, where for the succeeding seven years he has been its efficient head.

On June 24, 1886, Mr. Taylor was married, at Elkhart, Ill., to Louisa Sell, born near that town, May 8, 1867, daughter of Andrew Sell, a native of Germany, who married Mary J. Turley, of Elkhart, Mr. Taylor's father died in 1865, but his widow survives, being now sixty-nine years old. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor became the parents of one child, Alice, born April 29, 1887.

Mr. Taylor belongs to Tyrann Lodge No. 333, A. F. & A. M.; Modern Woodmen of America at Auburn; Court of Honor, Camp No. 1 at Auburn; Yeomen of America at Williamsville and K. of P. at Cantrall. The West Side Christian Church of Springfield holds his membership, and on January 1, 1911, he was made one of its deacons. In politics he is an Independent Democrat. He owns a beautiful twostory home at No. 713 South State Street. A man of culture and wide reading, Mr. Taylor is eminently fitted to hold his present responsible position. Not only is he a close student, but he loves his work and is proud of the advancement his pupils show.

TAYLOR, Lewis Cass, M. D., who has for many years been established in the profession of his city, and whose numerous and progressive citizenship, is well known in Springfield and Sangamon County, where most of his life has been spent, and stands well in his profession. He was born in Williamsville, Ill., April 9, 1854, and is a son of Ninian R. and Catherine (Halter) Taylor. Ninian R. Taylor was a merchant by occupation, and a prominent citizen of Williamsville.

The early education of Dr. Taylor was acquired in the public schools; later he attended Eureka College, and he received his medical training at Bellevue Hospital and Medical College in New York City. He entered upon practice after receiving his degree, and has for some time been a resident of Springfield. He has won a reputation for skill and ability, and is a member of the county, State and American Medical Societies. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Order and has taken the degree of Knight Templar. He is unmarried and resides on East Washington Street, having an office in the National Bank Building.

TAYLOR, Robert R. (deceased), was a valued citizen of Sangamon County for many years and a veteran of the Civil War. He was born at Portland, Me., September 21, 1840, and there spent his boyhood and youth. His father, Richard Taylor, also a native of that State, was a ship-builder by trade and worked most of his life in Portland. He and his wife had twenty-one children. The parents died in Portland. As a young man Robert R. Taylor worked with his father and learned the same trade, which he followed until coming to Illinois. When he first came to this State he spent a few years in Chicago and there learned the trade of a brick mason, which he followed for some time. Later he followed farming a few years in Lanesville Township, Sangamon County, and for five years lived in Mechanicsburg, after which he removed to Niantic, and there his death occurred in 1890.

Mr. Taylor was an industrious, enterprising business man and made many friends. He was a member of the Methodist Church, a Democrat in politics and took an active interest in the welfare of his community. For many years he belonged to the G. A. R. He was married at Decatur, Ill., in 1888, to Miss Susan Deins, who was born in England, November 25, 1848. Her father, Edmund Deins, was a music teacher and died in England, after which the mother came to America and lived in Sangamon County until her death, in 1894, at the home of Mrs. Taylor. Of the thirteen children born to Mr. Deins and wife the only survivor is the daughter Susan. Eight children were born to Mr. Taylor and wife, of whom the only survivor is one son, William H., in the employ of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad Company, at Springfield. Mr. Taylor's widow married Mr. Brock and now resides in Illiopolis, where she owns a pleasant home and other property.

TAYLOR, William Biddle.—Among the most practical and painstaking farmers and stock raisers of Sangamon County is to be numbered William Biddle Taylor, of Section 6, Gardner Township, born in the township, June 1, 1843, a son of William B. and Beulah (Smith) Taylor, both natives of New Jersey, where they married, in June, 1830, the ceremony being performed by Jacob G. Smith. The father was born near Salmon Bay, December 25, 1800, while the mother was born December 19, 1810. In 1828 removal was made to Illinois and settlement made in Gardner Township. They had seven children, six of them surviving: John L., of Arizona; Roxana, of Michigan; Maria, of Fredonia, Kan.; Josephine, of Mason City, I11.; William B.; Abigail, of Fredonia, Kan.

William B. Taylor Sr., located on the Beards- town Road, in Gardner Township, and there died about 1849, when William Biddle Taylor was about seven years old. His widow survived until about 1850, when she too passed away.

Growing up on the homestead, William Biddle Taylor remained with his mother, obtaining what educational advantages he could. The family were poor and when he was only ten years old he assumed charge of the farm work, trying to operate the sixty acres of land left them. He went about among the neighbors trying to secure any kind of work that would earn him an honest dollar, and worked too hard for his childish strength. However, being very strong, he was able to do a man's work even in childhood. When he was twenty-six, in 1867, he was able to buy 114 acres in Gardner Township. On it he found a small frame house, but no barn, and to it he brought his sisters and began to develop a good farm. He soon began to feed a few hogs and cattle, and finding them so profitable, enlarged his operations. His farm consisted of eighty acres of prairie and thirty-four acres of heavy timber, so that he worked almost incessantly. He alternately cut cord and rails he split from his timber, finding a market for both commodities at Springfield. As soon as he had his first purchase under control he bought more land, now owning 274 acres of as fine land as can be seen in Sangamon County. Owing to his strenuous labor and neglect of his health, Mr. Taylor suffered from rheumatism for two years, which stopped his work of acquiring more land. After spending much money and effort with several specialists, Mr. Taylor called in old Dr. Higgins, who cured him, so he has not been bothered since.

On October 10, 1879, Mr. Taylor married Ethel Campbell, a native of Alabama, Ohio, where she was born in 1845 and was brought to Illinois in 1858 by her parents. She has two brothers, Rush A., a farmer of Gardner Township, and Burr, of Mexico. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are both deceased, as are four of their seven children. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor had two children, one of whom died in infancy, the other, Terrence, was born July 7, 1881. He has always lived on the farm, and is helping his father operate it. Being a good mechanic, he has equipped a shop with all kinds of tools for repairing and sharpening farm machinery. No city shop is better equipped, and his work compares favorably with any done in Springfield. The young man was married September 3 at Peoria, Ill., to Ethel B. Wiseman, born near Petersburg, Ill., January 1, 1888, daughter of Jacob J. and Carrie (Horncuckle) Wiseman. They belong to leading families of that locality. One child has been born of this union, little William Jacob Hoyle Taylor, born May 31, 1900.

The Taylor farm is one of the nearest in that part of the county. The buildings and machinery are in perfect order, there is a place for anything, and nothing is left out of place. The stock is of the best grade standard breed, and a specialty is made of Poland-China hogs, which are shipped to adjacent markets. Mr. Taylor is a man to whom farming comes naturally and his long training makes him an agriculturist of wide experience. One of the truly self-made men of Sangamon County, he has earned his 274 acres by toil such as few men ever go through with, and by overcoming all obstacles has raised himself to his present position of comfort. Meanwhile, he has done much to advance his community. He takes pride in relating his early experiences, stating that he was in field and meadow early and late, from the time of spring planting until after the crops were harvested, after which he had to haul his produce to Springfield. His physical strength and endurance are remarkable, for few men could have withstood such a drain upon their health as continued and unremitting hard work.

Mr. Taylor has seen wonderful changes effected. Good roads have been cut through the prairie; the land has been transformed into rich farms, while cities and towns have sprung up along the line of railroads not thought of when he was a boy. Telephone service draws the farmers together and keeps them in close touch with the outside world. He has kept abreast of inventious and scientific methods in his work, and his farm and premises show the character of the owner and his son, who has assisted him so materially.

TEATER, Terrence B.—The Illinois Central Railroad Company gives employment to some of the most substantial men in Springfield, who are located in the city because of their connection with this great road. One of the men thus identified with it is Terrence B. Teater, car inspector at the roundhouse, who resides on his property on East Washington Street, and has held his present responsible position for the past quarter of a century. He was born on a farm near Latroche, Westmoreland County, Pa., February 13, 1851, a son of William N. Teater and wife, natives of the same county. The paternal grandfather, Henry Teater, came to the United States from Germany, locating in Westmoreland County, Pa., where he farmed until his demise.

William Teater migrated to Shelby County, Ill., arriving there October 11, 1863, and buying a farm in Big Spring Township, where the mother passed away, in 1880, aged sixty-nine years. His life-companion being gone, the father went to live with his son Leander, then a resident of Tennessee, and it was at the home of this son that he died, in 1895, aged seventy-six years. The children born to him and his wife were: Sarah Ann, wife of Samuel Sigfried, died in Covington, Tenn., in 1907; James L. and Peter Henry both died in Shelby County; Amos, of Covington, Tenn.; Leander, now of Hampton, Ark.; Mary E., deceased, and Terrence. Peter Henry served during the Civil War and had the unhappy experience of being taken prisoner at the battle of Gettysburg.

Terrence Teater was twelve years old when he was brought to Illinois, and received a good common school education in Shelby County, until he was seventeen years old. He was brought up to farm work, but upon leaving school entered the employ of the "Big Four" as fireman. At the end of the third year he commenced working in their shops at Mattoon, Ill., continuing there until 1883, when he was employed by the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Company as car repairer. In 1880 he was made car inspector for the Illinois Central Railroad, and placed in the roundhouse at Springfield, and this city has since continued to be his home.

The first marriage of Mr. Teater took place in 1859 when he was united with Mary Keithley, of Belleville, Ill. She bore him two children: Honora, Mrs. Albert Chatterton of Clinton, Ill., and Aurora May, Mrs. Clarence Toons, of Clinton, Ill. Mr. Teater was again married, in 1886, to Emma Delight Freelon, no issue. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the International Association of Car Workers. Politically he is a Democrat. While not connected with any religious denomination, Mr. Teater believes in moral uplift, and is anxious to secure good government. He is a conscientious worker, giving his company his best efforts, and his value is appreciated by officials and men alike. In his home Mr. Teater is a considerate husband and father, and is proud of his family. He feels satisfied with what he has accomplished, for his advancement has been secured through merit. He has lived to see his daughters happily married, and grateful to him for educating and caring for them.

It is such men as Mr. Templeman who form the backbone of any nation. Quiet, unassuming, steady working at the duties each day brings, they are a force in themselves that is powerful and all the more felt because it does not appear on the surface, but permeates society and shows that good, honest endeavor will prevail in the end.

TEMMELIAN, James W., a prominent and successful young attorney who has been engaged in practice in Springfield for several years, has held various public offices of honor and trust in Illinois. Mr. Templeman was born in Owen County, Ky., August 31, 1876, a son of Thomas P. and Lutitia (Donley) Templeman. The family moved on a farm in Wayne County, Ill., in 1880, and there James W. Templeman received his early education. He taught school four years in the country and served one year as Principal of the Wayne City School. He also served four years as County Superintendent of Schools in Wayne County, being the first Democrat elected to this office for sixteen years. He served as a member of the Forty-fifth General Assembly of Illinois. He was an able and conscientious School Superintendent, and during his term in the Legislature introduced a bill fixing a minimum salary for public school teachers.

Mr. Templeman pursued his legal studies while serving as County Superintendent of Schools, and was admitted to the Bar in Wayne County, Ill., in 1900, soon after which he came to Springfield and embarked in the active practice of his profession, and secured a good clientele. He is prominent in fraternal circles and is connected with the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Court of Honor and the Tribe of Ben Hur. He is actively interested in every movement for the promotion of the community where he has established himself, and is a useful and representative citizen.

Mr. Templeman is now identified with the Reisch Indemnity Company.

Mr. Templeman was married August 29, 1900, to Miss Emma Garrison, of Washington County, Ill., daughter of S. C. Garrison, a farmer of that county, and three children have been born on this union: James D., Veda E. and Elizabeth L. Mr. Templeman and his wife are members of the Christian Church. Mrs. Templeman is the only lady attorney in Sangamon County and was admitted to the Bar in Wayne County in 1907. She is a graduate of the Centralia High School and attended the Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, Ill., three years. The family reside at 222 West Cedar Street, Springfield.

TERRENT, Michael J., now retired from active life and living in Springfield, Ill., where he has resided since June, 1866, was born in County Cork, Ireland. The family of William and Mary (Russell) Terrent, both natives of County Cork, Ireland. The father died there in 1876 the mother came to America and located in Springfield, where she remained one year, then went to Boston, Mass., where her death occurred in 1897. Her sons William and Daniel were living in Sangamon County at the time of the Civil War. The former died in Boston, in 1891, and the latter died in New York, in 1889.

The boyhood of Michael J. Terrent was spent in his native country and he was educated in the public schools there. His father, who was a coachman, died in March, 1858. He is a son of William and Mary (Russell) Terrent, both natives of County Cork, Ireland. THAYER, Edward Raymore, a veteran merchant of Springfield, Ill., was born at Anherst, Mass., July 7, 1815, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Thayer. When he was about one year old, his parents removed to Petersburg, Va., but after remaining there about seven years, they returned north to Boston, Mass., which continued to be their home for several years. In 1835—this being a period of large emigration from the Eastern States to the West—the family came to St. Louis, Mo. The father contemplated entering the mercantile business there, in which he had previously been engaged, but finding the field apparently overcrowded, and having made the acquaintance at a St. Louis hotel of Mr. James L. Lamb, a prominent business man of Springfield, Ill., he was induced to come to the latter place, then a town of some 1,200 inhabitants. Here he at once engaged in mercantile business, which he continued during the remainder of his life, his death finally occurring in the later 'seventies at the age of more than ninety years. Mr. Thayer was one of the contributors to the $50,000 fund for securing the location of the State Capitol at Springfield.

In 1837, at the age of about twenty-one years, Edward R. entered into partnership with his father, which lasted during the remainder of the life of the latter. During much of this time he was practical head of the concern and, for many years before the period of railroad connection with the East, was accustomed to make two trips each year by stage-coach to Philadelphia and New York for the purchase of stocks of goods. At this time the well-known Thayer store was located on the west side of Fifth Street opposite the Capitol Square and was the popular trading point of many of the older and historic families of Springfield. In 1842 the store was removed to its present location at 520 East Adams Street, south of the public square, which it has since occupied for nearly fifty years.

Mr. Thayer was also one of the founders of the Springfield Woolen Mills, which grew under his administration to be one of the large manufacturing concerns in the city of Springfield, occupying nearly one-half of an entire block on South Fourth Street opposite the Bettle Stuart Institute, but was discontinued some years ago.

Hugh Armstrong, an early operator in this line, was an original partner and manager of the concern for a number of years after its establishment.

A man of quiet temperament, reserved manner, high moral character and business integrity, Mr. Thayer has devoted his life closely to his vocation, but has always been interested in issues tending to the local and public welfare. An original Republican in political opinions, he is one of the few now surviving who knew Abraham Lincoln intimately and as a personal friend, and whose reminiscences in connection with the life of Springfield’s greatest citizen and America’s greatest statesman, have had a constantly increasing interest and value to the present generation. A historic event of national interest of which Mr. Thayer has some personal recollection, was the laying of the corner-stone of the Bunker Hill Monument at Charlestown, Mass., (now a part of the city of Boston), by Gen. Lafayette in 1825, which Mr. Thayer witnessed as a boy at ten years of age.

Never married, Mr. Thayer has uniformly made his home, successively at different hotels in the city, for more than two generations—from the old Spottswood Hotel, the Globe, the American and the Chenery, down to the Leland for the last quarter-century—and is widely recognized as a leading historic character of the city which has been his home, and where he has been a leading business man for more than three-quarters of a century, at all times enjoying the confidence and respect of the entire community.

THOMA, Frank.—Among the highly esteemed residents of Springfield, Ill., may be mentioned Frank Thoma, who is now living retired after many years of business activity. Mr. Thoma is a native of Germany, having been born in Baden, August 25, 1840, a son of Frank X. and Rosa (Relsch) Thoma. He was eleven years of age when the family emigrated to the United States, where an older brother had gone one year previously, and his education, begun in the schools of his native country, was finished in the vicinity of Williamsburg, N. Y., where the family resided for two years. They then went to Berks County, Pa., sixteen miles east of Doylestown, settling on a farm of 160 acres, and there Mr. Thoma worked some time. December 17, 1860, he came to Springfield and began working for Christ Hauck.Deciding to enter upon a business of his own instead of farming, he began to learn the butchering business with John Lutz, later went to Chicago and worked there at his trade two months, when he went to Joliet, Ill., to take charge of a big butchering plant, which was washed away in the flood. He then went into partnership with another man in the butchering business, and continued until 1886, when he came to Springfield and bought stock, remaining in this line until 1897, in October of which year he opened an establishment of his own at No. 802 South Fifth Street, and there he continued to do business until 1892, meeting with much success. Believing at this time that he had spent enough of his time in the business, Mr. Thoma purchased four acres of land just outside of the city, to which he moved, and there for ten years, he engaged in poultry raising and truck gardening, but in 1902, he returned to Springfield, where he has since lived retired.

He is the owner of his home and considerable other real estate in the city, and is looked upon as one of his community's substantial men.
Mr. Thoma was married in Springfield May 27, 1867, to Charlotte Greach, who came to the United States from Germany about 1863. She is a daughter of Andrew and Magdalena (Stal- ling) Greach, who were both natives of Nelder- haus, Baden, Germany. The mother visited America about 1878 and the father visited the country the following year, but both died in Germany. Mr. Thoma and wife had these chil- dren: Lizzie, who married J. W. Johnson, of London, Canada; Katie, who married A. H. Kruis, of Springfield; Rosie, who married Otto Gehr, of Chicago, and Frances, who married William Link, of Springfield. The family attend SS. Peter and Paul German Catholic Church and Mr. Thoma is a member of St. Vincent's Society.

THOMA, Hugo.—Springfield, with its miles of well-paved streets, shaded by stately trees and flanked with beautiful homes; its many municipal improvements; its magnificent State build- ings; its beautiful churches, steeped as it is in an atmosphere of culture and offering such ex- cellent opportunities for social intercourse, is an ideal home for those seeking a haven of rest after years of fruitful endeavor. Hugo Thoma, after a business life of over forty-eight years in Springfield, has for several years past been re- tired from active life, and is enjoying the many advantages of residence in Springfield. He was born in Baden, Germany, February 26, 1848, being a son of Xavier and Rosa (Reisch) Thoma, the former born in Baden, Germany, December 6, 1806, and the latter in the same place July 18, 1811. The father was a locksmith by trade, who came to the United States in 1840, landing in New York, where he remained two years. From there he went to Bucks County, Pa., there living until 1862, when the family came to Sangamon County, the father working at his trade until his death, February 22, 1869. His widow survived him until June 27, 1877. There were ten chil- dren in the family, nine sons and one daughter, and of these three survive: Hugo, Frank and Mrs. Minnie Meiner, who is a widow.

After receiving a common school education in Bucks County schools, Hugo Thoma worked on a canal boat owned by his father, on the Lehigh & Delaware Canal, in Pennsylvania, being the mule driver. He was but eight years old when he commenced this work, alternating it with his attendance at school. He also worked on the Essex & Reading and the Morris Canals, the latter in New Jersey. When he reached Spring- field, January 5, 1863, having spent seven days on the journey, coming from New York on an emigrant train, he began working in a brick yard conducted by August Kleppenberg, remaining in his employ one summer. In the fall of 1863, he worked in the confectionary business, remaining there until January 1, 1865, when he drove a team four months, then tended bar until 1868. January 1, 1869, he engaged in business on his own account, attaining a well-earned suc- cess, but having accumulated a sufficiently large competency, retired from business in 1900. He belongs to SS. Peter and Paul Roman Catholic Church and is faithful in its support.

Mr. Thoma was married in the church of which he is a member, in Springfield, May 5, 1855, to Sophia Kuehn, born in Springfield, Feb- ruary 5, 1855. Her father came from Bavaria, Germany, and her mother from Wurtemburg, Germany, to America, at an early day, landing at New Orleans. From that city they went to St. Louis, which was their home until 1854, when removal was made to Springfield, where the father embarked in a gents' furnishing goods store, conducting it until 1869, when he retired. His death occurred May 13, 1897, but his widow survived until 1902. There were three sons and two daughters in the Kuehn family, three of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Thoma have had eight children: Albert C., Hugo J., Cari E., Marie S., of Springfield; Clara, wife of William Watts, and three who are deceased. Mr. Thomas owns his residence at No. 521 Percy Ave- nue, in addition to other realty in Springfield, and is in very comfortable circumstances. His business career was marked by very close attention to his own affairs and strict honesty, and he has reaped the legitimate results of good efforts carefully directed.

THOMAS, Jesse Burgess, Jr. (Vol. I, p. 521.)

THOMPSON, Franklin C., who owns a well- developed farm on Section 5, Lanesville Township, Sangamon County, was born near Waverly, Pike County, Ohio, August 26, 1855, a son of Jefferson and Mary (Musstarsn) Thompson, both natives of Ohio, the former born in Guernsey County and the latter in Pike County. Jefferson Thompson is a cooper, having learned the trade after his marriage. He accompanied his father from his native county to Pike County, and there the family located on a farm. He was married there in 1854, and he and his wife now reside in Waverly, he aged seventy-seven, and she aged sixty-five years. They were parents of eight sons, of whom the two deceased were: the youngest son, Clifton, died in the Philippine Islands, while in the United States Government service, and James Sherman. Franklin is the oldest child surviving, the others being: David L. of Waverly, where he is a mechanic; William H., of Canal Dover, Ohio, a thumper by trade; John W., of Cleveland; Philip W.; and Charles, of Arkansas. The paternal grandfather of Franklin C., David Thompson, emigrated from Virginia to Ohio, and his maternal grandparents also came from Virginia.

In boyhood Franklin C. Thompson worked on his father's farm and he received his education in the schools of Waverly. In 1880, he came to Sangamon County and settled on the farm of John Frey, his father-in-law, where he remained seven years, then sold out and spent a few months in Springfield, after which he purchased the farm he has since carried on. He owns 100 acres of land and during the twenty-one years, he has lived on it, has brought it to a high state of cultivation. He has become prominent in public affairs in his community and has held several offices of honor and trust. He served three years as Road Commissioner, twelve years as School Director, and has been several times a member of the grand jury of the county. He is a Democrat in politics. He affiliates with the United Brethren Church, and fraternally, is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. He is an industrious and practical farmer and stands well among his neighbors, having won their universal esteem and respect.

Mr. Thompson was married at Waverly, Ohio, September 8, 1875, to Miss Anna M., daughter of John Frey, who now resides at Buffalo, III. Her parents were early settlers of Sangamon County, and the father (a sketch of whom appears in this work) owns considerable land there. Mrs. Thompson was born in Waverly, Ohio. To her and her husband, children were born as follows: Clinton M., Edward J., Bertha M., Esther L., and I. D. Perce, living, and John W., Levina and Raymond, deceased. Clinton M. married Miss Thrusa Stubbfield, a native of Christian County, and they now reside in Decatur, III. Mr. Thompson has been successful in his agricultural operations and has reared a family of whom he may well be proud. He is identified with the best interests of his community, and always ready to espouse any worthy object.

THOMPSON, Stanton H.—The retired farmers form an important element in the life of a community, especially in one that is located in the center of an agricultural district. Sangamon is the home of a number of small towns and villages which prosper because of their retired farmer population, and one of these is the flourishing Illiopolis. One of the representative men of the class just mentioned is Stanton H. Thompson. He was born in Madison County, Ky., December 8, 1834, a son of Leman and Mary (Johnson) Thompson, the former born in 1807, and both natives of Kentucky. The grandparents were both from Virginia, coming to Kentucky at a day early in its history. Leman Thompson was a farmer and continued his work until his death, in Kentucky. During the Civil War he was a member of the Home Guard, having the misfortune to be taken prisoner and confined three months. The ancestors on both sides of the house were Revolutionary soldiers, so the military spirit was not lacking in this family. Leman Thompson had seven children, four daughters and three sons, three of whom survive. This most excellent man passed to his last reward in 1871, but his widow survived him, living until 1903, and at her death was considerably over ninety years of age, the exact date of her birth, however, having been lost.

In the days when Stanton H. Thompson grew up there were but few educational advantages offered the farmer lad, but such as there were he eagerly grasped, attending the uncomfortable log schools with their puncheon floors and slab seats. During his boyhood he worked hard for his father, but in 1863 left Kentucky, coming to Moultrie County, III., where for twenty-six years he was actively engaged in farming. He then went to Thayer County, Neb., there continuing his farming on eighty acres of land which he bought, and which he still owns. For twenty-two years this continued to be his home, but in 1902 he returned to Illinois and, selecting Illiopolis as his place of residence, bought a pleasant home there, where he is now spending his declining years. During all his operations he was successful and can look back with satisfaction upon his well-spent life.

Mr. Thompson was married in Madison, Ky., November 1, 1855, to Lucy M. Stapp, born in Madison County, December 3, 1838, a daughter of William and Charlotte (Layer) Stapp, farming people of Kentucky, where both died. Mr. Stapp was Sheriff of Madison County for fourteen years as well as Justice of the Peace, and was a fearless and capable official. His death occurred when he was ninety-two years old. He had three daughters and one son. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson became the parents of seven children, two of whom survive; Charles L., of Nebraska, and Martha, wife of Charles Havener, of Illiopolis, a carpenter by trade. There are thirteen grandchildren and four great-grandchildren in the family. In 1908 the Thompsons held a reunion at the family home, at which four generations were present, from the venerable Mr. Thompson and his wife to the great-grandchildren, and the occasion was one that excited considerable comment and pleasant envy. The Republican party has always had in Mr. Thompson an ardent supporter, and he served fourteen years as School Director in Moultrie County. Both he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church, to which they give an earnest and hearty support of both time and money. Mr. Thompson is one of the best types of the prosperous farmer to be found in Sangamon County, and he and his family enjoy universal esteem, for they have won it by upright living and honest dealing.

TILLEY, John.—Springfield is a city of interest, not only because of its historic connections and its indissoluble associations with the names of Lincoln and Douglas, but also on account of the character of the men who now live there. They are unusually intelligent, capable and earnest, striving towards good government, purity in politics and the beautifying of their city. One who can always be counted upon to support whatever he believes will prove of benefit to the community is John Tilley, residing at No. 1710 North Eighth Street. He was born in Whitsible, County of Kent, England, February 4, 1847, eldest son of Henry and Mary Ann (Richardson) Tilley, who had twelve children and died in England.

John Tilley was educated in the English schools, attending them until he was sixteen years old, when he commenced fishing. The people in his native place were chiefly fishermen, and he followed the occupation of his forefathers, but was not content, so he left home, and in 1873 came to the United States. He took passage at Liverpool for New York City, whence he came direct to Springfield, and for two years after his arrival in Sangamon County worked on a farm. He then became an employee at the St. Nicholas Hotel, under the old proprietor, John McCrery. Marrying, Mr. Tilley began working at the coal shaft, and has been a miner ever since.

On May 11, 1876, Mr. Tilley married Mary Kelly, daughter of Dennis and Ann Kelly, who came to the United States. The young couple commenced housekeeping on Mason Street, but in 1885 Mr. Tilley built his present residence, and later erected another house just north of his home. Mr. and Mrs. Tilley have had the following children: Mayme, Mrs. George Robinson, of this city; Florence, Mrs. Henry St. Clair, of Aurora, Ill.; Harry, Jennie and Frances, at home; John died at the age of ten years; William, Arthur and Eva, all at home. Mr. Tilley was reared in the Church of England, but became a convert to Catholicism when he married. He is a stanch Republican, but has never sought office. He belongs to the Court of Honor and the American Home Society. Honest, hard-working and frugal, Mr. Tilley is one of the men who form the backbone of any nation, and would be a desirable addition to any community into which he might move.

TICMCORE, John B. (deceased).—Almost every civilized country in the world is represented among the people of Springfield. This is but natural, for as all nations send their representatives to our shores, so do the capitals of the States. Mr. Timcore, one of the most prominent of this union, but in his home. Experience has shown that many of these people make excellent citizens, appreciating the better conditions here, and their children are among the most loyal and patriotic of our people. John B. Timcore, who for many years was a farmer in the vicinity of Springfield, was a native of Portugal, having been born January 29, 1831. What education he had was secured in his native land during childhood, for he commenced working when a lad of ten years, and never ceased until he laid down the burden of life. For many years he was a sailor, visiting all of the countries of the world. In later years he was accustomed to hold visitors spellbound as he told of the wonders he had seen. He was twenty-two years old when he came to America, landing at Boston, and he was the only one of his family to come here.

Mr. Timcore was married in Springfield, May 30, 1884, to Miss Jesse Mederanusse who came from Portugal the same year that he married. One child, but was not content, so he left home, and in 1873 came to the United States. the corner of Mason and Klein Streets, Springfield, in the horse shoeing business. There are two grandchildren in the family. Mr. Tobin takes great pride in his children and grandchildren, and is one of the reliable, substantial men of the community in whose thoughts are his, and to whom he has unlimited confidence.

TOBIN, Samuel A. (deceased).—The records of Springfield show the names of a number of public-spirited men whose influence for good was not confined to their business affairs, but extended to public activities as well. Among those who were of great service to the city, although he led a quiet life and possessed an unassuming disposition, was the late Samuel Tobin, born in Guernsey County, Ohio, December 10, 1832, a son of Isaac and Matilda (Benton) Tobin, natives of Virginia. Mr. Tobin was educated in Sangamon County, and worked with his parents on the farm until he moved to Springfield. He studied until he secured a teacher's certificate, and taught school, becoming Principal of the schools of Rochester, Ill., but in 1890 returned to Springfield, which continued his home until his death. After locating in the city permanently, he embarked in the mercantile trade, becoming one of the most prosperous merchants there, and acted as Secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association. He also served eight years as Deputy Circuit Clerk. While he was a Democrat in politics, he took no active part in public matters, as he was too much engrossed with his business affairs.

Mr. Tobin married, at Rochester, December 26, 1852, Lida Highmore, daughter of John S. and Mary (Cloyd) Highmore, the former a native of England, and the latter of Illinois. Mr. Highmore came to Sangamon County at an early day and participated in many movements of the time, which were connected with the development of that part of the State. He was well known as a stock dealer, acquired considerable wealth, and served on the Board of Agriculture. Mrs. Tobin was born at Rochester, December 28, 1833, and grew up in her native town. She attended the Rochester school and later the Illinois Woman's College at Jacksonville. Both she and her husband joined the Methodist Church soon after their marriage. Mrs. Tobin had the misfortune to lose her husband February 20, 1903, and survived him several years, passing away January 22, 1910.

Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tobin: Chester, who married, September 5, 1886; A fury Nead, resides at Mandan, N. Dak., one child, Ruth; Chelsee Arniza, married William J. Barnes, Jr., issue, William Tobin; Lilah Highmore is unmarried and lives with her sister, Mrs. Barnes, at No. 215 West Edwards Street, Springfield. Mr. Barnes is a traveling salesman.

TODD, (Dr.) John, (Vol. I, p. 524.)

TODD, John H., a retired farmer living in Springfield, Ill., is a veteran of the Civil War and has a most interesting war record. Mr. Todd was born in Madison County, Ky., March 15, 1841, son of Hardin and Lucy A. (Stagner) Todd, both natives of Madison County. The parents lived on a farm and both died in Madison County, the father in 1865 and the mother in 1845. They were parents of six children, of whom two are now living, John II., and Eliza, Mrs. Harris, born in 1839, living in Richmond, Ky. John H. Todd lived at home with his father until eighteen years of age, helping with the work on the farm and attending the public school.

Mr. Todd enlisted in 1861 in Company F, Eighth Kentucky Infantry, under Captain J. B. Bouton, who was killed at the Battle of Stone River, after which B. S. Dixon became Captain. The first battle in which they participated was Stone River, which lasted two days. Mr. Todd was captured in this battle, held thirty minutes, and recaptured by Colonel Stokes. Before the battle Col. Sidney M. Barnes made speeches to the women of rebel families, who afterward served him and his men a very nice dinner. The regiment moved on during the day. When they camped ten days, then began marching toward McMinnville, Tenn., thence went to Snow Hill, where they had a short fight with Morgan, then went to Buzzard's Roost, marching all night to reach this point, and fought there all day. Returning to Murfreesboro, they spent three weeks in camp there, then moved to Wartrace, Tenn., where they made camp. Thence they went to Tullahoma, then to Elk River, Tenn., to guard a bridge, and then to Ringgold, Ga., where they engaged in a hard-fought battle. While at Resaca, Ga., in 1864, Mr. Todd cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. During the winter of 1863 the army was quartered at Sherman, Ga.; then in February, they went to Lookout Mountain, where they engaged in a battle, and from this place were able to view the all-day fight at Missionary Ridge. They came down from the mountain, soon after went back to Chattanooga, and three weeks later to Ringgold, and soon afterward engaged in a battle at Chickamauga. The battle lasted three days—Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Returning to Chattanooga, they remained there about a month and were mustered out at that place, in November, 1865. Mr. Todd served with bravery and faithfulness and has every reason to feel proud of his record. He was never left behind a day, never was arrested or had cause to be, and never was put on extra duty. He was never really sick a day, and although taken to the hospital at Chattanooga, ran away from it the next day and returned to camp.

At the close of the war Mr. Todd returned to Madison county, Ky., where he lived until 1880, then came to Springfield, III., and soon afterward engaged in farming. For many years he has been retired from active life and owns a beautiful home at 1700 South Second TOLTZMAN, John.—It is very seldom that a German has to ask help of anyone, for as national and individual people they are industrious and thrifty, knowing how to make a place for themselves wherever they may be. Much of the strength of Springfield’s solid, prosperous business standing is due to the locating there of men of this class, and among them is John Toltzman, of No. 1202 South Sixteenth St. He was born in Germany, July 10, 1853, a son of Gotlieb Toltzman, of Germany. According to the requirements of his native country, Mr. Toltzman served a term in the German army, entering in October, 1876, and leaving three years later. He has pleasant recollections of this period of his life. The parents came to America in 1878, settling in Mansfield, Wis., but after twelve years there went to Spencer, Wis., where both died. The father was a manufacturer of slate roofing. There were three sons, but John and his brother, August, a farmer of Spencer, Wis., are the only survivors. John Toltzman was educated in Germany and came to America with his parents, but when they moved to Spencer he came to Springfield, where he engaged in mining, which has continued to occupy his time ever since. He is now in the employ of the Capital Mine and is one of its most experienced men. He has lived in his present home for the past fifteen years and owns it, as well as other valuable holdings, having been successful in his endeavors.

On Sept. 8, 1883, Mr. Toltzman was married in Springfield, to Charlotte Kinchock, born in Germany, whose parents never left their native land, dying in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Toltzman have a daughter, Edith, at home. There is a step-son, Emil Kinchock, who lives with Mr. Toltzman and is in the employ of the Wahash Railroad.

Politically Mr. Toltzman is a Democrat. His religious connections are with St. John’s Lutheran Church. He is an industrious man, and has known how to save his money, and because of his ability, thrift and strict probity, has raised himself to an enviable position among his neighbors.

Tomlin, Edwin (deceased).—The late Edwin Tomlin was one of the best examples of the older generation of Sangamon County farmers the locality ever produced. Steadfast and upright, he won and retained friends throughout a long and useful life, and upon dying left not only wealth, but a good name and unblemished honor to those who came after him. Mr. Tomlin was born in Cape May County, N. J., July 29, 1826, being a son of Almarine Tomlin, who was born in the same county in 1800. His paternal grandparents, William Tomlin and wife, were of New Jersey, and the family is of English extraction, having been founded in this country by two brothers, Amos and William Toltzman. They both settled in New Jersey. Almarine Tomlin, father of Edwin, married Rhoda Smillit, daughter of Abrilah Smith, and for some years farmed in his native locality, and there seven of his children were born. Realizing then that there was necessity for removal to some place that promised better opportunities, in 1857 he came west, traveling by team, for there were no railroads across the country in those days. Arriving in Sangamon County, he bought land, which he broke and improved, making it his home until he was called to his last rest in 1850. His widow survived him for some years, dying at the ripe old age of eighty-six years. They were parents of three sons and nine daughters, Edwin being the eldest son.

Edwin Tomlin was eleven years old when the family arrived in Sangamon County, and from first assisted in developing the land that fell to his share later in life. His educational advantages were limited, for the schools that existed there were the church schools, which he attended with the boys. He made the most of his opportunities. When he left home he settled on 320 acres in Cartwright Township, operating it for some years, but eventually sold that property and bought the homestead, on which he rounded out a long and busy life. He enlarged his stock business until he shipped from his farm carloads annually, raising cattle, sheep and hogs. He had great faith in Sangamon County land, and certainly demonstrated his ability to make its cultivation pay.

In 1854 Mr. Tomlin married Miss Margaret Correll, born in Sangamon County, a daughter of Thomas Correll, who settled there in 1830, the first of the pioneers. Mr. and Mrs. Tomlin had children as follows: Almarine, Cashier of a bank at Tullula, Ill., Charles, a farmer of Linn County, Mo.; Lee, a farmer of Sullivan County, Mo.; Jacob F., a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; Isaac, who is operating the homestead; Frank B., a dentist of Mason City, Ill.; Ezra, a farmer of William St. Clair, of Cass County, Ill.; Mrs. Witty, widow, is now making her home with her mother on the old homestead; and Anna, wife of Frank Drury, of Morgan County, Ill.
Mr. Tomlin always identified himself with the Democratic party, being a staunch supporter of its principles and candidates. His first presidential vote was cast for James K. Polk. Although interested in party matters, he never aspired to political honors. Most of his outside influence and work were directed towards the advancement of the Methodist Church, of which he was a consistent member. No one who knew him ever found him lacking in the essentials which go to make up the truly good man and loyal citizen, and his memory is tenderly cherished by a wide circle of warm, personal friends.

TOMLIN, Jacob F.—The keen, shrewd farmer of Sangamon County long ago realized that the best results could be obtained through scientific farming and the raising of good stock, and so the best agriculturists of today are following these lines with remarkable success. One of the most aggregate of the excellent farmers of this county is Jacob F. Tomlin, of Section 36, Cartwright Township. He was born on Section 30, this township, January 26, 1867, being a son of the late Edwin Tomlin, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. The excellent mother is living, making her home on the homestead, and enjoys fairly good health.

Jacob F. Tomlin was reared on the farm, attending district school during the winter until he was prepared to enter Illinois College, at Jacksonville. Coming home, he settled down to farming in 1893, buying 120 acres of land on Section 36, Cartwright Township, but he now owns 272 in the township, all in one body, and seventy acres in Menard County. He remained with his parents until his marriage, on April 11, 1894, to Fannie Megredy, born near Pawnee, June 8, 1865, a daughter of James J. and Ann R. (Hall) Megredy, he a native of Maryland and she of Virginia. Mr. Megredy came to Illinois with his parents, and she with her mother. Both families settled near Chatham, where the young people were married. They settled down on a farm near Pawnee, and there Mr. Megredy taught and farmed, becoming a man of considerable prominence. He was sent to the State Assembly on the Democratic ticket, and a number of excellent bills were introduced by him. The farm near Pawnee remained his home until his death September 23, 1885. Following this sad event his widow lived on the homestead until her daughter married Mr. Tomlin, when Mrs. Megredy came to live with them, dying in their home August 19, 1906. Both she and her husband were for many years leading lights on the Methodist Church, and in early days she was very active in church and Sunday school work. There were thirteen children in the Megredy family, six of whom lived to maturity, but only three survive: Anna of Springfield; Millard F. on the grandfather's homestead, and Mrs. Tomlin. Those deceased are: Charles, William F., Samuel E., John and six died in infancy.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Tomlin located on their property, which they have developed into a very valuable farm, with a substantial residence and good barns. This farm is on the old State road, one mile west of Pleasant Plains. There are three children born, as follows: Helen Louise, born February 17, 1893; Howard, born May 29, 1898, died February 10, 1898; and James Edward, born February 7, 1903, in Denver, Col.; Lawrence Megredy, born January 18, 1906. Mr. and Mrs. Tomlin are consistent and valued members of the Methodist Church, of which he is both Trustee and Steward.

Ever since he began farming Mr. Tomlin has made a specialty of raising good stock, handling Duroc-Jersey hogs to the number of 400 annually, and from 100 to 200 head of cattle. So convinced is he of the money to be made in raising stock that in addition to his Sangamon County property and that in Menard County, he owns 400 acres of new land in Pottawatomie County, from Houston, which he is developing into a stock farm.

In addition to his large agricultural interests, Mr. Tomlin is a stockholder and Director of the Pleasant Plains State Bank, and his name helps give the institution the solidity that is appreciated by its depositors. For years Mr. Tomlin has voted the Prohibition ticket, his scruples and principles making him an ardent supporter of temperance. He is a Mason, a Modern Woodman of America, belonging to Pleasant Plains lodges of both fraternities, and enjoys his associations with each. Steadfast of purpose, Mr. Tomlin took a farm, the land of which was regarded as poor, and by proper cultivation brought it into such a high state of development that he now produces 10,000 bushels of corn annually, in addition to his large stock produce. Owing to his remarkable success, he is recognized as an authority on agricultural matters, and also stands high in the estimation of his fellowmen as a reliable business man and good citizen.

TOMLINSON, Elizabeth Ellen.—In these days of women's advancement, members of the gentler sex are not only entering all lines of business and professions, but are ably demonstrating their right to be there and maintaining the highest standards of excellence. One of the best photographers of Springfield is a woman, and in her work she displays so artistic a sense of the possibilities of her profession and such keen appreciation of detail, that she has a large patronage, and some of the best photographs made in the city bear her name. She is a native of the city, born February 7, 1877, a daughter of Olaus B. and Sarah Margaret (Gillock) Tomlinson. Mr. Tomlinson was a steam fitter, and spent his life in Springfield, although his parents came from Kentucky to the new State capital. Miss Tomlinson was educated in Sangamon County and Springfield schools, and early showed aptitude. She was a favorite with teachers and pupils alike, and a brilliant future was mapped out for her.
When only thirteen years of age, Miss Tomlinson was forced to earn her living, and obtained employment in the woolen mills. However, to such an ambitious girl, this work was not the limit to which she was bound, for she learned to be a photographer, studying at night, after a day of hard work. By 1866 she was proficient enough to begin working at the profession and later opened her studio on Adams Street, where she has every appliance and convenience for the successful prosecution of her profession.

Miss Tomlinson is an earnest and consistent member of the Baptist Church, always ready to give of her time and money towards its good work, and is valued in the congregation. The success of these earnest women, who allow nothing to stand in the way of their advancement, but rise steadily through sheer perseverance, may well be an encouragement to others of their sex who are trying to make a place for themselves and prove their worth and capability.

Tomlinson, William D.—A large number of the men who fought for their country are now living retired in Sangamon County. The climatic conditions, combined with the many urban advantages offered there, especially in the Capital City, make this locality an ideal one for those wishing to spend their declining years in ease and comfort. One who is representative of this noble class, is William D. Tomlinson, a veteran of the Civil War, who resides at No. 212 South John Street, Springfield. He was born near the place in 1826, and a son of Louis and Adaline (Dillard) Tomlinson, natives of Kentucky, the former born at Lexington. They were married in Sangamon County, Ill.

Louis Tomlinson brought his family to Sangamon County in 1826, settling north of Springfield, where he entered land from the Government and operated it for a number of years. In 1851 the family moved from their farm for Mr. Tomlinson had been appointed Deputy Sheriff under Sheriff William Crofton, and for three years served admirably. He also served as Constable and was faithful in discharging his duties during those troublous times. He resided in Springfield until his death, which occurred in 1880, his widow surviving him until 1886. They had ten children, evenly divided as to sex, but of them only three survive: William D. and his brother and sister.

William D. Tomlinson attended the Springfield schools and worked for his father until he was sixteen years old. When the war broke out his patriotic spirit was fired with the desire to defend the country, and he enlisted in Company E, Sixty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, serving three years. He participated in twenty hard-fought battles, among them being those of Nashville, Peach Tree Creek and others of equal importance. He was mustered out June 22, 1865, at Greensboro, N. C. Returning home, he resumed farming, then learned brick making, and worked at that trade until his retirement.

In 1850 Mr. Tomlinson was married in White County, Ill., to Mrs. Mary C. (Upton) Kerr, both her parents being natives of Illinois. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tomlinson: Frank, a printer on the Springfield Record; Junius O., of Springfield; Alwilda, wife of Harry Herr, of Springfield; Juno, wife of Arthur Arnold, of Springfield, and Mertell, wife of John Nance, of Springfield. There is one grandchild in the family.

Mr. Tomlinson is a Republican and is very proud of the fact that he was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln. He owns his pleasant home and receives a pension from the Government he helped to save. He is a member of Central Lodge No. 173, A. F. & A. M., of Indianapolis, and belongs to the G. A. R. A sturdy, hard-working man all his life, Mr. Tomlinson proved his worth both in war and peace, and is one of the most respected men of the city which has been his home for over half a century.

Townsend, Pleasant E., an intelligent and representative farmer of Sangamon County, of which place he is a native, has spent his entire life in agricultural pursuits since leaving school. He was born February 3, 1858, a son of Amos and Caroline (Kline) Townsend, the former born in the East, in 1829, and the latter born in Pennsylvania, in 1828. The parents came to Sangamon County in 1839 and located on a farm near Rochester, where they lived two years, then removed to Michigan, but later returned to Sangamon County, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The father was a farmer and became a prominent citizen. He served for some time as School Director in his district.

The boyhood of Pleasant E. Townsend was spent in his native county, where he was educated in the public schools, and he continued to reside on his father's farm until he was thirty years of age. He then married and began farming on his own account, which he has since continued with gratifying success, having lived on his present farm some twenty-two years, same being the old homestead on which his father located at a very early date. He owns eighty acres of fine farming land, in an excellent state of cultivation. He is one of the energetic and progressive farmers of his community and has a reputation for integrity and reliability. He has the confidence and esteem of his neighbors and has many friends. He is a man of good habits and pleasant manner. In religious belief he is a Methodist, and in politics an adherent of the principles of the Republican party. He served during the year 1908 as School Director.

Mr. Townsend was married at Bloomington, Ill., October 20, 1888, to Miss Martha Sauers, a native of Germany, born March 20, 1863, daughter of Richard and Katie Sauers, who came to America in 1808, landing in New York. They made a trip back to their native country but returned to America. Mr. Sauers died in 1890, and his widow is still living in Springfield.
Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Townsend, of whom four daughters and one son survive: Clarence, born January 19, 1889, attending school at Vandalia, Ind., has taught school; Emma H., a teacher in the country schools, lives at home; Myrtle, Ruth and Eva, all at home. These deceased are Florence and Katie. Mr. Townsend has the following brothers living: Phillip H. G., in dairy business in Springfield; Eli, a farmer living near Mechanicsburg; George, a farmer living in Michigan.

TRAPP, Henry.—Springfield is the center of the vast coal interests of Sangamon County, and many of her foremost citizens are carrying on business along this line. One whose success in the coal business is gratifying because it has been self-gained, is Henry Trapp, who was born May 20, 1861, in Otto, Fulton County, Ill., a son of Oliver and Maria (Gilson) Trapp. Trapp

Oliver Trapp was born near Zanesville, Ohio, and was married in Illinois to Maria Gilson, a native of Buffalo, N. Y. He was a cooper by occupation and established himself in business at Otto, Ill., where he enlisted in the Twenty-Eighth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for services in the Union Army, in 1861. He served three years and his death which was a result of his army experience, occurred at Nashville, Tenn. He and his wife had four children. After his death his widow married John Babcock, who survived her twenty years, dying in 1908. Two children were born by her second marriage.

Henry Trapp was one of four children born to his parents, and until he was nineteen years of age attended school at Ipava, Ill. He then worked at coal mining and for Charles Foote and in the woolen mills, going thence to the coal mines at Rushville, Schuyler County, in which he continued to work for seven years. The following four years were spent in coal mining at Astoria, and the next two at Dunfermline, Ill., after which he went to Cripple Creek, Colo., and worked for three years in the celebrated gold mines there. On his return to Illinois he again took up coal mining, and in 1908, engaged in business for himself. He is a self-made man in all that the term implies, and his success is the result of hard and faithful labor. On first coming to Springfield he had not enough money with which to buy a meal, and this contrasts strongly with the fact that he now owns several valuable properties, in addition to his flourishing business. In political matters he is a Republican, but he has never cared for office. His religious views are liberal.

In 1882 Mr. Trapp was married at Knoxville, Ill., to Zella Bates, of Rushville, who died in 1898, leaving two children, Raymond and Nellie. In 1901 he was married (second) at Springfield to Mrs. Alice (Allson) Harvey, and four children have been born to this union: Allen, Blanche, Lawrence, and Charles, the latter of whom died in 1907. Mrs. Trapp had four children by her former marriage; James, Arthur, Ruth and Grace Harvey.

TREAT, Samuel Hubbel. (Vol. I, p. 528.)

TRIMBLE, James A.—Responsible action and careful management are accountable for the success in life attained by James A. Trimbly, now residing at No. 721 South East Street, Springfield, but still interested in farming. He was born in Curran Township, Sangamon County, July 27, 1846, and there grew to manhood's estate. While attending school he had the privilege of studying under the instruction of William Head and John Kincaide. When he was twenty years old his school days ended.

On October 13, 1870, he was married in his native township to Miss Mary Barhre, of that township, and immediately thereafter located on 170 acres of farm land. For thirty years he devoted himself to its cultivation, but finally retired in February, 1903, but retains his farm. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Trimbly are as follows: Lucy J., married Robert Baughman, of Springfield; Thomas O., at home; William married Maud Myers and operates the home farm; Martha Alice and Lydia Florence, both at home.

Mrs. Trimbly was born in Curran Township, August 20, 1852, the daughter of a prominent and honored family of that locality. She was reared in the same school as her husband and their marriage grew out of a school-day attachment. She and her children belong to the West Side Christian Church. Mr. Trimbly is not a member of any religious denomination, but attends worship with his wife. A staunch Democrat, he served his party as School Director and Trustee of Curran Township. It is such men as he who make up the backbone of this great country of ours—men who have labored long and successfully, and who now have the time and inclination to give attention to civic matters and bring about much needed improvements.

TRIMBLE, Nelson (deceased).—The passing away of a good man into eternity brings into the strong light of the aftermath all his deeds which, many of them unknown during life, now spring up to make his memory sacred, and the realization that he did not live in vain very acute. The late Nelson Trimbly, whose eventful life was rounded out on his farm, save when he responded bravely to his country's call during the Civil War, was a man whom to know was to love, and who left hosts of warm, personal friends to mourn his untimely taking off. He was born in Crawford County, Ohio, July 1, 1839, being a son of John and Ivy (Parcher) Trimbly. The Trimbly family is noted for its loyalty, its representatives having served in the War of the Revolution, the War of 1812, the Civil War and the Spanish-American War. The father of Nelson Trimbly, John Trimbly, spent his life in Ohio, but the former, after a boyhood and young manhood spent in his native place, came further west, to Jackson County, Mo., and there embarked quite extensively in farming, thus continuing until his death in 1876. His widow survived him and some years subsequent to his death came to Springfield where, since 1893, she lived, dying November 9th, 1911. During the war Mr. Trimble served in Company B, One Hundred-Thirty Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and received his honorable discharge. He was a member of the Baptist Church and a Republican.

In February, 1850, occurred the marriage of Mr. Trimble with Lydia Cox, born July 31, 1831, in Crawford County, Ohio. The parents of Mrs. Trimble were farming people and lived in Crawford County all their lives. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Trimble: Byron, in the lumber business in Virginia, Minn.; Eugene S., of Springfield, is engaged in the cement business; George W., is a professor of higher mathematics in Sacramento College; Allen N., deceased; Eugene S., is married and has six sons and four daughters.

Mrs. Trimble likes nothing better than to gather her family about her, and is proud of the fact that there are twenty-eight grandchildren and four great-grandchildren in their ranks. The Trimbles occupy an enviable position among the leaders in social circles and are very highly respected by all who know them. The family residence at No. 636 West Herndon Street is one of the historic places of Springfield. Not only is it one of the oldest houses in Springfield, having held four generations of the Trimbles, but it was the Squire John Connelly place. Squire Connelly was an uncle of the present George Connelly, a grocer of the city. When this house was erected there was only the Logan house between it and the Square. A party was given in it at which Abraham Lincoln was a guest, and there is an old lady in the neighborhood who has the distinction of having been another guest upon that occasion, when she had the honor of dancing with Mr. Lincoln. All these facts, with many others, Mrs. Trimble delights in relating, for her memory is excellent and she knew many of the men and women who have made Illinois history but who are now deceased. She remembers not only people, but events and conditions surrounding the days when Illinois had still to make its way to a foremost place among the great States of the Union.

TRIMBLE, Samuel Edward (deceased).—The business interests of Springfield are many and varied, giving a wide opportunity to the most progressive of its men for operations controlling more or less capital. Each individual effort on the part of these men adds to the commercial importance of the city, and their industry and enterprise cannot be too highly commended. One of these representative men who is worthy of more than passing mention is the late Samuel Edward Trimble, who was born near Girard, Macoupin County, Ill., February 22, 1868, a son of James and Sarah (Jones) Trimble, natives of Pennsylvania. The parents married in the Keystone State, coming to Macoupin County thereafter, and there engaged in farming upon a somewhat extensive scale. After continuing along these lines for a number of years, retirement was made to Litchfield, where the father died in 1896, but the mother survives, now making her home on North Fourth Street. Seven children were born in the family, of whom four sons survive. The father was a Democrat and a consistent member of the Methodist Church, dying firm in that faith.

Mr. Trimble was always willing to work hard for whatever he secured. After a boyhood spent in attending district school and working on the farm, he came to Springfield, at the age of eighteen years, and commenced driving horses for the street-car company. As soon as he had saved sufficient money, he went into a restaurant business, conducting it profitably for five years. He sold out to buy another restaurant, where he built up a flourishing business. A strong Republican in national affairs, he was independent in local matters, casting his vote for the man he considered best fitted for an office. He never desired office himself, but was content to confine his attention to his own business. Fraternally he belonged to the Eagles, Owls and Rangers. In religious views he was very liberal and gave to all the same freedom he asked for himself.

On June 11, 1891, occurred the marriage of Mr. Trimble to Eugenia Viarrie, born in Springfield, daughter of Toney Viarrle, and an orphan. There is no issue of this marriage. Mr. Trimble was a self-made man and earned all he possessed by hard work and untiring thrift. An excellent business man, he knew how to invest his money properly and won a good standing in various circles. His death occurred July 25, 1910.

TRIMBLE, William H. (deceased).—The late William H. Trimble spent his entire life within a mile of his birthplace in Curran Township, Sangamon County. He was an exemplary citizen and upright in all his business dealings, but was of a retiring disposition and never cared for public office, although always ready to do his share in promoting any public movement. Both he and his wife were devout members of the Christian Church and he was a Democrat in politics. Mr. Trimble was born January 1, 1838, son of George and Lydia (Schumate) Trimble, both natives of Montgomery County, Ky. George Trimble brought his family to Sangamon County in 1836 and located on a farm in Curran Township, where he became a prominent and successful farmer. William H. Trimble received his education in the country schools and remained on the farm with his father until he began farming on his own account. He took an active in-
Mr. Trimble was married, in Springfield, in 1864, to Miss Nancy A. Gibson, of Sangamon County, who died in 1888. Mr. Trimble was married, in 1879, to Miss Helen McGraw, who was born in Springfield, September 27, 1847. Mr. Trimble's death is mourned by five children: Mrs. Annie Huffman, wife of J. D. Huffman, of 1427 South Pasfield Street, Springfield, at whose house Mr. Trimble passed away; G. F., of Springfield; Mrs. Dora B. Cobb, of Curran, Sangamon County; Mrs. Eliza Miller, of Curran; J. A., of Springfield. Mr. Trimble died July 11, 1906; and his remains were buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery, Springfield. He had been a good friend and kind neighbor and his loss was genuinely mourned in the community where he had lived all his life.

G. F. Trimble was born in Curran Township, Sangamon County, March 13, 1874, and for a number of years carried on farming. Later he came to Springfield and was employed as Cashier for the Adams Express Company. He served two years as Deputy Sheriff of the county and was serving in this capacity at the time of the race riot in Springfield, August 14, 1906. He is now connected with the police force of the city in the capacity of detective. He is well fitted by training and natural ability for the position he holds and stands well with his associates. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, being connected with Lodge No. 6, and also belongs to Prairie State Encampment of the order. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias; Order of Red men; Council No. 117, and Camp No. 158, Woodmen of the World.

TROXELL, W. STALEY, the subject of this sketch, is the senior member of the firms of W. S. Troxell and Sons, and Troxell, Kikendall & Company, the former firm attending to all real estate, loans and house renting business, while the latter firm devote their time to all insurance, indentures, bonds, etc.

The business was organized by W. S. Troxell, in 1857, his three sons, Roy Gildden, Robert William, and Staley Allyn, taking an active interest in the business as fast as they reached a business age. In 1906 Mr. William C. Kikendall was taken in the firm of Troxell, Kikendall & Company. Mr. Kikendall has made good and has proven a valuable addition to the firm.

These firms deserve great credit in helping to bring the insurance and real estate business in Springfield to a high plane, the senior member devoting much of his time to enterprises to make a better and greater Springfield. Many beautiful additions, improved with good homes, stand to his credit as a real-estate man of judgment.

W. Staley Troxell was born in Springfield, Ill., February 7, 1863, son of William and Louisa (Staley) Troxell, both the father and mother coming to Springfield, from Hagerstown, Md., in 1861. Mr. William Troxell for many years engaged in the agricultural implement and leather business, died in 1877, three years after the death of his wife, Louisa, who died in 1874, and who was the daughter of Warfield and Mary (Horn) Staley, old and respected citizens of Springfield, natives of Maryland, both now deceased. Mary A. Staley dying in 1890, and Warfield Staley in 1896.

W. Staley Troxell was united in marriage to Sadie K. Culp, daughter of Levi and Mary (Tomlinson) Culp, prominent people of Pennsylvania. To this union were born the above named sons, and one daughter, Gladys Dorothy Troxell.

Mr. Troxell has one brother, C. C. Troxell, residing in Omaha, Neb., and one sister, Laura Lynn, died in 1907.

The subject of this sketch received his education in the public schools and business college of Springfield, finishing at the age of sixteen, since which time he has been actively engaged in the business field, residing in Springfield all his life, twenty-four years of which time having been spent in the real-estate business, this giving him a knowledge of values which is often sought on important transactions.

In politics he is a staunch Republican, especially in national issues. He belongs to the Old School of gentlemen, which is fast dying out. His courtesy and urbanity make him welcome addition to any business or social gathering, and he has warm personal friends throughout all of this part of the State.

TRUMBO, Charles Wesley.—In reviewing the representative men of Sangamon County it is gratifying to find that many have located there whose business interests are elsewhere, regarding the locality as especially desirable for a home. Among this class is Charles Wesley Trumbo, now living retired at Pleasant Plains, although he still has extensive business interests at Lincoln, Linn County, Mo. He was born in Bath County, Ky., March 33, 18544, a son of Manassas A. and Hannah (Taylor) Trumbo, who were born, reared and married in Bath County. Manassas A. was a son of Jacob Trumbo, who was born in what is now Bourbon County, Ky., prior to the admission of Kentucky as a State. Jacob Trumbo married Deborah Alkire and they moved to Bath County, locating on North Licklog River at the mouth of Slate Creek, where they reared their family and he passed away in 1830. He became a minister of the Campbellite Church, the faith then being known by the name of Newlight, and labored for this cause until called to his last reward. Several children were born to them and their descendants are now widely scattered. Jacob Trumbo was a son of Adam Trumbo, a native of Virginia, who in colonial days settled on the south branch of the Potomac River. One of his brothers moved to Pennsylvania.

Charles W. Trumbo's boyhood days were spent in Bath County and he attended the school held in one of the primitive log buildings of the day. In early life he helped his father with the work on the home farm; and in 1853 the family left the locality with which they had been identified so long, and made the trip with three teams to Linn County, Mo. Young Charles W. was in charge of a mule team. The father hoped to find homes in the new location for his children and provide for his declining years. Charles W. Trumbo remained with his parents until twenty-six years of age, helping to improve the farm, and in connection with farm work engaged in freighting from Linn to Brunswick and handling produce. In 1857, in company with a brother-in-law, James Becket, he built a mill on a small stream near Linn, which was operated by steam, being one of the first saw-mills in the region. In 1859 they sold the mill and engaged in stock and mercantile business, and in this venture were very successful.

In 1861 Mr. Trumbo married Miss Mary Frances Carter, a native of Ohio, who came to Missouri with her parents in early childhood. Her father, Charles Carter, was a millwright, and Mr. Trumbo and his partner sold their mill. Mr. Carter was a member of the Twenty-third Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and was a prominent man in the community. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Trumbo located on their farm in Linn County and in 1863 moved to Linn, where they lived until 1896, when they returned to the farm and remained on it until 1891. In 1888 he was elected, on the Democratic ticket, to the Lower House of the Legislature, and served in that body two years, being one of its conservative members. In 1890 he was elected Presiding Judge of the County Court of Linn County, taking office in 1891 and for four years faithfully performed his duties, serving for the good of the people. He held an interest in the Farmers & Merchants Bank, of which he was elected President and served in that position eighteen years. In 1891 he retired from his farm and moved to the city to assume his official duties. For many years he was one of the most prominent and useful men of his part of the State.

Mr. and Mrs. Trumbo became parents of the following children: Virginia R., deceased, was the wife of James Brown, now of Colorado, and left one child, Roberta Lee Brown; Franklin A., a farmer and stock dealer on the old homestead where he was born, has five sons and six daughters, the eldest daughter being a prominent educator of Linn County; Florence, wife of Melvin V. Henry, a resident of Seattle, Wash., has three sons, Charles Teddy and Jack C.; Edgar, a graduate of the law department of the State University of Missouri, for many years cashier of a bank near his birthplace, has for some years been a banker at Coveta, Okla., and in 1910 was elected on the Democratic ticket to the office of County Treasurer of Wagoner County, which is a Republican county; Emma, formerly holding a good position in Salt Lake City, is now manager of the millinery department of the Spokane Dry Goods Company, at a salary of $2,600 per year; Elizabeth, wife of Rev. Edgar H. Clark, a Baptist minister of Mumford, near Rochester, N. Y.; George M., in the Mechanics National Bank, of St. Louis, started there with a salary of $4,000 per year and is now Assistant Cashier, at a salary of $5,000 per year, being one of the Directors of that institution. The mother of these children died in 1904. She was a devout Christian and in 1889 joined the church, with her husband. Mr. Trumbo gave his children liberal educations, and as a result of their home training and natural ability, all are holding positions of honor in the various communities where they have made their homes.

Mr. Trumbo sold his farm and located in Linn, in 1903. In 1905, he met the lady whom he later married, Mrs. Ella (Brown) Harrington. They were married in Springfield, February 28, 1906. She was born in Monroe County, Ohio, October 24, 1858, daughter of E. and Nancy Brown, and came with her parents to Illinois in May, 1862. They located in Wayne County, and in Fairf ield, that county, on September 22, 1878, Ella Brown was married to George Harrington. In 1887 Mr. and Mrs. Harrington came to Pleasant Plains and there he died April 11, 1897. By occupation he was a teacher, farmer and merchant, and during his later life was afflicted with consumption. His noble wife tenderly cared for him and by her own efforts saved their home. By this marriage there was one daughter, Susan B., now the wife of B. Lee Purvines, a farmer residing at Pleasant Plains. Mr. Harrington was an active member of the Christian Church, which he served as Elder for many years, and was a good citizen and kind, indulgent father.

After his second marriage Mr. Trumbo came to his bride's comfortable home in Pleasant Plains, where he and his wife are spending their days in peace and happiness. Mrs. Trumbo is a woman of high character, a pleasant companion, and has many friends. Mr. Trumbo retains his banking interests in Missouri, but his permanent home is in Pleasant Plains. He is a member of the A. F. and A. M. Jackson Lodge No. 8, at Linn, Mo., and also of the I, O. O. F. He and his wife are devout and faithful members of the Christian Church and she is active in church and mission work. She is also a member of the Eastern Star Order.

TRUMBULL, Lyman. (Vol. I, p. 529.)

TULLY, Andrew.—England is well represented in the population of Springfield, a number of its representatives, particularly those who are tradesmen, having come here, believing that under this government they would prosper better than they had done at home. Among those who are doing good work and proving themselves worthy citizens, is Andrew Tully, a blacksmith with residence at No. 1920 Peoria Road, Springfield. Mr. Tully was born in Kent, England, May 24, 1833, while his father was serving in the English army. He is a son of Andrew and Ann (Johnson) Tully, both natives of Kent, England. Mr. Tully Sr. was a trainer of fine race horses, and a blacksmith, who served in the English army for twenty-five years. Both he and his wife lived and died in England, the father passing away at the age of eighty years, and the mother at the age of ninety years. There were two sons and three daughters in the family of these most excellent people, all of whom survive.

Being brought up in England and there educated, Andrew Tully Jr. learned the trade of blacksmithing and horse-shoeing, working at it in England until 1864, when he came to America, landing in Quebec, Canada. From there he came to New York, but soon afterwards went to Mackinaw City, Pa. After a few years spent there working at his trade, in 1868 Mr. Tully came to Springfield, where he has since continued. For seven years he found ready employment with the North Shaft Coal Company, then farmed for three years in Champaign County. Returning to Springfield he, with others, sunk a coal mine, from which considerable coal was taken for two years. Since 1882, however, he has conducted his own blacksmith shop in Springfield, occupying the same building that he bought twenty-eight years ago. Although seventy-nine years old, he is to be found, as President of the Village Board of Ridgeley, The Episcopal Church holds his membership.

Prior to coming to this country Mr. Tully was married in County Durham, England, April 28, 1856, to Elizabeth Wrathall, born in County Durham, whose parents lived and died in England. Mrs. Tully died January 11, 1868, leaving only her bereaved husband to mourn her loss, as she never had any children. Mr. Tully owns his residence and other city realty, and is correctly recognized as one of the most representative of his countrymen in Springfield. During his long life he has always worked hard, and his chief interest is now centered on his shop and the work he turns out from it.

TURLEY, Thomas J.—A member of the representative men of Springfield were born in Sangamon County and reared under strictly pioneer conditions, and to such the changes which have taken place seem almost impossible. They appreciate, as this present generation cannot, how much is due to the pioneers who developed present conditions out of a wilderness. One of these men whose family bore more than its part in this remarkable development, is Thomas J. Turley, of No. 1220 South Thirteenth Street, Springfield. He was born in Round Prairie, Sangamon County, January 26, 1836, a son of Thomas and Mary (Trotter) Turley, natives of Kentucky. They were farming people, who married in Kentucky and came to Illinois at a very early date. The father bought land from the government in Round Prairie Township, paying $1.25 per acre, and farming upon it until his death in 1850. His widow survived him, living to be seventy-nine years old. There were nine children in the family, only three of whom are now living: Thomas J.; and his brother Henry, of Clear Lake Township, and a sister, Mrs. Mary Henry, of Bond County.

Thomas J. Turley was educated in his native district and learned farming by helping his father. He farmed all his life until his retirement; confining his efforts to Round Prairie, whence he came to Springfield in 1886. He enlisted for service in the Civil War, but was refused on account of disability. He is a member of the Christian Church and a most worthy and good man.

He was married the first time in Round Prairie to Rebecca Barr, born in Rochester, Ill. Her parents were early settlers of the locality and her father was a farmer and blacksmith. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Turley: Alvin, at Glenarm; Elizabeth, wife of Charles Morgan, of Mechanicsburg; Flora, wife of Charles Morgan, a cousin of the Charles Morgan who married Eliza. There were nine children living near each other, in the vicinity of Mechanicsburg; James, a farmer living south of Mechanicsburg. Mrs. Turley died in 1871. In 1873 Mr. Turley was married to Mary Potts, born in Georgetown, Ill., daughter of a pioneer farmer of the State. There were nine children born of this marriage, from whom the following survive: Emily, wife of William Martin; Isabella, wife of Edward Sidener; in Springfield; Jolin, of Peoria; Jesse and Homer, in the United States Navy; Carrie, wife of George Washburn; living at home. There are eleven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren in the family. Mr. Turley is one of the most highly respected men of his locality, and has fairly earned the comfort he is now enjoying. He has a family of which he is very proud, and his children do him credit.

TURNER, Alfred B.—One of the distinctive features about Springfield is the location there of men who have retired from farming. These retired agriculturists make excellent, conservative citizens, whose ideas receive respectful attention. One of the representative men of this class is Alfred B. Turner, of No. 2108 South Fourteenth Street. He was born in Morgan County, Ill., December 16, 1832, being a son of John and Ruth (Downing) Turner, natives of Madison County, Ky., and Virginia. The father was also a farmer and moved to Morgan County at an early day, being one of the pioneers of that locality. Entering land from the Government, he became one of the prosperous farmers of the county, dying there after a useful life. He had seven children, six sons and five daughters, but in addition to Mr. Turner but one survives, Mrs. Almira McMahon, of Morgan County. John Turner served in the Indian wars, and both grandfathers of Mr. Turner were in the Revolutionary War, serving under Gen. Washington.

Alfred B. Turner was educated in Morgan County and taught farming. After he left home he bought forty acres in Morgan County, operating this farm until his retirement in 1903, when he settled in Springfield, buying his present residence.

The marriage of Mr. Turner occurred in Morgan County, March 13, 1853, to Esther J. Jones, born there February 19, 1837, daughter of Wakenan Jones. He was a descendant of English stock and his wife of Scottish stock. They came to America, first settling in Virginia, but soon moved to Tennessee, and later to Morgan County, Ill., where the father engaged in farming. Later he came to Sangamon County, where both he and his wife died. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Turner: Henry, of Waverly, a shoemaker by trade; Harvey, of Springfield, and one who died. There are two living grandchildren in the family. Mr. Turner is a Democrat. He belongs to the Baptist Church, while his wife is a Methodist. A most excellent man, he has worked hard all his life and is certainly entitled to the rest he now enjoys.

TURNER, William P., a retired farmer living in Springfield, Ill., was born in Hamilton County, Tenn., September 11, 1847. He is a son of William J. and Charlotte (Tempel) Turner, the father born in South Carolina, in 1823, and the mother in Ireland, in 1825. His parents being natives of Ireland and her of Germany, William J. Turner moved from Tennessee to Georgia in 1848 and in 1859 returned to Tennessee, entering the army from that State and serving in the Civil War. He was a miler by occupation.

William P. Turner received his education in subscription schools in his native State and was reared on a farm. He has spent most of his active life in farming and has been successful in this line. He accompanied his parents to Cass County, Ga., and returned with them to Tennessee, and in 1867 moved to Richland County, Ill., where he lived until 1869, and there his parents died. In 1881 he engaged in teaming in Springfield and continued until he retired from active life. He is well known as an upright and honest citizen and is respected by all who have had dealings with him. He owns the home he has occupied for the past thirteen years, at 919 South Thirteenth Street.

Mr. Turner enlisted at Champaign, December 24, 1863, under Alfred F. Beach, in Company A, First Tennessee Light Artillery, and was discharged at Nashville, August 8, 1865. He spent six months in a hospital and had many narrow escapes. Among the engagements in which he participated were those of Missionary Ridge, Franklin, Huntsville (Ala.), and numerous others. He won an excellent record and is a member of the G. A. R.

Mr. Turner was married in Edwards County, Ill., December 16, 1866, to Miss Emily McKinzie, a native of that county, born November 11, 1849, daughter of Daniel and Rhody (Coppley) McKinzie. Her father was born in Virginia, in 1790, and her mother in Giles County, Va., in 1804, and both grandfathers served in the Indian wars. Eleven children were born of this union, namely: William E., born in Edwards County, Ill., October 30, 1867; Henry M., in Texas County, Mo., February 6, 1870; Cicero, born in Arkansas, November 10, 1872; Martha M., born in Arkansas, December 27, 1874, died August 10, 1876; Rhoda Bertha, born in Richland County, Ill., February 19, 1877, died August 4, 1878; Bertha, born in Richland County, February 8, 1879; Luricca, born in Richland County, July 3, 1881, died April 19, 1909; Inez, born in Bond County, October 5, 1883, died January 12, 1902; Lizzie, born in Bond County, January 27, 1886, died January 15, 1896; Nellie, born in Bond County, September 4, 1888; Ethel, born in Springfield, April 26, 1891. William E. Turner married Della Friend and they reside at Rochester, N. Y. Henry M. married Cynthia Gaines and they reside in Springfield and have two children, Clarence and Tessie. Cicero married Perle Gomes and resides in Springfield, and has three children—Gerald, Loula, and William. Bertha, wife of Fred Bronson, resides in Springfield and they have one child, Edgar. Luricca (deceased), wife of James Henman, left one child, Earl. Inez (deceased), wife of Charles Hnbar, had one child, Inez. Nellie, wife of Joseph F. Rice, resides in Springfield, has one child, Joseph F. Jr. Mr. Turner is a Republican in politics and although he takes an active interest in the public welfare, has never aspired to public office. He is a devout member of the Christian Church. He carries insurance in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

TWIGG, Obadiah (deceased), who for many years lived in Sangamon County, Ill., was born near Columbus, Franklin County, Ohio, and lived in his native State until after his marriage. He was well known as a veteran of the Civil War and had won a large circle of close friends. Mr. Twigg was a son of Jesse and May (Burns) Twigg, the former born M., German in birth, and the latter near Columbus, Ohio. The father was a farmer in his native country, came to the United States in young manhood, and continued his trade all his life.

The education of Obadiah Twigg was secured in the country schools near his birthplace, where his early years were spent. He entered in Thirty-sixth Ohio Regiment for service in the Civil War and was wounded at the Battle of Atlanta.
He was married in 1808, to Miss Catherine Mull, born near Chambersburg, Pa., April 11, 1839. They were married at Columbus and soon afterwards moved to Sangamon County, where Mr. Twigg was engaged in various occupations until about a year before his death, which occurred October 28, 1897. His remains were interred in Oak Ridge Cemetery, Springfield. At the time of his death he was residing at 1326 North Sixth Street, Springfield, where his widow now lives, and she is the owner of this house. He left no family except his widow to mourn his loss, but was sincerely missed by those who knew him.

Mr. Twigg was a most industrious and hard-working man and won the respect of his fellows by his sterling worth and strict integrity. He never cared to take an active part in political affairs and belonged to no fraternal orders. However, he was a life-long Republican and in religious views was a life-long Methodist. He was sick for a year or more previous to his death.

VANCIL, Burke, was born on a farm near Modesto, in the northern part of Macoupin County, Ill., on March 28, 1805. The family is of Pennsylvania Dutch (or Holland) origin, the maternal ancestry being of Irish descent. The name was originally "Wenzel," afterwards "Wensel," and finally "Vancil." A well preserved family record shows that John Wensel and Maria Brethlin were married on May 17, 1768, and that to them were born eleven children, of whom Tobias was the first, and the great-grandfather of Burke Vancil. He was born February 13, 1790, Edmund C. Vancil, his son, was born in Virginia in 1799, and died in Macoupin County, December 31, 1891. In 1811, Edmund C. Vancil, father of Burke Vancil, was born in Union County, Ill., October 15, 1825, and died in Macoupin County, Ill., March 23, 1891. He left surviving him Elizabeth S. (Rice) Vancil, his wife, who now resides in Modesto, Ill., and four children—Burke Vancil, of Springfield; Effie, wife of George F. Jordan, of Carlinville, Ill.; Olile, wife of Lewis Rinaker, of Chicago, and Ida, wife of Leonard G. Brown, of Modesto.

Edmund C. Vancil, the grandfather, was taken to Muhlenberg County, Ky., by his father, Tobias Vancil, in 1801, who at a later date settled on the Mud River in Logan County, Ky. Thereafter, Edmund C. Vancil located in Jackson County, Ill. There he met Mary Byars, who was born in Kentucky in 1804, and had accompanied her father to Jackson County in 1806. In 1827, Edmund C. Vancil left Jackson County and in the same winter located in Macoupin County, north of Virden; in the following spring, he settled in North Palmyra Township, near the present town of Modesto, which was then a part of Greene County. He possessed a cash capital of $100.00 and entered 80 acres of land in section 4. There have been but two conveyances of the property since the patent was obtained from the United States, and then only from father to son, the property remaining in the family. The old home still stands as it did when occupied by Edmund C. Vancil and Mary Byars Vancil. Here they spent nearly all of their more than sixty-five years of wedded life. Before the wife died in 1859, aged eighty-seven years, he surviving until December 31, 1891, when in his ninety-third year. For many years this was one of the finest homes in that part of the state. Most of the lumber used in its building was obtained from the native woods nearby. Very little sawed lumber was used, and this was gotten out by hand. The home is now owned by Burke Vancil.

In the winter of 1844-45, Edmund C. Vancil and his son, Inbril B. Vancil, went to Texas for the purpose of entering or buying land, believing that they would find a better prospect than could be found in the undeveloped prairies of Illinois. They soon, however, satisfied to remain in Illinois. Prior to this time Professor Turner, of Illinois College at Jacksonville, Ill., had experimented somewhat with various thorny trees and plants in an effort to produce a successful hedge fence. While in Texas, Mr. Vancil and his son saw the "Osage Orange" or "Bois d'Arc," a native tree of that part of the country and obtained some seed which was brought to Illinois. From this small handful of seed was propagated and developed by Professor Turner the first Osage hedge fence, which, in later years and prior to the introduction of the wire fence, came into general use throughout this and adjoining states.

In 1851, Inbril B. Vancil was one of the extensive farmers, prominent and substantial citizens of North Palmyra township, Macoupin County, where he owned and operated an estate of 1,100 acres of land. He was given excellent educational opportunities by his father, and attended school in Jacksonville, spending two years in the Illinois College. In the winter of 1847-48 he attended medical lectures in Cincinnati. After his return, he operated a saw mill in Palmyra township until 1850, when he joined the great exodus to California with a four mile team, reaching Sacramento after three months' journey from St. Joseph, Mo., on August 13, 1850. At first he engaged in mining, but later turned his attention to trade and remained in the State for two years, returning via Nicaragua, Gulf of Mexico and New York. His father then gave him a farm of 240 acres and on this he resided until he retired to the town of Modesto, where he resided until his death. He took an active part in politics and was the first supervisor of North Palmyra township, an office he held for seven years, serving through the famous "House Fight," then he resigned, but at a later date was prevailed upon to again assume its duties and he served three years longer. He also served several years as Township Treasurer and for some years was one of the School Trustees. In all these offices he had an intelligent conception of their duties and performed them faithfully. On April 4, 1860, Mr. Vancil married Elizabeth S. Rice, a daughter of Thomas B. Rice, who came to Illinois from Virginia in 1836 and was long a prominent citizen of Me

The boyhood of Burke Vancil was spent upon his father's Macoupin County farm, where he learned to till the soil and the foundation of his character was laid by a good mother. From this country house he went to Blackburn University, at Carlinville, Ill., from which he was graduated in 1886. He came to Springfield in November, 1887, and began the study of law in the office of Orendorff & Patton. In 1889, the degree of LL. B. was conferred upon him by the Illinois Wesleyan University, of Bloomington, Ill. Following his admission to the bar in May, 1889, Mr. Vancil became the junior member of the firm of Dikis & Vancil, of Springfield, but in May, 1890, the year following the forming of the partnership, Hugh F. Dikis died, and since then Mr. Vancil has continued alone. His office associate at the present time is Judge Charles F. Kane. Mr. Vancil is a member of the bar of the District Court, the Circuit Court, the Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of this State. In addition to his law practice and farming interests, Mr. Vancil is connected with several business enterprises in Springfield.

Mr. Vancil has never aspired to public office, preferring to exert his influence as a private individual. Politically, he is a Democrat. In April, 1910, however, he was elected by an overwhelming vote of Democrats and Republicans to the office of Assessor, becoming an unwilling candidate for the office only the day before the primary election. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity in all its branches. Including the Commandery and Consistory. He is also a member of the B. P. O. Elks, the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. His religious connections are with the Presbyterian Church. Socially he is a member of the Illini Country Club of Springfield. Mr. Vancil is an excellent lawyer, able and learned. His wide legal knowledge has been ripened by experience and he pursues his profession quietly, enthusiastically and industriously, bringing to it the highest intellectual qualities of character, which give him an enviable reputation and earn for him his conspicuous success.

On September 30, 1891, Mr. Vancil was united in marriage, at Carlinville, Ill., with Mary E. Steidley, of that place. They have no children.

Mrs. Vancil comes from an old and highly esteemed family which resided for many years at the suburban home just west of Carlinville. She was the daughter of John S. Steidley and Sarah Elizabeth (Wright) Steidley, both of whom are deceased. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Vancil were William Wright and Sarah B.
Wright, well known residents of Carlinville, and for many years prominently connected with business interests of that vicinity. She has four brothers, William A. Steidley, residing in Denver, Colo., Solomon F. Steidley, residing in Carlinville, James B. Steidley, residing in Kansas City, Kan., and Alex. B. Steidley, residing in Oakland, Calif. Her sisters are Laura Rosell, now deceased, wife of Xerxes X. Crum; Florence L., wife of H. F. Valentine, now deceased, and Harriet G., wife of Judge Robert B. Shirley. Mrs. Valentine and Mrs. Shirley both reside in Carlinville. Mrs. Vancil is a member of several religions and social organizations in Springfield and has a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church and the Illini Country Club. Mr. and Mrs. Vancil have travelled extensively in the west, visiting all the principal points of interest, including the Yosemite Valley, Grand Canyon in Arizona, Yellowstone National Park, etc. They were in the great San Francisco earthquake and fire on April 18, 1906, and for many days thereafter were believed to have been lost. They now reside at number 225 East Jack-on Street, where they have lived since 1883.

VANCIL, William M., a retired farmer of Springfield, is well known and honored as a veteran of the Civil War and as a useful and public-spirited citizen. He belongs to one of the pioneer families of Sangamon County and was born there in 1840, a son of James and Martha A. (Gatton) Vancil, the fathers of Pennsylvania and the mother of Kentucky. James Vancil was a merchant in early life and became one of the early settlers of Sangamon County. He first located on government land near Auburn and later purchased land nearby on Sugar Creek, where he operated a farm until 1861. He then sold out and moved to Vancil, Ill., where he conducted a store until his death.
He and his wife had seven sons and one daughter, namely: Mary E., wife of George W. Young, of Springfield; Charles, the oldest son, living near Auburn; Harvey, living near Taylorville, Christian County, and others who are now deceased. The grandfather served through the War of 1812.

Mr. Vancil was educated in the country school near Auburn and was reared to farm work, which he later followed all his active life. He worked for his father until the time of the Civil War and enlisted in Company G One He served three years, was wounded once, and at Trenton, Tenn., was captured, after which he was held prisoner for some time. He participated in many leading battles, among them being those at Nashville, Mobile and Vicksburg, Tupelo, Blakely, Parker's Cross Roads, Montgomery (Ala.), and many others. He was discharged at Camp Butler, near Springfield, in August, 1865, having been mustered out at Mo-ible, Ala., July 15, 1865, and returned to his farming. He still has the gun he carried in service and has reason to be proud of his record as a soldier.

Mr. Vandawalker remained on his father's farm for many years and in 1896 retired from farm work, since which time he has lived at 1716 South Seventeenth Street, Springfield, where he owns a comfortable home. He was successful as a farmer and was an industrious and able business manager. He is a prominent member of Stephenson Post G. A. R., and a member of the Methodist Church. He is affiliated with the Prohibition party and interested in everything pertaining to the general welfare. He is unmarried. He enjoys the regard and respect of a large number of friends and acquaintances.

VANDAWALKER, Charles, a retired engineer living in Springfield was for thirty years employed by the Wabash Railroad Company, but since 1894 has lived retired from active life. He was born in Marcy, N. Y., July 25, 1831, son of Ephraim and Eva (Blenhein) Vandawalker, natives of New York, where they spent their entire lives. They lived on a farm and Charles Vandawalker received his education in the public schools of his native place. He then worked on his father’s farm for several years, then moved to Michigan and for eight years carried on farming in Monroe County, that State. He moved from Michigan to Springfield and spent a part of time farming in Sangamon county, but about 1864 entered the employ of the railroad company, first in the capacity of fireman, and for twenty-five years was employed as engineer. He won the confidence and esteem of his employers and associates and was sober and industrious in his habits.

Mr. Vandawalker was married, in Monroe County, Mich., to Miss Anna Dentel, born in Saxony, Germany, May 13, 1837. She came with her parents to America and the family were early settlers of Monroe County, where the father and mother died. Nine children were born to Mr. Vandawalker and his wife, namely: Ephraim, Charles and Mamel, deceased; Ada, wife of Dayton Webster, in the employ of the Springfield Consolidated Street Railway Company; Elizabeth, wife of William Friedinger, in the employ of the Illinois Watch Company; Emma, wife of Albert Fields, a jeweler of Portland, Ore.; Esther, wife of Walter Page, a merchant of Denver, Colo.; Anna, wife of Desmond Stewart, of the firm of Stewart & Patterson, plumbers, of Springfield; John, a merchant. Mr. Vandawalker and his wife are members of the Methodist Church, of Springfield; in politics he is a Republican, and fraternity he is affiliated with the Masonic Order. He is well known in railroad circles and is universally respected. He owns a comfortable home at 1121 South Eighth Street.

VAN DA WALKER, John Leonard.—Among the younger business men of Springfield is John Leonard Van Da Walker, formerly of the Hammer Manufacturing Company, but now holding a responsible position with the Illinois Watch Company, having sold his business in January, 1912. He is an expert mechanic, who has always had a natural taste for mechanics and inventions. The firm with which he was recently connected had been in existence since April, 1910, and had established a good trade and reputation. Mr. Van Da Walker was born in Springfield July 6, 1875, son of Charles H. and Anna Barbara (Dentel) Van Da Walker, the former born in Utica, N. Y., and the latter in Saxcageburg, Germany. The father is a retired locomotive engineer and lives at No. 1121 South Eighth Street, Springfield. He and his wife were married at Lulu, Mich., June 12, 1885, and came direct to Springfield, where they remained three years, and there had one son born. They then lived about five years in Ida, Mich., where they became parents of two daughters, then returned to Springfield and settled at their present home, where in June, 1905, they celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary. On his return to Springfield Mr. Van Da Walker began working for the Wabash Railroad Company, and reached the position of engineer, in which he spent twenty-five years, then retired from active life. He and his wife had three sons and six daughters. Two sons and a daughter are deceased and others are married and have families.

The Van Da Walkers originally came from Holland and settled in New York, becoming identified with its early history. Many of them still reside in that State. The Dentel family came from thrifty and prosperous German farmer stock. The parents of Mrs. Van Da Walker came to America in a sailing vessel, spending fourteen weeks on the voyage, the boat being overtaken by heavy storms. They lost their course and did not expect to be able to reach land before they perished, but finally drifted safely to harbor.

John Leonard Van Da Walker graduated from the common schools of Springfield and spent one year in the high school, attending the latter at night. He completed a course in mechanical drawing and nearly finished one in mechanical engineering through the International Correspondence School, of Scranton, Pa. He made rapid progress in these studies and was also proficient in music. Upon leaving school, he became an apprentice in the machine shops of the Wabash Railroad Company and remained in their employ nine and one-half years, then worked eight and one-half years as tool, die and model maker for the Illinois Watch Company. In October, 1905, he moved to Denver, Colo., to become a partner in the Thompson Balance Company, but three years later returned to Springfield, on account of his wife's health, and again began working for the Illinois Watch Company, which he continued until identifying himself with the Hummer Manufacturing Company, later becoming sole proprietor. The firm was manufacturing small, high-class machinery and tools, such as dies, models, etc. Mr. Van Da Walker is a man of excellent habits, has never been addicted to the use of tobacco, alcoholic beverages or drugs of any kind, and in his daily life endeavors to live up to the ideal man and be true to his Maker. He is honest and reliable in his dealings with his fellow men, and his relations with his associates are mutually pleasant and agreeable.

Mr. Van Da Walker was married in Springfield, August 25, 1807, to Martha Jane Rankin, who was born October 9, 1805, daughter of John II. and Adelaide (Smith) Rankin, her father a native of Piqua, O., and her mother of Bainbridge, N. Y. Mrs. Van Da Walker graduated from high school in Springfield in 1894, after which she worked three years as expert bookkeeper. Her father was an army photographer during the Civil War and took pictures of Generals Grant, Logan, Lee and other leading officers who participated in the war, besides many scenes of warfare. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. Van Da Walker and wife, namely: Adelaide Anna, born October 11, 1806, and John L., Jr., December 22, 1809.

Both Mr. Van Da Walker and his wife are now members of the United Brethren Church. He entered the Sunday School of the old First Methodist Episcopal Church at Monroe and Fifth Streets, which was located on the present site of the Franklin Life Building, and helped in a small way, as he felt able, toward the building of the new edifice at Fifth and Capitol Avenue, remaining a member until removing to Denver in 1895. In Denver, he and his wife attended the Third Congregational Church. In national politics, he is generally an adherent of the Republican party, but is always opposed to the saloon and is the friend of good government, using his influence to promote the best interests of the people. In fraternal circles he is well known, being affiliated with Capital Tent No. 1, Knights of the Maccabees of the World, to which he has belonged fifteen years; for six years has been a member of Springfield Tent No. 222 Royal League, and has held all the offices therein. He was a member of Smith's Springfield Zouaves, a local organization, now disbanded.

VAN DEREN, David McKee (deceased), was born in Bourbon County, Ky., February 12, 1824, and died at Springfield, Ill., February 15, 1874. The period of time covered by the years of his life was eventful for himself, his family and his country, but in all the unusual demands made upon him he filled well his part and when, in the fulness of time, he passed away, he left behind him an honored and revered name. His parents were Barnard and Eliza (McKee) Van Deren, who were born in Harrison County, Ky., the father on May 22, 1789, and the mother on May 16, 1795.

The grandfather of David McKee Van Deren was a native of Holland and one of a family of eight who came to America. He settled in Kentucky and there his son, Barnard, was born and reared, and there was married, May 27, 1813. On June 12, 1835, Barnard Van Deren and family came to Sangamon County, Ill., taking up government land in Curran Township, where they developed one of the early farms. Of their nine children two died early, the others being: Cyrus W., Barnard A., Martha F., who married Louis Johnson; David McKee; Margaret W., who was twice married, Archibald J., and John M. Barnard Van Deren died July 6, 1855. David McKee Van Deren was only ten years old when he accompanied his parents to Sangamon County, and the early death of his father placed heavy responsibilities on the surviving family. He remained at home and helped his mother in the management of the pioneer farm until his own marriage, which took place June 17, 1854, to Margaret Evans, and as she lived in Logan County, Ill., he was obliged to row across the Sangamon River in order to visit her. She died in December, 1853, the mother of one son, Bernard, who died in infancy. David McKee Van Deren was married (second) on December 8, 1855, to Rebecca Maria Kinney, who was born January 14, 1837, in Sangamon County, and was a daughter of Henry and Margaret Hood (Dorrance) Kinney. Her parents were married in Sangamon County but her father was born in New York and her mother in Massachusetts. Henry Kinney, Sr., the grandfather of Mrs. Van Deren, was married March 4, 1798, to Dicey Pond. On May 6, 1822, the father of Mrs. Van Deren, arrived in Sangamon County, Ill., with his parents, who settled in what is now Loami Township, he being fifteen years old at that time. For sixty-seven years he was a deacon in the Baptist Church and donated the land on which the church was built. He served as a soldier in the Black Hawk War as Capt. J. Saunders, and was an active participant in many of the pioneer events which made up the early history of this portion of Illinois. On October 23, 1828, he married Margaret Hood Dorrance, who was born March 30, 1800, a daughter of Daniel Dorrance, whose birth occurred at Hartford, Conn., in 1788, a son of Gershom Dorrance, who was an English physician and surgeon in the Continental Army in the War of the Revolution, and who laid down his life on the altar of Freedom. Daniel Dorrance was married in Seneca County, N. Y., in 1806, to Margaret Gilland, a native of New York, who died November 30, 1812, and their children were: Margaret and Gershom. After the death of his first wife Mr. Dorrance was married to Mrs. Mary (Arnold) Price, and they had one daughter, Mary. Mrs. Mary Dorrance died in Ontario County, N. Y., in 1813. In 1822 Mr. Dorrance, with his children, started for Illinois, floating down the Ohio River in a flat-boat.
He located in Woodside Township, Sangamon County, but in the following year removed to Loami Township, where he entered land from the Government. His death occurred December 10, 1831. Henry Kinney Jr., father of Mrs. Van Deren, died at Springfield, April 2, 1880, in the eighty-second year of his age, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Rebecca H. Van Deren, having survived his wife, who died September 30, 1883, at the age of eighty-three years. She was residing with her daughter, Mrs. James M. Darnell in Chatham Township. They had five children: Daniel, who married Anice Elmore; Clarissa, who is the widow of James M. Darnell; Caroline, who died at the age of twenty years; Eliza, who married John R. Shelton, who was a soldier in the Civil War and lives at Atwood, Ill.; and Mrs. Van Deren, who died December 16, 1908.

At the time of their marriage David McKee Van Deren and wife located in Curran Township, where he owned a part of the old family estate, on which was a log cabin set in about 300 acres of land, and from which he entered land and continued to live until 1809, when he moved to Loami Township, where he remained one year, ill health then compelling him to abandon agricultural pursuits. After moving to Chatham, where he remained for five years, he went into the milling business in partnership with his brother, Charles. He was accompanied by his brother-in-law, Louis Johnson, operating what was known as the Johnson-Van Deren mill, and after he removed to Springfield he continued his interest in the mill and opened a flour and feed store in connection with it. In 1873 he erected his handsome residence at No. 510 West Capitol Avenue, but did not live long to enjoy its comforts, his health failing and he died the following year.

He had always been a man of more or less public importance, usually a leader in the community in which he made his home. He was a supporter of the Government during the Civil War, although prevented by ill health from becoming an active participant, and at this house Union League meetings were held and plans made for the issuance of the necessary draft. For years he was active and honored in Masonic circles. He joined Springfield Lodge No. 4, A. F. & A. M., while living in Curran Township, and after moving into Loami Township he served as Worshipful Master of the lodge there. Later was Worshipful Master of the lodge in Chatham Township, and frequently his house was used for the ceremonies in connection with the initiation of candidates. In political views he was a stalwart Republican and for some time served as a Justice of the Peace. He was one of the earliest supporters of John C. Fremont for the Presidency, and from that time on never changed his party allegiance, and gave generously to the Union cause during the Civil War.

A member of the Presbyterian Church, he took an active interest in church and Sunday-school work, and was also a warm friend of the cause of education and served as School Director during his years of residence in the county. In spite of the handicap of ill health, he became owner of a large estate, acquired through meriting industry and the exercise of admirable judgment. He lived a blameless life, and in no way ever forfeited the respect, esteem or confidence of his friends. In no less degree was his widow held in esteem until the close of her beautiful life. During the Civil War she was a member of that of the noble women known as the Ladies' Union League, and gave time and work in the soldiers' cause. Later she belonged also to the Springfield Ladies' Aid Society. She was reared in the Baptist faith, but later united with the Presbyterian Church. One daughter was born to David McKee and Rebecca Van Deren, Margaret Evans, whose birth took place on the farm in Curran Township. She received her education at the Bettie Stuart Institute, graduating from there June 4, 1884. Afterwards she entered Springfield Business College and received her diploma as a stenographer, June 4, 1888, and as a bookkeeper, June 6, 1889. On October 22, 1889, she was married to Richard W. Feltham, who was born November 8, 1863, at Springfield, Ill.

Richard W. Feltham is the third son of Thomas Joseph Feltham, who was a contractor, builder and cabinet-maker for forty years. He was born September 29, 1843, in Beyford, England, where he served seven years as an apprentice carpenter. He was the only one of the new settlers who came to America and to Springfield in 1844, one of his four sisters accompanied him. For four years afterwards he worked as a journeyman. In 1848 he entered into partnership with Charles Fisher, later was alone for a time, and then took in a partner and engaged in a general contracting business. He superintended all of the important work done by the new State House, and after this was completed entered into partnership with his son and they continued in business for a number of years. The last work that he superintended was the final finishing of the State House in 1886. Falling health then compelled him to retire, and he went to South Dakota, where he died January 28, 1904. On October 11, 1855, he married Cordelia Brocas, who was born of French parents, in Wayne County, Ind., January 13, 1837.

Richard W. Feltham was educated in the public schools of Springfield and afterwards learned the trade of watchmaker, but on account of ill health had to abandon that trade, and in the hope of improvement decided to take a lot of cattle across the plains, hoping the necessary out-door life would restore his health. He finally located in the Black Hills of South Dakota, but unfortunately the climate did not agree with his young wife. They returned east and he became a member of the drug firm of Feltham Brothers, at the corner of Eighth and Washington Streets, Springfield. His health, however, would not bear the strain of confinement, and he sold out his interest to his brother. In the fall of 1897, in company with Charles Conkling, Jack Graves and Charles Vogelsang, he left for Alaska, representing a syndicate, and as the climate is beneficial, he remains there, while his wife and children remain at Springfield. Mr. Feltham is a member of St. Paul’s Lodge No. 300, A. F. & A. M., of Springfield, with which he became affiliated in 1892.

Mr. and Mrs. Feltham have had three children; Elma Rebecca, who was born November 7, 1891, died February 2, 1907, at that time being a member of the Sophomore class in the Springfield High School; Margaret Van Deren, who was born October 27, 1895; and Harriet King, who was born March 5, 1898.

VAN DEVENTER, Charles Edgar, a highly respected citizen of Springfield, Ill., who has been a resident of that city for the past thirty years, is a native of Cass County, Ill., born November 11, 1851. He is a son of Charles Fentor Mercer and Mary Ann Love (Sanders) Van Deventer, both natives of Loudoun County, Va., the former born near Manassas, Va., in 1834, and the latter born near Leesburg, October 2, 1817. The immigrant ancestor of this family was Peter Van Deventer, who landed on the shores of New Jersey, in 1600, and most of his descendants located in Virginia, giving them the title F. F. V. They took no very active part in civil or military affairs, though many of them served in the Civil War, on both sides of the struggle. The brother of the subject of this sketch, I. B. Van Deventer, served as private in the One Hundred and First Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving two years and seven months, and was discharged on account of wounds received at the Battle of Peach Tree Creek, from which he never fully recovered.

Charles F. M. Van Deventer and his wife were married in the State of Virginia, December 9, 1854, and in the following March moved to Illinois, proceeding by boat on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to St. Louis, and thence overland to Cass County, where they resided in a farmer’s neighborhood. They may have been the ancestors of Charles M. Van Deventer, a native of Ashland, where they lived until the spring of 1871, then moved to Carlinville, Macoupin County, and in 1876 came to Springfield, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. Van Deventer died May 7, 1895, at the age of eighty-three years, and his widow died February 29, 1904, at the age of eighty-six years and six months. Coming as pioneers to Illinois, they experienced many hardships in their early married life, but became quite successful, accumulating considerable property and spending their last years in ease and plenty. They had the great happiness granted to few, of celebrating the sixty-first anniversary of their marriage, at which time were present seven of the nine children born to them. Mr. Van Deventer was a man of sterling worth and high character, kind and indulgent to his family, and won and retained many friends. He was the first in his neighborhood to invest in improved machinery to help him in running on his farm, being very quick to perceive the advantages to be gained thereby. In religious views he was a Methodist, and the family home was always open to the pioneer preachers. They had the honor of entertaining many of the great men of the early church, such as Peter Cartwright, Dr. Acres, Rev. Barrett and others.

Charles Edgar Van Deventer attended the district schools of Cass County in boyhood, and at the age of sixteen years entered upon a theological course at Blackburn University, in Carlinville, Ill., where he remained three years. He was much interested in the course and was making excellent progress when he was compelled to abandon his studies on account of the partial loss of his eyesight, which was very distressing to him. He has always been a member of the Church of the Brethren, having been a communicant of that church since he was a boy. His family have always been members of the Brethren Church, and he has always been active in the work of the church.

Upon leaving school Mr. Van Deventer entered the employ of J. G. Steward, a photographer of Carlinville, Ill., where he remained one year, then became bookkeeper for the lumber firm of Andrews & Hamilton, of the same city, and later held a similar position with the hardware firm of Woodward & Ferrell, where he remained two years. In 1876 he located in Springfield and became employed as piano salesman. He is a bright, enterprising salesman, fully acquainted with his line, and has been successful. During the thirty years he has been engaged in this vocation he has been employed by only four firms. He is most earnest in choosing his profession and the disappointment was keenly felt for many years. His early life was spent on a farm, amid simple people and surrounded by every-day toil, and if he had not decided to study for a profession he feels that he would probably have developed into a good carpenter, being of a practical, inventive turn.

During the thirty years he has been engaged in this vocation he has been employed by only four firms. He is simple and democratic in his tastes, and has spent an active, useful life. He has been self-supporting since leaving school and has been industrious and provident. He has always been honest and upright in his business dealings, representing reputable firms and abiding by the truth at all times. He is a believer in the doctrine of equal rights to all, regardless of sex, color or nationality, and intends to give a square deal to all with whom he has business relations. His father was a Whig, and he was reared in the belief that the principles of the Republican party were representative of the best interests of the country. In the early days of the Prohibition movement he espoused this cause as a temperance proposition. In 1869 he united with the Presbyterian Church, but after his marriage, in 1888, united with the Methodists, to which church his wife belonged. He has never cared for public office, being fully occupied by his business affairs and preferring a quiet, retired life. Mr. Van Deventer became a member of the Masonic Order in 1874, joining Mt. Nebo Lodge, of Carlinville, and in 1876 transferred his membership to St. Paul’s Lodge at Springfield. He has been a resident of Illinois all his life and has not spent much time outside his native State, although he has traveled some through Indiana and Louisiana.

June 13, 1888, Mr. Van Deventer married, in Springfield, Annie Matilda Tobin, who was born near Springfield, October 23, 1862; daughter of James Tobin. Her childhood was passed on her father's farm, about nine miles southeast of Springfield. Mr. Tobin was a prominent and successful stockman, and carried on business in this line for over forty years. During this period his check was never refused, and this in spite of the fact that his operations covered a volume of business aggregating many millions of dollars. He retired from active life several years ago and is now enjoying ease and comfort, well earned by long years of endeavor. Charles E. Van Deventer and his wife have one daughter, Ruth Marlow, born February 14, 1890.

Mr. Van Meter served in the Black Hawk War, with rank of Colonel. He was well acquainted with Abraham Lincoln and his son James B. often saw Mr. Lincoln in his boyhood. Besides James B., another son, Charles C. Van Meter, survives, and is a farmer in Fancy Creek Township. The latter was born October 8, 1854.

The education of James B. Van Meter was acquired in a log school house near his father's farm, where the seats were little better than rough planks. After leaving school, he worked on the farm with his father until he was twenty years of age, then began to gather his own account in Menard County, Ill. Four years later he returned to Sangamon County and acquired a farm in Fancy Creek Township, where he lived until 1903. He brought his land to a high state of cultivation and was very successful in breeding and raising stock. He was an energetic and ambitious farmer and was prominent in public affairs in his neighborhood. One of these men whom the country is delighted to honor and pay tribute to, is Norman A. Van Nattan, born in Sangamon County, February 25, 1843, a son of Joseph and Currency (Stanley) Van Nattan, the former born in Fleming County, Ky., March 4, 1821, and the latter in Ohio, April 8, 1824. He served under Sherman and Thomas, participating in the battles of Perryville, Stone River, Atlanta, Peach Tree Creek, and others of less importance.

Norman A. Van Nattan received his education in Springfield and worked on his father's farm, until his enlistment, a week before his father, on August 4, 1862, in Company G, Seventy-third Illinois Infantry, serving under Sherman, Thomas and Rosecrans, and engaging in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Kennesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Spring Hill, Franklin, Nashville, and others, many times narrowly escaping death. Mr. Van Nattan has always been a Republican, and has served his party and community as Constable. After his marriage he located in Fancy Creek Township, but eventually became an engineer, in which line of work he is now engaged. He has been equally active in the Methodist Church, of which he is a consistent member, and is most highly esteemed. He belongs to the G. A. R.

VAN NATTAN, Thomas.—The Van Nattan family has been prominent in Sangamon County since 1827, when the great-grandfather of Thomas, Daniel Van Nattan, came there from Fleming County, Ky., settling in what is now Fancy Creek Township. He was married in Bath County, Ky., December 25, 1818, to Deborah Ferguson, and they had one child born in Fleming County and five in Sangamon County, Ill. Their eldest child, Joseph, was born March 10, 1821, and was married in Sangamon County, Ill., April 7, 1842, to Currency Stanley, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Centre-Campbell) Stanley, and a native of Ohio. Thomas Stanley was a soldier in the War of 1812, located in Sangamon County in the fall of 1829, and died in 1837. Joseph Van Nattan and his wife had nine children, all born in Sangamon County. Two sons, Norman A. and Thomas M., served in the Civil War, the former in Company G, Seventy-third Illinois Infantry, in which he served three years, and the latter in Company I, One Hundred Thirty-third Illinois Infantry, in which he served from March to September. His eldest child, Joseph, was born March 18, 1842, and in 1866, enlisted in the Seventy-third Illinois Infantry, served his full term and was honorably discharged.

Thomas Morris, second son of Joseph Van Nattan, was born in Sangamon County, and was a successful farmer of Fancy Creek Township. He was married after the war and died May 4, 1872, leaving a widow and two children living near Springfield. His wife was Anna P. Renne. Their son Thomas was born July 19, 1869.

Thomas Van Nattan was reared on a farm and educated in the country schools. After leaving school he learned telegraphy and worked as operator at Ridgeley. He has contributed his share to the promotion of all public movements and is a well-known and popular citizen of Springfield, which has been his home several years. He is highly esteemed as a refined and cultured man, and is a worthy representative of his family, which has for many years been held in high regard in Sangamon County. Scheible, who was born August 23, 1876, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Dressenderfer) Scheible, the former a native of Germany, who came from Germany in 1860. Mrs. Scheible was born in Illinois. Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Van Nattan: Emma Marie, April 17, 1900; Anna Elizabeth, July 18, 1903; Elsie May, June 8, 1906; Lawrence Joseph, June 9, 1910. The family reside at 909 North Twelfth Street.

VENNEMAN, Theodore (deceased), achieved prominence as a farmer in Sangamon County.
He was born in Prussia April 17, 1842, a son of William and Eliza (Hilkenberch) Venneman, farmers, who lived out their days and died in their native land. Of the four sons and three daughters of the family there are living, besides the subject of this sketch, two sons and one daughter in Prussia. Mr. Venneman was educated in his native land, attending school until he was fourteen years old, and worked for his father on the farm through the days of his youth, while dreaming of America and planning some day to go to that far-off country of promise. He landed in New York in 1857, when he was not yet sixteen years of age, and came direct to Springfield, Ill. His first work in the United States was on a farm, but he was variously employed until 1861, when he enlisted at Springfield in Company A, Thirty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he served through the war except during seven awful months during which he saw more fearful service in Libby Prison, at Richmond. He participated in the Battle of Chickamangus, in the operations around Vicksburg, and in numerous other hard-fought battles and minor engagements. Returning to Springfield, after his honorable discharge, he was employed for a time in driving a government wagon to and from Camp Butler. Then, after working a year in a machine shop, he came back to the soil, renting a farm north of Springfield. It was not long, however, before he moved to Christian County, Ill., where he carried on farming three years. Then, returning to Sangamon County, he farmed successfully until his death, which occurred January 4, 1907. His family removed to Buffalo, where the home is yet maintained. Besides a farm in Southern Illinois, his widow owns the town home and considerable other village property, the former amounting to 100 acres of land.

Mr. Venneman was a Roman Catholic and the surviving members of his family belong to St. Joseph's Catholic Church of Buffalo, Ill. He was long an enthusiastic Grand Army man. His marriage took place at Springfield, Ill., October 24, 1865, when he was united with Catharine Mathies, born in Bavaria, May 18, 1840, daughter of Valentine Mathies, who brought his family to America in 1848, sailing from Havre, France, and landing fifty-five days later at New Orleans, after a voyage of much discomfort and peril. Mr. Mathies, a cabinet-maker by trade, settled at Centerville, St. Clair County, Ill., where his wife died in 1848, and he, in 1854. After her father's death Mrs. Venneman lived for a short time at Belleville, Ill., whence she removed to Springfield with her brothers Leonard and Valentine. She has a sister in Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Venneman had nine children, seven of whom survive: Leonard, the eldest, is a farmer in Sangamon County; Johanna is the wife of Maurice Madden, a farmer of Iowa; Henry lives on the old Venneman home farm; Catharine is the wife of William Mulcahy, who is farming west of Springfield; Elizabeth married Joseph Costello, a Sangamon County farmer; Sister Frances is a nun in Charity Hospital, New Orleans, La.; Anna is a member of her mother's household. Mrs. Venneman rejoices in twenty grandchildren.

VETTER, John.—Many of Springfield's best known citizens are Germans by birth, and are an honor to the Germanic race (to which they are proud to belong), and to their adopted country. A leading business man of the city who has demonstrated through his admirable qualities that America is truly a land of opportunities, is John Vetter, ice, wood and coal dealer of No. 1005 East Carpenter Street. He was born in Oberkrueckling, Province of Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, February 11, 1856, a son of George and Margaret (Nuhmeyer) Vetter, both of whom died in Germany. There were four children in their family: Jacob, deceased; George, of Germany; Peter came to the United States when seventeen years of age and is now a blacksmith in Cleveland, Ohio; and John, of whom we write.

Until he was fourteen years of age John Vetter attended school, and he gained a fair German education, but at that age left school to work for two years on his father's farm. At sixteen he came to the United States, being anxious to avail himself of the better opportunities offered here for a boy of ambition. He sailed from Hamburg to New York City on the steamship "Main," and after arriving at Dayton, Ohio, where he joined friends, remaining with them a short time. He then went on to St. Louis, and from there to St. Clair County, Ill. In the latter locality he found employment on a farm, but in the fall of 1873 he came to Springfield. By this time he had gained some knowledge of English, and became a driver for Dr. B. M. Griffith, continuing with this good physician for five years. By this time the frugal young German had saved up enough to embark in a grocery business at No. 111 North Fifth Street, where he remained until 1885. In this year he was made superintendent of Camp Lincoln, and held that position until 1892, when he returned to Springfield to engage in a wood and coal business at his present location. In 1906 he added the handling of ice to his other lines of activity, and now operates three teams and controls a large trade.

Mr. Vetter was married in Springfield, August 12, 1885, to Elizabeth Bockhouse, of Sangamon County, daughter of John Bockhouse. Mrs. Vetter died April 16, 1901, and is buried in Calvary Cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Vetter had children as follows: Mary, who married Earl Gilbert, of Springfield; Edward and John, at home; Frank, who married Etta Wilcox, of Springfield; Annie, Ellen, William and Rosie, all at home. Mr. Vetter and his family belong to the Reformed Luthern Church, and are very active in its good work. He is a stanch Republican, always working for the advancement of his party, although he is not seeking his own preference. The influence he has exercised has been for good, not only in business affairs but in public activities, and at all times he has stood for good government and honesty in politics, which entitles him to representation in a work of this kind.

VINCENT, Oscar, a prosperous young farmer of Sangamon County, now manager of a fine 135-acre farm owned by his father-in-law, A. J. Hudson, in Loami Township, was born in the village of that name, March 15, 1877. He is a son of William H. and Amanda (Covehle) Vincent, and grandson of Henry Vincent, the latter still surviving and residing with his son William, in Loami, aged eighty-three years. William Vincent and wife had three children, one of whom died in infancy, the others being Fred Vincent, a railroad man residing in Oklahoma, and Oscar.

The latter was reared in the village of Loami, to which his parents had come as early as 1855, becoming associated with its early history. He attended the Loami school and early in life began supporting himself, then, as now, being engaged in agricultural pursuits. On August 26, 1903, he was united in marriage with Miss Marie Hudson, a daughter of Andrew J. Hudson, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Vincent settled on Section 8, Maxwell Township, Mr. Hudson having practically retired from active life, his content to leave the conduct of his affairs in the competent hands of his energetic son-in-law. This farm is one of the best in the county, averaging sixty bushels of corn to the acre. Mr. Vincent is a scientific farmer, believing thoroughly in rotation of crops, and keeps his corn land fertile by turning under a crop of clover. He alternates from corn to wheat and back again, and by his methods has brought the yield up from forty bushels per acre to the present high average. He plows deep, cultivating shallow for his corn, and is well satisfied with his results. He is a firm believer in carrying a good grade of stock, preferring the Duroc-Jersey hogs, short-horn and Jersey cows, and Percheron horses. All his stock is eligible to registration at any time. Having devoted his life to farming and kindred lines, he understands his business thoroughly and is a recognized authority on all matters pertaining to it.

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent are the parents of two bright little ones: Floyd Hudson Vincent, born August 17, 1904, and Florence Alma Vincent, born August 16, 1906. While not connected with any religious organization, Mr. and Mrs. Vincent are at all times ready to give their support to church and educational measures, and are very charitable. He is a member of the Court of Honor, of Loami. Politically a Democrat, he is a member of the School Board of his district, and is faithfully discharging his duties relative to it.

VINEY, William A., a retired farmer and prominent citizen residing in Springfield, Ill., and a veteran of the Civil War, has lived in the city since 1860, being retired from active life. He is a native of Sangamon County, having been born near Auburn, March 2, 1844, and is a son of Henry C. A. and Catherine (Kessler) Viny. The father was born in Kentucky and for years lived on a farm three miles east of Auburn, but at the time of his death was living on a farm in Macoupin County, III. He died June 15, 1889, and was buried in Greenfield, Greene County, and his wife died March 18, 1896, and was buried in the same place. He was but one year of age when his parents removed to Illinois, and lived in Sangamon County thirty-seven years, then moved to Macoupin County. He was seventy-one years old at the time of his death. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

The boyhood of William A. Viney was spent on a farm and he was educated in the schools of Sangamon and Macoupin Counties, after which he engaged in farming. Since locating in Springfield he has purchased four houses including the one where he lives, at 116 North State Street, and has been occupied in looking after his realty interests. He was an industrious and energetic farmer and devoted himself closely to his work, becoming accordingly successful.

Mr. Viney was married, in Greene County, Ill., September 10, 1871, to Miss Elmlra Teaney, born near Carrollton, Greene County, July 1, 1847, daughter of Frank H. and Elizabeth (Morgan) Teaney, natives of Kenutcky, and the former born near Lexington. Mr. Teaney was born March 4, 1817, was married July 18, 1845, by Reverend L. Wood, and died November 5, 1892, at the age of seventy-five years. His wife died October 8, 1853. Mr. Teaney came to Greene County, Ill., from Kentucky, and located on a farm near Carrollton. He afterward moved to a farm near Peoria City, Mo. He returned to Illinois before his death, which occurred at Hillsboro, where he was buried.

Mr. Viney spent forty years on his farm in Macoupin County and is well known, both there and in Springfield, where he has won many friends. He is interested in the progress and welfare of the community and is friendly to every noble and worthy cause. He and his wife have no children. In politics Mr. Viney has followed the footsteps of his father: It has been said of them both, "Republicans to the back-bone."

VILET, Joseph.—When the call was made for volunteers to support the Union, men responded from all over the North, leaving their private interests to the care of others. They were gathered from every trade and every profession. None stopped to think of self when the country was in peril. One of the men who thus generously forgot private affairs in his support of public interests, is Joseph Vilet, now living retired in Williamsville, after many years spent in active work. He was born in Belmont County, Ohio, October 30, 1832, a son of David and Jane (Williams) Vliet, the former born in New Jersey, 1781, and died in 1865, while the latter was born in Pennsylvania, in 1800. David Vliet was a shoemaker by trade, who moved to Ohio in 1848, seeking a better field for his business.

The boyhood days of Joseph Vliet were passed in Ohio, where he alternated attendance at the district school with hard work on his father's farm. At an early age he learned the trade of a plasterer and followed it the greater part of his active life. In 1848 he came from Monroe County, Ohio, to Springfield, where he found ready employment at his trade, living there until 1874, when he moved to Williamsville, buying a home in this village. He owns a house and several lots on Lester Street, and is in comfortable circumstances, having earned all he owns through hard work and thrifty saving.

On August 18, 1862, he enlisted in Company A, Third Illinois Light Artillery, under Captain T. F. Vaughn, participating in the battle of Little Rock, as well as several skirmishes, and receiving his honorable discharge in April, 1864. He is a member of the G. A. R. and of the V. F. W., of which he has been a member twenty-five years.

In politics he is a Republican and the Presbyterian Church holds his membership.

Mr. Vliet was married in Springfield, July 10, 1856. His wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Vliet, was born May 9, 1855. Her parents were natives of Kentucky and died when she was very young. Mr. and Mrs. Vliet became the parents of eight children, four of whom survive: George, William, Albert and Sarah J. After nearly two years spent in serving his country as a soldier, Mr. Vliet returned home to become a useful citizen, and in his declining years is a valued addition to the village in which he has made his home for nearly forty years.

VON HOF, Nicholas—Perhaps no country of the old world has sent so many responsible men to America as has Germany. Her sons are to be found in every community where men have settled with a view to establishing homes and going into legitimate business. One of the men of Springfield who long worked faithfully and is now living retired is Nicholas Von Hof, who has a pleasant home at No. 1610 South First Street. He was born on the historic Rhine, in Germany, October 22, 1848, a son of Conrad and Madeline (Stronk) Von Hof. Both parents died when Nicholas was a child, leaving him and his brother to the care of relatives. The brother still lives in Germany.

The boyhood of Nicholas Von Hof was spent in Germany, where he attended school until he was fourteen years old, then entered a slate mine and worked in it for many years. Later he took up coal mining but, believing he could secure opportunities for himself and his family, he brought his wife and five children to America, in November, 1865. The little party landed in New York, whence they came direct to Springfield, where Mr. Von Hof found immediate employment in the mines, but has lately retired, having accomplished what he set out to do.

In 1877, Mr. Von Hof married Victoria Rhode, also a native of Germany. She bore him one son, Joseph, now of Springfield, and died February 8, 1879. On August 31, 1879, Mr. Von Hof married Theresa Becker, born in Germany, September 3, 1849, daughter of Martin Becker, a shoemaker who died in Germany, but his widow came to America in 1879, located in Springfield, and died at the home of Charles Gresch in 1903. Five children were born of this second marriage, but only one, Catherine, survives. She married Thomas Layden, of Springfield, and has one daughter, Theresa. Mr. Layden is also a miner. Since locating in Springfield Mr. Von Hof has been connected with Sacred Heart Parish, being a Roman Catholic. In political faith he is a Democrat. Mr. Von Hof has made a success of his life work and is entitled to the ease and comfort he is now enjoying.

VOSE, John, Sr., one of the most prominent mining men of Springfield, who has been superintendent of the Sangamon Coal Company's mine for the past twenty-two years, was born October 14, 1850, in the village of West Houghton, Lancashire, England, one of the nine children of Peter and Alice (Miller) Vose, natives of England. Mr. Vose was educated in the schools of his native country, but left school at the age of eleven years to go to work in the coal mines. At that time there were no mules used in the mines, and boys would push and load the cars to the shaft bottom. Mr. Vose's first pay at this kind of work was four shilling per week. From that work he went to mining coal and was so employed until leaving for the United States, in 1873, in September of which year, he landed in New York. He at once made his way to Streator, Ill., where he mined coal until September, 1887, and then came to Springfield where he passed the examination for State Mine Inspector. The following spring he was made mine manager for the Grape Coal Company of Danville, Ill., a position in which he served for fourteen months. On April 15, 1889, Mr. Vose returned to Springfield to accept the position which he now holds, and he has followed the duties of it with the utmost efficiency and capability.

On October 7, 1872, Mr. Vose was united in marriage, in England, with Miss Mary Prescott, the daughter of John and Sarah Prescott, and this union has been blessed by the birth of six children, two of whom are living: William, residing in Springfield, who married Ada Seaman; and John, Jr., also of Springfield, who married Grace Myers.

Mr. Vose was reared in the faith of the Church of England. In political views he has always been a stanch Republican, while his fraternal connection is with the Odd Fellows. His long experience in the mining business has made him thoroughly conversant with mines and mining conditions in Illinois, and he bears a wide reputation as a competent judge of such matters here. Probably no man in this part of the State has had the extensive experience in lumbering that Mr. Vose has had. No man stands higher in the estimation of the people than he. His reputation for honesty, fairness and square dealing is possessed by but few mine superintendents of the middle west. Notwithstanding his duties in his own line of work and business, he has always found time to assist in the advancement of any movement that would be of benefit to all the people of the present or future. To such men is due the credit of the growth and development of Springfield, Sangamon County, and the State of Illinois.

VREDENBURGH, Peter, who helped build up and develop one of the leading lumber enterprises of Illinois, has been at the head of his present business since 1878, and is in every respect a self-made man. His business career has been remarkable, beginning when he was a boy of eleven years, at which time he herded cattle for five months for twenty-five dollars. He is a native of Sangamon County, born in Curran Township, February 25, 1837, son of John S. and Ann E. (Doremus) Vredenburg, the former born in Somerset County, N. J., March 11, 1809, and the latter born in New York City, October 12, 1810. The father removed to New York City in 1821, and he and his wife lived in that city several years after their marriage, two of their children being born there. They removed to Sangamon County in 1835, arriving there July 20. They located first in Curran Township, later moving to Springfield. They had two children born in Curran Township and four in the city of Springfield. John S. Vredenburgh engaged for a time in mercantile business, but later confined his attention chiefly to his lumber business. He served several terms as Alderman and was Mayor of the city from April, 1864, to April, 1865. He and his wife were parents of eight children, namely: Maria V. D., Frances D., Peter, Thomas D., John S., Jr., Aune E., Margaret and LaRue.

Until he was ten years of age Peter Vredenburgh attended a subscription school taught by Francis Springer and for two years studied under the direction of Peter Van Orman. He lived with his parents until nineteen years of age, then went to Peoria and sold lime for D. Martin & Company, of Springfield, and two years later moved to Alton in the interests of the same firm. He was afterwards engaged in a similar line of business at Decatur, and soon after this spent four years conducting his father's farm, in partnership with J. T. Smith. Later he purchased this farm, comprising 324 acres, and still owns the property. About the time of the Civil War Peter Vredenburgh became a member of the lumber firm with which his father was connected, which was doing business under the firm name of E. R. Ullrich & Company, buying the interest of Mr. Ullrich, and a year later turned to the farm and resumed agricultural pursuits. He sold his lumber interests to his brothers upon their return from the Civil War and remained upon his farm until 1875, when he purchased the lumber business, which was then owned by his father, becoming sole owner and proprietor, and operating under the name of Peter Vredenburgh Lumber Company. The business was incorporated in 1900, and he sold stock to his five sons.

Mr. Vredenburgh rented a small planing mill in Springfield in 1888, but a few years later felt called upon to locate a larger planing mill. In 1905 the firm purchased 9,000 acres of pine timber land in the vicinity of Pine Hill, Ala., purchased and improved a large mill and erected several new buildings, which were equipped with modern machinery, a valuable asset in conducting a business of the kind. Peter Vredenburgh, Jr., having been informed in every detail of the lumber business and had gained valuable experience, moved to Alabama to assume charge of the southern branch of the work. The lumber yards at Springfield burned in 1904, but were rebuilt on a larger scale, and the business has been constantly increasing. The value of their product in lumber and sawed timber has increased from year to year, as the available supply decreases. Some seventy men are employed in the planing mill, about forty in the yard and office, and about one hundred in the plant in Alabama. Mr. Vredenburgh also employs about ten men on his farm, which is conducted under the supervision of his son-in-law, Mr. Merrick. From their vast lumber estate in the Song and a portion of the pine timber in Alabama by the carload to all parts of the United States, and their retail lumber yard in Springfield is believed to be the largest of its kind in the country. The annual output from Alabama is immense and the growth in all lines of the business has been largely the result of the energy and force which he has displayed by the head of this gigantic enterprise. He has been indefatigable in keeping in touch with the many details of the work under his control and in preparing his sons to assist him has secured their future welfare.

Mr. Vredenburgh was married in Springfield, December 27, 1866, to Miss Mary A. Canfield, born in New Jersey, July 5, 1846, daughter of Josiah F. and Abigail (Clark) Canfield, the former born in Morris-town, N. J., and the latter in Philadelphia. Josiah Canfield was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church and moved to Sangamon County, where he owned land, about 1856, remaining in the county about forty years, then went to the New Jersey coast for his health and died there. His widow survived him, having been born May 24, 1819. Mrs. Vredenburgh graduated with the Class of 1866 from the Springfield High School and has since been prominent in the alumni association. She is active in church and benevolent circles and is also a member of the Woman's Club of Springfield. The family have a delightful home at the corner of Sixth and Edwards Streets.
Ten children were born to Mr. Vredenburgh and his wife, namely: Abbie C., born January 31, 1868; Francis D., born March 3, 1870, died April 12 of the same year; John S., born February 10, 1871, was married October 12, 1902, to Miss Anna Eliza Thompson, and they live in Springfield; Anna Elizabeth, born October 5, 1875, was married May 24, 1899, to C. S. Merrick; Peter, born January 10, 1876, married Miss Pussey Hoskins, January 12, 1897, and they have two children—Thomas Sellers, born December 16, 1888, and Peter, born January 7, 1904; Thomas D., born March 24, 1878, was married May 10, 1899, to Miss Lucy Pen and they have two children—W. Ogden, born February 9, 1900, and T. Doremus, February 9, 1902; Robert O., born February 24, 1880, was married June 20, 1900, to Miss Jessie C. Sholes, a native of Sangamon County, and they have one child, Clarice, born April 15, 1902; La Rue, born January 29, 1882; Edward W., born March 27, 1887, died April 10 of the same year; Reynolds W., born March 13, 1888. All the sons are engaged in business with their father and have received good business training.

In religious views Mr. Vredenburgh is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, and he is interested in every measure he believes will advance the welfare of his community. In business dealings he has always been actuated by motives of honesty and integrity, and has reached his present successful position through open-handed transactions, having a reputation that is unsullied by doubt of his honesty, purity and upright character. He is a great lover of his family and home and has always had their interest in mind in formulating his plans. He is genial and kindly of manner and nature, and has a host of sincere friends, among whom he is very popular. He is a Democrat in State and National politics, but in local affairs votes for the man rather than the party. He has served as a member of the School Board of Springfield, but has preferred to give his undivided attention to his own extensive interests rather than enter public life, though he is intensely interested in current events and issues and ready to do his duty as a private citizen.

WADE, Samuel G. (deceased).—When two people have lived together long enough to celebrate their Golden Wedding, the event is of sufficient moment to attract attention from the entire community. Samuel G. Wade, now deceased, and his excellent wife enjoyed this event on August 28, 1909, and the memory of it will linger long with those who knew and loved them. The Wade home is on Section 16, Curran Township, and is always open to friends. Mr. Wade was born in Adair County, Ky., February 21, 1834, a son of William and Cynthia (Wheeler) Wade, both of Adair County, where the father was born 1808, and she in the same year. The father was a farmer and shoemaker, who spent his life in Kentucky, where he worked at his trade and farmed. His death occurred in 1850, his wife following him in 1852. The Wades are from Yorkshire, England, but they have been in this country for several generations, as the grandfather, Archie Wheeler, was born in North Carolina. On the maternal side, the extraction is from French stock.

Samuel G. Wade was educated in Kentucky and Illinois, working during his boyhood on his father's farm. In February, 1856, he came to Illinois, locating in Mt. Vernon, Jefferson County, where he farmed for a year, then went to Hancock County, living there three years. He then moved to Menard County, to engage in farming for many years. In 1874, he came to Sangamon County, locating near Pleasant Plains, where he resided for twelve years, farming all the while. In 1887, Mr. Wade moved to Curran, where he continued farming until his death. He also owned land in Capital Heights north of Springfield. For one term, he served as School Director of Curran Township, being elected on the Democratic ticket.

The marriage of Mr. Wade took place in Hancock County, August 28, 1859, when he was united with Lucinda Wilson, the Rev. Knight officiating. She was born in Floyd County, Va., October 18, 1839. Her parents came to Hancock County, Ill., to engage in farming, living there until both died, the mother at the advanced age of ninety-three years, and the father at the age of seventy years. Mr. and Mrs. Wade became the parents of nine children, six of whom survive: Alice L., widow of William Poor who died February 2, 1907, leaving Ralph E., Elfie and Frank; Albert, a carpenter of Springfield, married Hattie Barber; Lillie, wife of Harry Trimel of Springfield, has four children.—James H., Paul W., Raymond S. and Russell; Nora E., wife of William Gatton of Dawson, issue.—Glady F.; William E., at home; Lola E., wife of John B. Hamilton, a farmer of Loami, issue.—Francis W. and Howard W.; and Archie, Mary and Charles deceased. In addition to the children and grandchildren present at the Golden Wedding celebration, Mr. Wade had the pleasure of entertaining two of his sisters, so that the party was a remarkable one.

It would be impossible in so short a review as this, to give in detail the many excellent qualities which endeared Mr. and Mrs. Wade to so many. Suffice to say that when trouble came to a neighbor, they were appreciated most. Then it was that they showed their friendship, and gave of both time and sympathy to help the afflicted. Their lives were filled with hard work, they struggled hard to rear their large family, but they lived to enjoy peace and plenty, and the devotion and love of their children and grandchildren.

The Democratic party long had in Mr. Wade a faithful exponent of its principles, although, aside from serving as School Director, he would not accept any office. His death occurred August 25th, 1911, and his remains were interred in Old Salem Cemetery.

WADSWORTH, John T. (deceased).—The mining interests of Sangamon County are of such a nature as to engage the attention of a number of reliable and substantial men. Many of the English residents of Springfield have invested largely in mining properties, and their names are connected with some of the most profitable mines in the vicinity. One of the men who, when living, bore his part in the development of the mines at Athens, Ill., was the late John T. Wadsworth, who at the time of his death held the responsible position of superintendent. He was born in County Durham, England, January 25, 1842, being a son of Samuel and Eliza Wadsworth, both of whose names are familiar to the people of Springfield. The latter and his wife never left England, where they brought up their fourteen children, died and were buried.

John T. Wadsworth attended the schools of his native place and early engaged in mining, which continued his life work. Coming to the United States at the age of twenty years, he located at once at Springfield, which remained his home, with the exception of a short time spent at Athens, where he met his death through accident. His duties as superintendent called him to one of the lower levels, and when he was in the cage coming up, the engineer lost control of the engine, the cage upset, and Mr. Wadsworth was thrown to the bottom of the shaft, being killed instantly. This sad accident, which plunged all of Athens in gloom, occurred October 21, 1901. He had been a stockholder in several mines in the vicinity of Springfield and Greenview, Ill., and was a man of considerable means, although he had earned all he had with his own hands. He was a member of Adinah Lodge No. 91, I. O. O. F., of Streator, Ill. His religious home was in the Methodist Church of Athens.

On November 26, 1867, Mr. Wadsworth married, in Springfield, Ill., Elizabeth A. Charlton, born in Pennsylvania, August 10, 1845, a daughter of Pastor and Lucinda Charlton, natives of County Durham, England, who came to Pennsylvania some years previous to Mrs. Wadsworth's birth. Mr. Charlton died in 1845, and in 1848 his widow married Thos. Hutton. The Hutton family moved from Pennsylvania to Brunswick, Canada, where they lived for ten years, and then to Athens, Ill. Mr. Wadsworth died in Taliula, Ill., and the mother died in Greenview, Ill. Mr. Hutton was connected with one mine in the vicinity of Springfield, also one at Greenview and at Taliula, Ill. There were three sons and one daughter in the Hutton family. No children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wadsworth, but they adopted a son and raised a girl, the former, John H., now making his home with Mrs. Wadsworth. The family residence, at No. 1154 North Fourth Street, is owned by Mrs. Wadsworth. Mr. Wadsworth was a good business man, and as superintendent earned the good will and confidence of his men, who felt his loss very deeply. He had the sterling traits of character that have made Englishmen such good colonists in the world, and his memory is held in deepest respect throughout Sangamon County by those who knew him.

WAKEFIELD, Samuel O.—The Wakefield family was closely identified with pioneer history in Illinois, for its members came to the State many years ago, where several generations have been born. These grand old pioneers accomplished more than they realized at the time, when they braved the dangers of the long journey, the uncertainty of life and the dangers from the Indians and wild beasts. That they did succeed, our present wonderful development proves beyond doubt. An excellent representative of this pioneer family is Samuel O. Wakefield, a prosperous farmer of Section 33, Williams Township, who was born in Clinton County, Ill., June 1, 1851, a son of Charles and Mary (Lowe) Wakefield, natives of the same place.

Charles Wakefield's father was born in Georgia, and came from that State to Illinois at a very early date, becoming the owner of a large estate in Clinton County. While he was still a new resident of that county, the Black Hawk War broke out, and he hastened to enlist, to help protect his family and the community from Indian atrocities. In 1865 Charles Wakefield, who had married and become the father of several children, moved with his family to Sangamon County, locating on farm land south of Dawson, a year after his arrival there. This continued his home for three years, but he then came to Williams Township, securing the farm now the property of Samuel O. Wakefield. This continued to be the home of himself and wife until their deaths, both passing away in 1895. They had nine children, five sons and four daughters, four of whom survive: Samuel O., Millard, Hatson, and Nancy Ann, all of whom live together on the home property.

Samuel O. Wakefield was educated in Sangamon County and during his boyhood worked on the farm he now owns, learning thoroughly the calling he has followed all his life. The Methodist Church holds his membership, although he attends the Union Mission Church of Spaulding. In politics he is a Republican, but cannot be induced to accept public office. He has never married. He is pleasant and genial, has many friends. He takes great pride in his family history and the land his father bought and handed down to him. While conservative in his ideas, he favors good roads and other improvements which are for the best interests of his community, and is one of the reliable, substantial men of his township.

WALDRON, James, now living retired from active life at his pleasant home at 2015 Peoria Road, Springfield, is a representative English-American citizen and is interested in every measure affecting the general welfare of his community. He is a native of Worcestershire, England, born April 25, 1836, a son of John and Mary (Nicklin) Waldron, also born in England. The father was a mine superintendent by occupation and he and his wife were parents of four sons and four daughters, of whom two sons are now surviving, Thomas, living at Scranton, Kan., and James, of Springfield.

In boyhood James Waldron received a rudimentary education in the public schools of his native land, and while yet a boy began learning the trade of miner, which he followed all his active life. He worked many years at mining in England, rose to the position of a foreman, and eventually became a mine superintendent. In 1851, being at that time thirty-five years of age, he sailed from Liverpool to America, landing in New York City. He came on to Bloomington, Ill., where he worked three years, then came to Barclay, Sangamon County. He followed mining in that town three years, then removed to Streator, and two years later to Dawson, where he remained three years before coming to Springfield, which has since been his home. He has lived retired from active life since 1891 and owns the home he now occupies, where he has lived a number of years. He was at one time connected with the old North Shift, and was for several years engaged as Mine Examiner.

Mr. Waldron was married in England, December 25, 1854, to Miss Sophia Southall, also a native of that country, born August 8, 1836, whose parents spent their entire lives there. No children were born of this union. Mr. Waldron is recognized as a useful and public-spirited citizen, well known as a man of integrity and stability. He is a member of the Third Presbyterian Church and more or less interested in politics espouses the cause of the Republican party. He has many firm friends in the city, which has been his home for the past twenty years.

WALKER, Andrew.—It is difficult to do full justice to the veterans of the Civil War, for no mere words can ever repay them for what they endured or risked in the brace defense of their country. Many of the bravest soldiers were foreign born, but, having come to the United States in search of the liberty not found in their native land, were willing to go out in defense of their adopted country. An honored veteran of Springfield who belongs to this class is Andrew Walker, born on the Isle of Man, August 12, 1840, a son of John W. and Margaret (Gibson) Walker. The father was born in Scotland, and by occupation was a soap manufacturer. Not satisfied with conditions on the Isle of Man, he came to the United States, settling in New York State, where he resided for many years. Later he came west to Chicago, where he engaged in manufacturing soap, living there until his death. The mother died when Andrew Walker was but an infant, so the latter has no recollection of her.

Andrew Walker went to school in Elmira, N. Y., where the family resided, and did his first work on a farm in that vicinity, leaving home when twenty years of age. Upon coming west, he stopped in Chicago, and then went south to New Orleans, in 1856. There he worked at odd jobs, finally securing employment on a steamerboat, where he learned to be an engineer. For three years he was on a boat that ran from New Orleans to Memphis. In 1858 he came to Springfield, at first working on a farm. During the famous Douglas-Lincoln campaign, he heard much of the talk of the times, and was greatly interested in it. Going to New Orleans again, at the end of a year, he worked on the Mississippi Central Railroad as a fireman, continuing with this company until the outbreak of the war, when he came back to Springfield. There he obtained employment with the Illinois Central Railroad Company as fireman, but a short time later went to Missouri, where he was fireman on the Missouri and Northern Railroad. A year later he returned to Springfield for the third time, and enlisted in the Twenty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being mustered in at Natchez, Miss. He participated in the battles of Pittsburg Landing and Forts Henry and Donelson, serving under General John A. Logan. He was honorably discharged at the close of his service. Coming back from the war, he farmed for a year, then entered the Illinois Foundry as engineer, leaving there after a year to become engineer at the State House, which position he held for seventeen years. For a year he was in Spokane, Wash., but since his retirement from active duties, has elected to make Springfield his home. Needless to say, he is a staunch Republican, and has represented his party in the City Council as Alderman from the First Ward for five years, and did his full duty in that body, as he always has, whether in private life or on the battlefield. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow, having joined the order twenty-five years ago, and belonging to Springfield Lodge No. 6, and is also a member of the Modern Woodmen. Since Stephenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R., was established, he has been one of its most enthusiastic members. The Third Presbyterian Church, of Springfield, holds his membership and has his hearty support.

Mr. Walker was born in Springfield, April 7, 1868, to Nancy Simmons, born and reared in Springfield. Her parents were natives of Ireland and died when she was a small child. Two daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Walker: Emma, deceased, and Anna E., wife of Cyrus Chinkie, foreman of the plate department of the Illinois Watch Company. Mr. and Mrs. Chinkie have three sons: Harry, Walter and Robert, all employees of the Illinois Watch Company. Mr. Walker owns his beautiful residence, one of the finest in Springfield, at No. 1110 North Thirteenth Street, and other pieces of city realty, as well as rich farming land in the vicinity of Springfield. He is widely known, his association with the State House having brought him into contact with men from all over the State, and all who know him like the pleasant, genial man, who has seen so much and has been so closely identified with the earlier history of Springfield.

WALKER, Benjamin Franklin (deceased), who for many years carried on farming near Breckenridge, Sangamon County, was prominent in public affairs in his community and was much respected by all. He made his own way in life, his father dying when the son was a boy and leaving a large family. Mr. Walker was born in Jay County, Ind., November 9, 1853, and was a son of Charles Walker and his wife, farming people, who had seven sons and four daughters, all of whom except one were living at the time of the father’s death. The parents moved from Indiana to Schuyler County, Ill., and after the father’s death the widow and children all worked to keep the family together. They prospered well and Benjamin F. remained at home until his marriage to Sarah Stobaugh, of Christian County, Ill., the ceremony being performed by Rev. Eli Matthew. After his marriage Mr. Walker located in Sangamon County, where he spent the remainder of his life. His mother died in 1903.

Mr. Walker was married at Sharpsburg, Ill., to Jennie Stobaugh, born in Sangamon County, September 7, 1869, daughter of Andrew and Mary Frances (Nell) Stobaugh, the former born in Iowa, January 20, 1834, and the latter born in Kentucky, December 19, 1847. Mr. and Mrs. Stobaugh were married in Sangamon County, August 12, 1868, and became parents of two children: James William, died at the age of thirteen years, October 11, 1884, and Mrs. Walker.

Four children were born to Mr. Walker, all of whom survive, namely: Charles Andrew, April 18, 1892; Elsie Ethel, December 22, 1894; Jesse Daniel, October 30, 1895; Iva Dot, October 26, 1897. The children have all attended the Breckenridge School.

In politics Mr. Walker was a Democrat. He served as Road Commissioner and as Trustee of the school at Breckenridge. He was a member of the local camp of Woodmen and was well known in social and fraternal circles. He belonged to the South Fork Christian Church, as did the other members of the family. He was an industrious and prosperous farmer and owned 195 acres of land in Section 5, Cooper Township, which he had brought to a high state of cultivation. Mr. Walker died August 24, 1906, and his widow now rents her land; but she and the children continue to reside in the old home. He was actively interested in the public welfare and prosperity and was held in high esteem by his fellow citizens, among whom he has been greatly missed.

WALKER, Norton A., one of Sangamon County’s most reliable and highly respected farmers, has developed a fine farm and has brought it to a high state of cultivation. Mr. Walker was born in Henry County, Ill., March 28, 1856, and is a son of Charles and Mary Ann (Dugan) Walker, the former born in Ohio, September 20, 1825, and the latter born January 30, 1824. The parents were farmers and were married in Ohio, January 1, 1844, soon after which they removed to Schuyler County, Ill., where the father died in 1872, and the mother, who died on the farm where her son Norton A. now lives, was buried at South Fork Cemetery, February 23, 1905. The grandparents of Norton A. Walker were deceased at the time he was born.

Mr. Walker received his education in the country schools of Schuyler County and has since been engaged in farming. He has been industrious and ambitious and has spent little time in recreation, being fully occupied with his work. As a child he accompanied his parents to Fulton County and remained there until March 1, 1876, came to Sangamon County and located one mile north of his present home, where he spent six years. After his father’s death (which occurred when the boy was sixteen years of age) he and a brother paid a debt of $800. He helped support his mother and her five small children until he reached his majority, since which time he has been able to acquire and pay for 400 acres of land. He now owns 200 acres and paid an average of $75 per acre for it, although it is now worth $200 per acre. He has been most successful in his agricultural operations and owns two shares in the Farmers’ Elevator Company, of Breckenridge. He is a Democrat in politics and has served two years as School Director. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen and he and his wife belong to the Loyal Americans. Mr. Walker belongs to the Christian Church and his wife to the Catholic Church. He is a man of considerable influence in his community and is actively interested in all that concerns his people. His success is the result of his own efforts and he has shown excellent judgment in the management of his affairs, adding to his financial interests from time to time as circumstances warranted.

May 1, 1878, Mr. Walker was married, at Springfield, Ill., by Father Brady, to Catherine Haney, a native of County Galway, Ireland, born in June, 1857, daughter of Thomas and Mary Ann (Welsh) Haney, both of whom spent their entire lives in Ireland. The father of Mrs. Mary Haney came to the United States and participated in the War of 1812. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Walker, namely: Mary Ann, born February 23, 1880, married Henry Jett and they live in Sangamon County; and have two children, Chelsia and Oregin; Sarah, born October 25, 1882, married Ben Wilson, of Christian County, and they have one child, Ivo; George, born July 25, 1884, married Zella Spiker, and they have one child, Francis; Barbara E., born August 3, 1886, married Timon Robinson; Katherine M., born August 3, 1889, married Leslie Jones, and they... live in Sangamon County; William A., born August 5, 1802, and Ruth M., born February 6, 1805, live at home.

WALLACE, Joseph (deceased), lawyer and author, who lived in Springfield, Ill., nearly half a century, was born in Hunter’s Bottom, Gallatin (now Carroll) County, Ky., September 30, 1834. He was a son of James and Mary (Morris) Wallace, both natives of Kentucky. Both grandfathers of Joseph Wallace emigrated from Virginia to Kentucky, about 1700. Two brothers of Mrs. James Wallace, George and Walker Morris, were prominent members of the Bar in Kentucky. James Wallace and his wife had five sons, of whom two survive.

At the age of two years, Joseph Wallace was brought by his parents to Jefferson County, Ind., where he grew up on a farm and enjoyed the educational advantages offered in the country schools. At the age of eighteen years, he entered Franklin College, in Franklin County, Ind., where he remained several terms, although he did not graduate. When twenty-two years old he began the study of law in the office of Judge Charles E. Walker, of Madison, Ind., and continued his studies in the offices of Messrs. Stuart & Edwards, then one of the leading law firms of Springfield and the State of Illinois. In February, 1858, Mr. Wallace was admitted to the Bar, by the Supreme Court of the State. During his first years of residence in Springfield he lived with an uncle (by marriage), William C. Grimsley, an old-time merchant. In politics Mr. Wallace was a Democrat of the old-school type, and although never active in political affairs, held several public offices of honor and trust, in which his knowledge of the law and scrupulous devotion to the interests of the people made his service of great value.

Mr. Wallace served as Justice of the Peace from 1866 to 1874, and in 1880 was elected a member of the City Common Council of Springfield. He early developed a taste and talent for literary pursuits, and in recognition of his culture and scholarship was honored, in 1894, by having the degree of A. M. conferred on him by Franklin College. His first work that attracted much attention was a sketch of the life and public services of Edward D. Baker, a 12-mo. volume of 144 pages, published in 1870. In 1875 Mr. Wallace wrote a “Historical Outline of Illinois;” in 1880, while a member of the City Council, he delivered an address before that body on the life and public services of Judge Stephen T. Logan; then lately deceased; in 1884 he was the principal author of a Revised City Code, published by authority of the Council; in 1885 Mr. Wallace wrote for the Illinois State Register, a series of Biographical sketches of United States Senators from Illinois, and his last literary work was assisting in the preparation of “The Past and Present of the City of Springfield and Sangamon County,” in the third chapter of which, entitled “The Prominent and Illustrious Dead of the City of Springfield,” are found brief biographies of several men who were for a time residents of Springfield, and whose names are well known to the State and Nation. The principal literary production of Mr. Wallace, which is of interest to all Americans, is “The History of Illinois and Louisiana under the French Rule,” which is an elaborate history of the Mississippi Valley during the first century of its exploration and occupation by white men, published in 1863. This work is clear and concise in style and Mr. Wallace was most careful in his selection of authorities. He was a member of the Illinois Historical Society from its organization and read a paper at the annual meeting held in January, 1903, on “Fort De Chartres; its Origin, Growth and Decline,” which was published that year in the proceedings.

Mr. Wallace was a grandson of Reverend John Wallace, an early Baptist preacher in Kentucky, was educated in the Baptist faith and at the time of his death was a member of the Central Baptist Church of Springfield.

January 14, 1864, Mr. Wallace was married, in Kentucky, to Miss Mary Elizabeth Hoagland, of Hunter’s Bottom, Ky., who was descended from one of the old Knickerbocker families of New York City, a lady of culture and literary taste, and a graduate of Science Hill Female Academy, of Shelbyville, Ky., where she spent three years under the instruction of Mrs. Julia A. Tevis, a celebrated educator. Mrs. Wallace was born October 23, 1837, daughter of Okey and Mary (Giltner) Hoagland, the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of Bourbon County, Ky. No children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wallace. Mrs. Wallace now resides at 710 West Monroe St., Springfield. The death of Mr. Wallace occurred August 10, 1904, at his home on West Monroe Street, Springfield, and he was buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery, of that city.

WALLACE, William W., a venerable resident of Springfield who has many interesting recollections of early days there, when present conditions were not even dreamed of, was born in Prince Edward County, Va., June 19, 1830, a son of Julian C. and Eveline F. (Godsey) Wallace, natives of Virginia. The former was born January 3, 1816, and the latter, April 12, 1812. The father was a shoemaker by trade, who, looking for better conditions, left Virginia in 1830, for Franklin County, Ky., making the trip by wagon. This State continued his home until his death on March 16, 1881. His wife survived him only until November 6th, of the same year. One son of Julian C., Charles R. Wallace, enlisted in 1862, in the Union Army, and fought bravely until the close of the war. Edward A. Wallace, another son, enlisted the same year as his brother, was taken prisoner at the battle of Shiloh, and incarcerated at Libby Prison and Andersonville, spending nine months in all in these two prisons.

William W. Wallace attended the subscription schools of Kentucky, at the same time helping his father until he was twenty-one years of age. He continued farming until 1858, in his native State, but in that year came to Riverton, Ill., where he took a contract to cut 100 cords of timber. For a year he worked in the timber, and in a saw-mill, and then for five months worked on a farm, when he returned to the timber, to engage with Amos Grubb, his association with him continued until 1860.

Mr. Wallace was married in Franklin County, Ky., July 18, 1855, to Ann C. Woodruff, born in Franklin County, daughter of John and Mary A. (Petty) Woodruff, natives of John and Kentucky, where the father was a wagon-maker. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wallace: Jane C. Bashaw; Isabelle Dickerson; John W., a farmer near Bissell, Ill.; Charles H., a farmer; Sarah C. Gleson; Nettie Johnson, on a farm near Ransom, Kan.; Louis A. in the Racine Sattelry Plow Works; Frank E. also at the plow works; Mary Drendel and A. O., who died February 7, 1906. Mr. Wallace is a Republican and belongs to the Christian Church, living out, in his simple, steadfast life, the faith he professes in his religious connections. He is a kindly man, who has made many friends during his residence in the community, and his children have made their mark wherever they have located.

WALSH, Harry T. (deceased).—Only those whose attention has been called to the matter understand character of the engineer’s work or how much responsibility rests on his shoulders. The safety of thousands lies in his care, and seldom is it that he fails to live up to the trust reposed in him and his skill. The late Harry G. Walsh, formerly an engineer with the Wabash system, was representative of his class. He was always at his post, conscientious and faithful, and when he passed away everyone connected with the road felt that it had lost one of its most valued employees. Mr. Walsh was born in Springfield, December 13, 1868, being a son of Patrick and Mary (O’Connor) Walsh, natives of County Cork, Ireland. Patrick Walsh was for years a leading grocer of Springfield and well-known in the city.

Harry T. Walsh was educated in a parochial school in Springfield, and early became connected with the Wabash Railroad. For years he was on the Danville and Springfield Division, and was well known along his route. In 1894 he left the employ of the Wabash Railroad and was employed four years by the State as Engineer of the electric power plant at the State Prison in Joliet. On leaving there he entered the employ of the Illinois Steel Mills at Joliet, and was there injured in an accident which caused his death May 25, 1900. His remains were laid in Calvary Cemetery. An earnest Catholic, he belonged to the Church of the Immaculate Conception. Fraternally he was a member of the Modern Woodmen and in politics was a Democrat.

Mr. Walsh was married in Springfield, Ill., December 15, 1891, to Edna Page, of that city, daughter of John and Alice (Demars) Page. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Walsh were: Harry T., born April 4, 1899; John E., born January 3, 1895, and Gladys M., born September 3, 1898. Mrs. Walsh owns the home at No. 1427 South Eighth Street, where the family entertain their many friends. They are well and favorably known in their neighborhood and Mrs. Walsh is highly esteemed for her many excellent qualities.

WALSH, Michael, an enterprising and public-spirited citizen of Springfield, Ill., was born in Bethalto, Madison County, Ill., July 29, 1869, a son of John and Mary (Gards) Walsh, both natives of County Cork, Ireland. The father was a farmer, coal miner and business man. John Walsh cast his first Presidential vote for Buchanan, having emigrated to America some years before. He was married at Alton, Ill., and later removed to Springfield, where he and his wife were for many years devout members of the Church of the Immaculate Conception and active in church work. Mr. Walsh died October 14, 1897, and his widow now resides at 420 South Ninth Street, Springfield. They were parents of ten children, of whom three sons and three daughters now survive, and Michael is the third oldest.

In boyhood Michael Walsh attended St. Mary’s Catholic School, of Springfield and at the age of eighteen years left school to go to work. He was employed for a time in the rolling mills, later worked for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, worked two years for the Citizens Street and Electric Light Company, and spent seven years in the employ of Patrick Giblin. About 1897 he bought the Jefferson Hotel in Springfield, and after conducting same about five years sold the property. He is a staunch Democrat in politics, although never desirous of holding public office. He is energetic and honest in business and enjoys the confidence of those who have dealings with him. He is an earnest worker in church affairs and belongs to the Church of the Immaculate Conception and to the Catholic Order of Foresters. He is a member of the Order of Eagles and the Order of Owls, and is of a sociable disposition, being popular among his friends.

Mr. Walsh was married, in Springfield, November 15, 1883, to Miss Mary Wilson, who was born in Springfield, daughter of Thomas Wilson. Her father is dead and her mother resides in Chicago. They were parents of three daughters and one son, and the latter is deceased. The following five children were born to Mr. Walsh and his wife: one who died in childhood; Thomas, attending St. Francis College, at Quincy, Ill.; Michael, attending St.
Mary’s School, at Springfield; Mary and Elizabeth.

WARD, Jeremiah (deceased).—The keenness of perception, brilliancy of intellect, and capability of the Irish race are generally recognized as potent factors in the advancement of its representatives in all branches of endeavor. Those of them who come to America find a congenial atmosphere in which to attain desirable success, and many annually avail themselves of the advantages here offered. One of those who for many years made Springfield his place of residence and field of action before death claimed him, was the late Jeremiah Ward, whose activities in the lumber trade are still remembered with interest. Mr. Ward was born in Ireland, a son of William and Rosa Ward, also natives of Ireland. A brother, Neil Ward, and a sister, Mrs. Mary Murray, still reside in Springfield.

Having grown up in Ireland, Mr. Ward lived with his parents until he came to the United States. He located in Springfield, where he became identified with the lumber trade, developing his business to large proportions. He was a Catholic in religious views. He was actively interested in the affairs of the community, although he had no desire for public advancement.

Mr. Ward was married in Springfield, to Mary Mathune, who has made Springfield her home since she came there from St. Louis at the age of twelve years. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ward: Rosa, born December 2, 1866, lives with her mother; Sophia, born January 1, 1874, also living with her mother; Jeremiah, born April 7, 1877, and Ruth Buckingham. The family residence is at No. 504 North Ninth Street. The Wards are well and favorably known in Springfield, and are highly esteemed in the Catholic Church, to which they belong.

WARREN, Hooper. (Vol. I, pp. 577-578.)

WATERS, Daniel.—Sangamon County has a number of pleasant communities in which one may obtain many urban advantages without sacrificing those of a country existence. In Rochester there are very desirable conditions, a fact recognized by many most substantial men, who have located there upon retiring from more active life. One of these is Daniel Waters, born two and one-half miles from Harper’s Ferry, Va., September 14, 1850, a son of Levi Waters, born on the east side of the bay, in Maryland, May 6, 1796. The Waters family is a very old one, founded in Virginia prior to the Revolution. Levi Waters married Sarah Dutch, born at Harper’s Ferry, in 1790. They died in Virginia. The mother died in 1850, but the husband survived until 1857. Neither ever rode on a railroad train. Five children were born to them: John F., George W., Daniel; Susau C., wife of Richard Russell, and Maria L., wife of Leander Bates, all of whom died in Virginia except Mrs. Bates and Daniel.

Daniel Waters attended school in Virginia and worked for his father. In 1852 he came to Sangamon County, settling five miles east of Rochester, where he engaged to work on a farm. Later he began farming for himself on a rented farm, and in 1864 bought a farm of 100 acres at Buckhart, Cooper Township, forty acres of it was in timber. Later he sold that and bought 280 acres near Buckhart and lived there until 1896, excepting two years at Springfield to educate his children. In 1896 he went to Edinburg, but in 1904 moved to Rochester, where he built his present beautiful home. He still owns two farms in Sangamon County amounting to 344 acres. He is heavily interested in Pullman, Wash., with his son, in land and furniture business.

On February 9, 1862, he was married at his wife’s birthplace, by the Rev. J. P. Dimmitt, of the Methodist Church, to Harriet V. Miller, born in Buckhart, Cooper Township, October 13, 1840. Her father, John C. Miller, was born in Loudoun County, Va., October 19, 1812, and came with his father to Sangamon County in 1855, entering 2,100 acres of land, now comprised in Cooper Township. He married Martha Melvine Sattley, born in Rochester Township, September 5, 1839, who still survives him. Sattley owned many acres of land in early days. The present town of Rochester was located on the portion where still stands the old log house in which he lived, and on this land stood the tree which tradition says sheltered Abraham Lincoln when he made his first speech. Mrs. Waters is one of the following children: George H.; Mrs. Waters; H. A. Waters; Mrs. James H.; Mrs. Russell; Mrs. Brimmer; Mrs. George Lucas; Eliza E., wife of John Baldwin; Mary A., wife of S. J. Prather. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Waters; Anna A., born December 19, 1862, died June 9, 1893, was the wife of J. J. Their parents spent their entire lives in Ireland. James Waters came to the United States in 1856 and spent two years in New Orleans, and then came to Springfield, Ill., where he met and married Mary Murphy, who had come to America in the same ship, although they were not acquainted at the time. He died in Springfield, July 23, 1883, and his widow died August 14, 1916. Both are buried in Calvary Cemetery.

Mr. Waters was married in Auburn, February 15, 1887, to Miss Sarah Pletz, who was born in Yorktown, Pa., November 28, 1854, daughter of Benjamin and Barbara (Wetz) Pletz, the father born in Pennsylvania, September 14, 1820, and the mother in Amsterdam, Germany, July 21, 1828. Mr. Pletz was a carpenter by trade and moved from Pennsylvania to Illinois in 1856. He died in Springfield, January 23, 1890, and his wife died May 29, 1890. Talbott, who was born in Indiana, daughter of Benjamin Talbott, also a native of Indiana, and a taner by trade.

As a boy George T. Watson attended Lincoln School, in Springfield. He was always fond of ball-games, dancing and music, and as a boy was a violin player of considerable local repute. The house which was born was next to the Lincoln residence, so that as a child Mr. Watson daily saw Abraham Lincoln and was a playmate of the latter’s son Robert, knowing the entire family well. After leaving school he learned the trade of carpenter and during the Civil War was employed in Springfield making cartridges and was a member of the town’s fire company. He is a member of the Woodmen of America, and in politics is a Republican. He has been fairly prosperous in a business way, has many friends, and is generally liked and respected.

Bell also a native of Springfield, and became the head of a large and successful business in Springfield and the Union Army citizens.

The father of Nicholas Watts came from New York to Illinois at an early date and took up government land in Sangamon County, where he died. He was a native of Massachusetts and the father of sixteen children, nine of whom settled in Sangamon County. He was of Welsh descent. The father of Elizabeth Palladay was born in France and emigrated to New York, later moved to Sangamon County, Ill., and died in Bloomington, Ill. They were parents of three sons and two daughters, all of whom are deceased. Jacob Weaver was educated in Pickaway County, Ohio, where his parents lived several years before coming to Illinois, and during his boyhood he helped his father with the farm work, at which he continued all his life. He came to Sangamon County one year after his marriage and for fifteen years resided five miles south of Williamsville, then came to the farm now occupied by his widow and daughter. He purchased 160 acres of land and developed it into a fine farm. He was an industrious farmer, a good neighbor and a kind husband and father, and endeavored to do his full duty in all the relations of life. He labored kindly in the neighborhood and left a reputation for strict honesty and integrity. He was a Presbyterian in religious belief and active in promoting the general welfare of his community. He was always a Democrat in politics, and a public-spirited, useful citizen.

Mr. Weaver was married in Pickaway County, Ohio, October 8, 1845, to Mary A. Dean, born in Virginia, June 20, 1823, and her parents were also natives of Virginia, who were early settlers of Pickaway County, Ohio. The Dean family lived seven years in Ohio, then moved to Sangamon County and purchased land, where the father carried on farming until his death. There were ten children in the family, of whom but two survive. Mrs. Weaver, and her brother George, who lives near Quincy, Ill. George Dean was at one time a State Senator in Illinois. Three children were born to Mr. Weaver and his wife, of whom but one survives, Alice, wife of James Lewis, who has two children. William, Mr. and Mrs. Weaver's son, manages her 166 acres in Section 11, Williams Township, which yields her a good income. Mr. Weaver died on the farm May 15, 1888. Mrs. Weaver is interested in church work and is a member of the Methodist Church. She has the warm regard of a number of friends and is esteemed by all who know her.

WEAVER, John B., one of the most prominent and successful attorneys of Springfield, and candidate on the Republican ticket for the responsible office of County Judge, has been a resident of the city since 1860, and has established a large practice. He was born in Montgomery County, Mo., April 8, 1833, son of Joseph R. and Harriet (Baker) Weaver. The father, who is a civil engineer, was born at Rushford, N. Y., October 13, 1812, and now lives at Freeport, Ill. He came to Freeport in 1857, was married there and later moved to Missouri, where he lived until 1878, then returned to Freeport, where he has since resided. His wife, who was born in Kentucky, January 15, 1842, is deceased.

The father of Joseph R. Weaver was a native of Kentucky and served in the Black Hawk War. He was a playmate and boyhood friend of Daniel Boone and Samuel Kenton, and fought Indians side by side with them. He was the first settler of Freeport, where he erected the first building.

John B. Weaver was educated in the common and high schools of Freeport and Northwestern University, of Chicago, receiving his legal training at the latter institution. His boyhood was spent on a farm and he has always been fond of outdoor life and sports. His entire life has been spent in Illinois, with the exception of the first five years. He lived in Freeport from 1873 until 1900, then moved to Springfield and engaged in the active practice of his profession, in which he has been very successful and is now serving as Police Magistrate. They own the beautiful home where they reside at 556 South Glenwood Avenue, Springfield, and are well known in social circles.

WEAVER, Samuel R.—The Weaver family has been well known in Sangamon County for more than half a century, and various members are given mention in this work. The reader is referred especially to that of William H. Weaver. Samuel R. Weaver is a native of Hagerstown, Md., born April 25, 1833, a son of Jonathan and Mary Ann Weaver, natives of that place and the father a carpenter by trade. The father worked in his native town sometime before coming to Illinois, first located at Mt. Morris and there he became a cabinet-maker and undertaker, and later brought his family to Springfield. He followed his trade in the city and helped erect some of the fine buildings of the early days there. Some of these buildings were handsome residences and among them was included the old Freeman residence. His brother, George Wise Weaver, was a mason by trade and assisted in erecting the State House. The latter was also from Maryland and made the trip to the new home with a wagon, as did his brother. Jonathan Weaver lived in Springfield about ten years and later engaged in farming in Cotton Hill Township, which he continued until his death, November 14, 1890. The mother died some years before the father. They were par-etts of five sons, of whom four now survive: William, the oldest, of Cotton Hill Township; Sametl R., whose name heads this sketch; John L., a farmer, who lives with his brother Samuel; James B. is a resident of Emid, Okla.; George, who was the first-born, is deceased. A brother of Jonathan, David Weaver, was a soldier in the Civil War and starved to death in Anderson-sville Prison.

In boyhood Mr. Weaver began working in the brick yard of John Lauterbach and also worked for Henry Miller. In this capacity he helped make some of the brick that went into the State House and also the Home of the Friendless. He attended school during the winter months and most of his education was received in the Third Ward School. Later he engaged in farming in Cotton Hill Township, near Grove City, and also near New City. He has forty acres of good farm land on Section 3 of Cotton Hill Township, where he has lived the past sixteen years, and has met with gratifying success in the enterprise. He is an energetic and practical farmer, as well as a good businessman, and has the respect of the community where he lives. He takes an active interest in local af-airs, is a Republican in political views, and is a useful and devout member of the Methodist Church.

Mr. Weaver was married in Springfield, March 6, 1853, to Elizabeth Dewees, who was born in Indiana in 1836, a daughter of David and Nancy Dewees. Her father was a farmer by occupation and came to Sangamon County at an early day. He is now living with a son in Christian County and the mother is deceased. They had children as follows: Charles, a farmer of Christian County; John, on a farm near Glenarm; William A., born January 17, 1856, lives at home. By his second marriage he had children as follows: Bertha M., George E., Mary R., Vena A. Mr. Weaver is a Methodist and all the family are active members of that church. He is a Republican in politics. He stands well with his neighbors and has many warm friends in the county.

WEBER, Charles E.—There are men in the world who direct their lives according to the Golden Rule, and in consequence can face their fellow men and rest assured that they have carried out the teachings of their religious faith. One of the older business men of Springfield, and one who made an enviable record for himself during the Civil War, is Charles E. Weber, born in Springfield, February 23, 1845, a son of John A. and Mary J. (Long) Weber. The father was born in Galena, Mo., September 15, 1811, while his wife was born in Greensburg, Ky., in 1823. The grandfather on the paternal side came to Springfield from Missouri, at a time when the present city was represented by a few frame houses. Charles E. Weber often went duck hunting where the Court House now stands, being very fond of all outdoor sports. John A. Weber was a butcher and was engaged in business in Springfield for a number of years, dying there.

Reared in Springfield, Mr. Weber received a somewhat limited education, as he was put to work in a brickyard when only ten years old. Later on he embarked in a livery business, which he conducted for forty-eight years, being one of the best known men in his line. From December 28, 1863, when he enlisted in the Tenth Illinois Cavalry, under Colonel Wick-ershaw, until the close of the war, he was a brave soldier, participating in a number of impor-tant engagements and was wounded in battle.

Mr. Weber was married at Whitehall, Greene County, Ill., August 25, 1859, to Sarah A. Bates-man, born at Whitehall, December 25, 1850. Her father was an old pioneer of Illinois coming to the State when there were few residents aside from the Indians. Mr. and Mrs. Weber had two children: Fannie, born October 29, 1872, and George H., born May 15, 1876. Mr. Weber has always been fond of stock and is an excellent judge of horses. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen, Lodge No. 114. He and his family belong to the Methodist Church, and are active workers in it. All his life he has been a Repub-

Weber, Charles Eldridge (deceased), was one of Sangamon County’s most highly esteemed farmers and spent his entire life in the county, where he was born, June 20, 1855. He was a son of John B. and Sarah (Wolts) Weber, the former a native of Virginia. John B. Weber was a cabinet-maker in early life but later devoted himself to farming. He was one of the early settlers of Sangamon County and there his death occurred. He was married twice, his second wife being Nancy Drennan.

Charles E. Weber spent his boyhood on a farm and attended the schools of Pawnee. He won the entire respect and esteem of his fel-

WEBER, Eli.—Many of those interested in agricultural pursuits in Sangamon County make their homes in nearby towns or cities, leasing their property in charge of a superintendent, while they devote their energies to other lines of activity. An example of this method is found in Eli Weber, owner of an excellent tract of land in Sangamon County, who has been engaged in other lines of endeavor in Pawnee, where he makes his home. Weber was born in Pawnee Township, Sangamon County, Ill., April 26, 1871, a son of George P. and Vien-

John B. Weber, the grandfather of Eli, was born April 7, 1810, in Shepherdstown, Va., and came to Illinois at an early day, locating in Sangamon County, where he died in 1858. In 1849 he had gone to California during the gold rush, but returned in 1851. His wife, Sarah Woltz, was born March 20, 1812, in Shepherdstown, Va., and died in Sangamon County, Au-

Charles E. Weber married in Sangamon County November 13, 1862, daughter of James M. and Nancy (Drennan) Nuckolls, the former of whom died in 1866, and the latter is now living at Glenarm. Mr. Nuckolls was for many years in business in Sangamon County, conducting a saw-mill and running a threshing machine. Mrs. Nuckolls’ father was a native of North Carolina, but died in Sangamon County to which he had emigrated in boyhood. Four children were born to Mr. Weber and his wife: James E., born May 11, 1852, married Bertha A. Brown, is a farmer by occupation, and they live at Divernon and have three children—Geraldine, Nelson, and Josephine; Edith, born December 25, 1853, is unmarried and lives at home; Mabel, born May 21, 1855, also unmarried and living at home; George H., born July 16, 1853, unmarried. Mrs. Weber is well known in the community and now owns the farm where she resides. Mr. Weber’s death occurred in Nebraska, where he had made a trip. In November, 1901. He had served in a hospital and his body was brought home, being interred in Oak Ridge Cemetery. He was a man of pleasing personality and had made many friends, who sincerely mourned his loss.

George P. Weber enlisted April 15, 1863, in Company B, 11th Missouri Infantry, and on
HISTORY OF SANGAMON COUNTY

May 1, 1804, at St. Louis, received his honorable discharge, on account of disability. At the time of his discharge he was First Lieutenant of the regiment. On the way home the regiment was presented by the citizens of St. Louis with a fine stand of colors and floral pieces, and also given a grand banquet. His brother Andrew J. was a Colonel when but twenty-two years of age, and on June 29, 1863, before Vicksburg, was wounded in the head, dying the next day, June 30th. His remains were escorted to the steamer by the whole brigade and were sent to his home in Springfield, where he was buried at Oak Ridge Cemetery. Col. Weber was universally esteemed and beloved, and there was much sorrow over his early death. The "A. J. Weber Post" is named in his honor.

Elli Weber received his preliminary education in the country schools and later attended the Illinois Wesleyan College at Bloomington. He remained at home until nineteen years of age, at which time he was married and located on a farm near Pawnee, which consists of 750 acres, and on which he is now erecting the finest residence in Pawnee Township. The home place consists of 440 acres. With the exception of two years spent in Nebraska, Mr. Weber has always resided in Sangamon County, being engaged in farming and stockraising, as well as in the undertaking business, but he has retired from the latter during the past few years. He has been prominent in public matters in this section for quite a period, serving as Supervisor of Pawnee Township for four years, as School Director and as Highway Commissioner. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen and the Masons, while his religious connection is with the Golden Rule Church. He adheres to the principles of the Republican party, but for years has cast his vote for the man rather than the party.

Mr. Weber was married in Rochester, Ill., January 2, 1890, to Arminda Shepherd, who was born August 9, 1870, in Pawnee Township, daughter of John H. and Ann (Pyle) Shepherd, the former of whom was born at Woodside, Ill., February 21, 1853, and died April 8, 1903, after a life spent in agricultural pursuits, and the latter of whom was born in St. Clair County, Ill., August 13, 1844, and died at Charleston November 20, 1888, both being buried at Oak Ridge Cemetery. They were married October 6, 1869. Mrs. Weber's paternal grandfather was born June 28, 1806, in Jefferson County, Va., and was married July 3, 1834 to Ellen Miller, who was born June 24, 1813, in Shepherdstown, Va. Both died in Sangamon County, Ill. Grandfather Pyle was a native of Kentucky, in which state he was born October 12, 1806, and he died in St. Clair County, Ill., March 3, 1852, where he had spent his life in farming and stockraising. To Mr. and Mrs. Weber there have been born two children: Ann May, born February 12, 1891, and Bert, born March 26, 1885, both living at home with their parents.

WEBER, William Shepherd, a farmer and merchant living at Zenobia, Pawnee Township, Sangamon County, has been engaged in business at his present location the past forty-two years, and is well and favorably known in the community. He was born in Springfield March 11, 1844, one of the six children born to Philip W. and Amanda M. (Shepherd) Weber. The father was born near Shepherdstown, Va., January 28, 1812, and the mother was born November 8, 1812, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Byers) Shepherd. Thomas Shepherd was born in Shepherdstown November 3, 1771, and died in his native town November 9, 1832. In 1805 he married Mary Byers, a native of the same town as himself, and they had eight children, who came to Sangamon County. He was a son of Thomas and Susan (Hulse) Shepherd, and a grandson of Thomas Shepherd, who emigrated from Wales to Virginia before the Revolutionary War. Mrs. Mary (Byers) Shepherd came to Sangamon County with her eldest son in 1830 and died in the home of her son-in-law, Philip W. Weber, November 23, 1870.

Philip W. Weber removed to Raymond, Miss., in 1855, and in connection with others erected a mill, but sold his interests there and came to Sangamon County in 1857. In 1849 he went to California, Returning ten years later, and with his brother, John B., bought land and engaged in farming near Pawnee. He and his wife had children as follows: John P., born March 19, 1849; Mary E.; William S., subject of this sketch; Amanda, born March 3, 1846; Sarah C.; and Emma S.

William S. Weber was educated in the Pawnee public schools and in his youth laid the foundation of a useful career. Up to this time, as he is proud to relate, he has never sworn an oath, never tasted liquor in any form, and has never drank a whole cup of coffee. He has never used tobacco in any form, except to smoke (in his entire life) about five cigars. He has robust health and has never been sick a whole day in his life. He enlisted in August, 1862, at Springfield, in one of two companies which were consolidated to form Company K, One Hundred Twenty-fourth Illinois Infantry, and spent six weeks at Camp Butler, but as he was so young and was small for his age, he was left out. In 1863 he went to Missouri and tried to enlist, but was again unsuccessful.

Mr. Weber was married at Pawnee, Ill., January 1, 1867, to Miss Henrietta Lough, who was born in Jerseyville, Ill., July 10, 1849, daughter of Lawrence and Hannah (Whitehead) Lough, her father a native of New Jersey and her mother of Wisconsin. Three sons and three daughters have been born of this union: Frank Shepherd, born January 24, 1868; Andrew James, July 27, 1870; Charles Philip, October 14, 1874; Minnie Irene, May 17, 1877; Alice Lorena, September 16, 1882, and Effie May, July 27, 1886.
Mr. Weber is a prosperous farmer, owning one hundred fifty acres of choice farm land in Pawnee Township, and also land in Christian County. He has a good trade and enjoys the confidence and esteem of his patrons. He is actively interested in the welfare and growth of the community along all lines, and in politics is a Republican. He is a member of the Methodist Church and for twelve years was a member of the Masonic Order. He served a number of years as Township Assessor.

WEBSTER, Stephen (deceased), was born in Orleans County, N. Y., June 14, 1825. He spent his entire life (except a few years in Chicago) in his native State, being buried at Mt. Albion, N. Y. His father operated a farm near Hawley and was also a native of New York. His mother, Kate (Littlefield) Webster, was a native of New York. Many of Mr. Webster’s ancestors took active parts in the exciting events preceding the Revolution and during the struggle, and were of the old eastern stock of Connecticut.

After taking an academic course at Albion, N. Y., Stephen Webster embarked in the drug business, which he continued several years. He also began dealing in grain, and in the latter enterprise became so successful that he devoted his whole attention to it and had entire charge of the great stock yards at Suspension Bridge, N. Y. He became quite wealthy, being a man of industrious habits and considerable energy. One of his best western customers was Algernon Farr, the great stock shipper of Illinois. However, he met serious reverses of fortune and died a poor man. Being of a quiet disposition and a great lover of his home, he never connected himself with any fraternal orders and did not aspire to public office. His religious connections were with the Congregational Church.

January 29, 1863, Mr. Webster was married, at Niagara City, N. Y., by Reverend Webb, to Mary A. Rhodes, who was born at Albion, N. Y., January 25, 1836, daughter of Richard Boone and Charity E. (Bidwell) Rhodes. Richard Boone Rhodes had married (first) November 1, 1832, Nancy Sherwood, of Chautauqua, N. Y., who lived but a short time. The first of the Rhodes family in America was John Rhodes, who came from England in 1630, and one of his descendants, Walter Rhodes, born June 2, 1770, in Providence, R. I., died in 1820, Walter Rhodes was married, in 1792, to Mary Perkins, who was also born in Providence, in 1767, died in 1859, and lived to celebrate her one hundredth birthday, at which time she was able to read and write with ease. The Perkins family also came from England (in 1630), and the grandfather of Richard B. Rhodes, Nathaniel Perkins, born in 1710, was a gunsmith and manufactured guns for the use of the colonists during the Revolution.

Mrs. Webster’s mother, Charity Bidwell, was a descendant of John Bidwell, from the north of England, who settled at Hartford, Ct., in 1635, married Sarah Wilcox, and died in 1657.

Richard B. Rhodes was a mechanic of great skill and prominence and learned his trade at Pittsburg, Pa., and Jamestown, N. Y., where he learned the secret of tempering by shade the edge of sharp steel tools of all kinds. He himself afterwards built a factory for making tools at Chautauqua, and later at Waterport, N. Y. He was the inventor of many useful articles and became known in many parts of the country through his intelligence and skill. He firmly believed he had discovered perpetual motion, and at one time considered placing his invention on the market. Mrs. Webster distinctly remembers hearing her father describe this invention to her mother. In later life, thinking he was losing his sight, he called a convention of tool makers and gave to them the secret of tempering tools. His father, Walter Rhodes, was also an inventor and mechanic. He erected a shingle mill, flume and water wheel, and was killed by accident at this place. He worked for some time for a man named Curtis, a manufacturer of farm tools, at Albion, N. Y., and while in this position studied to perfect the reaper. Afterwards, while working at Brockport he perfected the real part of this machine that gathers and throws over the bundles. He also invented the “Butterfly” drag that was so much used on land, because it would go between stumps in cultivating. Mr. Rhodes also invented a gate that would swing both ways, and a horse hay-rake that would turn the hay into windrows. When the contractor, who was ready to begin work on the great suspension bridge between Canada and Niagara City, was unable to figure how to get a line across as the first move, Mr. Rhodes solved the difficulty by advising that a kite be flown over. Mrs. Webster herself inherited a great deal of mechanical genius from her father and invented a very practical doughnut cutter, which she had made for her own use and which she heard was afterwards patented, but she receives no royalties on it as her idea was appropriated by others.

Mr. Rhodes, the father of Mrs. Webster, was born April 6, 1807, and died October 20, 1878, and his second wife, who was born May 12, 1815, died November 13, 1872. An ancestor of Mr. Rhodes, John Rhodes, was a member of the famous “Boston Tea Party,” and threw the second box of tea overboard. Their parents and ancestors on both sides were very devout Christians as far back as 1600.

Left alone in the world, without a dollar, Mrs. Webster had before her the immediate question of how she should earn her livelihood. In October, 1870, she began working at dress and cloak making, which she continued at Niagara Falls, N. Y., until July, 1877, when she was advised by her old physician, Dr. E. B. Rice, of Niagara, N. Y., to go west, and moved to Vandalia, Fayette County, Ill., where she remained one and one-half years and one and one-half years at Carbondale, Ill., until 1879, during which time her father and two sisters died, and she then moved to Springfield, in 1880, where she continued at her trade with good success, being able to save some money, but her health failed,
In 1861, in St. Louis, Mr. Wehrle was married to Theresa Metzger, a native of Baden, Germany, who died in January, 1908. Of the fifteen children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wehrle the following survive: Burkhart, living at home; Henry, in the employ of the West End Coal Company; Adam; Charles, who is engaged in the transfer business; Emily, the wife of Levi Hurt; Mary, who married John Whitmore; Anna, who is the wife of Gus Opert, an engineer of Danville, Ill.; Eva, the wife of Joseph Loeser, in the employ of the Schnck Lumber Company; and Lena, the wife of Frederick Gramlich.

WEHRMAN, Henry.—The stability and reliability of the German-born citizens of America, make them the best kind of men to place in positions of trust and responsibility, a fact long ago recognized by those in authority. One of the men who are proud of the fact that they were born in the Fatherland, is Henry Wehrman, of No. 445 West Carpenter Street, Springfield, for twenty-nine years one of the valued employees of Oak Ridge Cemetery. He was born September 12, 1846, in Baden, Germany, being a son of John and Christina (Leishermer) Wehrman, natives of Germany. The father was a stone mason, working at his trade in Germany, where he and his wife spent their lives. They had four sons and one daughter, Mr. Wehrman and a son in Germany being the only survivors.

Like many of his countrymen, Mr. Wehrman gave four years' service to his country, being in the Franco-Prussian War. He had received a good education in his native land, and had been taught farming. In May, 1872, he sailed to America, which stretched out before him as a land of promise, and while he has not realized all his hopes, he has made his life yield him a fair measure of success. Landing in New York, he came direct to Springfield, where he obtained employment on the Hickox farm and remained there two years. For the next two years he was in the employ of the Springfield Rolling Mills, and then entered the employ of the Oak Ridge Cemetery, where he has since remained.

In June, 1872, soon after his arrival in Springfield, he was married to Catherine Boner, also of Germany, where she was born in November, 1851. Her father was a farmer and never came to America. She had a sister and a brother, the latter of whom is deceased, but the former survives, living in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Wehrman became the parents of four children: Catherine, wife of John Heisinger of Evanston; Paul, in the employ of the Schnepp & Barnes Company, of this city; Margaret, wife of Louis Comover, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and Gustav, of Springfield. There are two grand-children in the family. Mr. Wehrman is a Democrat. He belongs to Trinity German Lutheran Church, and is liberal in his support of it. He owns the family home, which is a beautiful one, as well as several other residences in the city, for he has faith in Spring ty and proves it by living in its reality. He is a reliable, honorable man, whose life had been spent in hard work, and deserves all the affection and respect he has always commanded.

WEICE, George (deceased).—The German char acter is one that commands great admiration, for it stands for much that is best in a com munity. The German-Americans are among the best class of citizens the country knows. Care fully trained in their trades, the Germans come here prepared to give good, hard work in ex change for the remuneration offered, and they save with careful thrift out of what they earn,
so that in a short time they own their homes.
The home owner is more interested in securing good, stable government than he who moves with every passing fancy. It is for these and other equally cogent reasons that the Germans are welcomed in any community. One source of Springfield’s prosperity is the fact that Ger mans have settled there in large numbers, and among one who carried out every good feature of his countrymen was George Weicz, for many years a contracting painter of that city. Mr. Weicz was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, December 21, 1831, a son of John and Margaret Weicz, farming people of Hesse Darmstadt, which remained their home until deaths.

George Weicz grew up on his father’s farm, receiving a good education in his native tongue, but he was ambitious and, having learned the trade of painter, resolved to seek a new field of operation in America. Consequently he came, in 1850, locating in Springfield, which continued to be his home until his death, December 20, 1871. His remains were interred in Oak Ridge Cemetery. For years he was a successful con tracting painter, and won the confidence of his patrons by his excellent work and conscientious attention to the terms of his contracts. He was a Mason and Odd Fellow, belonging to the Springfield lodges of both orders. His political sentiments made him a Republican, and he was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church.
In 1859, Mr. Weicz was married in Springfield, to Sophia Machatans, born in Saxony,
Germany, daughter of Godfreid and Mary (Jacobs) Machatans. Came to America and located in Springfield, Ill., both are buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Weicz had five children, two of whom survive: Minnie, born August 31, 1861, living with her mother, and Louis, residing at No. 400 West Monroe Street, who was born in 1869. Mrs. Weicz owns the family residence at No. 211 West Jefferson Street, which has been her home since 1850.
She is a most excellent woman, devoted to her children, and kind and neighborly in her asso ciations with those about her.

WEISZ, John (deceased).—As long as the State buildings at Springfield stand as monuments to the skill and artistic ability of those who aided in their building and decoration, will the name of John Weisz be remembered, for he aided in the interior decoration of those struc tures, as well as in that of many of the private residences of the city. Although he has passed from this life his work remains, and the memory, as well, of his many excellent traits of char acter, which won him so many warm personal friends. Mr. Weisz was born in Hesse Darm stadt, Germany, in 1836, a son of John Weisz, also a native of Germany, who was a farmer and weaving-mill owner. He and his wife came to America at an early day (1852) and to Springfield when it was a village. They en gaged in farming in its vicinity and made a specialty of raising garden truck for the Springfield market. This was their work until death claimed them.

John Weisz was educated in Germany and there learned the wagon-making trade, but after he accompanied his parents to America, learned that of a painter and decorator, and established himself in business, earning and retaining a large trade. His work was artistic in the ex treme, and so well done as to make it eagerly sought by those who appreciated good effects.
He continued in business until the time of his demise, in 1879. In religious faith, he was a German Lutheran, as are his widow and chil dren, and in politics he was a Republican.

Mr. Weisz was married in Springfield, in 1861, to Augusta Schwarzenberg, born in Hanover, Germany, June 22, 1839. Her parents never emigrated, dying in Germany, where they were born. The father was a school-teacher in Han over, where he was very well known. Mr. and Mrs. Weisz had seven children, four of whom survive: August R., traveling salesman for the Illinois Watch Company, has been with the company for a number of years; John is also in the employ of this company; Charles is a resident of Chicago, and Louise lives at home.
Mrs. Weisz owns her beautiful home at No. 719 South Ninth Street, as well as considerable other property in Springfield, having been left well-to-do through the watchful care of her husband, who provided well for his dear ones before death took him away from them. He was an excellent example of the best class of German-American, and well deserved the suc cess which attended him.

WELCH, Abednego Richardson.—There have been many changes in Sangamon County during the past forty years, and those who located in the sixties and seventies bear witness to the truth of this statement. More than anything else has the value of farm land altered, now being so valuable that a number of the farmers are specializing on a few acres, producing some of the finest fruit and vegetables to be found on the market. A farmer who has grown with the advances in everything, is Abednego Richardson Welch, of Springfield Township, born in Wash ington County, Ind., October 24, 1837, a son of Enoch F. and Mabel (Powell) Welch, the former born in Kentucky in 1812.

The parents came to Indiana at a very early day, but later migrated to Morgan County, Ill., where the father died in 1875, having been a farmer all his life. His wife passed away when sixty-one years old. The paternal great-grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier. As Enoch F. Welch moved about to a considerable extent during the boyhood of Abednego, the latter did not receive much education until he was twenty-two years old, when he paid for tuition. He worked for his father, learning how to farm, and when he began for himself adopted this calling, and has continued in it all his life. In 1863 Mr. Welch came to Sangamon County, and since then has not been more than a mile from home. For twenty-seven years he has lived on his present farm of seven and one-half acres, which he has developed into a fine property.

Mr. Welch was married in Springfield, in January, 1864, to Elizabeth Hammond, a daughter of Harrison and Delila Hammonds, who came to Illinois at an early day, from Indiana, but both are now deceased. Mrs. Welch died November 13, 1888, having borne her husband children as follows: Permelia, wife of George Langfield, a farmer of Sangamon County; Lucy, wife of William Brown, a miner; Hester, wife of William Hahn, a dairyman; Rosetta, and four who are deceased. Miss Rosetta had the misfortune to be born blind, but her father has given her so superior an education that she has many resources that might otherwise be denied her. There are sixteen grand children and one great grand child in the family.

The family are members of the Christian Church. Mr. Welch is a Democrat and is enthusiastic in his support of its candidates and principles. His devotion to his blind daughter is a beautiful thing, and she repays his love and care with a touching affection. The family stand high in the neighborhood, and Mr. and Miss Welch have many warm, personal friends who appreciate their excellent qualities.

WELCH, George Merrit, who resides in his pleasant home at No. 409 West C anedy Street, which represents years of frugality and hard work, is now the trusted watchman of the Rayfield Auto Company works, Springfield. He was born in Tonawanda, Erie County, N. Y., January 2, 1849, a son of George W. and Margaret (Forbes) Welch. The Welch family was founded in this country by the grandfather, who came from Ireland, locating in Clifton Park, N. Y., where he was a timberman, being killed by a log which rolled on him. George W., father of George M. Welch, was born in the village of Clifton Park, and became a merchant there, but died at the very early age of twenty-two years, of cholera. His widow married Nelson A. Neher, now a resident of Springfield, who has attained the advanced age of ninety-two years. His wife died there at the age of sixty-eight years.

George Merrit Welch attended school but little, for being left half orphan when only five months old, he never knew a father's care, and as early as possible had to earn his own living. Until he was fourteen years old he lived with his Grandfather Forbes, and then began working on a farm at fifty cents per day. When he was sixteen years old he began working on the tow path of the Erie canal, but after one summer at this became a steersman on a boat, continuing thus for two seasons. His attention having been called to Illinois, he came to Lanark, Carroll County, and was a clerk in his Uncle Edgar Welch's store for nearly two years. Following this he went to work in a saw-mill at Alpena, Mich., being in it during the summer and scaling logs in the woods in the winter. At the close of three years he moved to Monroe, Mich., and worked in a lumber yard owned by Cateb Ives, and also scaled logs for him, eventually being made general manager of Mr. Ives' business. After two years there he journeyed to New York for a short visit. On his return he reached Toledo, when his funds gave out. He had nothing to eat and no place to sleep, and was feeling discouraged, when he met his former employer, Mr. Ives, who appeared as glad to see him, as he was to meet the man for whom he had worked so faithfully. Mr. Ives set Mr. Welch on a job in the Ohio, to do some collecting for him, and Mr. Welch spent eighteen months in that city, looking after Mr. Ives' interests there. His next venture was as agent for a patent fire kindler, operating in Jackson and vicinity. Once more he went back to New York, and thence to Rutland, Vt., where he worked in a foundry owned by Thomas Ross, and while there made some of the columns for the Albany State House. In 1880 he returned to Illinois, going to work on the Wabash Railroad as fireman, and running out of Springfield. From this he worked up to be engineer, continuing in the employ of this railroad for twelve years. Then, leaving the road, he operated a switch engine in the rolling mills. Going to Pine Bluffs, Ark., he was fireman on the Cotton Belt Railroad, being promoted to the position of engineer, but at the expiration of three years came to Macomb, Ill., and ran a stationary engine at the pottery plant for a year. Coming again to Springfield, he was salesman for the Springfield Paper Company for several years, afterwards engaging in various lines of work, and is now watchman of the Rayfield Auto Company works.

On April 28, 1886, Mr. Welch was married in the Central Baptist Church to Anna M. Lindsay, of Springfield, daughter of Isaac and Sarah (Elder) Lindsay. Five children have been born to them: Arlena B., unmarried; Annie Louise, Harriet, and George. Mr. Welch is a consistent member of the Central Baptist Church. Politically he is a Republican, but his inclinations have never led him to seek office.

WELDON, Lawrence. (Vol. I, p. 582.)

WELLS, Richard R.—Industry, perseverance, intelligence and good judgment are the price of success in agricultural work in these modern days of farming, when the hard, unremitting toll of former years has given way to the scientific use of modern machinery and a knowledge of the proper treatment of the soil. Sangamon County has many skilled farmers, who treat their vocation more as a profession than a mere occupation, and take justifiable pride in their accomplishments. Among them may be mentioned Richard R. Wells, of Salisbury Township.

Mr. Wells was born on Section 34, Salisbury Township, December 12, 1871, a son of James H. and Margaret (Sackett) Wells.

James H. Wells was born on a farm in Clark County, Ind., May 31, 1834, and was compelled early in life to begin to work for himself, his parents having died. He was married July 8, 1852, to Margaret J. Sackett, and they began life on a rented farm in Menard County, Ill. There they remained until 1853, in which year Mr. Wells purchased his first piece of land on Section 34, Salisbury Township, on which there was a small frame building. Aided by his good wife, he worked from sunup to sunset, year after year, to earn the addition of a frame building in Springfield for the market. Mr. Wells added to his property piece by piece, and as soon as he had a good start, began erecting substantial buildings and making a comfortable home for those to follow him. At the time of his death he was the owner of 1100 acres of land and was considered one of the leading men of Salisbury Township. He was a strong man politically, being many times Supervisor of his township, and was always trying to further those interests which would be of benefit to his community. He passed to his reward July 13, 1902, having been married fifty years the eighth of that month. His widow still survives and is making her home in Salisbury, having reached the age of seventy-seven years.

Of their six children five grew to maturity: L. M., who is one of the successful farmers of Salisbury Township and owner of a part of the old homestead, married Rose Kern, and they had ten children; Harriet E., widow of A. B. Hohimer, residing at Chatham, Ill., has eight children; Mary, wife of George Kern, residing in Springfield, has eight children; Selia, wife of Marshall S. Grider, has three children; and Richard R.

Richard R. Wells received a district school education and was reared to the life of a farmer, remaining at home until his marriage, March 10, 1862, by Rev. Goff, to Miss Cora V. Campbell, who was born in Cartwright Township, June 4, 1873, daughter of William V. and Mary E. (Valentine) Campbell. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wells remained on the Wells homestead for one year, but in the spring of 1863 they removed to another farm belonging to Mr. Wells' father, and in 1895 again moved, locating on their present place on Section 34, Salisbury Township, which is now one of Sangamon County's best farms. Mr. Wells has 252 acres of land in one body in a high state of cultivation, where he raises large crops and breeds an excellent grade of livestock. They have a beautiful modern house, with all the modern improvements, including heat, water and light, and it is ably presided over by Mrs. Wells. Mr. Wells is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. and Mrs. Wells have been the parents of three children, one of whom died in infancy. The others are: Earl E., born November 20, 1892, died April 10, 1911, buried in the family lot, in Richland Cemetery; and Beulah Belle, born October 25, 1896, who lives at home.

WELSH, John V. (deceased), for many years a farmer in Sections 2 and 3, Ball Township, Sangamon County, where he owned a farm of 100 acres, was an industrious, useful citizen, who worked hard to bring his land to a high state of development and cultivation, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. He was a kind neighbor, a good husband and father, and was interested in the welfare of his community. Mr. Welsh was born in Lovettville, Tipperary, Ireland, and Mary Welsh, both natives of County Tipperary, Ireland, who emigrated to Virginia and there spent the remainder of their lives. The parents of both died in Ireland. John V. Welsh was reared on a farm and received his education in the public schools of his native State. He always had a cheerful disposition, was a man of steady habits, and was much interested in whatever work he had in hand. He was fond of dancing and similar diversions. As a young man he came to Sangamon County to join a brother who had preceded him there, and spent the remainder of his life in farming operations in that county. He was a devout member of the Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception, of Springfield, and in politics was always a Republican.

Mr. Welsh was married at Auburn, Ill., January 30, 1853, Father Finnegan officiating, to Miss Mary A. Heffernan, born in Sangamon County, August 15, 1858, daughter of Edward and Catherine (Keefe) Heffernan, natives of County Tipperary, Ireland, both deceased and buried in Calvary Cemetery, Springfield, They emigrated to America and were married in Ohio. The father died on Mr. Welsh's farm August 29, 1905, and Mrs. Heffernan died in Springfield in 1894. Six children were born to Mr. Welsh and wife, four of whom lived to be: William, born March 7, 1857, died January 17, 1897; James, born June 18, 1855, died October 7, 1898; Josie, born December 30, 1853, was married in New Mexico, to Charles Paylor, and they now live in Pueblo, Co.; Ellen, born
September 7, 1855, lives at home with her mother; Edward, born February 13, 1838, married Marie Albers and they live on a farm in Bain Township and have two children, Mary Ellen, born May 19, 1900, and Anna Josephine, born January 17, 1911; John, born May 7, 1891, lives at home. Mr. Welsh died on his farm March 12, 1896, and was buried in Calvary Cemetery, Springfield. His widow still resides on the home place with two of her children, John and Ellen. Mrs. Welsh is well known in Sangamon County, where her entire life has been spent, and has a large number of friends there.

WELSH, Patrick, a retired citizen of Springfield, has lived in the city sixty years. He was born in County Limerick, Ireland, about 1834, and is a son of John and Mary (McGrath) Welsh, who lived on a farm seven miles from the City of Limerick. The father died and the mother married again. Patrick Welsh received his education in his native country and as a boy accompanied his mother and step-father to America. They landed in Quebec, Canada, and the young man found employment in a furniture factory in Troy, N. Y. He was married, while a resident of the State of New York, to Miss Bridget Hogany, and they came to Springfield, Ill., where he found employment on the Wabash Railroad. He was employed in various capacities and eventually purchased two acres of land surrounding his home. Mrs. Welsh died in Springfield and he married (second) Katy Christy, who also died in Springfield. Mr. Welsh married (third), February 2, 1878, Miss Kate Maron, who was born in County Monahan, Ireland, a daughter of Barney and Catherine (Finnegan) Maron. She came to America as a child but her parents died in Ireland.

By his first marriage Mr. Welsh had two children, John and Michael, of San Francisco, Cal. By his second marriage he had one child, who died at the age of fourteen years. By his third marriage he had children as follows: Patrick, went to Australia; Bridget, Mrs. John O'Laughlin, of Springfield; Nora, Mrs. Charles Walls, of Springfield; Daniel Richard, died at the age of fourteen years: Catherine and Bernard Hugh, at home; Mary Frances and Margaret Emma. Mr. Welsh has witnessed many important changes and improvements in Springfield since locating there and has contributed his share toward promoting the best interests of the community. He is upright and reliable and well liked by his many friends. He is an active member of St. Joseph's Church and in politics is a staunch Democrat. He was a close friend of Abraham Lincoln and often played ball with him.

WENNEBORG, Henry.—Nothing is surer to result in good government and the establishment and maintenance of excellent schools, than the location in a city of men who have for their main object in life the founding of a family. The Germans look forward to this, taking pride in their children and in owning their homes and for this reason, and also because they are industrious and thrifty, they are warmly welcomed in this country. One of the representative German-Americans of Springfield is Henry Wenneborg, now living retired, at No. 609 North Calhoun Avenue. He was born in Germany, April 16, 1842, a son of Rudolph and Christina Wenneborg, also natives of Germany. During the Franco-Prussian war of 1871-1872, Rudolph Wenneborg was a soldier, and after his term of service expired, he returned home to take up his trade of blacksmithing. He spent his life in Germany, both he and his wife dying there.

Henry Wenneborg was educated in Germany, and in accordance with the excellent custom of that country, was taught a trade, selecting that of blacksmith. He served in the regular army of his country for six years, but in 1866, came to Montreal, Canada, where he remained four months. Not liking it there, he came on to Springfield, where he had friends, and soon found employment as a blacksmith. Until three years ago Mr. Wenneborg worked at his trade, becoming one of the best-known men in his line in the county, and winning friends by his efficient work and genial manner. However, in 1907, feeling that he had earned the rest, he retired, and since then has not been actively interested in any business matters.

Mr. Wenneborg was married in Springfield, June 27, 1867, being then united with Louisa Sauer, born in Germany, October 10, 1841. The parents never came to this country, but lived and died in Germany. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wenneborg: William, of Farmersville, Ill., a member of the firm of Wenneborg & Company; Jennie, wife of Willard Norris, of Springfield; Otto, of Farmersville, Ill., with the Wenneborg Company; Elizabeth, Henry, with the New West Coal Company; Anna, wife of Edward Mitten- dorf, a tailor; and Emma, wife of Charles Anderson, a tailor of Springfield. There are twenty-two grandchildren in this family. Mr. Wenneborg is a member of St. John's German Lutheran Church, towards which he subscribes liberally.

WENNEBORG, Otto.—Honest endeavor conscientiously directed along any line will meet with success, and Otto Wenneborg, the veteran blacksmith of Springfield, has proven this in his long and useful life. He was born in Hanover, Germany, February 16, 1852, a son of Rudolph and Christina Wenneborg, both of Germany. They died in their native land, where the father was a blacksmith. He had served as a soldier in the Franco-Prussian war of 1871, and was a good, industrious man.

Otto Wenneborg received a public school education in Germany, but came to America in 1857 and direct to Springfield. There he learned the blacksmithing trade, and has worked at it ever since. He has established a reputation for honest work, and now has customers who came to him when he first started in business for himself. His home at No. 1305 Ledlie Avenue, is the one in which he established himself on coming to the city.

He was married in Germany to Caroline Sauer, born in Hanover, Germany, whose parents passed away in their native land. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wenneborg: Anna, wife of George Steffen, a butcher; Minnie, wife of Nels Johnson; Mary, wife of A. Speltel, of Quincy, Ill.; Otto H., a blacksmith in the employ of the Springfield Cooperative Company. Mr. and Mrs. Wenneborg have eleven grandchildren, of whom they are very proud. The family belong to St. John German Lutheran Church, in which they have always taken an active part. Mr. Wenneborg is a Democrat in political affiliations. He possesses the German characteristics of industry, thrift and perseverance, and, while proud of his adopted country, his heart remains towards the Fatherland, and he keeps up many of the customs he and his wife brought with them when they sought a new home.

WERNER, Charles.—After a useful life spent in hard work and as an official of the county, Charles Werner is now living retired at No. 551 South State Street, Springfield. He was born November 1, 1853, at New Haven, Conn., a son of Charles and Marie (Sharp) Werner, natives of Germany, the former born February 28, 1829, and the latter October 28, 1831. The father was a machinist and engineer.

Mr. Werner raised a company during the Spanish-American War, of which he was made Captain, but saw no active service. A strong Democrat, he has represented his party upon numerous occasions, being elected and serving as Commissioner of Highways for twelve years, Supervisor of Clear Lake Township eight years (serving as Chairman of the Board one year); was for two years on the County Board of Review, and for four years was Sheriff of Sangamon County. In each office he gave the people a loyal, honorable service, and gained an undying reputation for integrity and uprightness. Fraternally he is a Mason, Modern Woodman of America, Red Man, Royal Neighbor, and also belongs to the Farmers’ Alliance and the Knights of Labor. His religious affiliations are with the Catholic Church.

On October 10, 1882, Mr. Werner was united in marriage at Riverton, Ill., with Elizabeth Fitzgerald, born in Springfield, December 1, 1861, daughter of Morris and Ellen (Flynn) Fitzgerald, natives of Ireland, the former born April 13, 1839, and the latter October 1, 1859. Mr. and Mrs. Werner became the parents of the following children: Charles A., born December 7, 1883; Ellen E., born November 23, 1885; Marie H., born August 1, 1887; Catherine M., born February 19, 1890; Maurice P., born June 28, 1892; Elizabeth D., born July 8, 1894, and Amelia, born August 29, 1897.

Until his retirement Mr. Werner was a farmer of Clear Lake Township, and now owns considerable property in Springfield.

WERNER, Charles, Sr., (deceased).—There is no nation in the world that has given the United States so much material for the making of good citizenship as has the Fatherland. The German, thrifty, sober, industrious and reliable, can always be depended upon to do his full share, and more, in the upbuilding of any community in which he finds himself, and to this race America owes much of its present prosperity and invincibility. One of the early German families of Sangamon County, was that of Werner, which was founded in Springfield more than half a century ago, by Charles Werner, who was born in Germany, June 5, 1829.

Charles Werner came to the United States with his parents, first settling in New Haven, Conn., and coming thence to Sangamon County, Ill. Charles had been educated in the common schools of his native country, and there also learned the trades of machinist and cabinetmaker. In 1857 he located in Springfield, where he was employed by the Wabash Railroad Company seven years, and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy two years, and then purchased a small farm in Clear Lake Township, and by steady, industrious work added to it from time to time, until at the time of his death he was the owner of 300 acres of fine farming property. In 1895 he retired from active pursuits and settled in Springfield, where his death occurred August 5, 1902. His widow now occupies a fine residence at No. 1102 North Seventh Street, Springfield.

Mr. Werner was a Democrat in politics, but never cared for political honors. He was a faithful member of SS. Peter and Paul Catholic Church.

Mr. Werner was married in New York City, to Mary Scharp, who was born in Germany October 29, 1828, a daughter of Philip Scharp. The surviving children of this union are: Charles, who was Sheriff of Sangamon County, from 1906 to December, 1910, married Lizzie Fitzgerald, and resides at 551 South State Street, Springfield; Amelia, the widow of William Curry, residing in Springfield; and Augusta, the wife of William Black, who is connected with the Suttle Flow Works.

WERNER, Joseph, dealer in dry goods and groceries, is a man whose determination to succeed has made him victor, and whose reputation for honorable dealing is based upon his habit of paying his debts collectible in spirit as well as in reality. His career as a merchant is one that demonstrates that a man can attain material success without violating his conscience, and he is known as one who gives his strength, his knowledge and his money to the support of all measures tending towards the advancement of the city. Mr. Werner was born in Zempelburg, Germany, June 26, 1863, a son of Jacob and Glaser (Buena) Werner. The father was born in the same place as his son and was educated there. He served his three years in the army, being engaged in the Franco-Prussian War, in which he received a medal for bravery. His life work was making stained glass under contract. His death occurred at his home in Germany in 1906, when he was either seventy-nine or eighty years of age. He was twice married, his first wife being mother of Joseph Werner, and she bore him two other children: Samuel, of Chicago, and Mrs. Johanna Alexander, of Germany. The second wife was Flora Beyach, and she had one son, Siegbert, a resident of Chicago.

Joseph Werner attended school in Germany and his record in college was so high that he had the privilege of serving in the army one year at reduced expenses. In April, 1861, he came to the United States, landing in New York City. From there he came direct to St. Louis, where he joined his brother and went to work as a salesman in a dry goods store, being soon promoted to position of shipping clerk. Within a few years he was able to purchase a cigar store and then began manufacturing fine cigars, being for twelve years thus engaged. His next business venture was operating a hotel, but fourteen months later, in 1892, he resumed clerking and kept books at Kenneth, Mo. In 1896 he came to Springfield and for a time sold cigars until he saved a sufficient amount to start a small grocery store on Eleventh and Madison Street. After four years in this location his business increased to such an extent that he felt justified in buying the property at No. 1131 East Madison Street, where he opened a store, conducting it as a first-class grocery. Within four years more he built his present residence and added dry goods to his stock. He now carries a full line of dry goods, shoes, smoked meats and groceries, and controls an immense trade. He has bought several other houses and lots and is now a heavy property owner. His residence at No. 301 North Fourteenth Street is a new one, the former one, at No. 1131 Madison Street, having been destroyed during the riot in August, 1908. During that troublous period a lynching occurred in front of his building.

Mr. Werner was married in St. Louis to Miss Freda Benjamin, who died in that city. He was married in Springfield in 1902, to Anna Hornstein, a native of Roumanian. They have three children, Simeon, Buena and Jerome, and an adopted daughter, Esther. Mr. Werner is a member of the Jewish Church and is one of its consistent supporters. He is a liberal Republican. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, of which he has served as Past Chancellor, and was Representative to the Grand Lodge about twenty-three years ago. In 1903 Mr. Werner visited Europe and traveled through the principal cities and countries. His father, who was then seventy-seven years of age, and whom he had not seen for twenty-five years, met him at the steamboat landing.

WESTENBERGER, George L.—The mercantile interests of Springfield have assumed mammoth proportions, and are requiring the efficient service of a number of the city's best business men to control them. Aside from being the State capital, Springfield is the center of a vast, rich farming community, that looks to it as a source of supply, and to meet the requirements of these customers the merchants offer special inducements in both quality and prices, carrying large and varied stocks. One of the most reliable of these mercantile firms is that operated under the name of Westenberger & Wetterer, of which L. Westenberger is the senior member. He was born January 29, 1876, in Springfield, a son of the well known Garhard and Mary Louise (Bretz) Westenberger.

George L. Westenberger was educated in Springfield, and upon leaving school entered the employ of Reisch & Thomas, dry-goods merchants, gaining practical experience, which has since been very useful to him. In February, 1906, he and C. J. Wetterer formed the firm of which he is now the head, and from the start the young merchants enjoyed a large trade. Their connections are such as to enable them to secure first-class goods, and they display them attractively and give the best of services and prices.

Mr. Westenberger was married at Ruma, Ill., to Miss Lillian O'Hara, daughter of J. R. and Margaret (Kaveney) O'Hara, of Litchfield, Ill.

One of the most pleasant events in the Westenberger family, occurred February 7, 1910, in the celebration of the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Gerhard Westenberger. After the celebration of nuptial high mass at SS. Peter & Paul Catholic Church, the aged bride and groom, of fifty years ago, were showered with rose leaves. They then held a reception which lasted the remainder of the day, and throughout the evening. The eight daughters of the couple assisted in receiving the guests in the evening, and a fine musical program was rendered. Guests from outside the city were present, as well as many from Springfield and vicinity, and the occasion will not soon be forgotten.

George L. Westenberger and his wife are consistent members of the Immaculate Conception Catholic Church, taking an active part in its good work. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and can always be counted upon to do his full share of the work of that order, and he is also a member of St. Vincent's Society. His attention to business, his knowledge of its exacting requirements, and his pleasant, genial manner, have been strong factors in securing his success and establishing him firmly in the confidence of the public.

WHALEN, James William.—There are great possibilities in the grocery business, and the WHEELER, William R.—The old soldier of today has every reason to be proud of the record he made when, in young manhood, he marched off in defense of his country. By those who never heard the roar of cannon, or the cries of the wounded and dying; who never tramped through miles of swamp, or trudged over ankle deep dusty roads; who never went for days without sufficient food or water, or spent months in hospitals or (worse still) prisons, the services of the soldiers of the 'sixties, can never be fully appreciated. Those who suffered, know, and one who distinguished himself as a brave patriot when his country had need of him, and since then has shown sympathy for his fellow soldiers, is William R. Wheeler. He was born in Union County, Ky., May 6, 1840, a son of Jesse and Permella (Harper) Wheeler, natives of North Carolina and Kentucky, respectively. The father was a mechanic and cabinet-maker, who moved from North Carolina to Kentucky, and there died. William R. Wheeler moved from Kentucky to Shelbyville, Ill., and then to Wilson County, Kan., in 1866. He next went to Menard County, Ill., later coming to Springfield. He enlisted in the ninety day service, on April 17, 1861, and at the expiration of that period, reenlisted for three years, in Company A, Twenty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving under Colonel U. S. Grant. He participated in the battles of Fredericksburg, Perryville, Stone River, Murfreesboro, and others less important, always doing his full duty. He was discharged at Camp Butler in 1865. Mr. Wheeler was a farmer for some years, then identified himself with the sawmill industry, and is now an engineer.

Mr. Wheeler was united in marriage in Wilson County, Kan., January 21, 1869, with Queen E. Markwell, born in Menard County, Ill., June 30, 1852, coming of an old family of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler became parents of the following children: Francis N., Minnie E., William J. and Alexander—born in 1872, 1874, 1876 and 1878, respectively. Mr. Wheeler owns his home at No. 1000 East Glenn Street. Quiet and retiring in disposition, he has never been active in public matters, but supports the Republican party and the Baptist Church, of which he is a consistent member. He also belongs to the G. A. R., and is prominent in it because of his war record.

WHIPPLE, John H., a retired carpenter and builder living in Springfield, Ill., is a veteran of the Civil War and a highly respected citizen. He was born in what is now Casey, Ill., February 2, 1839, son of Henry and Elizabeth (Hard) Whipple, the former born in Switzerland, Ind., March 20, 1818, and the latter born in Bourbon County, Ky., in 1816. His father was a native of Indiana, who died in Illinois, and her father, a native of Virginia, was a slave-holder and died in Indiana. Both served in the Black Hawk and Mexican Wars. Henry Whipple was a carpenter and builder, moved to Illinois in 1832, lived there five years, returned to Indiana, and in 1852 moved to Springfield, where he died in 1906. Elizabeth Hoard came to Illinois as a young woman and the child of Mr. Whipple. They were married in Casey, Ill., in 1838, and became parents of four sons and four daughters. He was interested in various enterprises and worked for a time at milling.

John H. Whipple attended subscription schools in his native State until thirteen years of age, then worked for six years in the Southern car shops, at Madison, Ind. When nineteen years of age he moved to Columbus, Ind., where he began working at the trade of carpenter, and after the Civil War moved to Elgin, Ill., where he lived until July 10, 1867, the date of his location in Springfield, which has since been his home.

Mr. Whipple enlisted in Company D, Sixty-seventh Indiana Infantry, and served to the end of the war, first under Captain Abbott and later under Captain Simmons. He enlisted at Columbus, Ind., and was discharged at Indianapolis, in October, 1865. He was taken prisoner at Manassas, Ky., was paroled and sent to Indianapolis, and rejoined his regiment. He served part of the time under General McClernand, of Springfield, and participated in the Battles of Green River, Nashville, Cumberland River, and many skirmishes. He is a member of the G. A. R. and has every reason to feel pride in his war record.

Mr. Whipple was married, at Columbus, Ind., August 12, 1862, to Miss Lena Zucksworth, who was born in Saxweimher, Germany, November 6, 1840, daughter of Christian and Henrietta (Limerexoll) Zucksworth, both natives of Germany, who came to America, located in Ohio, and later moved to Indiana, where they died. They were parents of twelve children and Mr. Zucksworth had three children by a former wife. He was a tanner by trade. Two children were born to Mr. Whipple and his wife: Florence, born in Elgin, February 19, 1865, married John Bennett, professor in Doane College, Crete, Neb., and they have two children, William, aged thirteen years, and Carl, aged seven; Annetta, born in Elgin, February 13, 1868, died in Durango, Cal., unmarried, December 23, 1896. Mr. Whipple was reared in the Methodist faith but has never joined any church. His wife is a member of the German Lutheran Church. In politics he is a Democrat and he has been a member of the Masonic Order forty-one years. He is well known in Springfield and resides at 1035 South Spring Street. He is upright and reliable in all relations of life and has the confidence of all who have had dealings with him.

WHITTLE, Sylvester, a well-known musician of Springfield, Ill., was born at Madison, Jefferson County, Ind., July 14, 1800, son of Henry and Elizabeth (Hoard) Whipple, the former born in Switzerland County, Ind., March 17, 1820, and the latter in Gallatin County, Ky., February 25, 1821. Henry Whipple was a cabinetmaker and, in 1850 moved to Springfield, Ill., where he followed his trade. He died there in 1903, at the age of eighty-four years, and his wife died in 1850, at the age of sixty-nine years. They had been married in Coles County, Ill., May 19, 1830, and ten children were born to them.

The education of Sylvester Whipple was received in the public schools of Madison, Ind. He was always fond of ball-playing, fishing and other outdoor sports, and had a well-defined taste for music from boyhood. After leaving school he began working in a chair factory, where he remained two years, then pursued the study of music more thoroughly than he had before been able to do, and made a specialty of learning piano tuning, which he has since followed, moving to Springfield from Jefferson County, Ind., in order to have a better field for his work. He has built up a good business and has an excellent reputation among the people for whom he has worked. He is a man of quiet disposition, caring little for public affairs, and being very much devoted to his family and home. He owns property at 1115 North Tenth Street, where he and his family reside. Mr. Whipple is a Methodist in religious belief and in political views is a Republican. He joined the Macabees November 7, 1880, and November 10, 1908, became a member of the Order of Ben Hur. He is of a genial, kindly nature, and readily makes friends.

Mr. Whipple was married in Springfield, September 5, 1858, to Miss Mary E. Shultz, born June 14, 1863, daughter of Dr. Levi and Delilah Shultz. Her father was born August 13, 1840, and died December 18, 1883. Mrs. Whipple's mother was born April 25, 1840, and now lives in Springfield. Both the grandmother and great-grandmother still survive, the latter being eighty-two years old. Mr. and Mrs. Whipple have six children: Ada E., born September 13, 1851; Hester A., born August 31, 1852; John T., born January 23, 1855; Doris A., born October 15, 1856; Frank L., born March 22, 1858; and Bright M., born January 21, 1863.

Mr. Whipple sold his property in Springfield and moved with his family to Hermiston, Unita County, Oregon, April 15, 1911.

WHITE, Daniel V., a progressive farmer of Sangamon County, and a man whose family has been closely connected with the development of that part of the State, resides on Section 27, New Berlin Township. He was born October 2, 1864, in Island Grove Township, a son of John D. White, the latter born in Vigo County, Ind. He comes of Scotch-Irish ancestry, the family having been founded in South Carolina, where his grandfather, John White, was born, and the latter's father, Thomas White, was also a native of that State, where he was born in 1789. The grandfather moved from South Carolina to Tennessee and subsequently to Vigo County, Ind., becoming one of the pioneers of that locality and a founder of the Presbyterian Church there. There he reared and educated his children, passing away March 11, 1852, while his wife died June 26, 1869. There were four sons and two daughters in his family, all of whom reached maturity: Joshua died at the age of eighty years; John D., deceased; Rachel J. died at the age of sixty-three years; Margaret, deceased, married a Mr. Woods; Thomas P. and James G.

John D. White married Mary J. Luce, December 20, 1853, and in the spring of 1864 moved to Sangamon County, buying land in Island Grove Township, but in 1878 he sold his personal property, making a trip to California. Not liking that State, he returned to Island Grove Township, and in the spring of 1879 bought 500 acres on Section 20, New Berlin Township, becoming one of the prosperous men of that locality. He added to his possessions until at the time of his death he was one of the largest landowners of the county. His death occurred in June, 1905. A strong Democrat, he supported the candidates of his party and was never known to scratch his ticket or to miss an election. A good Presbyterian, he lived up to his creed and was ever ready to assist the unfortunate. Four children were born to him and wife: Daniel V.; Thomas A., a farmer residing in Indiana; Gill P., a farmer of New Berlin Township, and one who died in infancy. Mrs. White is now residing with her eldest son. In addition to their own children Mr. and Mrs. White reared a little girl, Katie, now the wife of Frank Skaggs, of St. Louis, Mo.

After completing his course in the district schools, Daniel V. White had the further advantage of attending the Jacksonville Business College, from which he graduated in 1884. Following this he worked on the home farm until 1887, and on March 2nd of that year married Elizabeth Klug, born in New Berlin Township, daughter of Jeremiah Klug, now living in Springfield, aged eighty years. Mr. King was one of the early settlers of the locality and a representative man. His wife died in 1885. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. White located on the family farm in Island Grove Township, operating it until 1901, when they bought 160 acres on Sections 26 and 27, New Berlin Township. For a number of years Mr. White has given much attention to breeding short horn cattle, and has been exceedingly successful in this line of work. At the head of his herd he has a pure breed Bates short horn bull, bought of F. K. Thompson. His product is so excellent that a ready sale is found for his cattle. Mr. White also breeds dairy and heifer logs. Like his father, Mr. White is a Democrat and a Presbyterian. He has served for twenty years as Clerk of the School Board, and for two terms has represented his township on the Board of Supervisors, now occupying that office. He has always stood for the best interests of the people and is now a member of the Committee on Asylums and Hospitals.

Mr. and Mrs. White have two children: Mary E. and Sadie A., both of whom have been carefully educated, the latter having graduated from the Berlin High School in the Class of 1910. Mr. White is a member of the Odd Fellows, of New Berlin, and member of the Masons; Woodmen of America. He and his wife are prominent in the Presbyterian Church of Bates, Ill., in which they hold membership.

WHITE, Enoch P., a prominent citizen of Springfield, Ill., is a native of Sangamon County, where his entire life has been spent, and is well known as a veteran of the Civil War. He was born in Ball Township July 25, 1840, a son of Eli L. and Sarah (Megrely) White, both natives of Maryland, the father born near Port Deposit, in 1789, and the mother born in 1802. Eli L. White was a blacksmith by trade and also worked at farming and carriage making. He came to Illinois in 1825 and settled in 1828, and purchased 50 acres of land in Ball Township, Sangamon County, and later accumulated 500 acres of land, 246 acres of it in Ball Township and the remainder in the southern part of the county. He remained on the farm until his death, which occurred in 1850. His wife died in 1863. Four children were born to them, namely: John M. died at Decatur, Ill., in 1910; Daniel died at a tender age; Enoch P.; William M., a wealthy retired farmer living at Appleton City, Mo. The father of Eli L. White was a wealthy farmer in England, the country of his birth, and after coming to America accumulated a large tract of land on the shores of Virginia, and also considerable property in the city of Baltimore, and his grandson, Enoch P., is one of the heirs to the same.

Mr. White was educated in the Harmon School, an old log building in Ball Township, and remained on his father’s farm until he was of age, then enlisted in August, 1862, in Company A, Sangamon County, Illinois Infantry, in which he served when he participated in three battles: Black River, Champion Hills and Vicksburg. He was discharged on account of disability, at Camp Butler, Ill., in October, 1864. Then, returning to Ball Township, he resumed farming and continued successfully in that occupation until 1900, when he retired and moved to Springfield. He occupies a comfortable home at 1058 Elliott Avenue, Springfield. He has been an industrious and ambitious farmer and has well earned the ease he now enjoys.

Mr. White was married at Woodside, Ill., September 11, 1861, to Martha A. Renshaw, Rev. Miller, of the Baptist Church, and they have reared thirteen children: Albert, born in Woodside, Ill., March 15, 1843, daughter of Samuel and Martha (Gray) Renshaw, the former born in Tennessee in 1800, and the latter in Virginia, in 1810. Mr. Renshaw was a farmer by occupation and located at Louisville, Ky., where he learned the trade of cabinet-maker. Later he conducted the Woodville Foundry, where he was successful in that line of work. He married a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. White in Sangamon County, Ill., remained a short time at Rochester, then purchased 240 acres of land near Woodside, where he carried on farming until his death, which occurred in 1870. His widow survived until 1880. They were parents of three children: Addie married Warren Bergett, of Woodside, and both died recently; Elizabeth married John White and both are deceased; Mrs. Enoch P. White. Warren Burgett was a school teacher by occupation, became Principal of the Third Ward School of Springfield, and later for four years held the position of County Superintendent of Schools. Eight children were born to Enoch P. White and wife, namely: Etta, born May 7, 1862, died August 25, 1885; Egbert, born June 5, 1865, died August 3, 1866; Samuel R., born December 2, 1869, died July 12, 1871; William C., born January 21, 1868; Lois, born May 14, 1872, wife of George Kapes, of Harvard Park, Springfield; Josie M., born March 20, 1874, wife of Thomas Green, of Springfield; Claude, born June 5, 1876, remains a carpenter and lives at home; Clifford M., born April 2, 1883, a carpenter living in Springfield. In politics Mr. White is a Socialist and in religious views is liberal. His wife is an Adventist. He is an intelligent and public-spirited citizen and is highly respected by a large circle of friends.

WHITE, Frank.—A number of the Englishmen who came to the United States to find new homes where they could better their conditions, found congenial employment in tilling the soil, so that in many localities, much credit is due to the people of that nation for the development of the land. This is particularly true in Sangamon County, where a number of native-born Englishmen are farmers. One who is thoroughly representative of the best class of agriculturists here is Frank White, of Clear Lake Township, born in Warwickshire, England, May 11, 1827, being a son of Zachariah and Susanna (England) White, born in Warwickshire and Devonshire, England, respectively. The father was a ribbon manufacturer, and he and his wife spent their lives in England, he living to be 103 years of age. He and his wife had nine children, six sons and three daughters, but of them all only Frank and his brother, Henry White, of Riverton, and one sister Mrs. Elizabeth Clay of England, survive. The father served twenty-four years in the English Army before commencing his career as a manufacturer of ribbon.

Frank White was educated in England, in the intervals of working in the mines, which he entered when only seven years old. He continued to work in the mines there until he was thirty-five years old, his business being the sinking of shafts, a dangerous kind of work. On March 11, 1862, he set sail from Liverpool for Australia, and after 100 days on the water, landed in Melbourne with a party of three. They went into the mountains prospecting for gold, finding it on the Big River, and returning to Melbourne and going thence to Patterson, there secured employment in the mines at ten dollars per day. Remaining there a short time, they returned to Melbourne, and after a short stay there, proceeded to Sidney and from there, to New South Wales, where they were employed in the gold mines two years. They then went to Victoria, but in a short time set sail for San Francisco, Cal. From that city they went through the mountains of California, still prospecting for gold and meeting with a measure of success. They remained in California two years, then crossed the country via the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. White then came to Ogle, St. Clair County, Ill., to resume his old occupation of sinking a shaft, but after a short stay there, went to Indian Territory, working there in the interests of Crandall and Jay Gould, who at that time were operating seventy-seven mines. After a stay of one year there. Mr. White came to Sangamon County, settled in Riverton, where he once more engaged in sinking shafts, and followed this business for ten years. He then located on his present farm in Clear Lake Township, owning 200 acres of rich farming land in the township and 300 acres in different parts of the county. Since 1890, he has lived in retirement, after his adventurous life.

Mr. White was married in Warwickshire, England, to Jane Walker, born in that county. Her parents never left England, her father spending his life in mines there. She died in Ogle, leaving one child, Frank White, Jr., who now resides at Virden, Ill. Mr. White was again married on December 26, 1870, to Mrs. Hannah Hewitt, a widow with two children, Henry Hewitt and Mrs. Ella Huck. She died in Riverton, Ill., November 2, 1891, leaving four children Mrs. Howard Grubb, Rosina White, Edgar and Arthur White, all residing at home. Mr. White was married (third) on May 23, 1900, to Mrs. Marian B. (McNealy) Richardson, born February 13, 1840, in Menard County, Ill., but her father was a Kentuckian, who came to that county in an early day, settling on a farm where he lived until 1850, then moved to Petersburg, where his death occurred. His wife was born near Montpelier, Vt., and they came to Sangamon County, Ill., where she died in 1859, having been born March 14, 1814. Mr. McNealy was born in 1807, and died in 1807, aged ninety years. Mr. and Mrs. McNealy had sixteen children, ten sons and six daughters, five of whom survive.

During his long and useful life, Mr. White has witnessed many changes, has visited numerous places and accumulated a fortune, which he has invested in Sangamon County farm land. An excellent conversationalist, Mr. White talks entertainingly of his travels and is a man who stands high in his neighborhood.

WHITE, Gill Porter.—With a thorough knowledge of farming and what can be accomplished with Sangamon County land, the young agriculturists of this section are making a good record for themselves and their locality, and their success is being quoted throughout the State. One of those who has already accomplished much is Gill Porter White, residing on the farm homestead. Section 26, New Berlin...
Riverton, this old Mr. White operates 200 acres of rich Sangamon County land, which he devotes to general farming and stock raising, maintaining a specialty of raising the best grades of cattle and horses. He has been Highway Commissioner, and while in office was able to give his constituents a thoroughly business-like administration and execute the work in his department economically and satisfactorily.

WHITE, Henry.—The White family is old and honored in Sangamon County, and originated in England. Henry White was born, in Warwickshire, England, in January, 1835. Since coming to the United States he has labored to advance the interests of his adopted land, and is now one of the responsible residents of Riverton, where he is a hoisting engineer and farmer. He is a son of Zachariah and Susanna White, natives of England, who never came to America, but died in the land that gave them birth, the father passing away in 1874 and the mother in 1870. The father was a soldier in the English army, who participated in the battle of Waterloo and also fought during the Irish Rebellion, being the color bearer. He was wounded on two occasions, serving in all twenty-eight years and eleven months. Later he was interested in mining.

Henry White is self-educated, having been put to work at a tender age. When he was twenty years old he was made plow boss by the later boss of a gang on the surface at the mines in his vicinity, and continued to work in this manner until 1884, when he sailed for America, landing in New York. From that city he came direct to Dawson, Ill., and for a year worked in the mines there, then moved to Riverton. After a year spent in this town, he went to Canada, and spent eighteen months in the Dominion, but did not like it there and returned to Riverton, where he bought a small farm of five acres, which has continued to be his home ever since. He devotes his land to truck farming and is producing some very fine vegetables, for which he finds a ready market on account of their excellence. In addition to this his place, Mr. White owns realty in Springfield, and is in comfortable circumstances, although all his property has been earned by his own hard work.

Mr. White was married in England, in May, 1870, to Ann Nicklin, daughter of Amos and

Sarah Nicklin, born in England, where her parents lived and died. Mrs. White and her sister are the only ones who came to the United States. Mr. and Mrs. White became the parents of thirteen children, nine of whom survive; Susanna, wife of Arthur Tyler, a farmer; Sarah, whose husband is in the employ of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad Company at Springfield; Mary, wife of Benjamin Harrison, lives in Spaulding, III.; William H. and Zachariah live at Spaulding; Clara, wife of Albert Elliott, a farmer of Canada; Alice Hamrick lives in Spaulding; Harry lives in Riverton and is engaged in mining; and Richard, who resides with his father. There are thirty-six grandchildren and three great-grandchildren in the family, and Mr. White is devoted to them all and proud of them and of his family, as he has every reason to be, for his children have grown up to do him credit.

Mr. White attends service at the Episcopal Church. He is a Republican, but has never cared to come forward for office, his business affairs occupying his time and interest. He is a fine-looking man, hale and hearty, who possesses a genial manner and kindliness of disposition that makes itself felt. While he had practically no educational advantages, he is well informed and thoroughly abreast of the times. Not having had many advantages himself, he was determined that his children should be more fortunate, and gave them good educations.

WHITE, James C.—The history of the Civil War will not be completed until the last veteran of that great struggle answers to the last roll call, for the sacrifices of those who served in it did not cease when peace was declared, but have continued throughout lives that have in many cases been overshadowed by the after-effects of wounds, privations and exposure. One of these men of whom Sangamon is justly proud, is James C. White, residing at No. 703 North Fourth Street. He was born in Macon County, Tenn., June 29, 1847, a son of Archibald and Lucy J. White. The grandfather, Archibald White, was born in England and married Jennie White, who bore the same name, but was no relative, born on the North Fork of Barren Run, Macon County, Tenn. The grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier, and a good, brave man. His son, father of James C. White, was a farmer all his life, dying June 10, 1865, in the place where he was born, in Macon County, Tenn. His widow survived him many years, passing away in 1894, at Latham, Logan County, III. Both were consistent members of the Christian Church, in which faith they brought up their children, who were as follows: Timothy: Samuel, deceased; Harriet; James C.; Mary Mary J.; Mrs. H. M. Bond, of Kansas City, Mo.; George, deceased; Archibald, of Auburn, Ill.; John M., of Springfield; Lovell R. and Martha, both deceased.

James C. White remained on the homestead until he was sixteen years old, and received a meager education, attending school six months altogether. When only a lad of sixteen years, he enlisted, at Frankfort, Ky., as a private in Company F, Fifty-second Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, under Captain W. C. King and Colonel John M. Greider. When his first term of service expired he re-enlisted in Company D, Eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, in 1864, and continued until he was honorably discharged. His war experience being ended, he returned to his old home, but after a short stay there, came to Illinois. He spent twelve years at Duquoin, principally engaged in farming. Following this he worked in several places on farms and at railroad labor, until his marriage, when he returned to Duquoin. He has resided in several communities, finally coming to Springfield in 1901, and has been connected with several lines of business, always hampered by the effects of the terrible strain he was under at a formative period. Forced into manhood when but a boy, he shouldered heavy responsibilities that undermined his health and unfitted him for strenuous labor.

Mr. White was married at Macleanboro, Ill., January 18, 1877, to Miss Mary A. Lany, a native of Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. White became the parents of children as follows: James C. died at the age of six years; Timothy at home; and Harriet, now Mrs. Thomas Rourke, of Springfield. Mr. White was formerly a member of the Christian Church. In politics he is a Republican, but has never held office. A brave man, who gave his best services to his country, Mr. White is deserving of more than passing mention in a work of this kind, which has for its object the preservation of the records of those who have contributed towards the greatness of the county or community. What more can a man do than to offer up his life to a cause he loves? That is what James C. White did nearly fifty years ago.

WHITE, Robert E.—The agricultural interests of Sangamon County are among the most important here, and many of its most substantial citizens are engaged in tilling the soil. One of the prosperous farmers and stockmen of Crawford Township is Robert E. White, of Section 29, born on this farm, in the house he now occupies, September 6, 1867. He is a son of Thomas E. and Elizabeth M. (Purvines) White, who were married February 18, 1832. Mrs. White was born on Section 29, a portion of the farm now owned by her son, July 23, 1834. The farm was entered from the government by her grandfather, John Purvines, who came here from South Carolina about 1810. His son, Samuel Purvines, father of Mrs. White, married Mary Irwin, who was brought here by her father, Linn Irwin, also a native of South Carolina, who became a pioneer of this locality in 1819. Thomas E. White was born in Montgomery County, Ill., near Coffeen, June 15, 1832. His parents dying when he was about five years old, he made his home for a time with a sister, Mrs. Alderman, who survives, aged eighty-five years.

When still a lad, Thomas E. White came to Sangamon County, living here until the gold excitement in California, when he made a trip west, but returned and married. He was one of the progressive men of his period, his efforts meeting with well-merited success. Settling down on the farm his wife inherited, he developed it into a good property, and there they reared their children, who were: twins, who died in infancy; Lola A., born January 18, 1864, married Charles B. Hawkins on February 11, 1886, a farmer of Cartwright Township, issue,—Thomas S., Erma E., and Robert B.; Robert E., born September 6, 1867; Thomas S., born December 21, 1876, married Grace Newman, lives on a portion of the homestead, issue,—Thomas Emory and Dela Fay. Mr. White is a Republican, and filled a number of the township offices, discharging his duties as a public official as faithfully as those pertaining to his private life. He was a Mason, fraternally, while in religious faith, he was a member of the Methodist Church. Mrs. White resides with her son, Robert E. White, this arrangement having been entered into upon the death of Mr. White, October 2, 1891, when he was but fifty-nine years old. He was a man of more than ordinary ability and his many excellent traits of character combined with a pleasant personality, won for him lasting friends.

Robert E. White spent his boyhood upon the farm, attending the schools of his neighborhood. From the time he was tall enough to reach the plow handles, he bore a man's part in the farm work, and learned farming from the beginning. On November 8, 1893, Mr. White was united in marriage with Ollie Irwin, daughter of Samuel G. Irwin, now deceased, the mother surviving. Mrs. White was born November 8, 1868, and brought up on a farm. Mr. Irwin was one of the brave soldiers of the Civil War, belonging to Company G, One Hundred and Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He was captured but made his escape from the infamous Andersonville prison. Following the war, he spent some peaceful years. He and his wife had ten children, six of whom survive, four sons and two daughters.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. White located on the farm which is now their home, and there their only child, Vance Lee, was born on December 21, 1894. This bright young fellow is now attending school in the White district, as did his father. Mr. White and his brother Silas, are conducting the homestead of 300 acres, and 200 acres additional. They carry a good grade of stock, now specializing on the Duroc-Jersey hogs, although for years, they raised Poland-China hogs. In politics, both brothers are Republicans. Fraternally, they belong to the Modern Woodmen of America of Pleasant Plains. They are enterprising young men, devoted to their work, whose success is but the legitimate outcome of intelligent effort directed along lines they thoroughly understand.

WHITECRAFT, Walter S. (deceased), spent most of his life farming in Christian County, Ill., but seven years before his death retired from active life and located in Springfield. He was born on a farm near Edinburg, Christian County, August 23, 1863, son of Silas M. and Lottie (Price) Whitecraft, the former born in Kentucky and the latter in New York. The parents were farmers and Walter S. Whitecraft received his early education in the country schools. He afterward took a course in a business college in Springfield, after which he began farming with an uncle in Christian County. He was an enterprising and successful farmer and was esteemed by all with whom he had business or social dealings, for his honesty and integrity. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and in politics a Republican. He belonged to the Knights of Pythias at Edinburg.

Mr. Whitecraft was married, at Taylorville, Ill., February 22, 1893, to Miss Alma Byers, who was born in W. Va., November 18, 1872, daughter of J. C. and Mary (Blockin) Byers, the former a native of West Virginia and the latter of Maryland. Children as follows were born to Mr. Whitecraft and his wife: William S., January 21, 1895; Helen C., August 3, 1902; Ruth E., December 12, 1904; Jane, November 13, 1907. Mr. Whitecraft died in Springfield, November 11, 1907, and his remains were buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery. He was a man of social; kindly disposition and his loss was genuinely mourned by a large number of friends. His widow owns the home occupied by the family, at 1220 West Monroe Street, and devotes herself to the training and educating of her children.

WHITMORE, Oliver.—Every branch of industrial activity has its exponent in Springfield, and many of the business men here have reached a condition of excellence not excelled by any in the State. One of the prosperous representatives of the business life of this city is Oliver Whitmore, dyer and cleaner, conveniently located at No. 1604 North Twelfth Street. He was born in McKeesport, Pa., September 10, 1885, a son of Daniel and Catherine (Cripiliver) Whitmore. The father was born in Pennsylvania and grew up in his native State, learning the carpenter trade. In young manhood he moved to Toledo, Lucas County, Ohio, where he lived until 1888, in that year coming to Illinois, and establishing himself in a contracting business in Chicago. During his residence in that city, he erected more than 500 houses, many of them being in Elsdon, a suburb of the city. In 1897, he moved to Springfield, where he continued his contracting operations until 1905, when he entered the employ of the Abbott's Box Factory. He and his wife make their home at No. 1305 Poorfdr road. They attend the Third Presbyterian Church. The child-

Wickham, Seth W. (deceased).—Sangamon County has some of the best farms within its confines than can be found in the State, and their owners have justly won their place to the favorable regard of the progressive farmers who have exerted themselves in cultivating the soil. Some of the older farmers, after years of honest industry, have ceased their labors, and now, retired and living in Springfield, are free to devote time and attention to civic matters. One of the representative men of the agricultural class who lived retired for some years prior to his demise was Seth W. Wickham of No. 334 Douglas avenue. He was born in Licking County, Ohio, October 30, 1824, a son of Hull and Phebe (Evans) Wickham, the former born August 3, 1788, in Licking County, Ohio, and the latter in Ohio, February 3, 1790. The father was a farmer, living and dying in Ohio, as did his wife. They had eleven children, four sons and seven daughters. The father was a soldier in the War of 1812.

Seth W. Wickham attended the primitive log schools of Licking County, Ohio, and at the same time worked on his father's farm, learning how to do all kinds of farm labor, so that when he came to Sangamon County, in 1850, settling on a farm near Springfield, he was able to make a success of his attempt. This farm of 100 acres continued to be his home until his retirement in 1886, when he moved into Springfield. While living in the country, he served as School Director for several years. His religious connections were with the Methodist Church, which he joined early in life, and he was a Republican.

On December 31, 1868, Mr. Wickham was united in marriage to Cornelia (Frueze) Large, born in Sangamon County, October 24, 1839. Her parents came to the county from New Jersey at an early day, the father working at the carpenter trade for a number of years, but eventually engaged in farming. He lived to be ninety years of age. He and his wife had four daughters. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wickham: Thomas W., of No. 506 South Douglas avenue, and Minnie L., wife of Louis Ferreira, a farmer of Clark County, Wis. There are six grandchildren in the family, and one great grandson, and all are living. Mr. Wickham owned his residence and other property, having invested quite extensively in city property, as he had a firm belief in the city's future. Mr. Wickham died June 3, 1911.

WIEBORG, George (deceased).—To provide generously for a family he has brought into the world and the wife he has taken unto himself, is the hope of every right-minded man. Some succeed better than others. When one of the prosperous ones combines with business ability, a generous, kindly disposition, and a sense of purpose and devotion to family ties, he is tenderly cherished, and when death takes him away his memory is kept green in the hearts of those who loved him in life and miss him now that his place is empty. A representative farmer who for years was an important factor in the agricultural life of Sangamon County, was the late George Wieborg, who in life resided in Woodside Township. He was born in Hamburg, near Berlin, Germany, April 25, 1858, a son of William Wieborg, also a native of Germany, and a farmer by calling. The parents never left Germany, the mother living to the age of eighty-six years, but the father dying many years before her. George Wieborg had a half-sister.

George Wieborg, while receiving a common school education, worked on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old. At that time he came to America, arriving in 1866. Just after the close of the Civil War. Landing in New York, he came direct to Petersburg, Ill., where he began farming, continuing in that locality for five years. He then moved to Hillsboro, spent a year there, then came to Sangamon County and bought the farm which is now the family residence, in Woodside Township. There he passed away, November 18, 1909, dying in the faith of the German Lutheran Church, of which he had long been a member, and of which his family are also members.

Mr. Wieborg was married in Hillsboro, Ill., to Margaret Jacobs, born in Hamburg, Germany, April 16, 1854. Her parents came to Petersburg, Ill., in 1896, locating on a farm, where they resided until moving to Hillsboro. There they also farmed, later returning to Petersburg, where both died. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wieborg, of whom seven survive: Christopher conducts the farm for his mother, and was born December 8, 1883; Henry, born January 16, 1880, and Jacob, born April 7, 1891, with Christopher, own 400 acres of valuable farm land in Woodside Township;
Laura; George lives at home; Mary, married and residing in Curran Township, has one child, Margaret; Lena married William Grath, lives in Woodside Township, and has one child, Davis.

Mr. Wieborg was a strong Democrat but could never be induced to accept office, although his neighbors frequently urged him to accept nomination, for they realized that men of his character were needed in positions of trust. He felt that he was better fitted to exert his influence as a private citizen, so never put himself before the public. He was quiet and unassuming, devoted to his family, and eager to make life pleasant for them. Hard-working and a good Christian, he was a model man, and left behind him a worthy record for his children to follow.

WIEDLOCHER, Frank. — It is a long step from the day when our forefathers ground their meal by pounding grain between two stones, in the primitive mill, to the mill plant of the pres-cent day, with its modern equipment, carefully adjusted machinery and electric motive power, but the evolution has been brought about by studious, practical men, and the industry now requires specialists, no less than other lines of modern business. The Elevator Milling Company, of which Frank Wiedlocher, a representative citizen of Springfield, Ill., is President, is an example of the perfection which has been reached in this, almost the oldest industry.

Frank Wiedlocher was born at Virden, Ill.,
March 9, 1861, a son of Frank A. and Margaret (Keisling) Wiedlocher, natives of Germany.
Both parents came to America in sailing vessels which required about sixty-five days to make the voyage, the father landing in the United States in 1852 and the mother one year later.
They were married after meeting at Springfield, Ill. He landed near New Orleans and later came up the Mississippi River as far as St. Louis, where he remained for several years working as a miller, came from there to Springfield, and afterwards moved to Virden. During the Civil War he made flour at Virden, for the Government, going from there to a mill at Butler, after which he conducted the Old Berlin Mill for one and one-half years. Then he returned to Springfield and continued in the milling business until 1870, when he moved to Elkhart, Ill., and there engaged in milling for two years, followed the same business at Lincoln for five years, and then returned to Springfield once more, where he operated the old Spring Creek mill for two years. Impaired health caused his retirement and he resided at Springfield until his death, in 1901, when he was aged seventy-six years. His widow survives and resides at No. 118 West Mason Street, Springfield. They had eleven children and seveen of these are living. He was a Democrat in political opinions, but was never willing to accept office. He was a faithful and consistent member of Sts. Peter and Paul Roman Catholic Church, and was identified with St. Vincent's Catholic Society.

Frank Wiedlocher, inheriting his father's name, together with his business inclinations, obtained his education in the public schools of Lincoln and the parochial schools of the Catholic Church at Springfield. From the time he was fifteen years of age he has been interested in milling, and worked continuously in a mill until he was nineteen years old, going then to the old Lewis coal mine for a short time, but later returning to milling. He was in the employ of Louis Wacherly for one year and for one year more was engaged at Everybodies' mill and the new firm, Dana & Dana for four years, after which he was with the hominy mill at Springfield and served there as second miller for thirteen months. That mill was destroyed by fire and he then rented the water mill on Spring Creek and went into business with Fred Hienfeld. Six months later he bought his partner's interest and continued alone for four months, then sold out. The two former partners then resumed their business relations and bought the Everybodies' mill, which they operated for eighteen months and then sold to Elmer Dana. Mr. Wiedlocher then embarked in a wholesale and retail flour and feed business, locating on East Adams Street, but his business soon met its fate, and he rented a larger building on Fourth Street, where he remained until 1890, then purchased the tract on which he subsequently erected his present fine building, which is known as Arlon Hall. In 1895 Mr. Wiedlocher's partner died and he bought the latter's interest from the widow, and has continued the business. He is president of the Elevator Milling Company and has additional interests, being a stockholder in the Cora Coal Company and in the Tiger Gold Mine Company.

At Winchester, Ill., on September 4, 1884, Mr.
Wiedlocher was married to Miss Amelia Metzgar, who was born at Nelderissen, Baden, Germany, October 6, 1863, a daughter of N. Metz-zar. Her parents are now deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Wiedlocher five children have been born, namely: George, who is employed by his father at Springfield, married Mary Duifeld; Marie, who is now Sister Mary Magdalene at St. John's Hospital; Carl, who is a student at Quincy College; Frank, who attends St. Peter and Paul School; and Clara, who is a student.

at the Dominican Academy. The family belongs to SS. Peter and Paul Catholic Church.

While he has always been an interested citizen, Mr. Wiedlocher has never desired public office. Like his father, he is a Democrat. He is a member of a number of fraternal and social organizations, including the Western Catholic Union; the Catholic Order of Foresters; St. Vincent's Society; the Modern Woodmen of America and the Loyal Americans.

Wieties, Jeff, a prosperous farmer of Sangamon County, Ill., was born in Hanover, Germany, April 29, 1851, a son of Ulff and Minnie (Utekins) Wieties, both natives of Germany, the former born in Hanover. The father was a farmer in Germany and had served in the German Army. He and his wife came to America with their son Jeff, in 1852, sailing from Bremen and landing in New York, after spending seven weeks on the voyage. One son, John, remained in Germany and came to America at a later date, and the parents brought one son with them. John Wietles worked twelve years in the State House and is now janitor of Odd Fellow's Hall in Springfield. The father came direct to Springfield and assisted in building the State House which is now the Court House. He purchased a farm of eighty acres in Cass County, later moved to Adams County, farmed there ten years, then returned to Springfield and worked in the rolling mills until his death in 1886. His widow died in 1892.

Jeff Wietles received his education in the country schools of Cass County, Ill., and pursued his studies in a log building. He spent his time on his father's farm up to the time he was married, after marriage worked sixteen years in the Rolling Mills, then worked eight months at Noblett's laundry as engineer. He was engineer for the street car company which first installed electric cars in Springfield, in 1890, and for the following fifteen years was with that company. He spent two years and eight months at Davenport, Sangamon County, as engineer at the electric light plant. He came to his present farm in March, 1908. He owns twenty acres and rents ninety acres besides. He devotes his land principally to general crops and is successful in his operations.

He is an active member of the Lutheran Church and is interested in the welfare of his community. In politics he is a Republican and is one of the Judges of Election of his district. Fraternally he belongs to the American Home Circle and to Sangamon Lodge No. 6, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Wietles was married in Adams County, Ill., March 13, 1872, to Miss Louise Brunetz, born in that county on New Years Day, 1855. Her parents emigrated to Adams County from Hanover, Germany, and located on a farm near Crown Point, Ill., where their last days were spent. Mr. Brunetz worked on the construction of the Wabash Railroad from Clayton to Camp Point. He and his wife had nine children. Nine children were born to Mr. Wietles and his wife, of whom seven survive, namely: Ulff, of Springfield, works for the Illinois Watch Company; Fred, employed by the same company; William, of Granite City, Ill., is agent for the Illinois Traction System; Ella married James Courson, a machinist in the employ of the Western Railroad Company; Clara, wife of William Love, in the employ of the Berry Piano Company, of Springfield; Minnie and Clarence, live at home. There are nine grandchildren in the family. Mr. Wietles is a man of intelligence and ability, social in disposition and popular with his friends.

Wilcox, Ellis.—The pioneers of Illinois were pre-eminently courageous and resourceful, establishing their struggling settlements on the frontier. In all their efforts they displayed a wonderful readiness in adapting themselves to conditions and meeting emergencies. Their hardihood and energy in upbuilding and maintaining a happy home life laid the foundation for the present civilization. Their love of home and family grew with the passage of time, and as they and theirs emerged from the period of making homespun clothing and living entirely off the products of their land, they took pleasure in the victory that definitely crowned their work, which was one of independence and self-help. The Wilcox family originated in Scotland, but the younger John Wilcox was born in Maryland. He married in Virginia, Lucinda Oglesby, born in that State, and a first cousin of the late Gov. Richard J. Oglesby. The death of John Wilcox occurred in Illinois and his remains are interred at Round Grove Cemetery. Mrs. Wilcox came of English ancestry, so that their son Ellis inherited the traits of both Scotch and English forebears.

Ellis Wilcox was a man of strong character and was pre-eminently fitted to be a pioneer. He never received any schooling, but was a splendid natural mathematician. He came to Sangamon County to live with his father, making the trip on horseback from Kentucky. Later he rode to Galena and back. At that time the family of Hugh McGarry lived in that region. There were still some Indians and wild game was plenty. About 1826 he married and moved his household possessions in a prairie schooner, locating four miles west of Berlin, where he engaged in farming. He put up a log cabin on the land he secured, improved his farm and added to it, and at the time of his death owned about 1,500 acres. He died about fifteen years ago, when he was one hundred years old, having passed that birthday by four months and ten days. He was a good machinist, shoemaker and carpenter, but made a very little money working at these different trades for the various pioneer families were generally poor. By birth he was a Virginian, but early moved to Kentucky, where his marriage occurred. His wife was Ann Lewis, a daughter of Nathaniel and Mary (Moss) Lewis, natives of South Carolina. Ann Lewis was fourteen years old when the family moved to Kentucky. Her parents later moved to Macoupin County, Ill., where they resided until their deaths, engaged in farming. Members of the Lewis family served in the Revolutionary War. Ann Lewis Wilcox died at the age of seventy-two years, about thirty-five years ago. Ellis Wilcox and his wife had ten children, three of whom still survive: Thomas M. of Berliu, Ill.; Dr. J. L. Wilcox of Springfield, and J. F. Wilcox of Phoenix, Ariz.

Mr. Wilcox was a Whig, but later became a Democrat, and his ideal was Henry Clay. Never curbing his independence, he took but little part in public life. He was always a liberal and tried hard to do what he believed was his duty. For many years he was the oldest living resident of Sangamon County, and his memory was remarkable. During the latter part of his life he was an authority upon matters relating to the history of Sangamon County, and always enjoyed telling of his experiences when the wilderness was still an unknown quality.

WILCOX, J. L., M. D., one of the oldest practicing physicians of Springfield, Ill., who has served many years as City Physician and is President of the Board of Orphan Examiners, was born in Island Grove Township, November 20, 1832, son of Ellis Wilcox, whose biography also appears in this work. The early education of Dr. Wilcox was acquired in the old log subscription school near his home, and for a time he afterwards attended public school, after the establishment of a regular public school system. He entered Shurtleff College in 1853, spent one year there, then took a two years' course in classics at Illinois College. After studying a year and a half with Drs. Wilson and Gibson, of Berlin, Ill., he entered Rush Medical College, and about one year later entered St. Louis Medical College from which he graduated in 1859. After his graduation Dr. Wilcox spent one year in California Gulch, carrying a pack on his back, and occupied in mining and practicing medicine. He then located in Manitoba, Ill., where for a year he practiced in partnership with Dr. J. B. Meigs, a very bright man in the profession. In 1862 Dr. Wilcox enlisted in the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, which was organized at Peoria, by Robert G. Ingersoll, and served until the end of the war. Returning to Illinois, he settled at Loomil, Sangamon County, and spent nineteen years in general practice there.

About 1882 Dr. Wilcox located in Springfield, and since that time has there been engaged in active practice, with the exception of five years When he served as Revenue Collector. He has always taken a strong interest in local affairs and has supported every movement for the advancement of the interests of the community. He has always advocated the principles of the Democratic party, but has not in any way entered politics for the purpose of holding public office. In 1874 he was elected to the State Legislature and became Chairman of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee. During his service on this committee he succeeded in securing a large appropriation of $800,000 to complete the State House. He was interested in securing the passage of a law compelling coal operators to have a safety escape in shafts, also served as Chairman pro tem. of the finance committee. Dr. Wilcox's service in the Legislature he always strongly advocated economy, and the Assembly in which he served was said to be the most economical ever held in Illinois.

During the second year of Dr. Wilcox's residence in Springfield he was elected City Physician, and has served at various times in this office, aggregating thirteen years. Under President Cleveland's administration he served as Collector of Revenue of the Eighth District of Illinois, and under Cleveland's first administration served as President of the Board of Pension Examiners, being re-appointed on the Board in 1907 and now serving as President. While living in Loomil Dr. Wilcox served as Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee. He is a member of the G. A. R., the A. F. & A. M., and of the Sangamon County Medical Society. In religious belief he holds very liberal views. Having lived so many years in Springfield and being possessed of ability and skill, Dr. Wilcox has built up a fine practice and has been very successful. He has established himself in the public confidence and stands high in his profession. While serving in the army he was appointed Assistant Surgeon, and the people of Springfield and Sangamon County have delighted many times to show him honor. Financially he has been successful and has owned farm land and other property. He has many friends and is considered a public-spirited, representative citizen.

Dr. Wilcox was married, in 1860, to Miss Alice V. Parker, of Island Grove Township, who lived but ten months after her marriage, leaving an infant son, Joe Allison, who married Anna Dunlap. Joe A. Wilcox died March 28, 1910, leaving a widow and four children—three daughters and one son, now living in New Berlin, Ill. November 9, 1865, Dr. Wilcox married (second) Jean Frances Patterson, daughter of Dr. Alex., Loans Patterson, of Sangamon County, formerly of Lexington County, Ky. Three children were born of this union, namely: Dwight, unmarried, a traveling newspaper correspondent; A. P., Cashier of Garfield National Bank, at Enid, Okla., and Anna Lewis, married C. B. Wilson, of Smithfield, Ky., and has three sons. Mr. Wilson is a cousin of Gen. Bell, of the United States Army. A. P. Wilcox is quite prominent in the city where he resides, and was married (first) to Leva Billings, by whom he had one daughter, Frances C., and after his first wife's death married (second) her sister, Iva Billings.

WILCOX, Thomas Moore.—No account of the pioneer history of Sangamon County would be complete without mention of Thomas Moore Wilcox whose efforts towards the development of this locality are widely known and universally recognized. He has now retired from active work, residing in his beautiful home on West Main street, New Berlin. His birth took place June 28, 1831, on a farm in what is now New Berlin Township, a son of Ellis A. and Ann (Levick) Wilcox, the father being a native of Tennessee, to which place his father came from England. In 1850, he moved with his family to Kentucky, and in 1825, came to Sangamon County. Here he spent the summer cutting down trees in which the wild bees made their home, for the beeswax, which he collected, taking it back with him to Kentucky in the fall. However, he was so pleased with the new country, that he returned, locating in Berlin Township. He was later followed by his father, who located in Clear Lake Township.

After coming here, Ellis A. Wilcox secured land from the government, his deed being signed by President Jackson. To this he added more property, becoming one of the extensive landowners of Sangamon County. This excellent man lived to the extreme old age of 102 years, being born in 1798, and dying in 1890. During the early days in Kentucky, he was a Whig, but after coming to Illinois, espoused the principles of Democracy, although bitterly opposed to slavery. While not a member of any church, he gave freely of his ample means towards the furtherance of religious work, and his wife was a devout Baptist. She was born in 1800, in South Carolina, and died in 1876, and she and her husband rest in the Moore Cemetery of Berlin Township. To them were born children as follows: Josiah L., a physician of Springfield, for many years regimental surgeon of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, and is now City Physician; John of Arizona; Charles W., deceased; Samuel, also deceased; Lucinda, married Thomas Rhea, and both are now deceased.

Thomas Moore Wilcox grew up amid strictly pioneer conditions, attending the first school erected in the neighborhood. This building was a neighborhood affair, the farmers going after the log with ox teams. They split them for penceon floors, and slab seats, when the building was completed, and all were proud of the little cabin. It had one window, while a huge stove provided means for heating during the long, cold winters. The books were as primitive as the surroundings, but the children did learn, laying a firm foundation for whatever after education they might receive. Mr. Wilcox had the advantage of several terms at the free schools, before he turned all of his attention to farm work, although from the time he could reach the plow handles, he was known as an expert in the use of the cradle, but now he realizes that times have changed, as he observes modern methods.

Remaining at home until he was twenty-four years old, Mr. Wilcox then married, on March 27, 1856, Mrs. Catherine (Rubble) Fox, born in Morgan County, daughter of Jesse Rubble, who for years was a prosperous farmer of Morgan County. After marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox rented land from his father, which was located on Lick Creek, and began housekeeping in one of the primitive log cabins of the neighborhood. By hard work and thrifty saving, Mr. Wilcox was soon able to buy land in Morgan County, to the extent of 300 acres, to which they moved, and built upon the property a comfortable residence. Later on, Mr. Wilcox bought a portion of the family homestead, continuing to hold his Morgan County farm. For years he was an extensive breeder of horses for road use, and was so successful that in 1898, he felt he could afford to retire, so leaving his home in charge of his sons, he came to New Berlin, where he now resides. He and his wife became the parents of children as follows: Charles L., died at the age of forty years; Albert on the farm in Morgan County; Carrie; Benjamin, deceased; Wallace of Lawrence, Kas.; Frank died at the age of twenty years; Thomas, an undertaker of Decatur, Ill.; Mary at home; Ruth deceased; Catherine, wife of Otis King, a farmer of Curran Township. Mr. Wilcox has always been interested in educational matters, and believes in good schools. Formerly a Whig, he became a Republican, following Abraham Lincoln. The family have all been brought up in the faith of the Methodist Church, to which they belong, and Mr. Wilcox is one of the Trustees of his denomination in New Berlin. He is a straightforward man, unassuming, but capable of holding his own. He has won the confidence and respect of all who know him, and is a typical example of pioneer days when a man had to prove his true worth before he was accepted by his neighbors. In the development of the educational, religious and agricultural interests of the county, Mr. Wilcox has always taken a deep interest, and too high praise cannot be accorded him for what he has accomplished.

WILEY, Lewis D. M. D.—Prominent among the professional men of Sangamon County, may be mentioned Dr. Lewis D. Wiley, whose reputation as a physician and surgeon has extended far beyond the confines of his chosen field of practice, the town of New Berlin. Dr. Wiley was born in Owen County, Ky., December 19, 1852, and is a son of Salem and Sarah A. (Marshall) Wiley.
The grandfather of Dr. Wiley was a native of Virginia, who in young manhood left that State and went to Scott County, Ky., where he was married to Polly Robinson and settled on a farm. His first work after settling there, was the conducting of a mill for sawing lumber, and later he entered farming being one of the prominent and well-to-do men of his section. His later days were spent in Owen County, where he died at the age of eighty-six years, in June, 1825. Salem Wiley, father of the Doctor, was born in Scott County, Ky., and he was (first) married there to a widow, Ellen Hunley, who bore him one son, who was accidentally killed during his twenty-first year. Mr. Wiley's first wife died, and he was married (second) to Sarah A. Marshall, after which he settled down to farming in Owen County, and at the outbreak of the Civil War had become one of the leading agriculturists of his section. His farm, however, like many others in that section of the country was ruined and devastated by the Confederate foraging parties, everything being confiscated and nothing left but the team of oxen. In fact, the family was made so destitute by the roads of the soldiers of the Confederacy that it was necessary for a brother, B. F. Wiley, to make trips to the grist-mill, riding on an ox to get something for the family. The necessities of life were denied these people at this time, but after the close of the war, Mr. Wiley made a new start, and a few years later found him well on the road to prosperity. Originally a Whig, he was one of the first to join the movement that brought about the forming of the Republican party, and his loyalty to the principles of Lincoln and his hatred of slavery, earned him the title of Black Abolitionist, and as such, threats were made against his life. Never backward in standing up for what he thought was right, Mr. Wiley was withal a just man, and wielded a power for good in his community. He was a devout member of the Baptist Church, and in that faith, he died in 1887, during the same year, August 17, 1873, he was married to Nancy E. Wiley, daughter of Greenville Wiley, also a native of Owen County, Ky. After their marriage the couple went to the home he had provided and he settled down to farming, his land yielding large crops under his capable handling. Taking the proceeds from his first crop, Mr. Wiley made a payment on a small tract of land, upon which was an old Kentucky hewn-log cabin, and in 1874, Mr. and Mrs. Wiley removed to the new home, and there they labored together until the little home was paid for. Death visited the happy homestead March 26, 1878, claiming the young wife, and she was buried firm in the faith of the Baptist Church. The Doctor and his first wife were born two children: Noel, born June 5, 1874, now a prosperous farmer of Morgan County, Ill., married Florence Kindred and has one child,—Minnie; Luther, born December 27, 1876, also farming in Morgan County, Ill., married Elizabeth Maple and had two children,—one which died at the age of eight years and Lewis II. ; and Minnie, who died in infancy, and now lies in a common grave.

Lewis D. Wiley spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, attending the district schools of his neighborhood and working for his father until twenty-one years old. At this time he rented land and put out a crop of tobacco, the most valuable crop for the Kentucky farmer at that time, and during the same year, August 17, 1873, he was married to Nancy E. In 1882, having accumulated a fair competency, Dr. Wiley decided to enter the field of medicine as a practitioner, having done much reading and studying along these lines during his spare time, and subsequently in 1885, he entered the University of Louisville, Ky., from which he was graduated in 1887, with high honors. He at once located in Scott County, Ky., where he commenced the practice of his profession and there continued with much success until 1893, when he located in Nortonville, Morgan County, Ill., and continued to enjoy a large practice. In order to get better schooling facilities for his children, Dr. Wiley removed to Alexander, Ill., later went to Franklin, and finally, in 1901, he located in New Berlin, where he has built up a fine practice and formed stanch friendships. Dr. Wiley has always been a close and thorough student and keeps constantly in touch with all that is going on in the world of medicine by perusal of the leading periodicals of his profession. He has a well-filled library and a large laboratory where he prepares his own prescriptions. He has always been known as a skillful and steady-handed surgeon and his success in this line has given him more than local reputation. Always public-spirited and honest, it is his plainly expressed opinion that those whom the people honor with election to places of public trust should give a fair account of themselves, and as a City Councillor he has always taken the best care of his constituents and made a record that will not be forgotten by the taxpayers. Socially he is connected with the A. F. & A. M., Franklin Lodge, No. 616, New Berlin Lodge, No. 831, I. O. O. F., the Modern Woodmen of America and the Court of Honor. With his wife, he is affiliated with the Baptist Church. Mrs. Wiley also belonging to the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies. Dr. Wiley's politics are those of the Republican party.

On August 17, 1903, Dr. Wiley was married to Mrs. Mary (Bachmanu) Long, and to this union has been born one son: Cecil Bachmann Wiley, December 23, 1904.

WILKINSON, Reuben (deceased), a half-brother of Mrs. James L. McKee, of Cotton Hill Township, and for many years one of the prominent representatives of the old pioneers of Sangamon County, was born in Kentucky, December 11, 1821, and died in Taylorville, Ill., Saturday, November 12, 1910, aged nearly eighty-nine years. During his long and necessarily eventful life, Mr. Wilkinson witnessed many changes, participating in many of them. For eighty years, Illinois was his home State, for he was but little over seven years old when his parents made their exodus from the Blue Grass State to this. Settlement was first made in Christian County, but in 1843, Mr. Wilkinson settled in Sangamon County, never to leave until he went to his last home.

Coming to Taylorville at a time when it needed the wise action of a born financier, Mr. Wilkinson was an important factor in building up the place, being identified with all of its leading enterprises, giving a whole-souled and public-spirited support to improvements and advanced ideas with regard to civic affairs. Among other enterprises, he established a flouring-mill, extending this industry until he was one of the leaders in his line up to the time of his demise. He did much to develop the coal interests of Taylorville; built houses suitable for laboring men, selling them on monthly payments suited to the means of the purchaser, and never taking undue advantage of anyone who transacted business with him. One of his policies was to retain his old employees in preference to younger ones, even if they were not so active as the latter.

One of the most devout Christians, Mr. Wilkinson was not content until the Presbyterian denomination, of which he was a member, had secured a fine brick structure in which to worship. He was also liberal in his donations to other churches and to all charitable institutions and movements, and probably his private benevolences were much larger than any of which the public had knowledge. A Republican and independent, Mr. Wilkinson was also an enthusiastic advocate of Prohibition, and exerted a powerful influence for good in this as well as other directions.

In June, 1846, Mr. Wilkinson enlisted in Company A, Fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for service during the Mexican War, under Col. E. D. Baker, and participated in the battles of Cerro Gordo and Vera Cruz. In addition to the seven dollars per month paid him while in service, Mr. Wilkinson received a land warrant for 160 acres of land which he patented in Sangamon County.

The marriage of Mr. Wilkinson took place at Terre Haute, Ind., September 29, 1848, to Miss Hester Pratt, born in England, who survived him.

Pre-eminent a leader of men, and a builder up of destinies, Mr. Wilkinson possessed the ability to judge accurately of character, and was seldom mistaken in his estimates. Having once bestowed his friendship, unchangeable in politics, was seldom found it necessary to withdraw it, and attached many to him because of his many kindly deeds and real ability as a business man.

WILLIAMS, George W. (deceased), who spent most of his active life farming in Sangamon County, was a veteran of the Civil War and was honored and esteemed by all who knew him as a man of integrity and reliability. He was born in Steubenville, Ohio, September 7, 1842, and was a son of Thomas and Rachel (Jackson) Williams, the former a native of Ireland and the latter born in Maryland. Thomas Williams was brought to America at the age of five years, and after reaching a suitable age engaged in farming near Steubenville, remaining there forty years, then removed to Assumption, Ill., where he spent the remainder of his life. He purchased 300 acres of land in Christian County and there carried on farming with success, developing his farm and making many improvements in the way of buildings. There he and his wife both died, being buried in that vicinity. They were parents of three sons and a daughter: one son, Leander, is a telegraph operator and lives in Chicago; Andrew resides at Villisca, Iowa, where he is a successful farmer and extensively engaged in hog-raising; George W., and the daughter is deceased and buried at Assumption, Ill.

In boyhood George W. Williams attended the public schools of Steubenville, Ohio, and was reared on a farm, being early taught to perform his share of the work on his father's farm. He came with the family to Illinois at the time of the Civil War, and soon afterwards joined Company K, Fifth Ohio Cavalry, serving during the remainder of the war. He participated in many battles and was taken prisoner and confined some time in Libby Prison.

At the close of the war Mr. Williams returned to Assumption, but soon afterwards removed to Sangamon County and engaged in farming, which occupation he continued the remainder of his life. He was industrious and progressive and brought his farm to a high state of cultivation. He owned land in Section 35, Curran Township, and had a comfortable home thereon. He had the good-will and esteem of his neighbors and was actively interested in the welfare of his community. He was well known in the neighborhood where he had lived so many years, and his loss was keenly felt in many circles. He was a devout member of the Methodist Church, while Mrs. Williams belongs to the Christian Church at Loami.

The marriage of Mr. Williams took place in Jacksonville, Ill., October 3, 1878, when he was united with Louise, daughter of Samuel Wilson. Mrs. Williams was born near Jacksonville, in Morgan County. Mr. Wilson was born in Kentucky in 1813, and came to Morgan County at the age of thirteen years, becoming an influential and successful farmer there. He helped drive the first stakes when the village of Jacksonville was laid out. The land which he purchased there was worth but $1.25 per acre at that time, but so great has been the development of central Illinois since that it is now worth $200 per acre. Mr. Wilson died December 4, 1902, at the age of ninety years, and his wife, who was a native of Morgan County, died in 1906, being buried in the old Flynn grave-yard. Seven sons and four daughters were born to this couple, and of these four sons and one daughter (Mrs. Williams) survive. Three sons, and Elia and Robert, served during the Civil War as members of the Illinois Volunteer Infantry. A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Mae, now the wife of Frank Cloyd, and they live one mile north of Loami, being parents of five children—Lee, Millard, Grace L., Arthur F. and Russell H. An adopted son, Ralph Williams, born in Springfield, June 14, 1888, lives with his mother on the home farm. Mr. Williams died August 7, 1906, on the farm now occupied by his widow, and was buried in Chatham Cemetery.

WILLIAMS, Jacob, was born in Ohio, January 19, 1844, son of Samuel S. and Isabella (Horn) Williams, the father born in Virginia, February 13, 1812, and the mother in Pennsylvania, in 1826. Little is known of the grandparents other than the fact that they were natives of Virginia and Pennsylvania. Samuel S. Williams was a cabinet-maker and went from his native State to Pennsylvania, thence to Ohio, and finally settled in Illinois. He located first in Logan County and later came to Sangamon County, where he died. Jacob Williams acquired most of his education as a result of his own efforts while serving in the Civil War. He lived on a farm as a boy and was always fond of outdoor sports and pastimes. He went with his family from Ohio to Illinois in 1852, and soon after to Sangamon County, which has since been his home.

August 1, 1862, Jacob Williams enlisted in Company D, One Hundred Sixth Illinois Infantry, at Pulaski, Ill., served three years, and was mustered out July 12, 1865, at Pine Bluff, Ark. He was wounded in the leg and spent about six weeks in a hospital. He participated in battles at Forest Rall, Memphis, and other points. For sixteen months he served as Chief orderly in the office of the Provost Marshal at Memphis, Tenn., then was ordered to the WILLIAMS, Henry H.—It has been truthfully said that the nation's strength lies in its agricultural interests—that without them the country could not thrive and prosperity would be a thing of the past. The men in whose hands the agricultural interests rest should be of the type that will be of benefit to the country, men with clear minds and ideas, progressive methods and industrious habits. Henry H. Williams was for many years engaged in farming in Sangamon County and knows the business of agriculture in all its branches. He is a native of the county, having been born in Rochester Township, July 30, 1840, a son of Samuel and Jane L. (Trotter) Williams. Samuel Williams was born May 26, 1800, in Vermont and in youth removed to Indiana, but in 1829 came to Sangamon County, Ill., and after teaching school at Rochester for several years, settled down to an agricultural life and was so engaged until his death. His wife, a native of Kentucky, came with her parents to Sangamon County in 1820.

Henry H. Williams secured his education in the country schools near Rochester, and his youth was spent much as that of any farmer's son. As soon as he was able he began to do his share of work about the home farm, and in this way learned the calling from the bottom up, gaining training that was of much value to him in the years following. His entire active career was spent as a farmer, he being so engaged came to Springfield, and there resided since until his retirement in 1895, at which time he owning his own comfortable home. He is one of the county's old residents, and has seen many changes take place during his long and useful life. His religious connection is with the Christian Church.

On March 18, 1874, Mr. Williams was married in Sangamon County to Catherine E. Rhodes, who was born in Maryland, May 26, 1845, from which place she accompanied her parents in 1865 to Illinois. They settled on a farm and lived there until the time of their deaths. One son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Charles H., for married Miss Anna Watts of Springfield, and they had the following children: Homer II. is living; Luther, deceased; Iva Jane, is dead; Mable, Walter R. and an infant, living.
front and took charge of the postoffice at Pine Bluff, where he served twelve months as Postmaster, being relieved to be mustered out, in 1865. He won a record of which he may well be proud and he is a member of the G. A. R. Mr. Williams was married, at Springfield, in April, 1873, to Miss Bridget Galvin, who was born in Springfield, January 21, 1857, daughter of Daniel and Honoria (Foley) Galvin, natives of Ireland, and the father a veteran of the Civil War. Her grandparents were also natives of Ireland. Three children were born to Mr. Williams and his wife, of whom two survive: Harry J., born July 26, 1875, and Honoria E., July 17, 1878. The other child, Samuel C., who was born July 17, 1874, died in childhood. Honoria married W. H. Garrison, and they reside at Cubertson, Mont. Harry J., married Augusta Mueller, and they live on a farm five and one-half miles east of Springfield. Mr. Williams is one of the old residents of Springfield and is held in high esteem by all who know him, as a useful, public-spirited citizen. He is a member of the Baptist Church and a stanch Republican. For many years he has worked at the trade of carpenter and is a skillful and industrious workman. The family reside at 629 North Eighteenth Street.

WILLIAMS, John (deceased), who for many years was engaged in the Rolling Mill business in and around Springfield, Ill., was born in Wales, in 1802, and died in Springfield in 1896. He was a son of James and Catherine (Lewis) Williams, natives of Wales, the former born in 1831 and the latter in 1820. They came to America in 1851, locating in Springfield, where the father worked at his trade of iron worker until his death in 1878, the mother surviving until 1882. Children as follows were born to this couple: William, John, Eddie, Thomas, James, and Maggie, who died at the age of seven years.

John Williams was educated in the schools of Pittsburg, Pa., and Springfield, Ill., where his parents resided for a short time, and his first work was in the rolling mills of the latter city. At the age of twenty years he secured this employment and continued to work in this line until his death, when he left his widow a beautiful home, in which she and her children now reside. Mr. Williams was one of those who helped to sink the Jones and Adams mine.

In 1885 Mr. Williams was married, by the Rev. Hines, of the Episcopal Church, to Emma Cartwright, who was born in Johnston, Pa., in 1855, daughter of John Cartwright, a native of Wales, who was born December 25, 1830, and died October 16, 1872. Mrs. Williams' mother, Mary (Reece) Cartwright, was born in Wales in June, 1830, and died September 13, 1883. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cartwright: Margaret, wife of Thomas H. Prichard, a well-to-do coal-miner of Springfield; William and Edward, of Springfield; Mary Ann, the wife of William Dunn, of Terre Haute, Ind.; Emma, who became Mrs. Williams; Eliza, the wife of Frank Ammon, of Alabama City, Ala.; David, who died when thirty-two years old; and Katie, the wife of John Newton, of Terre Haute, Ind.

Mr. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Williams: Margaret, the wife of Martin Spence, a successful contractor of Springfield, born April 12, 1886; Mamie B., born May 20, 1889, employed at the Illinois Watch Factory; and Jennie B., born April 12, 1892, also working at the Illinois Watch Factory. Mr. Williams was a member of St. John's Episcopal Church.

WILLIAMS, Col. John (deceased), pioneer, leading business man and prominent citizen of Springfield and Central Illinois in early history, was born near Owingsville, Bath County, Ky., September 11, 1808, the son of James and Hannah (Mappin) Williams, his father being of Welsh descent and a native of Virginia, while his mother was of Scotch-Irish parentage and born near Pittsburg, Pa. Though of Welsh and Scotch-Irish ancestry, he inherited the traits of energy, enterprise, and moral and business integrity which characterized the several branches of his family.

In 1823 his parents came in covered wagons with a party of friends to Illinois, first settling at Indian Point, three miles north of Athens, then in Sangamon (but now part of Menard) County, there entered government land, and building a log cabin, they spent the remainder of their lives. At this time the son John was employed as a storeboy by J. T. Brian, of Owingsville, Ky., but in the fall of the following year, in company with several Kentucky neighbors, he came on horseback to Illinois. After spending two weeks with his parents he went to Springfield and there found employment by Major Elijah Iles, the first merchant of the place, receiving a salary of ten dollars per month with board. At that time the Iles store occupied a rough-hewn log house, the oldest building in Springfield, situated on what is now the southeast corner of Second and Jefferson Streets. In a book of pioneer reminiscences written by Major Iles in the latter years of his life, the pioneer merchant says: "Soon after opening my store my father sent me from Kentucky a youth, aged sixteen, a son of one of his valued neighbors, to act as storeboy and clerk. This youth was John Williams, now better known as Col. Williams. He proved to be a valuable assistant, and lived with me as one of the family until 1830, when I sold my goods to him and established him in business."

Major Iles showed the appreciation of his employee's services by paying him $30 increase on his first year's salary, a salary from employment for the next five at $200 per annum. During this period Mr. Williams was gaining a business experience and extending his acquaintance with early settlers of Sangamon County, which proved most valuable in his future mercantile career of over fifty years. At the end of his service with Major Illes, he bought the store of his employer, paying therefor in four quarterly payments, and starting out with a capital of $300, which he had saved from his salary during the preceding six years.

When the Iles store was first started, the goods were bought at St. Louis and brought by flat-boats to what is now the city of Boswell's town, and thence transported by wagon to Springfield, and this was continued for some years after Mr. Williams became proprietor. When going to St. Louis to replenish his stock he was accustomed to carry his money in saddle-bags on horseback, and these were often dropped behind the door of the tavern or stopping place, but without suffering any loss. At this time it was often necessary to cut the silver coin in pieces to produce the needed fractional currency. For two years this store was without local competition, and customers were accustomed to come a distance of fifty to eighty miles to trade there. A large share of the trade was with Indians, who brought with them their furs and other pelts for traffic. The whites used silver coin or bartered home-made jeans, cotton and linen cloth, honey, beeswax and farm products in the purchase of goods. In 1823 a post-office was established which was conducted in the Iles store, and for many years Mr. Williams continued as Postmaster. Mr. Williams' residence in Springfield covered the period of the "deep snow" of 1830-31 and the Black Hawk War of 1832, and in the latter he served as a volunteer with Abraham Lincoln, Major Iles, John T. Stuart and other well-known citizens of Sangamon County.

About 1835, Mr. Williams' store was removed to the southwest corner of Washington and Fifth Streets, Robert Irwin (afterwards a banker) then becoming a member of the firm under the firm name of Williams & Irwin. Later the store was removed farther east on Washington Street, Jacob Loose being a partner for a short time, and this continued its location during the remainder of Mr. Williams' mercantile career, his son-in-law, George X. Black, becoming a member of the firm in 1850. During most of this period it was the most extensive mercantile establishment in the city of Springfield. The history of the dry-goods store of Edward R. Thayer, still in existence in Springfield, is more nearly contemporaneous with that of Mr. Williams' than any other, and before the days of the railroad, Mr. Williams and Mr. Thayer used frequently to make their trips in company by stage-coach to Philadelphia, to replenish their stock of goods.

Mr. Williams was married March 31, 1840, to Miss Lydia Porter, a native of Lima, Livingston County, N. Y., but at the time of her marriage making her home with her sister, Mrs. Eliah Iles. Six children were born to them, namely: Louisa Iles (the late Mrs. George X. Black), Albert Porter, John Edward, Julia Jayne (the late Mrs. Alfred Orendorff), George and Henry Carter. The two older sons, Albert P. and John Edward, died before their parents, while Mrs. Black and Mrs. Orendorff died within the past two years. The sons George and Henry are the only immediate descendants of Col. Williams still living, though several grandchildren survive.

While Col. Williams' prominence as a private citizen and business man was widely recognized, he also served in a number of important public positions. These included the treasurership of the Illinois State Agricultural Society, to which he was chosen on the organization of the Society in 1853, and in which he served six years, later being chosen Treasurer of the Illinois State Importing Association. In 1856 he was nominated on the Republican ticket for Congress from the Springfield District, and although he failed of election, ran some 2,000 votes ahead of his ticket. On the outbreak of the Civil War he was appointed by Gov. Yates Commissary General for the State of Illinois, serving most efficiently in that capacity for some six months and after the command was assumed by the General Government, although he continued to aid in caring for soldiers arriving in Springfield, either on the way to or from the field, during the war period; also served as head of the Illinois State Sanitary Commission for the last two years of the war.

By appointment of President Lincoln he acted as Government Disbursing Agent in the construction of the United States Court House and Postoffice Building in Springfield, during that time some $320,000 passing through his hands. While in the mercantile business he opened a private bank for the accommodation of citizens of Springfield which, soon after the passage of the National Banking Act in 1863, became the First National Bank of Springfield, of which he was President for eleven years. Other financial interests with which he was associated included the building of the Gilman, Clinton & Springfield Railroad (now a branch of the Illinois Central) and the Springfield & Northwestern (now a part of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Line), serving as President of the latter. Williams Township in Sangamon County, and the village of Williamsville, in that township, were both named in his honor.

At the time of the great Union Mass Meeting of September 3, 1863, Col. Williams acted as Grand Marshal of one of the most imposing processions ever seen in Springfield. Being a close friend of Mr. Lincoln, after the death of the latter in 1865, he was selected as a member of the committee to proceed to Washington and accompany the funeral cortège of the Martyred President to Springfield, also acted as one of the honorary pall-bearers at the funeral, and still later served as a member of the Executive Committee in supervising the erection of the Lincoln Monument. A man of simple, unassuming manner, but public-spirited of high integrity and sterling worth, Col. Williams commanded universal respect by his personal merit. His death occurred at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Alfred Orendorff, May 29, 1800, in the eighty-second year of his age.

WILLIAMS, Joseph (deceased).—Those who have passed to their last reward are tenderly remembered by their families and friends if their lives were worthy of such gratitude. For it is only when a man has left this world that his deeds assume their rightful character. When Joseph Williams died the entire neighborhood mourned for the loss of an excellent citizen. He was born in Ohio, April 3, 1846, a son of Samuel and Louisa (Rash) Williams, the former a native of Maryland. The mother died when Joseph Williams was seven years old, and the father married again, his second choice being Abbie Van Gilder, also now deceased. The father was a farmer all his life and died on his property in Gardner Township. There were eleven children by the first marriage and six by the second, and John Williams, of Springfield, is the only survivor of the first set of children.

When he was one year old Joseph Williams was brought to Gardner Township by his parents, they settling on 400 acres of land, and on this the lad grew up, attending the country school. He remained at home until his marriage, February 17, 1866, to Irene Matthews, of Dawson, born there July 15, 1850, daughter of John and Rachel (Lanham) Matthews, the former a native of Kentucky, who came to Illinois at an early date, dying at Dawson, where his wife, a native of Ohio, also passed away. They had children as follows: Martha E., Mrs. Charles B. McDaniel, of Springfield; William, of Dawson, married Edna Vaughan; Taylor married Alice Brown; Sarah F., deceased; Mrs. Williams; Joseph died in infancy; Hattie Elizabeth, Mrs. Frank Tate of Springfield; and Mary, Mrs. James Drone, of Decatur. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Williams located on twenty acres in Gardner Township where his death occurred March 17, 1896. He was a faithful member of the United Brethren Church. A staunch Democrat, he gave his party a loyal support. Three children were born to him and wife: Jesse, of Upper Berlin, married Carrie Ives, one child, Violet; Carrie, Mrs. John Keeley of Springfield, and Clarence, at home. Mr. Williams gave earnest attention to the rearing of his children, strove to do his full duty as a neighbor and citizen, was faithful to his church obligations, and his place has not been filled, nor can it be, for men like him are rare, and his relatives and friends appreciate his virtues and still mourn his loss.

WILLIAMS, Milton.—While most of the old soldiers have passed away, there are a number still left in Sangamon County, and these are given the honor that is their rightful due, for without the loyalty and bravery of the army, the Union could not have been preserved. One of the veterans of whom the county is proud is Milton Williams, a prosperous farmer of Woodside Township, born in Clinton County, Ohio, August 25, 1838, a son of Haines and Perlilla (Myers) Williams, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. The parents came to Illinois in 1855, locating in Cooper Township, Sangamon County, where they bought forty acres of land, upon which the father died in 1863, and the mother several years later. There were seven children (four sons and three daughters), in their family, all of whom are deceased except Milton and his brother Joseph, who was a soldier as well.

The education of Milton Williams was secured in Ohio during his boyhood, but at the same time he was required to assist with work upon the farm. In the spring of 1859 he went to Pike's Peak, following the westward trend of that day, but six months later returned home. He then went to Gentry County, Mo., remained there four years. He entered the home militia, and after serving six months, was mustered out, and enlisted in Company B, Twenty-fifth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, which later was conscripted with the Twenty-first Missouri Engineers. Mr. Williams, with his regiment, participated in the battle of Shiloh, the two days fight at Kingston, made a forced march to Raleigh, and came back to Washington, D. C., whence they were sent to Louisville, Ky., to be mustered out, being discharged at St. Louis. Mr. Williams had become a Corporal. At the close of the war he went to Sangamon County to engage in farming, joining his father and remaining there for ten years. At the expiration of that period he moved to Christian County and farmed for another decade. He then moved to Springfield, where he spent the next fifteen years, after which he located in his present home, where he owns five acres of rich farm land.

The first marriage of Mr. Williams occurred in Springfield, in 1871, when he was united to Margaret Galpin, born in Illinois in 1851, and they had one child who died in infancy. He was married (second) in Springfield, in 1886, to Lucinda Dodd, born in Morgan County, Ill., daughter of an early settler and farmer of that county. The second Mrs. Williams died December 25, 1908.

In politics Mr. Williams was a Republican from the start, and has remained faithful to this party ever since. He belongs to Stephen Post, G. A. R., of Springfield, and enjoys meeting his old comrades and with them living the stirring events of the days of the war. In religious faith he is a member of the Church of God, and is earnest in his support of its creed. He has been hard-working and thrifty, and has earnestly tried to do what he thought was his duty, both to his country and to his neighbor, and in so living up to his conception of the Golden Rule, has established himself in the confidence of his community.
WILLIS, Claude Joseph, one of the prosperous retired farmers of Springfield, residing at No. 1425 South Seventh street, was born in Wymborn, Devonshire, England, April 19, 1844. He is a son of Charles William and Ann Catherine (Rowe) Willis. Charles William Willis was a native of Devonshire, England, while his wife was born in Dublin, Ireland. Here, her father acted as Surgeon General in the British Army, being stationed in that city. All the male members of her father's family were in either the army or navy. Her brother, George J. Rowe, was Secretary of the Royal Society of Arts in England, and spoke many languages. Charles William Willis and Ann Catherine Rowe were married in England, but came to America in 1855, locating in Jacksonville, where Mr. Willis was taken sick and died. He was an attorney-at-law. Mrs. Willis continued to reside in Jacksonville, teaching vocal and instrumental music, having been educated in a Catholic convent where special attention was paid to cultivating her talent. She sang all the Grand Opera scores in Italian and was voted for her ability. Because of her remarkable talent the Episcopal Church at Springfield secured her to play their pipe organ, which she did during the period when Abraham Lincoln was living in the city. Mrs. Willis was an artist of no mean ability, and Mr. Willis cherishes a number of paintings executed by her. He and his mother had the privilege of being next door neighbors of the late lamented Dr. Newton Bateham, and under him, Mr. Willis studied in school, and until the death of that scholar, was his leading admirer.

When Claude Joseph Willis was but ten years old, the family migration took place, and he attended school in Jacksonville until he was fourteen years old. He was then forced to go to work, obtaining employment on a farm, desiring to assist his beloved mother in every way. From farming he went into the stock business, but after his marriage in 1880, he began operating the home place of his wife's, consisting of 640 acres, and still owns it, although in 1892, he rented and he and his wife moved to their new home in Springfield, which has continued to be their place of residence ever since.

On December 23, 1880, Mr. Willis was married in Greene County, Ill., to Jane Eliza Eldred, born in Carrollton, Greene County, October 24, 1850, daughter of Eno and Jane (Stuart) Eldred, the former of whom was born in Connecticut and the latter in West Winfield, Herkimer County, N. Y. They were married in the wife's birthplace April 6, 1824, and engaged in farming. Jane Stuart was a daughter of William and Jane (Hall) Stuart, the former a native of Scotland, and the latter of England. They lived and died in Herkimer County, N. Y., after coming to America. The mother of Mrs. Willis died aged sixty-seven years. There were the following children in the Eldred family: William, deceased; Mary Louise, deceased, married Lyman Wheeler; Lucius Stuart, deceased; Charles Homer, of Oklahoma, is Postmaster at Alva; Mrs. Willis; and Julia C., widow of Robert Pierson. Jehosophat Eldred, grandfather of Mrs. Willis, was reared in Connecticut, but came to Illinois after his sons and died at Galena, III. Lucy Eldred, daughter of Elisha Eldred, was a niece of the father of Mrs. Willis, and was adopted by him when six months old. She was born June 12, 1826, and died July 15, 1844. Elin Eldred was a son of Jehosophat Eldred, a native of Connecticut. The Eldred family originally came to America from Wales. Jehosophat Eldred married Polly Langdon and emigrated to Greene County, Ill., to engage in farming. After the death of his wife he went to Galena, where he died.

Just after their marriage, Elin Eldred and wife left in an old-fashioned prairie schooner for Illinois. The trip took six weeks, but they finally landed in Greene County, near Carrollton. Jehosophat Eldred were owning a large tract of land, he gave his grandson 160 acres, and upon it the young couple began their pioneer life. Mrs. Eldred taught school and among her pupils were several grown men and women. After a period, however, they were attracted by the richness of the lead mines at Galena, and moved there, occupying a floorless log cabin. After eighteen months they responded to the call of agricultural life and returned to Greene County, buying the Eldred homestead, where they resided until death, he passing away May 14, 1869, and she September 18, 1875. In 1849, Mr. Eldred made a trip to California with two ox wagons, four yoke of oxen drawing each. The start was made on June 1, by the organization of Zachary Taylor as President. At St. Joe, Mo., the little little party joined a train of some 100 wagons and Mr. Eldred was made Captain of the expedition. The trip was full of adventure. They had numerous fights with the Indians, and as this was the first train to cross the plains without baying to unload to cross the rivers and other obstructions, it shows the skill of Captain Eldred. Not a wagon wheel was lost on the trip and the train arrived at its destination in good shape. A splendid horseman and athlete, Captain Eldred enjoyed various athletic games and tests of strength. During the Black Hawk War, he had responded to his country's call and served as a soldier. A cousin of his was also in the war. He was a Whig, later a Republican, although never caring for office. While not belonging to any church, he supported the Presbyterian denomination, to which his wife belonged. Always a strict temperance man, he became much interested in the Prohibition movement.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis' children belong to the Second Presbyterian Church and are active in its good work. Mr. Willis cherishes various family relics, among them being a locket, the one worn by Mrs. Willis in her portrait. It contains a portrait of Admiral Rowe, of the English Navy, and on the reverse side is a picture of the ship "Griffin" at Rio de Janeiro. This was painted by one of the noted English painters for Mr. Willis'
WILLIS, Ross Martin.—This is the age of young men, for into the hands of the present generation are being delivered the business interests of the land. The enthusiasm, strength and youth of young men are needed in this age of strenuous endeavor. Ability and knowledge are being placed in advance of experience, and young men are not slow to take advantage of this, rapidly forging to the foremost ranks and proving their worth in countless ways. One of these enterprising young men who are barely past their quarter-of-a-century milestone and yet are already in business for themselves in Springfield, is Ross Martin Willis, a prosperous young business man of the city. He was born at Ava, Ill., December 6, 1854, a son of Rolla and Josephine (Betts) Willis, natives of Illinois and Ohio, respectively. The father was a farmer, who spent twenty-five years in the agricultural regions of Murphysboro, Ill., then moving to a farm near Ava. This continued the scene of his activities until his retirement in 1905, to the village of Ava, which has continued his home ever since. He and his most excellent wife had seven children: Ollie of Los Angeles, Cal.; Fred of Ava, Ill.; Frank of Los Angeles, Cal.; Albert, of Herrin, Ill., Ernest, of Murphysboro, Ill.; Howard, of Springfield, and Ross Martin. The father was a Republican, but never sought for or desired office.

The boyhood of Ross Martin Willis was spent near Ava, where he attended school and helped his father on the farm. When he was eighteen years old he left school, going west to Los Angeles. During the years that followed, Mr. Willis found employment at various things in several of the large cities of the country, and gained a valuable knowledge of men and conditions. He was a railroad man, and worked on street car lines, always being ready to turn his hand to whatever work lay nearest, and faithfully discharging the duties laid upon him. After seven years of traveling about, he came to Springfield, where his abilities and energies found expression in his present enterprise, the conducting of which is proving successful.

On April 3, 1907, Mr. Willis was united in marriage with Miss Lou Willis, who was born in Los Angeles, Cal. No issue. Mr. Willis is a Republican and is active in the work of his party.

Wilson, Bluford.—The family of which Bluford Wilson is a member has been prominently identified with Illinois since territorial days. The father and great-grandfather of Mr. Wilson bore an honorable part in military history, the latter, Isaac Wilson, of Virginia, having served three years as Sergeant of the Second Virginia State Line, under Captain Augustine Tall, during the Revolution. At the close of the war he moved from Virginia to Fayette County, Ky. His son Alexander, grandfather of Bluford Wilson, was one of the earliest settlers of the Territory of Illinois, coming there from Union County, Ky., in 1808, and locating at Shawneetown in Gallatin County. Alexander Wilson became a man of prominence and influence and took an important part in the development of his locality and was greatly honored and esteemed by his fellows. He was a personal friend of Governor Edwards and Governor Ford. He was sent to the First Territorial Legislature held at Kaskaskia, for a short time the capital, serving as Chairman of an important committee and as Speaker of the House, thus serving with ability and distinction in determining public policy in that day. He died in January, 1814, and as a memorial to his life and services to the Territory, the Legislature soon after passed an act granting the privilege of ferry franchise at Shawneetown, his heirs, and they have since held this privilege.

Harrison Wilson, the father of Bluford, was born in Culpepper County, Va., and was an Ensign in the War of 1812 and a Captain in the Black Hawk War. Later he was a Colonel in the Fourth Illinois Militia. His wife, Catherine Schneider, was born at Gambuskem near Strasburg, Alsace, daughter of Augustus Schneider, and came to America with her father. One son of Harrison Wilson, James Harrison Wilson, was a graduate of West Point and greatly distinguished his name by his valuable service during the Civil War, being identified with the engineering department, and was Lieutenant-Colonel and Inspector General, Army of the Tennessee, and Grants Staff. Later, in the Department of the Mississippi, he performed such valuable services that he was made Brigadier General in 1863 and Major-General of Volunteers, April 20, 1865. July 28 of the following year at the close of the war and on the reorganization of the army, he became Lieutenant-Colonel of the Thirty-fifth United States Infantry, and was also brevetted Major-General in the regular army. After his return to civil life he became well-known as an author, also engaging in railroad and engineering operations in Southern Illinois. Another son, Henry S. Wilson, served as Adjutant, Captain and Major in the Eighteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Bluford Wilson also served in the Civil War. Thus this family furnished three sons (all there were) who acquitted themselves most honorably in that struggle.

Bluford Wilson was born near Shawneetown,
Mr. Wilson is best known as a corporation lawyer and a practitioner in the United States Courts, and is now the general solicitor for the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railway Company; he was for some time general counsel for the Illinois Southern Railway Company; Vice President and counsel for the Springfield Consolidated Street Railway Company, in which he is a stockholder. He is a member of the firm of Wilson, Warren and Child, Mr. Philip Barton Warren, of the firm, being his son-in-law. In his private practice Mr. Wilson has been very successful, combining a thorough knowledge of the law with special study of the details of each case in hand, and showing remarkably clear insight into the intricacies of any question. He is an eloquent speaker, and while his arguments are delivered with vigor and earnestness, he never loses his dignified bearing, and always maintains his professional courtesy and fairness towards his opponents.

At the time of the Spanish-American War, Mr. Wilson offered his services to the Governor of the State, and although for various reasons the militia organizations were given preference in being sent to the front, he had ready to his call from 1,500 to 3,000 men for service, and was duly commissioned by Governor Tanner as Colonel. He is a member of Mendel Post No. 450, G. A. R., and a member of the Illinois Commandery Loyal Legion. In political affiliations Mr. Wilson has been closely identified with the interests of the Republican party since its inception, with the exception of his difference in opinion in the year 1892, when he cast his ballot for Grover Cleveland.

July 3, 1853, Mr. Wilson was married to Miss Alice Warren Matther, a daughter of Captain James Mather, of Louisville, Ky., and five children blessed this union: Harry died in infancy; Jessie married Phillip Barton Warren; Lucy, wife of Ralph Vance Dickerman; Bluford, who died during his senior year at Yale, was a great athlete, the champion wrestler and wing shot, a fine student and a young man of great promise. Arthur Harrison, who graduated at West Point, is now First Lieutenant Sixth United States Cavalry and won great honor in battle in the Philippines where he was desperately wounded. Mr. Wilson and his family attend Christ Church (Protestant Episcopal), which he helped organize in 1888, and of which he has since served as Senior Warden. He is a member of the standing committee of the diocese and of the Board of Trustees, and has served as delegate to the general conventions held in Washington in 1888, in San Francisco in 1901, at Richmond, 1904, and Cincinnati, 1913.

Mr. Wilson has always manifested a strong interest in the welfare and progress of Springfield, by whose citizens he is regarded with pride and esteem.
HISTORY OF SANGAMON COUNTY

WILSON, Edwin Augustus.—Some men are gifted beyond their fellows, possessing not only keen business sense, but also talent in other directions, which enables them to produce something that will live after them. Edwin Augustus Wilson, a real estate dealer residing at No. 520 South Second Street, Springfield, Ill., is an author of no mean ability and one of the leading citizens of the Capital City. He was born at New Windsor, Carroll County, Md., June 16, 1840, a son of George Washington and Sidney Ann (Stier) Wilson. The father was born September 24, 1814, in Queen Anne County, Md., a son of Sweatman Wilson, born March 12, 1784, in the same county. Mrs. Wilson was born in 1820, in New Market, Md. Mr. Stier was a lineal descendant of Rudolph Stier, the great Bible commentator. This name is also associated with the Calverts of Maryland, immediate descendants of Lord Baltimore. The home of the Calverts was at Riverside, seven miles from the capitol at Washington City, and was purchased by Henry J. Stier, of Antwerp, a lineal descendant of Rubens, the artist, and presented to his daughter, who was about to marry George Calvert. In the grave yard at Riverside an old tombstone bears this inscription: "Here lies the body of Rosalie Eugenia Calvert, wife of George Calvert, and daughter of Henry J. Stier, of Antwerp, who died March 31, 1831, aged forty-three years." The father of Mr. Wilson of this record was a shoe manufacturer.

The education of Edwin A. Wilson was secured in the public schools of New Windsor, New Market, Mount Hope in Frederick and Carroll counties, Md., Baltimore County and the city of Baltimore. When only sixteen years old he taught in an academy, being assistant to the Principal, and took an examination at Westminster, the county seat of Carroll County, when about that age. He also taught in public school at Union Bridge, Md. He left New Windsor when four years old, and lived with his grandparents at New Market, Md. Losing his father at the age of eight years, he went to Hootstown in 1848, and in 1849 went to live with an aunt in Baltimore, who was very dear to him. He went with her to New Market, Md., in 1851 or 1852. In the latter year he went on a farm in the "Lingmore Hills," of Maryland, where he learned lessons of thrifty economy which have never been forgotten. Between 1855 and 1856 he was in Union Bridge, and in 1859 or 1860 returned to Baltimore. In 1856 he read "The Conflict of Ages," "Plutarch's Lives," "Rollins' Ancient History," and similar works which did much to form his character. He feels that his education was gained more from his books and association than from the limited opportunities afforded him to attend school.

Mr. Wilson was in Baltimore during the riot of April 19, 1861. He was a stanch Union man, wearing the flag under the lapel of his coat. When Gen. Butler came to Fort McHenry and threatened to turn the guns on Baltimore, he gladly brought out the sign of his patriotism. Mr. Wilson's recollections of those stirring days when the nation was in danger are so interesting that it is regretted any of them are omitted from this biography, but space forbids their being given in full. He had unusual opportunities, going to Washington on May 1, 1861, and remaining there until the close of the war, during which time he was manager of a large military and trunk establishment, and in 1863 joined the United States Sanitary Commission. He attended President Lincoln's first reception at the White House and saw Gen. Scott there. He frequently met the President and was witness to some of the homely incidents in that great man's life that so endeared him to the nation. He was in the trenches at Washington for four days, having volunteered for the emergency when it was thought the capital was in danger, and did efficient work as a clerk in the Sanitary Commission. On January 19, 1866, while still in the service of the Sanitary Commission, he visited Springfield, to secure data from the office of Adj. Gen. Haynie, but not getting it at that time, visited other capitals, returning to Springfield in May and being successful. So pleased was he with that city that he decided to make it his home, and has lived there for over forty-five years.

On July 13, 1864, Mr. Wilson was married in Washington, to Cynthia Corwin Hannon, named after Tom Corwin, of Ohio, born November 5, 1843, in Charles County, Md., daughter of Henry M. and Julia (Longden) Hannon, Thomas Longden, an Englishman, resided in Alexandria, Va., and fought under Gen. Washington. His son, John Longden, grandfather of Mrs. Wilson, was also in the Revolutionary War. Edgar Snowden, first cousin of Julia Longden, lived in Alexandria, Va., where he studied and published the leading paper. Alexander Robey Shepherd, Governor of the District of Columbia during President Grant's administration, was a cousin of Mrs. Wilson. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are: Julian St. John, Harry Smith, Percy Edwin, Arthur Morehouse, Paul Morton, George Stanley, Winnifred, Ruth, Grace Hannon and Gladys Dulaney.

Something of a Bible student, Mr. Wilson has thought carefully on some of the subjects which engross those who have investigated religious matters, and has been a writer on these themes. He is the author of some dogmatic booklets. Believing in verbal Plenary Inspiration, he is a pessimist as to the world's condition. He believes in the absolute inerrancy of the Sacred Scriptures, in the Divinity of Christ, and in the personality of the Holy Ghost. He does not believe that the attitude of science, which is altogether of man, adds to or detracts from the truths of the Bible, which are of God. He believes in the premillennial, hence the imminent coming of Christ. Not consenting to the introduction of the sociological with what is called religion, in efforts to sway communities, for he believes that God deals with units, he is very conservative. He was reared a Methodist, but united with the Fourth Presbyterian Church in over thirty years. In 1865 he united with the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield. In 1870 he united with the Third Presbyterian Church, and was an Elder in it for over thirty years. In 1890 he united with the Second Presbyterian Church. He was Superintendent of the Third Presbyterian Church Sunday School for many years, has been President of the State Y. M. C. A. and of the local Association of Springfield, and an officer in the State organization of Sunday Schools.

A very strong Union man during the war, Mr. Wilson changed his political views after the attempt to impeach President Johnson, and became a Democrat, but for the past quarter of a century has been an independent, voting for the man he conscientiously believes best fitted for the office. In 1861 he joined Federal Lodge No. 1, A. F. & A. M., and Beacon Lodge No. 15, of Odd Fellows, both of Washington. He has also belonged to many religious organizations and has lent his influence to promote the majority of the movements put on foot in Springfield during his residence there, that he thought would elevate society or advance the interests of the people. Exceedingly conscientious and honorable in his dealings, he is a man who ever carries his principles into everyday life, and has been a powerful factor in Springfield. His record for honesty of dealing and straightforwardness of purpose is such that his word is taken without further proof of the truth of his statement. Founded on so sure a foundation, his material success has been steady, and is certainly well merited.

WILSON, Harry W.—The unions are exciting considerable interest all over the country, for through them the working man of today is able to secure better conditions in every way. The men who act as officers of their several unions are deserving of more than ordinary praise; to them is due the credit for many of the successful arrangements which have been made, as well as for the educating of both employers and employees, so that they are able to meet existing conditions without unnecessary friction. One of the best known men in the trades union movement in that part of the State is Harry W. Wilson, of Springfield, a member of the cigar-maker's Union No. 38. He was born in Orbisonia, Huntingdon County, Pa., August 21, 1871, a son of George D. and Catherine (Markle) Wilson, the former born at Orbisonia, and the latter at Richfield, Juniata County, Pa. The father was an ore miner. The great-great-grandfathers on both sides of the house were early settlers of Pennsylvania, the paternal ancestor coming from Ireland and the maternal ancestor from Germany. George D. Wilson and three of his brothers served three years in the Civil War and three of Mr. Wilson's maternal uncles served the same length of time.

Harry W. Wilson attended the public schools of Orbisonia and Clearfield, Pa., and took a great deal of interest in athletic sports, especially baseball. He became a printer's apprentice, but ill health compelled him to abandon this calling for another, and he learned the cigar-making trade, which he has since followed, finally becoming foreman of Ball Brothers, cigar manufacturers. Mr. Wilson had the misfortune to lose his father when only nine years old, and he and his mother spent some years moving about, she being auxilious to give her son the best advantages that lay within her power. In May, 1891, they came to Springfield, but returned to Pennsylvania in September of that year. They then made Clearfield, Pa., their home until February, 1896, when they returned to Springfield, only to leave it in February, 1898. After three years more at Clearfield, however, Mr. Wilson returned to Springfield in March, 1898, and has since resided in that city.

Mr. Wilson's work in behalf of his union deserved more than passing mention. Joining the Cigarmakers' Union May 6, 1891, he at once began taking an active part in the labor movement, serving almost continuously since January 1897, in the Springfield Federation of Labor. He was a Delegate a number of times to the Illinois State Federation of Labor, and also to the American Federation of Labor. He has been President, Vice President and Recording Secretary of the Cigarmakers' Union, and was three times chosen President of the Springfield Federation by an unanimous vote, serving two terms as member of the Executive Board of the Illinois State Federation of Labor as well. Meanwhile, he also became prominent as a Republican and was elected to the State Assembly in 1908 from the Forty-fifth Senatorial District, on that ticket. While in the Legislature, Mr. Wilson has been able to advance the cause of labor very materially and his work as its champion proves his earnestness and sincerity. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias, has held all the offices in the subordinate lodge and is now a member of the Grand Lodge of Illinois. He also belongs to the Red Men, Sons of Veterans and Modern Woodmen. He is serving his second term as Deputy Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and is also a member of the British Americans.

The marriage of Mr. Wilson occurred in Springfield, May 23, 1909, when he was united with Mrs. Agnes (Holloway) Buehler, born August 21, 1874, at Emporia, Kan. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are members of the Lutheran Church. He is a young man of earnest purpose and decided will. Conscientious, broad-gauged, he understands men and conditions, and is constantly studying how to better the lot of his companions and yet not insist upon measures which will be difficult to carry out.
WILSON, Henry Clay.—The practice of law calls forth not only full legal knowledge and experience, but also those qualities which are requisite for the development of true manhood. The demands of the profession are very exacting in Illinois, and no one has met them more fully than Henry Clay Wilson, attorney-at-law of Springfield. He was born in Daviess County, Ky., July 2, 1859, a son of John J. and Sarah A. (Meeks) Wilson. The family is an old one in both Virginia and Kentucky, and its representatives are also found in southern Pennsylvania. Its establishment in America took place in colonial days.

Henry Clay Wilson was educated at Central Normal College, in Indiana. He was brought up on a farm and alternated work on it with teaching until he opened his law office in Springfield in 1890, having been a resident of the city for two years. Strong in his adherence to the Republican party, Mr. Wilson has been called upon to support its principles, and served as a member of the General Assembly of Illinois during 1893 and 1894, and was the Republican nominee for Congress from the Twenty-first Congressional District in 1908 and again in 1910, but was defeated, owing to a Democratic majority. He is the founder of the Henry Clay Wilson Political School, which he established and incorporated in 1904, and is one of the best-known men, politically, in his part of the State. He is a Mason, an Odd Fellow, a Knight of Pythias, and a Red Man; is a member of the Hamilton Club, of Chicago, and belongs to the Chamber of Commerce, of Springfield. He is ex-President of the Board of Education and is on the Board of Associated Charities. His sympathies are with the Presbyterian Church, of which he is an attendant.

In August, 1885, Mr. Wilson was married to Theresa McCoyne, and they have five children: Roscoe Blaine, Reed McKinley, Jennie June, Charles Francis Eugene and Robert Proctor.

Mr. Wilson has a large practice, and also is deeply interested in real politics, having always preached and practiced integrity in political activities. His property holdings are confined to his excellent home in Springfield, where he and Mrs. Wilson entertain their wide circle of friends with true Southern hospitality.

WILSON, James.—Sangamon County has its full quota of men who fought in the Federal Army during the Civil War—men who left home and loved ones and gave of their best in order to defend the flag of their country. Members of the Grand Army of the Republic have always been revered and honored as types of the best citizenship, and this is as it should be, for patriotism is one of our principal characteristics. James Wilson, a veteran of the Civil War who is descended from fighting stock on both sides of his family, was born January 11, 1837, at Elizabethtown, Lancaster County, Pa., a son of Vincent J. and Catherine (Stager) Wilson. Vincent J. Wilson was always a resident of Elizabethtown, where he was born in 1808 and died in 1856, his business occupation being contractor and builder. His wife was born in Lebanon County, Pa., and died at Elizabethtown. Her father was a drummer boy in the Revolutionary War, while Mr. Wilson's father, the grandfather of James Wilson, served as Captain of a Pennsylvania company during the same struggle.

James Wilson received his preliminary education in the schools of Elizabethtown, and later spent one term in Brookville Methodist College. After leaving school, for a time he was engaged in farming near Crawfordsville, Ind., and then worked on the Miami Canal for several years, serving as Captain. Returning to Crawfordsville, he became proprietor of a cracker factory, bakery and grocery, but after a few years spent in this manner, decided again to take up an agricultural life and subsequently purchased a farm, which he operated until 1892, then he moved to Springfield, which city has since been his home. He at first conducted a commission business, but eventually became custodian of the G. A. R. Hall, a position which he held for several years. He has been successful in a business way and has a comfortable competency, including his home and other valuable real estate.

Mr. Wilson enlisted in the Federal Army for service in the Civil War, becoming a member of Company A, One Hundred Forty-sixth Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and fought bravely until his discharge on the last day of August, 1865, at Baltimore, Md. His battles included Shenandoah, where he fought under General Hancock. He is a member of Stephenson Post, No. 30, Grand Army of the Republic, having been transferred from the post at Crawfordsville, Ind. He is a member of the West Side Christian Church.

Mr. Wilson was married in Crawfordsville, Ind., to Anna French, daughter of Major French, of that city, and she died in 1903, having been the mother of three children: E. H., living in Indianapolis, Ind.; Martha, the wife of A. Bannon, living at No. 202 North State Street, Springfield; and James F., a bridgebuilder and contractor, residing on Logan Avenue. In September, 1905, Mr. Wilson was married (second) to Mrs. Elizabeth (Taylor) Ward, a native of Vermont, where her parents spent their entire life.

WILSON, John T., one of the prosperous and representative farmers of Sangamon County, is residing on Section 14, Island Grove Township, but was born in Buffalo Hart Township, May 2, 1859, a son of Thomas Wilson. The latter was a native of Scotland, having been born in Sornmaben, November 4, 1817, a son of James Wilson, also a native of Scotland, who married Jane Froud. In 1842, Thomas Wilson left Scotland for America, and after two years spent in eastern cities, in 1844 landed in Sangamon County. James Wilson continued to make his home with his children until his death. Thomas Wilson, upon coming to Sangamon County, bought land in Clear Lake Township, where on January 15, 1850, he married Miss Jane Riddle, who was born in Logan County, Ohio, April 14, 1828. When but a child of nine she was brought in 1837, by her parents, to Sangamon County. The Riddle family then moved to Oregon in 1851. Mr. Riddle was a very prominent man, and when a railroad was built through his section, a town was called after him. Mrs. Wilson was one of ten children. After marriage Thomas Wilson and wife began their life together in Clear Lake Township, but later sold, buying land in Mechanicsburg Township, and in 1859 moved to Buffalo Hart Township. There John T. Wilson was born soon after their arrival. Mr. Wilson became the owner of 575 acres of rich farm land, and for ten years served as a member of the Board of Supervisors from Buffalo Hart Township, being elected on the Democratic ticket. He and his wife were of the old Scotch Presbyterian faith, in which he died March 18, 1901, his wife having passed away May 27, 1892. He was a wise, conservative man, whose love of justice made him give everyone a just meed of praise for deeds accomplished. Their children were as follows: son, unnamed; Jane M., and Maxmilla, twins, born April 4, 1852, the latter dying in infancy, but the former living to marry John R. WINES, Frederick Howard. (Vol. I, pp. 595-596.)

WININGS, Samuel L.—The growing desire on the part of the people to have their homes tastefully decorated has created an increased demand for artistic work, and those who can meet this demand and profitable employment for their time and energy. One of the most successful of Springfield's decorators is Samuel L. Winings, who was born in Grove City, Ill., April 24, 1867, a son of Joseph and Leicy (Porter) Winings. The father was born in Akron, Ohio, while the mother was born in Grove City, Ill. Joseph Winings came to Grove City at an early date, settling on a farm which remained his home until his demise, fifteen years ago. During the Civil War he responded to the call of his country, and served in a cavalry regiment that was enlisted from Ohio.

Samuel L. Winings received a common school education in his native town, and learned to work on his father's farm. When he was seventeen years old he began learning the painter's trade, and worked at it for several years. Moving from Grove City to Mattoon, he continued as a painter, gradually adding interior decorating to his work. He continued to reside at Mattoon until 1906, when he came to Springfield. He has built up a large business, the quality of his work insuring continued patronage from those who have once employed his services. His artistic skill and keen perception make him one of the best men in his line in his part of the State.

In 1898 Mr. Winings was married, in Edinburg, Ill., to Ada Huggins, of Grove City. The Huggins family reside on a farm in the vicinity of Grove City, and conduct a livery stable, in addition to operating the farm. Mr. and Mrs. Winings have two daughters and two sons: Marie, Lottie, Ray and Eugene. Mr. Winings is a Methodist in religious faith and a Democrat in politics. All his life he has worked WILLIAM, Robert Lee (deceased), whose death occurred at Kansas City, Mo., July 24, 1908, was a traveling salesman by occupation. He was a native of Kansas City, born February 20, 1866, a son of Charles and Susan (Thomas) Winn. Mr. Winn was reared in Kansas City and was there married, December 4, 1892, to Miss Alice Pickrell, daughter of Abel George and Emma H. (Winn) Pickrell, who was born on her father's farm in Sangamon County. She was educated in the country schools and the Betty Stuart Institute of Springfield. Her father, Abel G. Pickrell, was a prominent and successful farmer and a veteran of the Civil War, having served three years, part of the time as Quartermaster of the regular army. Abel G. Pickrell was a son of Jesse A. Pickrell, and grandson of Abel Pickrell. The family were among the early settlers of Sangamon County and helped very much in all measures for advancing the general welfare and prosperity. Jesse A. Pickrell was the first of his family to come to the county, acquired two or three thousand acres of land, most of which he purchased at a price of about $2.50 per acre.

Robert L. Winn and wife had one child, George, born July 22, 1894, now attending school in Springfield. After the death of her husband, Mrs. A. P. Winn returned to her native county, and now resides at 414 Pasfield Avenue, Springfield. She has many warm friends in the county and is highly esteemed by all who know her for her many fine qualities and high character. She feels a justifiable pride in the record and position won by her ancestors, and has always felt a patriotic interest in the affairs of Sangamon County. She and her son have been residents of Springfield since about 1904, and before that time lived in Zanesville.

WINTER, William E.—The many advantages afforded by Springfield as a place of residence have influenced a number of men to settle there when they decide to retire from the activities of life. A well known and popular retired business man of the city is William E. Winter. He was born in Swanley, Kent, England, December 16, 1851, a son of Robert and Mary (Pucknaw) Winter, natives of Kent. The father who became manager of gas works in Kent, lived and died there as did his wife. They had six children, evenly divided as to sex, and five still survive. The grandfather on the paternal side was a shepherd, while the maternal grandfather owned a large estate in Kent.

After a boyhood spent attending school in his native place, William E. Winter worked during seven years in a paper factory in Kent, which is one of the largest of its kind in the world, but on July 9, 1893, he landed in New York City, having decided that this country would offer him the best opportunities for advancement. From New York he came direct to Auburn, Ill., where for about a month he worked on a farm, then went to Macon, Ill., where he found employment on another farm, continuing there a year. His next employment was with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, remaining in its employ a short time, when he came to Springfield. There he became cook at the Chenery House, leaving soon thereafter, to become pastry cook for the Leland Hotel. After a year, he left to embark in a confectionery business for himself, conducting it two years, when he sold out and engaged as engineer in the Springfield Rolling Mills, remaining in this capacity seven years, when, feeling the need of relaxation, he went back to England. For two years he remained there, but found that conditions had changed, and came back to Springfield to his old position as engineer, working in the Illinois Foundry. After several years there, he went into the Wabash shops, but sometime afterwards left, to enter the Egyptian Cement Works. After ten years there he retired, and since then has been enjoying a well-earned rest. Mr. Winter belongs to The Court of Honor, No. 25, and is interested in its work. On June 30, 1878, Mr. Winter was married in Springfield to Mary Pefferle, born at Napanoch, N. Y., July 6, 1853. The parents of Mrs. Winter came to Springfield in 1863. Her father was a machinist, and worked at his trade all his life. He was accidentally killed in a runaway, in 1857. By birth he was a German, but his wife was born in New York City. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Winter: Gilbert resides in Springfield, being pressman in the Illinois State Journal office; Flora, wife of Jesse Harris, lives at Silvis, Ill.; Walter is a machinist in the employ of the Wabash Railroad Company; Harry is also in the employ of the same road as machinist; Elta, wife of George Burns, who is in the employ of the Gorey Spool Company; Iva is at home. There are six grandchildren in the family. Mr. Winter owns his home at No. 1729 Stuart Street, where he has lived for the past twenty-nine years. He owns other valuable property in Springfield, which yields him a comfortable income. While a true Englishman, Mr. Winter is interested in the land where he has lived so long, and in which he has made his money. Like many of the retired men of Springfield, he is interested in securing good government, and is always willing to do his full share towards securing it.

WIRTH, Conrad (deceased).—There are those in Springfield today who well remember the days when the city was the home of the immortal Lincoln, who saw him pass daily on his way to his offices, and learned to know and love the kindly, homely face that was so soon to bear the impress of the nation's tragedy. These old residents of Springfield are proud of their memories of Lincoln and Douglas, and enjoy talking about them whenever occasion offers. Among the retired business men and capitalists of the city was the late Conrad Wirth, who had lived there since 1854. He was born in Wittenberg, Germany, October 16, 1827, a son of Conrad Wirth, also a native of Germany, who with his wife spent his life in his native land, dying there. He was a farmer, but early in life served in the great struggle with Napoleon.

The boyhood of the younger Conrad Wirth was spent on the home farm, and he received a good education in his native tongue, but in 1853 left Germany, coming to America via New Orleans. After two months spent in that city he went on to Cincinnati, and after a year there came to Springfield, which was his home until his demise. Being a young man of sound business sense, Mr. Wirth became associated with some of the substantial institutions of the city, including the Springfield Dairy, of which he was at one time owner. As he grew older, however, he gradually withdrew from business activities, retired although he retained his realty holdings, which were considerable, including his pleasant home at No. 114 Elliott Avenue.

The marriage of Mr. Wirth occurred at Springfield, February 7, 1854, when he was united with Mary Bierbraun, born in Germany, May 16, 1840. Her parents came from Germany to La Porte, Ind., in 1852, living there for two years, when they came on to Springfield, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Wirth had three children: David, married Delia Whitlock, two children, and Clara, and is a member of the firm of Wirth & Gaupp, florists; Conrad, married Johanna Mester, four children: Marie, Elizabeth X., Conrad and David; and Elizabeth, who died in 1886.

Mr. Wirth was a member of Trinity Lutheran Church, of which he was a substantial contributor, and in politics was a Democrat. Through hard work and frugality he succeeded in amassing a comfortable fortune, and was enjoying the fruits of his labors. Mr. Wirth died February 14, 1911, and is buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

WOMACK, Presley Barry.—Illinois sent thousands of her best men to the front to battle for the Union during the Civil War. She drew them from their ploughs, from their desks and from their professions, and many never returned. But those who did, developed into efficient citizens, the military training they received fitting them for the duties of private life. One of those soldiers who resumed farming activities upon his return, and now retired, is Presley Barry Womack, of Springfield. He was born in Wayne County, Ill., January 25, 1830, being a son of James and Elizabeth (Barry) Womack, natives of Bowling Green, Ky., the former born in 1791 and the latter in 1798. The father, who was farmer, emigrated west, locating in Wayne County, Ill., in 1825, and lived there until his death, in 1868, his widow surviving him until 1878. He was Justice of the Peace for a number of years, as well as Road Commissioner, and was one of the most prominent men of his locality.

Presley B. Womack was brought up in Wayne County, being educated in its public schools, and trained in farm work by his father, remaining with him until he was twenty-five years old. He then began farming for himself, thus continuing until his retirement in 1894. Coming to Springfield, he lived retired for several years, and in 1901 entered the employ of the C. & A. Railroad Company as flagman, thus continuing for five months, when he accepted the same position with the B. & O. Railroad Company, but gave up all work in 1902. Upon coming to the city, he located at No. 414 West Carpenter Street, but recently purchased his residence at No. 119 West Reynolds Street. On September 14, 1851, Mr. Womack enlisted in Company I, Forty-eighth Illinois Infantry, under Captain Galbraith, and acted as hostler for the officers. His first battle was that of Port Henry, and later he was in the Battle of Shiloh. Mr. Womack remembers well the illustrious Abraham Lincoln. When he was but a lad Mr. Womack hauled wood for the man who was later to become the head of the nation, and recalls the kindly consideration then shown him.

On February 11, 1855, Mr. Womack was united in marriage with Mahala Wheeler, daughter of John and Eliza (Ayres) Wheeler. They were Virginians by birth, who came to Illinois at an early day, first living in Gibson County, and later coming to Sangamon County, where they died. Mr. and Mrs. Womack had the following children: Susan, wife of Albert Prouty, a teamster; Henry L.; Martha, wife of John Priestman; William S., book-keeper; Benjamin F., an electrician; Anna, wife of William Koch, and four who are deceased. There are seven grandchildren in the family. Mr. Womack belongs to Stephenson Post, No. 50, G. A. R., as well as to the Baptist Church. He is a Republican in political faith, being proud to support the party of Abraham Lincoln. He is one of the substantial men of the city and enjoys the confidence of those who know him.

After about three months spent in New York state, most of the time at Plains Plains, Dutchess County, where he was employed at farm work, he came to Sangamon County, arriving at Mechanicsburg before the end of the spring of the year mentioned. He was born at Docking, Norfolk, England, July 21, 1845, a son of Robert and Martha (Madar) Woodcock, natives of Norfolk. The father was a manufacturer of fruit baskets for the trade in England. He died in England, aged seventy-one years, and his widow when she was eighty years old. Of their family William and John R. Woodcock, of Sangamon County, are the only representatives in America. Two of their sisters are living in England, Mrs. Mary H. Land, wife of a baker, at Wells, Norfolk, and Mrs. Harriet Stonex, wife of a carpenter and wheelwright, in Fieldgilling, Norfolk.

William Woodcock attended school in England and at twenty-one had completed a seven years' apprenticeship to the basketmaker's trade with his father. He worked at his trade in England till 1863. Then he took passage on a steamship from Liverpool to New York and was two weeks making the voyage. Mr. Woodruff was married in Springfield, in 1875, to Miss Cinderella Vau Kirk, a native of Ohio, whose father emigrated from that State to Sangamon County in an early day and engaged in farming. Both her parents died in the county and she died in 1906. Two children were born of this union: Mary, wife of Arthur Sales, of Champaign County, and Marion, who joined the United States Naval Service and is now stationed in China on the Battleship “New York,” being now nineteen years of age. At the State Fair of Illinois held in 1910, Mr. Woodruff was the “old fiddler” at the old pioneer relic display, and still uses the violin that he carried through the Civil War, which is a very fine instrument. It is shown in his portrait.

WOODRUFF, Marion U., former Mayor of Springfield, Ill., and for many years prominent in local public affairs, has been practicing the profession of law in the city since 1890. He was born in Sangamon County, June 24, 1853, son of Thomas J. and Mildred (Tackett) Woodruff, natives of Kentucky. He attended the common schools of Sangamon County and spent his boyhood on the farm. As a young man Mr. Woodruff spent two years in school at Vandalia, Ind., and, two years in Champaign, Ill. He received his legal training at Champaign, completing the course of Thomas J. Smith, and was admitted to the bar in 1888, soon after which he opened an office for the general practice of his profession in Springfield. He has established himself well in his profession and has won high standing in the community as a public-spirited citizen, as well as a reputation for ability as a lawyer. He now has an office in the Marine Bank Building.

In politics Mr. Woodruff is a strong Democrat. He served as a member of the City Council of Springfield in 1893-94 and as Mayor in 1895-97. During his administration he was largely instrumental in securing the establishment of a municipal lighting plant, which reduced the cost of lighting the city from $127 to $50 per arc light. This bill was bitterly opposed by part of the council and was passed only after a close fight, and due credit was accorded Mayor Woodruff for his unfaltering position on the question.

Mr. Woodruff was married, at Springfield, May 22, 1884, to Sarah M. Smith, daughter of Fred and Elizabeth (Granger) Smith, natives of Massachusetts. Mrs. Smith died in 1903. Mr. Smith is now a resident of Springfield, Ill. Two children were born to Mr. Woodruff and his wife: Marion Francis and Clark Waldo. The family resides at 1004 South Fifth Street. Mr. Woodruff’s grandfather, Nodiah Woodruff, fought in the Revolution, under General Washington. Fraternally Mr. Woodruff is a member of the Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.
Joseph Richard Woodward was reared in LaSalle County and there attended the public schools, assuming the usual duties of a farmer’s son early in life. He remained with his parents until about twenty-four years old and, being the oldest child, learned the full details of farm work.

January 10, 1887, Mr. Woodward was married to Miss Ellen G. White, born in Bruce Township, LaSalle County, May 15, 1869, daughter of John and Elizabeth White, natives of Scotland, who came to America about 1865, settling near Streator, where they lived until his death, April 4, 1910, all these years having been spent on the farm where they settled in 1865. His widow still lives there. After his marriage Mr. Woodward went to work by the month on the farm of Jerome Corber, in LaSalle County, with whom he remained until 1890, then spent one year on rented land, and in 1891 accepted a position with an electric light plant, which was located at Grandbridge. In consequence of an explosion this plant was burned, and as it was not rebuilt, Mr. Woodward was compelled to seek employment elsewhere. He began work, in the fall of 1892, with the Chicago, Wilmington & Vernallion Coal Company, on a hoisting engine; in 1900, the same company was just opening up a mine at Thayer and sent him to take charge of their hoisting engines at that place. He remained with this company at Thayer from May 30, 1900, until August 1, 1901, then accepted a position with the Illinois Coal Washing Company as foreman of their plant, which position he has since held, being well fitted by knowledge and experience to take charge of this kind of work. He has been one of the leading men in building up a town at Thayer and has occupied an important place in the conduct of affairs in the community since locating there. At the time he came to Thayer there were but two men there and but one house stood where the present plat of the village is located. The present population is about 1,200 and there are about 400 miners employed by the company with which Mr. Woodward is connected. He has served some time as a member of the Board of Village Trustees and is now serving a term as President of that body, his official duties having been performed in a manner most satisfactory to all concerned.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Woodward and his wife: Essie May, January 22, 1888, wife of Frank Edmonds, of New Berlin, whom she married April 27, 1910; Annie died in infancy; Iowa, born August 3, 1891, a teacher in Sangamon County Schools; Arthur Vermer, born September 19, 1892, at home. Fraternally M. Woodward is a member of Maple Leaf Camp No. 143, M. W. A., of Virden, III.; Thayer Lodge No. 143, K. of P.; Virden Lodge No. 161, A. F. & A. M. and Virden Council No. 33, P. L. He and his wife are affiliated with Pride of America Temple No. 113, Pythian Sisters, and she is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Both have made many friends in the community and have the universal good will and respect of their acquaintance.

WOOLARY, Emmer, now living retired from active life at Chatham, Ill., was born in Wilmington, Ohio, November 28, 1846, and is a son of Michael and Rosanna (Small) Woolary, the former born in Auglaize County, Ohio, in 1812, and the latter born in Waynesville, Ohio, in 1815. The father was a carpenter by trade and for many years lived in Wilmington, where both he and his wife died. He was a soldier in the Black Hawk War. His parents and those of his wife were early settlers of Ohio.

Emmer Woolary spent his childhood in his native State and there received his education. He followed farming until the breaking out of the Civil War, and enlisted, in March, 1864, at Columbus, Ohio, and served to the end of the war, being mustered out at Camp Chase, in December, 1865. He had participated in the Battles of Chattanooga, Buzzard’s Roost, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Jonesboro, and the Siege of Atlanta. He took part in the March to the Sea, and in many skirmishes, serving under Captains Wilkins and Joe Taylor. For three months Mr. Woolary carried messages for his General. During the campaign in Georgia he was for three months without change of clothing, and endured great hardships. He is an active member of the G. A. R.

At the close of the war Mr. Woolary returned to Ohio and soon afterward moved to Springfield, Ill., where he worked for twenty years. He has been a resident of Chatham since about 1903 and is one of the best-known and most respected citizens of his community. He was married, at Sharonville, Ohio, in July, 1866, to Miss Annie Gorman, born in Hamilton County, Ohio, daughter of Henry and Rachel Gorman, both of whom spent their entire lives in Ohio, and were farmers. Eight children were born to Mr. Woolary and his wife, of whom six survive: George W., born in Hamilton County, Ohio, July 24, 1870; Rosa, July 14, 1878; Jennie, January 1, 1875; Mary, born in October, 1871, died in 1873; Harry, born in July, 1872, died the same year; Joseph, born in October, 1880; Emmer Jr., March 17, 1885; and Nora, July 20, 1878.

Mr. Woolary is a member of the Red Men and in politics is a Democrat, but in local affairs votes for the man rather than for the party. He is not a member of any church, but endeavors to follow the Golden Rule in his actions, and his relations with his fellow-men are very pleasant. He has lived retired for several years past, but had previously worked hard all his life and managed his affairs in an able manner, so that he acquired a competency.

WORKMAN, Alfred C.—The Workman family has been well-known and highly respected in

Loami Township, Sangamon County, since 1830, when the grandfather of Alfred C. Workman brought his family to that location from Tennessee, making the trip overland. Four generations have lived in the neighborhood of this early settlement and the present homestead, occupied by the subject of this sketch, has been the family home since 1850, when a small frame house was the dwelling of the parents of Mr. Workman. Alfred C. Workman was born on his present farm May 12, 1874, son of John and Caroline (Campbell) Workman, the father a native of Tennessee and the mother of Chatham Township, Sangamon County, to which place her father had emigrated from Tennessee.

In his boyhood Alfred C. Workman attended the village schools in his neighborhood, remaining at home until he was twenty-six years of age, when his father gave him 320 acres of land in Curran Township, to which he moved, living there until 1897. He then purchased a farm, which he conducted two years and then returned to the home farm, as his father was growing old and needed someone to take charge. Mr. Workman now owns the old home farm of 250 acres, and besides this land owns 400 acres elsewhere in the county. He was married, November 5, 1905, to Miss Ora Dodd, who was born in New Berlin Township, Sangamon County, daughter of Theodore Dodd.

Mr. Workman carries on his work according to modern ideas and methods and has made a specialty of high-grade stock, having fine Percheron horses, well bred mules and a flock of about ninety head of Shropshire sheep. In politics he is a staunch Republican and takes a commendable interest in public affairs, although he cares nothing for office himself. He has become well known as a successful breeder of stock and has been fortunate in his investments and operations. He is proud of the part his family has taken in the settlement and development of Loami Township, and fully appreciates the care with which his father carried on his enterprises so as to provide for his children. The work begun on the home farm by John Workman has been continued by his son, who has added many improvements and developed the estate in many ways.

Mr. Workman and his wife have children, Howard and Halbert.

WORKMAN, Esau, an enterprising and successful farmer of Section 18, Chatham Township, Sangamon County, was born in the township, June 1, 1876, son of John Workman, one of the extensive land-owners of the region and a shrewd business man, who was able to recognize and take advantage of opportunities offered him, thus attaining remarkable success. Esau Workman spent his school days in Oak Ridge School, near his father's home, and under the direction and instruction of his father became a practical farmer. He was married, July 29, 1896, to Miss Henrietta Hudson, who was born in Kentucky and came to Illinois with her parents, Wesley Hudson and wife, now residing in Springfield. In 1897 Mr. Workman and his wife took possession of a forty-acre farm in Curran Township, and the following year came to the farm where they now live. In 1900 they moved to Springfield and three years later purchased ten acres of land on West Grand Place, where they erected a fine home and put in many improvements, selling the property at a handsome profit in 1908, after which they returned to the farm where Mr. Workman was born and remained that winter. In the spring of 1904 they returned to the farm they had previously occupied, in Section 18, and have since made it their home. This farm contained 307 acres and they have added the home place of 110 acres, making 417 acres altogether. Mr. Workman also owns a farm of 263½ acres in Christian County, Ill., thus making 580½ acres in the central belt of Illinois, where profits are sure to be large.

Mr. Workman bids fair to pass his life in farming ever since old enough to begin active operations, and is one of the most progressive men of his community, being a believer in modern ideas and methods. He has made many improvements in his farm, putting in tile and building fences, and in the former has used some 1,500 rods of fencing. He makes a specialty of stock breeding and has a good grade, including pure. Black and White hogs and a large flock of pure-blood Shropshire sheep. He is active in promoting any public enterprise and takes great interest in the men and measures of the Republican party, whose principles he always supports, being ready at any time to use his time and influence to push any movement which enlists his sympathy. He is well known for business honesty and integrity and has the entire confidence of all with whom he has had dealings. He ships about three carloads of cattle annually and finds a good market for them. He and his wife are members of the Christian Church at Loami.

They have one son, Frank H., born November 21, 1890.

WORKMAN, Isaac, one of the older farmers of Sangamon County, resides on Section 23, Loami Township. He was born August 7, 1834, in this township, a son of William and Sally (Blyen) Workman. The father was a native of Maryland, who came to Tennessee and later to Illinois, after his marriage. Arriving in 1820, he and his wife settled in Loami Township, where the father entered and bought prairie land, becoming in time one of the most extensive property owners of the country. He and his wife lived in a primitive log cabin in which nearly all of their children were born. When his children grew up, William Workman gave each one a farm, so they would settle near him. He had eight sons and three daughters: Peter, Jacob, Stephen, David, Elizabeth, Isaac, William B., Sally, Polly and Samuel. William Workman died in 1877, aged seventy-seven years, his widow surviving him, and she passed away at the age of eighty-two years. Both were members of the Christian Church and in politics he was a stanch Republican with reference to State and National matters, although in local affairs he voted for the man he deemed best fitted for office. Although often solicited, he would never permit the use of his name on the party ticket. His success was all the more remarkable because of the discouragement he first felt upon coming to the county. However, he did not allow that fact to interfere with his progress, and died one of the very wealthy men of his county.

Isaac Workman was educated in the subscription schools of the neighborhood, held in the primitive log cabin, with slab seats and puncheon floor, the only light being furnished by a small window. Like Abraham Lincoln, Mr. Workman studied by the flickering light of the log fire at home, and learned well and rapidly. There being plenty to do on the land his father was so rapidly acquiring, Isaac began working when small and having to do everything, is what today seems to have been a very primitive method, and which then suited the farmers. He plowed with the old wooden plow with an iron point, and during harvest the grain was cut with the sickle and cradle. When assisting the neighbors he received fifty cents per day for using the cradle. The grain was flailed out by hand, then hauled many miles to the nearest mill. In looking back and remembering all the difficulties, Mr. Workman naturally wonders how it was that the farmers of those days accomplished so much. They always had time to help a neighbor, and attended to their religious and political duties without shirking.

The first wife of Mr. Workman was Elizabeth Workman, born in Tennessee, daughter of John Workman, a cousin of William Workman. Their children were: Sally, wife of Peter Harber, a farmer of Curran Township, issue—George, Jay and Alice; John D., at home; Martha, wife of Steven E. Workman, issue—Jacob and Harry. The mother died, a consistent member of the Methodist Church. On June 30, 1861, Mr. Workman married Martha Ann Wedde, a native of Illinois, and they had the following children: William H., married Minerva Carson and is a farmer of Loami Township, issue, Eva; Isaac L., a farmer of the same township, married Lena McLaughlin, daughter of Christopher McLaughlin, of Springfield; Mayhew, a farmer of this township, married Amanda Carson, daughter of William Carson, issue, Kenneth; Joseph and Elizabeth, at home; Ada, wife of W. A. Burton.

Mr. Workman has spent his life in this locality, now residing within half a mile of the place of his birth. Long a Republican, he has represented his party on the School Board. Having struggled hard to secure a good education himself, he has given his children every advantage, and is proud of their progress. Always a hard worker himself, he has striven to instill in his children a love for work and a knowledge of saving, and he has the satisfaction of knowing that his lessons have not gone astray. At the same time, his example has proven a worthy incentive to others trying to make advancement and do it honestly. He has always stood for progress and good schools, and the part he and his family has played in the development of the county cannot be lightly estimated.

WORKMAN, John (deceased).—Among the prominent and successful pioneers of Sangamon County few became more extensive land-owners that John Dorkman, of Loami Township, who died on the farm he had developed March 4, 1910, at the close of a busy and useful life. He and his wife reared a large family of children and all who reached maturity were useful citizens, ready to do their share in the progress and upbuilding of the community. All have settled near the old home and most of them live on farms, John Workman was born in Overton County, Tenn., July 9, 1824, and was brought to Sangamon County when about six years of age, remaining in Loami Township the remainder of his life. He was married, September 26, 1850, to Miss Caroline Campbell, daughter of John Campbell, of Tennessee, and of Scotch descent. Mrs. Workman was born in Chatham Township, Sangamon County (where her parents were early settlers), October 28, 1834.

After their marriage John Workman and his wife located in a small frame house on Section 5, Loami Township, where their son Alfred now lives. At that time there were many wild turkeys and other game, such as geese and cranes, and these birds frequently destroyed considerable grain. Mrs. Workman's father gave her 190 acres of land and they became very successful as time went on, producing excellent crops and adding to their possessions from time to time. The young wife carded wool, spun yarn, did all the family sewing by hand, and as years went on often worked until midnight at her wheel or knitting stockings, or performing various other household tasks. At first they used the old-fashioned tallow "dips" but later purchased a candle mold, which saved much time and labor. Mrs. Workman looks back upon the busy years when her children were growing up around her and her days were crowded with work, as being very happy. Eleven children were born to Mr. Workman and his wife, of whom two died in infancy and seven now survive. As each child married and left the old home the father made him (or her) a gift of 320 acres of land. All settled so near that the mother can visit them in a single day. They are: Sarah E., widow of Stephen Workman, living in Loami Township; John W., in Curran Township; Josiah, a farmer of Loami Township; Callie, wife of William Butler, of Chatham Township; Polly, wife of Edwin Bilyeu, a farmer of Curran Township; Alfred C., on the

Mr. Workman and his wife were among the most extensive landowners in Sangamon County and for fifty-nine years lived together in happy wedlock, the tie being broken by the death of the father and husband. The widow still resides on the old farm, and at the age of seventy-six years enjoys good health and retains her energy and intelligent interest in all about her. She has been a capable, loving mother and has the fullest esteem and reverence of all her children, and the high regard of all who know her. Her life of toil and high endeavor has been an inspiration to her children. She has lived in her present home since 1850 and during this time has witnessed great changes and improvements, in all of which she has been greatly interested. Mr. Workman was a member of the Christian Church and in politics was a stanch Republican, having filled various township offices creditably. Two years before his death he made a final division of his estate, having 1,525 acres of land in his possession at that time, having given away among his children 2,240 acres, all the result of his own hard work and excellent management.

WORKMAN, Mayhew.—Members of the Workman family are found throughout Sangamon County, and are always numbered among the repute of resident communities. The family was founded there by sturdy pioneers who came to the county resolved to find a home where their children could be reared in health and in turn secure land at prices within the reach of poor men. That they have succeeded much better than they planned, the prosperity of their descendants proves beyond doubt. One of these representatives is Mayhew Workman, of Section 14, Loami Township, a breeder of fine Poland-China hogs, and a farmer of exceptional ability. He was born in the township, one mile south of his present home, October 7, 1860, a son of Isaac and Martha (Widden) Workman.

After a boyhood spent on the farm, where he alternated attending district school with a man's work, in 1887, soon after attaining his majority, Mr. Workman engaged to labor by the month for $17.50, thus continuing for three years. Having saved his money, in 1890 he and his brother Isaac bought farming implements, rented sixty-two acres in the southern part of Loami Township, and for two years farmed in conjunction. At the end of this period Mayhew Workman bought his brother's interest, and for four years conducted the farm, living on it alone.

On November 28, 1896, he married Amanda Carson, born in Sangamon County, in what now is Maxwell Township. She is a daughter of William Carson, also a pioneer of this locality. After marriage the young couple rented 30 acres in Chatham Township, which they conducted until 1905, but in that year Mr. Workman bought fifty-four acres on Section 14, Loami Township. This property was in very poor condition, but he began at once to improve it, now having a fine farm. He built a beautiful cottage on a natural building site, surrounding it with all kinds of fruit, shade and ornamental trees, so that it is one of the most delightful rural homes in the county. Upon coming to this farm Mr. Workman raised Poland-China hogs, now having stock that is eligible to registration. He annually produces about 120 head, which bring the highest market prices. In July, 1910, he sold fifty-six head, averaging 214 pounds each, which netted him $8.50 per hundred, or $990.30 for the shipment. In addition to his hogs, Mr. Workman keeps about fifty head of Shropshire sheep, a few of Jersey cattle, and an excellent grade of horses. His experiments have taught him the best methods of working, and his success is remarkable and gratifying.

Mr. and Mrs. Workman are the parents of one son Kenneth Mae, born June 24, 1906, a dear little boy who is both active in the good work of the Christian Church, to which both belong. In politics he is a stanch Republican, the Workman family nearly all being within the ranks of this party, but he does not desire office. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to Lodge No. 436 Loami; and is a member of Camp No. 132, American Legion, of Loami, while Mrs. Workman belongs to the Home Circle of Loami. The modern agriculturist is rapidly forging ahead, developing his property and introducing new methods of breeding and tilling the soil. While the farmer and stockman of today reaps substantial returns, he is also put to an immense expense in maintaining high standards, and his work requires keen business ability and foresightfulness in order that he may meet existing conditions.

WORKMAN, Melvin.—No family in Sangamon County is better represented by solid, practical and honorable business men and agriculturists than that bearing the name of Workman. Its representatives have been identified with the history of the county from early days, and have always been foremost in the work of developing natural resources and securing good government. One of the reliable men belonging to this honored family is Melvin Workman, residing on his farm, adjacent to the village of Loami, where he is doing general farming, making a specialty of breeding Percheron and road horses.

He was born in Loami Township, February 1, 1878, a son of Stephen and Sarah E. (Workman) Workman, the former of whom died about 1895, but his widow survives, carrying on the large farm he left her, he having been one of the prosperous and thrifty farmers of the township. She has added to her possessions, and now owns 560 acres, 320 acres in Loami Township and 240 in Christian Township.

Melvin Workman was brought up on the homestead and attended the district school.

He remained at home until his marriage, which event occurred March 2, 1869, when he was united with Ida M. Dodd, born in Sangamon County, daughter of Jesse Dodd, also one of the pioneers of the county, now deceased. He died when Mrs. Workman was still a child, his widow surviving until 1897. Mr. and Mrs. Workman have one child, Roy, born January 24, 1900, a bright little fellow, who is doing well at school and filling his parents' hearts with pride.

After his marriage, Mr. Workman began farming on 113 acres owned by his mother. This property had been allowed to run down and was in bad condition, but under his expert supervision it increased materially and sold for a good price. He then purchased 120 acres of land where he now resides, and has there developed one of the best farms of the township. Having given much attention to stock, he has made a decided success of the business. His stallion, Duke, was imported for him by Taylor & Jones, of Williamsville, and he also has three pure-bred Percheron mares, two of whom won prizes in the yearling show at the State Fairs of 1904 and 1905, being second and third in their class. He also has draft horses of the best breeds. He has a Kentucky-bred Jack, and produces Duroc-Jersey hogs, Shropshire sheep, carrying about fifty head of the latter, while his cattle are the short horn breed. Experience has convinced him that these breeds are the best, and his product is of so superior a quality that he commands the highest prices. His pride in his stock and well-kept farm is commendable, and his property is regarded as one of the show places of the county.

Mr. Workman is a Republican, but aside from lending his hearty support to all measures he believes will further the best interests of his community, he does not engage in politics, although often solicited by his neighbors to accept nomination. Fraternally he belongs to the I. O. O. F. No. 901, of Loami, and Camp No. 848, Modern Woodmen of America, of Loami, and is active in both orders. The Christian Church holds his membership, and he is one of its most energetic supporters. Progressive, up-to-date, and quick to grasp any opportunity, this young farmer is typical of the better class of agriculturists of today. Old methods have been thrust aside and new ones are being constantly tested, for the modern farmer realizes that, just as science has opened up new avenues in other branches of activity, so it has in farming, and he wants to keep up with the procession.

WORKMAN, Samuel J., claim agent and inspector for the Franklin Life Insurance Company, located in the Franklin Life Building, at Springfield, is a native of Sangamon County, born at Loami, February 25, 1864, a son of Samuel and Susan (Cook) Workman, natives of Maryland and Missouri respectively. At an early date Samuel Workman, the father, left his home in Maryland and went to Virginia, later removing to Ohio, where he remained a short time, and eventually locating in Loami, Ill. Having been a farmer all of his life, he continued to follow that occupation in Illinois, and was active in agricultural pursuits right up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1871, while he was on a visit in Iowa. His widow survived him until January 3, 1900, Samuel J. Workman was the only child. Mrs. Workman was married (second) to William Balon, and to this union there were born the following children: Lydia, who became the wife of E. W. B. Workman, a well-known citizen of Loami, Ill., in which city he died February 3, 1910; Millie, the widow of William A. Stott, of Los Angeles, Calif., who died in January, 1907; and Jesse, who lives near Hillham, Tenn. Samuel Workman was a Republican in politics and his religious faith was that of the Christian Church.

Samuel J. Workman was a small child when his father died, and as a result did not receive much educational training. He went to work for a brother-in-law, E. W. B. Workman, when eighteen years of age, remaining from 1882 to 1892, in which latter year he went to Waverly and worked at the harbor trade. He then engaged with the New York City office of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, and remained in their employ until 1895, when he entered the services of the Mutual Benefit Company. He continued with this company until 1899, at which time he became connected with the Franklin Life Insurance Company as a solicitor, later became field superintendent, assistant superintendent of agencies, and finally claim agent and inspector.

Mr. Workman was married April 9, 1890, to Mary N. Clark, born at Palmyra, Macoupin County, Ill., October 9, 1863, daughter of William R. and Angeline (Jolly) Clark, the former born in Old Berlin, Ill., and now residing in Springfield, and the latter, born at Franklin, Morgan County, Ill., who died December 11, 1894. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Workman, namely: Don, born January 11, 1890; Russell, December 10, 1891; Virgil S., November 30, 1893; and Helen, born December 23, 1895, who died March 4, 1908. The oldest son, Don, has had a business college course and is now connected with the Vredenburgh Lumber Company, of Springfield, having entered their service in 1908. Russell and Virgil are students.

Mr. Workman is a member of the Supreme Court of Honor, Mutual Protective League, the Eagles and the Masonic fraternity. He is a Baptist in his religious views, while his politics are non-partisan. He has done considerable to bring about the Commission form of Government and has studied extensively on that subject on various trips through the West.

WORKMAN, Stephen (deceased).—Many members of the Workman family have attained prominence in Sangamon County, but none has been more beloved, or left a wider gap, than the late Stephen Workman, when he passed away from this life. Mr. Workman was born in Sangamon County, March 6, 1833, and died on the home farm in Loami Township, December 15, 1895. For a number of years he was one of the enterprising and successful farmers of his locality, specializing on stock raising, and was the owner of an extensive property on Sections 22 and 23, Loami Township, containing 280 acres, near the village of Loami. His entire life was spent in the county, his father, Jacob Workman, and his grandfather, William Workman, having come from Tennessee to Illinois about 1830. Located in Sangamon County, William Workman secured land upon which he reared his family, teaching them the most principles of honest and upright living. There Jacob Workman grew to manhood and married Nancy Taylor, born in the county. Turning his attention to farming, Jacob Workman operated a farm in Loami Township, where he spent his last days. He and his excellent wife were the parents of seven sons and one daughter.

Stephen Workman went to the school of his neighborhood giving his father his assistance in tilling the soil of their home farm. Continuing at home until he attained his majority, he then began working for himself. Like many another young farmer, before going on a farm for himself, he married, this event occurring in Chatham Township, April 8, 1875, when he was united to Sarah E. Workman, daughter of John Workman, who died in March, 1910. He was brought to Illinois when a lad, in 1839, and there reared. He married Caroline Campbell, daughter of John Campbell. Sarah E. Workman was brought up in Sangamon County, and prior to her marriage was one of the most popular teachers there. Mr. and Mrs. Workman began their married life on a part of the homestead, which later Mr. Workman purchased, and upon which Mrs. Workman is now living. It was in 1879 that he became the owner of his first eighty acres, although he did not have sufficient money to make it a cash transaction. The land was only partly improved, but this did not discourage him, and he labored long and faithfully to make it productive. From time to time he invested his profits and savings in other land, until at his death he owned 282 acres, which is as good land now as can be found in the county.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Workman were as follows: Flora who died in early womanhood; Melvin, a farmer of Loami Township; Ollie, wife of John Jacobs, also a farmer of Loami Township; Grace, wife of Jesse Dodd, of the same township; Bertha, wife of Fred H. Mills, also farming in the same township; Dora, wife of Richard Edwards, a farmer, and Russell at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Workman early connected themselves with the Christian Church, of Loami, in which Mr. Workman became Deacon and Elder, and was always one of its most faithful supporters. He was connected with the Modern Workmen of America, and enjoyed his fraternal relations. All his life, which was unduly cut short, Mr. Workman never shirked a duty or left a task uncompleted, and it was his pleasure to attribute much of his success in life to his wife. He regarded her business ability as superior to his own, and never failed to call upon her for advice in every transaction he undertook. After his death Mrs. Workman assumed control of the property, and has since lived on the farm, operating it with the assistance of her son. She is a lady of culture and distinction, who commands the respect and confidence of all with whom she is brought into contact. Mr. Workman was a man of unblemished character, truthful and painstaking in speech and action, and left many warm personal friends behind him to mourn his loss and respect his memory.

WORKMAN, William H.—The rich farm lands of Sangamon County offer many inducements to the progressive farmers to develop still further, for the yields are immense and the soil is suited to a variety of crops. One of the men who is profiting from his experience in agricultural lines is William H. Workman, a prosperous farmer and stock-raiser on Section 28, Loami Township. He was born in this township, April 12, 1862, a son of Isaac Workman, one of the pioneer farmers in this section. His sketch is given at length elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Workman was born and bred on a farm, and educated in the district school of his neighborhood, so he is essentially a son of the soil. He remained at home until twenty-four years of age, when, in 1886, he went to work on a farm as a laborer, and following that vocation did whatever he could find to do in the way of honorable employment. On August 1, 1889, he was united in marriage with Miss Minerva Carson, who was born in Chatham Township, January 4, 1862, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Workman) Carson. The mother, Mrs. Carson, is a daughter of David Workman, who was a brother of William Workman, the grandfather of William H. Workman, the subject of this sketch. Both the Workman and Carson families are prominent in Sangamon County history. Mr. and Mrs. Carson finally moved to Kansas where Mrs. Carson died about 1875, when the family returned to Loami Township. After marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Workman rented land in Loami Township for a year, then in 1890, rented eighty acres from Peter Workman. There they lived until 1896, when they engaged in farming on a Carson farm, and having saved some money, bought twenty acres on Section 26. On this there was already a small two-room building, and they have since built a pleasant cottage and have set out a large variety of fruit trees, including apple, peach and cherry trees, with small fruits in great profusion. In this line their farm has become one of the most productive properties in the county, showing the results of constant and systematic labor.
One child shares their home, Eva Alta Carson Workman, born July 3, 1899, a very intelligent little girl now in the sixth school grade, and the pride of her parents’ hearts. She is much interested in the family history and proud of the honorable names she bears. Mr. Workman has been active in the Republican party, and is interested in educational matters. Socially he is a member of Camp No. 848, Modern Woodmen of America. While not a member of any church, Mr. and Mrs. Workman have always given liberally of their means to further religious work, and are very charitably inclined. Hard-working, thrifty and able to make the most of their opportunities, they have succeeded in making for themselves a delightful home, and are giving their daughter the advantages neither of them enjoyed in their youth. By an honest and upright life Mr. Workman has won the confidence and respect of the community with which he has dwelt for the last forty-eight years.

WORTHEN, Amos Henry. (Vol. I, p. 601.)

WRIGHT, John W., a highly respected citizen of Springfield, now retired from active life, and a veteran of the Civil War, is a native of Pike County, Mo., as were his parents. He was born March 10, 1839, a son of John and Margaret Wright, both of whom died in Pike County. The father was an extensive farmer and before the war held a large number of slaves. John W. Wright was reared on a farm and spent his entire active life in agricultural operations. Since 1862 he has been a resident of Illinois and has lived most of this time in Sangamon County.

In 1861 Mr. Wright was forced to join the Confederate Army, but ran away, and in December, 1863, enlisted in Company K, Ninety-ninth Illinois Infantry, under Captain Cooper, serving to the end of the war. He was mustered out at Baton Rouge, La., but was paid off at Camp Butner, Ill. While serving in the Confederate army he participated in the Battle of Pea Ridge, and while fighting for the other side took part in the Battles of Mobile, Spanish Fort, Fort Blakeley, and many skirmishes. He endured great hardships in his service the worst while a member of the Confederate Army. He joined the Union Army because he believed their cause was right, and came to Berry, Ill., to enlist. He is a member of the G. A. R. He made a good record as a soldier, and one who had the courage of his convictions.

Mr. Wright was married, in 1867, to Louise Walker, born in Missouri, daughter of John and Lucy Walker, both natives of Kentucky. Two children blessed this union: Lavinia, born June 10, 1870, and John, July 12, 1871. Mr. Wright is a typical whole-souled, Southern gentleman, and is liked by all who know him. He is a member of the Baptist Church and has been a Republican since old enough to vote. His residence is located at 2025 East South Grand Avenue.

WRIGHT, Thomas.—No country in the world produces more industrious and thrifty men than Scotland, and wherever her people locate they are accorded a hearty welcome, for they make the best of citizens and help to improve the sections they select for permanent homes. Thomas Wright, who for years was one of the practical farmers of Sangamon County, but having succeeded in accumulating an ample competence, is now living retired in Illiopolis. He was born in southern Scotland, September 1, 1841, a son of John and Helen (Wilson) Wright, both natives of Scotland.

John Wright and his wife came to America in 1844, landing in New Orleans, whence they came up the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers to Sangamon County, and located on a farm in Clear Lake Township, eventually buying it. There were eleven children in the family (seven sons and four daughters), five of whom were born in Scotland, of these W. W. Wright, now living northeast of Illiopolis, and Lillian, wife of William Johnson, in Illiopolis.

The first teacher of Thomas Wright was Harrison Ide, who taught in a frame school house in Illiopolis, and he was followed by several others during the time Mr. Wright went to school. While he was doing this he also helped on the farm, assisting his father until the latter's death in 1852. Following this, until 1855, when she passed away, Thomas Wright was his mother's helper, but at that time he bought eighty acres near Illiopolis, where he farmed for several years. He then sold his first farm, buying 160 acres across the line in Macon County, on which he resided for sixteen years, when he also sold this property and moved to Illiopolis, where he purchased his present home, living in it ever since.

On March 27, 1873, occurred the marriage of Mr. Wright in Macon County, to Catherine E. Simpson, born in St. Clair County, Ill., where her parents, natives of Illinois, were engaged in farming. They later came to Sangamon County, spending the remainder of their lives there. Mrs. Wright was one of a family of six sons and five daughters, seven of whom survive, although Mrs. Wright died in 1906. She and her husband had four daughters; Elizabeth, wife of Arthur Sutherland, living on a farm in Macon County; Dora J., lives at home; Lillian R., wife of William G. Engling, lives in Youngstown, Ohio, where he is a teacher of manual training in the city schools; and Catherine, who lives at home. The two young ladies are endeavoring to take their mother's place in the household in making a pleasant home for their father. There are five grandchildren in the family.

Mr. Wright is a Democrat, and for several years served as School Treasurer of his township. For many years he has been a valued and consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he belongs to Camp No. 166, Modern Woodmen of America. Having come to Sangamon County at an early day, Mr. Wright recalls many extremely interesting events connected with those times. He was a passenger on one of the first trains on the Wabash Railroad, which was then known as the Great Western. He has the distinction of having attended the funeral of the great Lincoln, and keenly recalls the terrible grief of everyone on that sad day.

Having worked to good effect, Mr. Wright owns his beautiful home, and some very valuable farm land, his investments having been made carefully and thriftily. Possessing the confidence of all who know him, Mr. Wright is passing his years in the comfort his former labors entitle him to, and no man is more highly esteemed in the community.

WRIGHT, Rev Thomas B., was for many years a member of the Methodist Illinois Conference, has for the past nine or ten years been a resident of Rochester, where he is now successfully engaged in real estate business. Rev. Wright was born at Virden, Ill., April 10, 1856, a son of Preston and Susan (Dawson) Wright, both natives of Kentucky. Preston Wright settled near Virden in 1849, carried on agricultural operations there until about 1885, and died in 1888. He and his wife had eight children, namely: Nancy Jane, David Allen, Sarah Frances, Mary Margaret, Malinda Dorinda, Thomas B.; and Arabelle and Tina, deceased. After completing the course in the common schools, Thomas B. Wright entered the high school at Virden, but left a short time before graduation, and later taught in Montgomery, Macoupin and Sangamon Counties, Ill., and one year in Kansas. He is largely self-educated, having a taste for literature and study, and for ten years before his admission to the Conference, in 1888, studied with this end in view. He served in pastorates at Raymond, Pleasant Plains, Williamsonville and Rochester, Ill., and for four years was editor of the Illinois Methodist Journal. He was successful in his work in his various fields of labor and accomplished a great deal of good. Since 1902 he has been a supernumery servant of the church and has established an excellent and lucrative business in Rochester. He has for sale, property in Arkansas and Texas, as well as in Illinois, and is interested in various other enterprises. He is an enterprising and energetic business man and looks carefully after every detail under his charge.

Rev. Wright was married (first) April 18, 1876, to Emma D., daughter of Seth and Mary B. (Day) Wright, who died June 20, 1896, having borne two children: Mary, born January 28, 1879; and David A., born January 27, 1882, died at the age of two and one-half years. Mary was married, June 27, 1900, to Kingsley E. Pease, and in October of the same year she and her husband started for the missionary field, becoming residents of Malaysia. They have been fellow-students in a seven-year course of study at Northwestern University, from which they graduated with honor, and for a time both occupied chairs as teachers in the Anglo-Chinese Boys' School in Singapore, Malaysia. Mr. Wright was married (second) to Lillian, daughter of Milton and Adeline (Cooper) McCoy, the former a pioneer settler of Sangamon County and the latter born there November 22, 1830. Mr. McCoy and his wife were married March 28, 1848, and celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Mrs. McCoy, who was loved and esteemed by all who knew her, died December 16, 1900, leaving children as follows: Sylvester, Jacob C., Jane; Loretta, wife of O. C. St. Clair, of Chicago; Jesse K., married Ada Fairchild, of Springfield; Mary married Edwin Puffenbarger, of Rochester Township, Sangamon County; Lillie, married to a Mr. Wright, who, and Mrs. McCoy had one son, Valman B., who died when nineteen years old. One daughter has blessed the union of Mr. Wright and his second wife, Helen E., born August 10, 1898. Mrs. Wright is a gifted musician, and she, as well as her husband, is a zealous worker in the cause of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Wright is a strong advocate of the principles of Prohibition. He has the confidence and esteem of all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance and has a number of warm personal friends.

WYANT, Petry Oliver (deceased), a native of New England, came to the State of Illinois as a young man and there spent the remainder of his life, a highly-respected, useful citizen, sincerely mourned by his family and many friends. Mr. Wyant was born on a farm near Hartford, Conn., June 7, 1824, son of John Wyant, also born in Connecticut, who spent his life in agricultural pursuits in his native State. Perry O. Wyant had a brother, George, who served in the Civil War and was killed in the Battle of Gettysburg. The family was prominent in Connecticut, and the name stood for integrity and sterling worth.

The boyhood of Perry O. Wyant was spent on his father's farm and he received his education in the public schools near Hartford, afterwards working with his father until he began to learn the trade of tailor, which he followed the rest of his active life. As a young man he came to Illinois and located near Rockford, Winnebago County, where he continued working at his trade and became successful in this line. He was able to retire after several years spent in Illinois and his last years were passed in well-earned rest. His wife is a devout member of the Methodist Church and an active worker in its cause. In politics he was a firm Democrat, although taking little part in public affairs. He was universally esteemed where he was known and had the full trust and confidence of his associates. At the time of his death, which occurred in Winnebago County, Ill., August 10, 1866, he left a widow and three small children to mourn his loss.

Mr. Wyatt was married, in Winnebago County, December 28, 1853, to Miss Sarah Hays, born in Canada, September 23, 1835, daughter of Samuel B. and Catherine (Grovaro) Hays, the former born in New Hampshire and the latter in Canada. Three children were born of this union, namely: John, born October 24, 1861, was married in Colorado, in 1904, to Anna Nelson, resides in Pekin, Ill., and they have no children; Theresa Irene, born in Winnebago County, in 1853, married James R. Brown and they reside in Springfield and have six children: George, Fred, Alice, Myrtle, Sadie and James; William, died December 23, 1902. Mrs. Wyatt was married a second time, to Michael J. Fox, who died March 17, 1903, having been born in 1839.

WYATT, Charles E.—Generosity and good-nature have not interfered with the material progress of some people. Because of splendid energy, thrift and foresight, they are able not only to build up a good business, but to earn and retain lasting friendships. A valued citizen and honorable business man of Springfield is Charles E. Wyatt, a real estate dealer. He was born on a farm in Morgan County, Ill., April 27, 1858, a son of James M. and Martha J. (Luttrell) Wyatt. The Wyatts are traced back to colonial days in Virginia, whence they migrated to Kentucky, and still later to Illinois. The Luttrell family is an old one in Kentucky, and its representatives came to Illinois at an early day. Both James M. Wyatt and his wife, however, were born in Morgan County, Ill. William J. Wyatt, a member of the family, enlisted in the Mexican War as a private, and was promoted successfully until he was mustered out as Colonel, and now, at the age of eighty-five years, is President of the Mexican War Veteran Association. He also served four years in the Civil War. Another relative, William T. Luttrell, served in the Civil War four years. Still another relative, James M. Wyatt, was a soldier in the Black Hawk War, so that the two families have borne well their part in the various conflicts which have convulsed the country, while their material welfare speaks well for their Scotch-Irish descent. James M. Wyatt, father of Charles E. Wyatt, died in a farm in 1872, but his widow survives residing upon this property, although now eighty-four years old. The children born to this excellent couple were: Charles E.; John William, of Oklahoma; Ella M., who married David I. Martin, and resides in Oklahoma; Frederick L., of Enid, Okla.; Maggie Alberta, who married Charles Louden, and James M., deceased.

The first twenty-four years of his life Charles E. Wyatt spent on a farm, and he was educated at Walnut Grove public school. When he had attained this age, he went to Virden, Ill., where he was engaged in a mercantile business for four years. He then bought a farm north of Virden, operating it for ten years. Once more he located in Virden, but after four years there, bought another farm north of it, and resided until coming to Springfield in 1905, in order that his children might have better educational advantages. Soon after coming there, he became interested in timber lands, now owning 20,000 acres of these lands in Arkansas, as well as considerable realty in Springfield, which includes his own beautiful residence at No. 605 South Walnut Street. For twenty-seven years he has been a member of the Odd Fellows, and is affiliated with Prairie State Encampment; has belonged for twenty years to the Modern Woodmen, and was a member of the old Knights of Labor organization. Politically he is a Democrat, and while a resident of Virden he served as Commissioner. He is now before the public as a candidate of his party for the same office, and if elected, his former experience will be of benefit to him and his constituents. While not connected with any religious organization, he is liberal in his contributions to them all.

Mr. Wyatt was married in Virden, November 22, 1874, to Margaretta J. Johnson, of that place, daughter of Henry M. and Adeline (Bur- vines) Johnson. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt: Ralph H., December 2, 1886, and Ethel A., May 22, 1889. Having a wide reputation for honesty and industry, and having lived wisely and temperately, Mr. Wyatt is an ideal candidate for an office in which he will represent so many important interests.

WYATT, William J., Deputy Sheriff of Sangamon County and one of the most conscientious and capable officials of the county, has long been associated with the development of his part of the State. He was born near Jacksonville, Ill., January 5, 1834, a son of Thomas and Rebecca (Kirkman) Wyatt, natives of Todd County, Ky., and farming people. The family migration to Morgan County, Ill., took place at a very early day, and in 1830 Thomas Wyatt engaged in farming four miles from Jacksonville, remaining on his property for many years. Eventually, however, he went to a farm near Murrayville, Morgan County, staying there for twenty years. At the expiration of that period he moved back to the old place, but later sold it and came to Springfield, which continued his home until he went to Macon County. There he died in 1896, and his wife also died in Macon County.

William J. Wyatt went to school in a little log schoolhouse and strove earnestly to gain an education. At the same time he worked on his father's various farms. Later he came to Riverton, first being employed on the Wabash railroad. Later he went into a grocery business, but had the misfortune to lose it by fire in 1889. He has served in a number of official capacities, being Justice of the Peace for two terms and Magistrate for the same period. For two terms he was Constable, and he is now acting as Deputy Sheriff of the county. In politics he is a strong Republican, and is prominent in the councils of his party.

Mr. Wyatt had an interesting war experience, having enlisted in 1862, from Morgan County, Ill., in Company F, One Hundred First Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He served about three years, and participated in many battles, including the Siege of Vicksburg. He was mustered out at Memphis, Tenn., after taking part in General Sherman's wonderful southern campaign, and returned home. A grateful Government pays him a pension in recognition of his loyal service. Like so many of his old comrades, Mr. Wyatt belongs to Stephenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R., and in the reunions finds much pleasure.

The marriage of Mr. Wyatt took place in Jacksonville, in 1856, to Minnie Berry. She was born in Morgan County, but her parents were from Kentucky, coming to Morgan County to locate on a farm, but later moving to Macoupin County, where they died. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt, only three of whom survive: Dora, wife of Owen Hackett, an engineer who resides near Riverton; Ida, wife of Samuel S. Alsop, a grocer of Decatur, Ill., and Oscar, also of Decatur. There are ten grandchildren in the family. Mr. Wyatt owns the pleasant family residence in Riverton and his property has been accumulated through industry and thrift. The family are Methodists in religious faith.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the service of the veterans who once were the hope of the nation. Fifty years ago men who are now drawing pensions were in the full flush of healthy manhood. Many left young families to go forth to fight for the Union. Many who lived to return came back broken in health and spirits, with memories of the horrors of war that never left them. It is only just and right that some recompense be made them for what they sacrificed and suffered that the Union might be preserved.

YOCOM, William Jacob.—The pioneers of Illinois placed the State under lasting obligations, for they were the forerunners of civilization and made possible the conditions that exist to-day. Where now are beautifully tilled fields, the pioneer found a vast wilderness, peopled by savage beasts and often hostile Indians. Little by little he cleared away the undergrowth, routed out the Indians and wild animals, put in his seed, built his house and barns, developed roads, and erected schoolhouses and churches, in all being assisted by his faithful wife, until today Illinois stands second to no other State except New York. One of the families closely associated with the early history of the State, is that bearing the name of Yocom, and one of its able representatives of Springfield is William Jacob Yocom.

Mr. Yocom was born in Sangamon County, March 3, 1846, a son of Stephen and Martha (Council) Yocom, both natives of Kentucky. Grandfather Yocom was born in Virginia, and he and his wife rode from that State to Kentucky on horseback, more than a century ago. The parents came to Illinois in 1828 and spent their remaining lives in Williamsville Township, where the father was a farmer. They reared a large family and its members have married and located throughout Sangamon County, until there are hundreds of descendants of the two hardy Illinois pioneers who bore the name of Yocom.

After a boyhood spent in Williamsville Township, during which time he attended district school and worked on the family farm, Mr. Yocom began farming for himself, and still owns the fine farm he acquired.

During the Civil War Mr. Yocom enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Thirty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Orendorff. He served for one hundred and fifty days, guarding prisoners at Rock Island, A staunch Republican, Mr. Yocom has served as School Director upon many occasions, but otherwise has not been before the public for office. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen, Royal Neighbors, and Stephenson Post, G. A. R. The Methodist Church holds his membership and he gives liberally towards its support. Mr. Yocom has never married. He is genial in temperament and cordial, being a welcome addition to any social gathering, where he is sure to find many warm, personal friends, for he is a general favorite.

YOUNG, Benjamin F., farmer and owner of eighty acres of fine land in Section 10, Cotton Hill Township, Sangamon County, Rochester Rural Delivery Route 20, was born in Garrard County, Ky., May 22, 1849, a son of John D. and Nancy A. (Wheeler) Young, the first a native of Lincoln County, Ky., born November 23, 1827, and the latter of Garrard County, Ky., born May 29, 1829. His Grandfather Young, a native of North Carolina, and the first known David of the family, moved to Kentucky while he was yet a young man and spent the remainder of his life in that State. He married Polly Coffman, who also died in Kentucky. His Grandfather Wheeler, a native of Kentucky, married Sophia Bratcher. They removed to Missouri in 1850 and both died there. His paternal great-grandfather, Melem Young, lived to be over one hundred years old. His grandfather, Benjamin Wheeler, died in Gentry County, Mo., aged eighty-eight years. His parents moved from Kentucky to Gentry County, Mo., in 1856 and in 1864 they came to Springfield, Ill. After a short residence there they went to Taylorville, whence in the fall of the year last mentioned they returned to Springfield. They lived on a farm near there until 1857, when they located in Cotton Hill Township, Sangamon County. In the spring of 1870 they located near Taylorville, where Mr. Young died March 29, 1908, and where his widow is living at this time.

Benjamin F. Young, as a boy and man, has been fond of all outdoor sports. He enjoyed his young years on his father's farm and entered with keen zest into his studies at the nearby district school. He accompanied his parents from Kentucky to Missouri and from Missouri to Sangamon County, and has lived almost continuously within its borders since his arrival in 1854. He has been regarded as one of the leading men of his community. As a Democrat he has been elected to several important township offices. He has been a School Director many years (1883-1909), was Tax Collector 1883-90, was Assessor in 1892, and was elected Justice of the Peace in 1903. He is a member of Rochester Lodge, No. 268, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of Cotton Hill Camp, No. 619, Modern Woodmen of America, and is helpfully identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church. February 19, 1874, Mr. Young married Nancy E. Rape, Justice Beam, of Ball Township, performing the ceremony. She was born in Cotton Hill Township, April 27, 1856, a daughter of John Rape, who was born in South Carolina in 1795, came to the United States in 1812, and located to Sangamon County, making the journey with a horse and wagon, and died there January 20, 1872. John Rape was a soldier in the War of 1812. Elizabeth Snodgrass, who married John Rape and became the mother of Mrs. Young, was born in Sangamon County in 1822 and died in 1881. They were married in Sangamon County and are buried side by side in Drunk's Cemetery. Mr. Rape was a farmer, who began in the days of small prices and won a commendable success. He entered the farm on which his daughter now lives, in 1828, at $1.25 an acre, and its present value is $200 an acre. Mr. and Mrs. Young have had three sons and four daughters, all of whom are living. Rufus G., born December 20, 1874, married Miss Mary Motter and she has borne him three children, whom they have named: Virgil, Carroll and Everett. Ira, born April 1, 1877, married Miss Emily Smith and lives in Cleveland, Ohio. Lilie, born November 14, 1879, became the wife of George Cressie, a grocer of Springfield, Ill. Nona E., born March 2, 1882, married Harry Huggins, and they live at Oswego, Kan. Jessie, born April 25, 1889; Burt F., September 15, 1891; and Irene, December 7, 1895, reside at home.

YOUNG, George H.—The call of the soil has wooed many men from the activities of city life and brought them back to the farm, where they find they can be of the most usefulness, both to themselves and to the community at large, and an example of this is found in George H. Young, now living retired after forty years spent in agricultural pursuits, who in early life was engaged in numerous business enterprises all over the country. Mr. Young, who is one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Pawnee, Ill., was born November 2, 1832, in Pittsylvania County, Va., a son of William H. and Lucinda (Mann) Young. His paternal grandfather was a native of Virginia and a soldier during the War of 1812, in which he contracted sickness that ended his life after he returned home. Grandfather Mann came to Virginia from England in the early days, but in 1855 removed to Kentucky, where he carried on a millwright business and farming until his death. William H. Young was born in Virginia in 1810, and his wife in 1813, and after their marriage in that State removed to Caldwell County, Ky., where they followed farming until their deaths.

George H. Young received his education in the public schools of Kentucky, and until he was twenty years old resided on the home farm, assisting his father and engaging in various out-of-door sports, of which a youth he was very fond, and for which he never lost his liking. Before he had attained his majority he became overseer on the farm of a widow in Kentucky, a position which he held for two years, then becoming foreman in an iron works at Marion, Ky. After four years there, Mr. Young engaged in a dry goods business at Dycusburg, Ky., until 1861, and during the following year first came to Sangamon County, shortly afterwards, however, going to California, where for three years he was engaged in the lumber business and also managed a dry-goods establishment. In 1865 he came back to Sangamon County and settled down to farming, in which he was uniformly successful, and which he continued to follow until 1904, in which year, deciding that he had earned a rest, he retired, and since that time has been one of Pawnee's foremost citizens. A Democrat in politics, Mr. Young was for many years a School Director and Road Overseer, and his activities in the political field have been of much benefit to his party in this section. With his family he attends the Methodist Church.

In July, 1867, Mr. Young was united in marriage to Mrs. Elnora (Haley) Lochridge, widow of Joseph Lochridge, and she died in Sangamon County, her birthplace, in 1884. The Hales came originally from Virginia, Mrs. Young's father, James Haley, dying in the early days, of cholera. Mrs. Young, who belonged to the Hales family, also came from Virginia. By her first marriage Mrs. Young had two children, Edward, who is deceased, andJuliet, who married Neal McTaggart and lives in Sangamon County. To Mr. and Mrs. Young there were born the following children: William E., born in Sangamon County in 1863; married Cornelia Brown and is now living in California; Lou, born in Sangamon County in 1870, married John Twist, now living in Taylorville, Ill., has one child, Luella; Thomas M., born in 1872 in Sangamon County, married Pearl Watkins, and now lives in Pawnee, Ill., where he is engaged in the grain elevator business; and Walter, born in Sangamon County in 1875, married Sadie Greenawalt, by whom he had two children, Walter and Geraldine, is now engaged in railroading and makes his home in Pawnee.

Mr. Young has always been known as one of the public-spirited men in whatever community he has made his home and can be counted upon to lend his support, time and means towards all movements which have for their object the betterment of civic, religious or educational conditions of his section. During his long residence in Sangamon County he has made many acquaintances, and his friends are legion.

YOUNG, George W., a well and favorably known citizen of Springfield, is a successful contractor engaged in business there, and a veteran of the Civil War. He was born in Hamilton County, Ill., April 6, 1847, son of John K. and Janetta (Whitbead) Young, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Tennessee. The family moved from Tennessee to Illinois and later returned to Tennessee, where the father died June 20, 1860. His widow died in Missouri, in 1866. The grandfather of George W. Young was an early settler of Tennessee and belonged to a prosperous and prominent family there. He participated in the War of 1812.

The childhood of George W. Young was spent on a farm in Illinois and he received his education in the country schools. He was fond of dancing and outdoor sports as a young man and grew up to the occupation of farming. He moved from Illinois to Missouri, thence to Arkansas and back to Missouri, and in 1889 moved to Springfield, which has since been his home. He eventually became a contractor, and in connection with his business assisted materially in the growth and progress of the city. He has always been actively interested in political affairs and has always favored Republican principles. His first vote was cast for President Grant and he has since voted the Republican ticket in national elections.

Mr. Young enlisted, in October, 1862, in Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry, serving eleven months and then being dismissed because he was under age. He participated in the Battle of Mill Spring, but spent most of his time as a scout in the hills of Kentucky and Tennessee, and was engaged in guerilla warfare. He spent some time at Camp Dick Robinson, in Kentucky, he proved himself a brave and faithful soldier, and one able to discharge his duties to the credit of his company and regiment. He belongs to the G. A. R.

Mr. Young was married, in Chatham Township, Sangamon County, May 28, 1870, to Miss Mary J. Norman, born April 2, 1859, daughter of George and Maria Norman. Mr. Norman served in the Civil War and was killed in the battle at Pea Ridge. Four children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Young, namely: James E., born June 1, 1873; Hattie May, born March 29, 1873; Ida May, August 20, 1875; John W., June 20, 1877. Mr. Young belongs to the Missionary Baptist Church and fraternity is connected with the Court of Honor and the Odd Fellows. He owns several pieces of property in Springfield and lives at 1016 South Fifteenth Street. He stands well with his associates and has many friends in both social and business circles.

YOUNG, James, a retired gardener and truck farmer living in Springfield, Ill., was born in Hampshire, England, December 22, 1841, a son of John and Ann (Smith) Young, both of whom spent their entire lives in the town of Wickham, England, where the father died April 12, 1873, and the mother in 1878. They were parents of fourteen children, of whom the following three survive: Henry and Joseph, living near Southampton, England, and James, of this sketch.

In boyhood James Young received practically no education and early began to help with the work on his father's farm. He worked seven years for the British Government as helper to workmen in the blacksmith department, and in 1873 emigrated to the United States, landing in New York, whence he soon afterwards came to Springfield. He lived about five months on a farm five miles west of the city on the Jacksouville Road, then spent three years in the city, after which he moved to a farm east of the city, living there from March 1, 1873, until the fall of 1908, when he removed to his present residence, 2011 East South Grand Avenue. He has spent his active life in farming since first locating in Sangamon County, with the exception of three years spent working in the rolling mills in Springfield. He has been successful in his agricultural operations and has been able to secure a very pleasant home and his land by the exercise of industry and close application to the work in hand. He has made the most of his opportunities for the improvement of his position in life and is to a large extent self-educated. He stands well with his neighbors and has many friends, being considered a useful, public-spirited citizen. He retired from active life in 1908.

Mr. Young was married in Portsmouth, England, July 10, 1861, to Amelia Pink, born March 24, 1841, daughter of James and Harriet Goodall Pink, who spent their entire lives in England, becoming parents of eleven children. Besides Mr. Young there are one other daughter living, Angustia Houghton, who resides in Swanwick, England. Ten children were born to Mr. Young and his wife, namely: Rose, wife of Charles Burgess, living in Chicago; James E., living on East Laurel Street, Springfield; Mrs. Alice Hettenhausen, a widow, of Chicago; Georgiana, wife of Edward Werian, of Cheyenne, Wy.; Frank A., and George H., of Springfield; Julia, wife of George Nokes, a groceryman, at the corner of Eighteenth and Cook Streets, Springfield, and three who are now deceased. Twelve grandchildren were born in the family, of whom eleven survive. In religious views Mr. Young is an Episcopalian, and in politics he supports the Republican party. For the last nineteen years he has been a member of Camp No. 1534, M. W. A., of Springfield.

YOUNG, John J., one of the representative and successful business men of Springfield, has been identified with that city's interests since attaining his majority. He is a native of Germany, born January 6, 1874, son of Nicholas, Jr., and grandson of Nicholas Young, both of whom participated in the Franco-Prussian War. Nicholas Young, Jr., married Angela Schue, born in Germany, whose parents spent their entire lives in Germany. He was born June 24, 1844, and his parents spent their entire lives in Germany. In his boyhood he learned the trade of blacksmith, worked at same until he came to the United States in 1881, and afterward followed his trade many years in Springfield, where his death occurred, in 1896, caused by failing in a mill while he was in the hoisting shaft. He was married before leaving Germany and his widow now resides in Springfield.

John J. Young received his education in the schools of Springfield, and lived with his par-tents until he was twenty years of age, then worked on a farm until he went into business for himself. He has spent most of his life in Sangamon County, where he was brought by his parents when a small child. He is a member of the Catholic Church and of the Knights of Columbus. He is an ardent Democrat and has always been active in political affairs. He has been successful in business and careful in his investments, having accumulated considerable real estate.

Mr. Young was married, at Springfield, April 25, 1893, to Emma Lenegar, who was born in Springfield, June 4, 1875, daughter of August and Catherine (Eck) Lenegar, the former born in Germany and the latter in Springfield. Mr.
Lenegar conducts a grocery store in Springfield.
Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Young, namely: George, born November 3, 1895; Florence, in March, 1905, and Arthur, March 7, 1908, all born in Springfield and all surviving. Mr. Young has the good-will and esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

YOUNG, Joseph.—German-Americans are numbered among the best residents of the country few of them having fallen in the work they set out to accomplish. Many have become wealthy since arriving in their new homes, and nearly all have acquired fair competence. Sangamon County has its share of these excellent people, whose industry and thrift have set an example to those less deserving of success. One of the substantial retired residents of the county is Joseph Young, of Riverton. He was born in Germany, March 11, 1850, being a son of Joseph and Barbara (Schaffer) Young, both natives of Germany.

Generation after generation of Youngs were born and reared in the old family home in Germany, in which Joseph Young was brought into the world. There Joseph Young Sr. and his excellent wife lived and died, after long and useful lives as farmers. They had three daughters and one son.

During his boyhood Joseph Young attended school in Germany, at the same time working on his father's farm. All the while, however, he was dissatisfied with existing conditions, and in 1871 he set sail for America from Liverpool, landing in New York City, and passing through Castle Garden, April 17th. From there he came to Northumberland County, Pa., where he remained until February, 1872, working in the mills. At that time he went to Roslyn, Pa., and for five years worked in a foundry. His next change was made when he went to Cleveland, to work in a machine shop for five months, after which he came to Riverton, Ill. There he engaged in milling, continuing in that line of work until a few years ago, when he retired.

The marriage of Mr. Young, on August 16, 1873, in Riverton, when he was united with Catherine Prender, born in Bohemia, Germany, October 22, 1850. Her family came to America in 1871, direct to Riverton, where the parents spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Young became the parents of eight children: Joseph, a mine expert of Springfield;
Frank and John, of Riverton; Annie, wife of Walter Hankley, of Riverton; William, George and Catherine, who live at home; one died in infancy. There are eleven grandchildren in the family.

During the years he was engaged in active work, Mr. Young saved his earnings, investing them in Riverton property, and now owning some very desirable realty, including his home. He is a member of St. James Roman Catholic Church, of Riverton, giving it his enthusiastic support. In political faith he is a Democrat.
He is industrious and has never shirked any duty that was laid upon him, but labored faithfully to perform it as best lay within his power, and success has been his reward, as well as the consciousness of having discharged all obligations he may have incurred.

YOUNG, Nicholas (deceased).—It is generally in his youth that the average European leaves his native country for the United States, but a fair percentage of younger men emigrate, and of these Germany furnishes a full proportion.
The late Nicholas Young was a type of the latter class, for he had reached middle age when he located in Springfield, and there became an honored citizen and well-known business man.
He was born in Germany, June 2, 1844, the son of Nicholas Young and his wife, farming people of the Fatherland, who never left their native country.

The youth of Mr. Young was spent on his
The pioneers of Illinois belonged to a sturdy class of people, who cared little for hardships or dangers, so long as there was opportunity for them to secure homes for their families. In these days when we are surrounded by all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life, when not only are the water and land conquered, but we are entering into a new era which promises that soon the air itself will be navigated as easily and constantly as the other two elements, it is difficult for us to appreciate what pioneer life meant to those who came to a new locality to wrest a living from raw land, with few appliances, except those of the crudest nature. Silas J. Young, of Section 34, Curran Township, Sangamon County, is now living on thirty acres of the large tract which his father secured as a pioneer of that part of the county. Mr. Young was born in Montgomery County, Ky., March 10, 1834, a son of James and Lucinda R. (Cuming) Young, natives of North Carolina and Kentucky, respectively.

James Young was a soldier in the War of 1812, under General Harrison, and at the close of the conflict came to Kentucky, where he married. He and his wife became the parents of seven children, and four were born before they migrated to Sangamon County, in 1858, where the father entered 160 acres in Curran Township. This was the home of the family until his death, March 11, 1870. His widow survived until May, 1889. Those of the family who survive are: Silas J. William, and Mrs. Martha C. Hols, of Oklahoma. A brother, Willburn Young, died in 1898, having married Volka Emmam. She was born in Germany, but her parents are both deceased. The widow lives on the home place, Section 34, Curran Township, owning twenty acres of the original land. She and her husband had four children: John E., Albert E., Lucinda R. and Sophronia F., all at home. As Silas J. Young has never married, he loves these nieces and nephews, and takes a deep interest in them and their careers.

Like his brothers and sisters, Silas J. Young was educated in Sangamon County, and during his boyhood, worked on the home farm. He has lived in the county all his life, with the exception of four years spent in Fayette County, Ill. He still owns eighty acres in that county, and enjoys a good rent from it. He makes his home with his brother's family, and, though past “three score years and ten,” takes a vital interest in civic life. He is a Democrat, but has never desired office. He is a member of no church but leans towards the Christian Church and is one of the liberal supporters of the same, believing in its good work. Having lived in this locality practically all his life, Mr. Young is proud of the progress that has been made, and glad that he has been permitted to bear a hand in some of it.

YOUNG, William H., a retired farmer living at Cantrall, Ill., has been a resident of Sangamon County for more than forty years. He was born in Gallia County, Ohio, March 27, 1840, son of Joseph and Rebecca (Underwood) Young, natives of Nicholas County, W. Va. In 1830 the parents removed to Kentucky and the father carried on farming there several years, then moved to Ohio. Some years later he returned to Kentucky, where he was living at the outbreak of the Civil War, and died during the war. There were four sons and one daughter in the family, and three children now survive: William H., of this sketch; James U., the oldest, a retired farmer of Carter County, Ky.; Mary, widow of John Bloomer, of Marlton County, Ind.

The boyhood of William H. Young was spent chiefly in Carter County, Ky., where he received his education, and he worked many years on the farm for his father, then took up the same occupation on his own account. He enlisted and served in the Civil War. In 1868 he came to Edgar County, Ill., and for four years carried on farming there. In 1870 he located on a farm two miles northeast of Cantrall and carried it on twenty-two years, after which he retired from active life. He now owns a home in the village, and property in Athens, Ill. He has the confidence and esteem of his friends and neighbors and for twelve years served as Commissioner of Highways of Fancy Creek Township. He is a member of the Methodist Church and in politics is a Democrat.

Mr. Young was married in Ironton, Ohio, March 16, 1862, to Mary A. Underwood, who was born in Nicholas County, W. Va., April 13, 1844, daughter of James Underwood and wife, natives of the same county, where they spent their entire lives. There were four sons and five daughters in the Underwood family and four children still survive. Two children were born to Mr. Young and wife, namely: Susan, wife of Thomas Matthers, a farmer of Cantrall, and Jennie, wife of Stewart Smith, a farmer living near Cantrall. There are seven grandchildren in the family. Mrs. Young died July 2, 1897, deeply mourned by her family and friends, and sadly missed in the community.

YOUNGER, John Franklin (deceased), former Manager of the United States Gypsum Company, of Springfield, was born on a farm at Barclay, Sangamon County, October 22, 1879, son of John Quincy and Amanda (Taylor) Younger. John Q. Younger came to Illinois with his parents when a boy, from Crab Orchard, Ky., and his father conducted a blacksmith shop at Dawson, Sangamon County, where he died. John Quincy was among the younger children, the others being: Berry who took part in the Civil War; Newton, Thomas; Joseph, killed in battle in the Civil War, by the side of his brother John Q.; (already mentioned); Mary, and Margaret.

John Q. Younger received a common school education and worked with his father in the blacksmith shop at Dawson after leaving school. At the age of fifteen he enlisted, at Springfield, serving to the end of the war. He was wounded by a musket ball in the calf of the leg. His wife was a daughter of Jeff Taylor, an early settler of Rochester, Sangamon County, where Mrs. Younger was born and reared. After his marriage Mr. Younger worked for neighboring farmers, then farmed on his own account for a time, returned to working for others by the month, and about 1900 moved to Springfield, where his death occurred June 16, 1907. His widow resides with her daughter, Mrs. Kreider, in the southern part of Springfield. He was a member of the Christian Church and a Republican in politics. Children as follows were born to them: Jennie married H. C. Kreider; Samuel Owen married Carrie Scofield, of Fairfield, Ill.; Charles J. married Lydia Firey, of Edinburg; John F.

John F. Younger was educated in the public schools of Sangamon and Logan counties, and at the age of fifteen years began running a threshing machine, following this line of work until he came to Springfield to enter the employ of the company with which he was so long connected, beginning as a laborer, and through ability and energy being promoted through various grades to the position of manager, which he assumed July 18, 1908. He conducted the affairs of the company in a manner to insure its prosperity and growth and was a man of business integrity and high principles.

Mr. Younger was married, in Springfield, June 4, 1907, to Miss Myrle Rule, of Mt. Auburn, daughter of Samuel and Elinna Rule. They had no children. Mr. Younger was not a member of any church organization. In politics he was a Republican. He died September 2, 1910, at St. John’s Hospital.

ZACHARIAS, Antonio de Frates (deceased).— Although never rising to distinction, either financially or politically, no man stood higher in public esteem because of his sterling honesty and kindness of heart, than Antonio De Frates Zacharias, now deceased, who was born in 1819 on the Island of Madeira, and died in Springfield, September 22, 1893. He was a son of Antonio Zacharias. Growing up in his native land, Antonio De Frates Zacharias tilled a farm which he owned, but religious persecutions divided the family, and his mother and a sister fled to South America, while he and his family came to the United States, landing in New York City in 1860. After two months spent there with friends, he came to Springfield, securing work in the Wabash Railroad machine shop and remaining there for a quarter of a century. For some years prior to his death he lived retired. In politics he was a Republican, but never connected himself with any religious denomination. His death occurred at his residence on the corner of Thirteenth and Jefferson streets, but he is buried in Jacksonville. In addition to his residence, he owned two other residences on Thirteenth Street, now in possession of his widow.

Mr. Zacharias married Mary De Amill, born on the Island of Madeira, a daughter of Francis De Amill. No one who has not passed through the dangers and hardships attendant upon religious troubles can appreciate what a haven the United States is to those oppressed, how eagerly they flock here, hoping to find the right to live and work as their consciences dictate.

ZANE, Charles S. (Vol. I, p. 601.)

ZANE, Robert H., was born in Cartwright Township, Sangamon County, Ill., March 3, 1855, a son of John and Eliza (Smith) Zane, natives of Cape May County, N. J.

The grandfather of Robert H. Zane, John Zane, Sr., came to Sangamon County and made his home with his son John. There were six sons in his family, and of them Wesley came to Sangamon County and farmed for many years, but later returned to New Jersey and there died; Simon came and worked on the farm of his brother John, and in 1855 went to Colorado, where he became a well-to-do rancher; Charles S. came to Sangamon County and worked for his brother John, also engaged in teaching school, finally saved enough money to put him through McKendree College. He then returned to Springfield, where he studied law with Abraham Lincoln in the office of Lincoln, Herndon & Cullom, which was changed to Cullom, Herndon & Zane, after Mr. Lincoln’s election to the presidency, and which was one of the strongest law firms in the State. He was twice elected Circuit Judge, but after his second election resigned to take the position of Chief Justice of Utah, to which he was appointed by President Arthur in 1888. Two years later he was superseded by appointment of a successor by President Cleveland. In 1895 when the Territory became a State he was elected Justice of the Supreme Court by the people. He is now engaged in the practice of law in Salt Lake City, and one of his sons is a lawyer of ability in Chicago.

John Zane was one of the early settlers in Sangamon County, settling in Cartright Township in 1833, and he was engaged in carpentry on agricultural affairs until his death in 1880. He was a great friend of Abraham Lincoln and another intimate of his was Peter Cartwright. Always a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he was liberal in supporting it and donated the land on which the Bethel M. E. Church stands. There were twelve children in the family of John Zane: Robert H.; Andrew, a prominent citizen and implement dealer of Carthage, Mo.; Hannah M., wife of John B. Jones, a resident of Williamsville, Ill.; one child that died in infancy; James S., deceased, formerly Sheriff of Jasper County, Mo., where he died, leaving a widow, three sons and a daughter; Rhoda, deceased, was the wife of John Epier; Mary F., deceased, was the wife of Dr. Henry VanMeter, who was Regentsurgeon of the One Hundred and Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War, but is now deceased; Elizabeth, deceased, who was the first wife of W. S. Bullard, of Mechanicsburg, Ill.; Ellen, deceased, who was the wife of B. F. Jones, deceased, formerly a resident of Williamsville; John W., deceased, formerly a leading merchant of Springfield, Mo., who died in New York; Jeremiah F., a conductor in the Mexican Central Railroad service, died in Chihuahua, Mexico.

Robert H. Zane spent his boyhood on the home place and was educated in the district schools and the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor. After teaching school for a period he entered the law office of Pulmer, Robinson & Shutt, but in 1883 went to Texas to practice at Midland, and while there was elected to the office of State's Attorney for six years and again appointed to fill out an unexpired term, but finally refused to accept the office further and in 1908 came to Pleasant Plains on account of the ill health of his wife and in order to give his children better educational advantages.

On November 25, 1886, R. H. Zane was married to Elma Atherton, who was born in Pleasant Plains, a daughter of Dr. Albert Atherton, and to this union there have been born two children, Lela, the wife of Charles Boynton, an enterprising young farmer of Cartright Township, and Lora E., at home. Mr. Zane is a Republican in politics. He has retired from active professional life, and is now Mayor of Pleasant Plains.

ZIMMERMANN, John, a well-known and public-spirited German-American citizen of Springfield, Ill., is retired from active life and is enjoying a well-earned leisure. He owns a beautiful home at 803 Osburn Avenue, which has been his home for many years. Mr. Zimmermann was born in Germany, November 3, 1838, son of Ehardt and Margaret (Schmidt) Zimmermann, who spent their entire lives in that country. The father was a farmer and he and his wife were parents of three sons and one daughter, the only one to come to America being John.

Mr. Zimmerman was educated in his native country and spent his boyhood on a farm. He set sail from Bremer in 1888, landing in New York City, and came direct to Springfield. His first employment was with the Springfield City Street Railway Company, with which he remained several years, then was engaged as gardener for Oak Ridge Cemetery. He was well fitted for the latter position and filled it satisfactorily twenty years, after which he worked two years in Washington Park before retiring from active pursuits. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church and in politics is a Democrat. He has many friends in the city and has a good standing in the community where he lives. He has been industrious and ambitious financially, and has become the owner of several pieces of property in the city, having shown good judgment in the investment of his savings.

Mr. Zimmermann's marriage occurred in Germany in February, 1863, when he was united with Magdaline Schmidt, also a native of that country, whose parents lived in Germany. He and she and her sister, Mrs. Catherine Schubert, of Springfield, are the only surviving members of her family. To Mr. Zimmermann and wife were born two sons and two daughters, and three children now survive: John, who lives in Germany; and Catherine, who married Gustav Dial, a machinist of Omaha, Neb., has four children. Catherine married Paul Rieckeman and lives in Springfield, eleven children.

ZIMMERMANN, Joseph.—The younger generation in Springfield are demonstrating that it is not years that count in the successful race, but ability, determination, and integrity of purpose. Some of the representative men of the city, yet to reach their fortieth milestone, yet they have accomplished much. Some there are who have not only attained material prosperity, but have also filled responsible public positions and given to the people the best that is in them. One of the best-known men of Springfield, in both political and business circles is Joseph Zimmermann, former City Comptroller, who is at present connected with several of the leading business concerns of the city.

Mr. Zimmermann was born in Springfield, October 27, 1876, and has lived here all his life. Much of his success he attributes to the fostering care and devotion of his mother, Mrs. Frances Zimmermann, who has been a resident of the city since 1870, and whose home is now at No. 700 South Fifth Street. She is a lady whose many charities and gentle, kindly nature make her a beloved addition to any circle. After attending parochial and public school, Mr. Zimmermann gained a commercial training in the Springfield Business College. He had been ambitious to earn his own living before he left school, and when only a child worked for Alexander Pringle, collecting coal bills on Saturdays and after school. In this capacity he demonstrated his reliability and dependableness to such an extent that at fourteen years he obtained a position with Ridgely’s National Bank. He remained there for seventeen years, being successively promoted through various positions until he was made paying teller. It was while holding this position that he resigned to take upon himself the duties of the office of City Comptroller, under Mayor David S. Griffiths. This appointment had the endorsement of all the banks in the city and was a very popular one. Upon leaving this office, Mr. Zimmerman purchased the insurance agency of Kessberger & Co., and since then has built up a large and flourishing business along this line, representing all the best regular insurance companies. He is also Secretary and Treasurer of the Ilm Piano Company and Treasurer and Director of the Springfield Record, Publishing Company, and has given his time and energy towards the promotion and development of other enterprises of both a public and private character. In politics Mr. Zimmerman is a Republican, casting his first vote for President McKinley, and at present is serving as a member of the Board of Education.

On September 12, 1900, Mr. Zimmerman was married to Mary E. Reisch, daughter of the late Frank Reisch, and Mrs. Anna Reisch, who now resides at No. 810 Rutledge street. Mr. Reisch was the head of the Reisch Brewing Company and President of the Illinois National Bank, of Springfield, and in his death the city lost one of its most valued citizens. Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman have had four children: Joseph F., born July 11, 1901; Frank Reisch, born September 12, 1904; Ralph Edwin, born January 13, 1907, and George Walter, born February 9, 1910. Mr. Zimmerman belongs to SS. Peter and Paul Roman Catholic Church. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus and the order of Elks. In his life Mr. Zimmerman has demonstrated that success is given not alone to those who begin their career with means. His capital stock consisted of his energy, and willingness to work, and the advice of his mother. Drawing liberally upon these assets, he has become a power among his associates and has every reason to be proud of what he has already accomplished.

ZOMBRO, John Quincy Adams.—It was during the dark days of the Civil War, those four years of awful carnage, the period that “tried men’s souls,” that men received training (both physical and mental) which in after life had much to do with assuring them success in whatever they undertook. The sharp discipline of army life helped them immeasurably in the years that came after; the hardships they were compelled to endure gave them training to endure the hardships of later years, and the dangers of the field of battle gave them the courage to invade other fields in after life. So it is not strange that we find the Civil War veteran, as a general rule a man who has succeeded in the battles of peace, and one who is no exception to this rule is John Quincy Adams Zombo, now holding the responsible position of State Ordnance Sergeant of Illinois, who has been successfully engaged in various business enterprises throughout a long and busy career. Mr. Zombo, who is now living at No. 904 West North Grand Avenue, Springfield, Ill., was born August 16, 1842, at Mechanicsburg, Champaign County, Ohio, a son of Isaac and Julia Ann (Kneeldier) Zombo.

Isaac Zombo was a son of Abram Zombo, the latter an Indian fighter of some renown, he the son of a Revolutionary soldier, Abram Zombo, who was a native of Pennsylvania, removed to West Virginia, and there Isaac Zombo was born in the town of Martinsburg, as was also Julia Kneeldier. Isaac Zombo was a Miller by trade and carried on this occupation at Mechanicsburg, Ohio, where he subsequently removed, and where he remained until his death. John Quincy Adams Zombo was but two and one-half years old at the time his father died, and as his mother was an invalid he had little or no chance for securing an education. When but eleven years of age he was thrown upon the world on his own resources and went to Urbana, Ohio, where he secured employment in a wholesale confectionery store, and remained with that concern one year, at the end of which time his mother and brother brought him to Clinton, Ill., moving with two two-horse wagons and a carriage. During the summer months that followed young Zombo went into the country and followed the plow, and during the long winter he worked for his board and schooling, thus securing what educational advantages he could, until August, 1862, when he enlisted at Clinton as a private of Company D, One Hundred and Seventh regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years or during the war. His Captain was Samuel McGowan, and his Major Tom Snell, and under them he participated in the first battle fought by the Army of the Ohio. He was one of a picked detachment of 100 to accompany the Fifth Indiana State Cavalry in an attack on Confederate stores at Salina, Tenn., which were successfully captured, and his first regular battle was the Siege of Knoxville. Later he served with signal bravery through the battles of Buzzard’s Roost, Dallas, New Hope Church, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Altoona, Franklin (Tenn.), Nashville, Fort Anderson (N. C.), and all the skirmishes and hard marches that went with these great struggles. After completing a war record of which any soldier might well be proud, he was mustered out of the service at Salisbury, N. C., in June, 1865, and his honorable discharge took place at Camp Butler, Springfield, Ill.

After the war Mr. Zombo went to farming in Logan and DeWitt Counties, Ill., and in 1875 engaged in a mercantile, live stock and grain business at Midland City, of which town he was the first Postmaster. In 1850 he began farming in Logan County, but in 1851 started to sell farm machinery for G. A. Van Duyne, of Springfield. He remained with his parents until he was twenty-one years of age, then rented a farm of his father, and after his marriage lived for ten years on the farm where he was born. He then came to Sangamon County and worked on various farms, first one near Mechanicsburg, then for Joseph Gatton (who lived near Mr. Zuckswerth’s present home), and for a time for T. A. Shephard, after which he rented the Gatton farm. He also rented a farm from Charles Shephard for two years, then purchased sixty acres of his present farm, to which he has been able to add from time to time, as his finances warranted, until he now owns 110 acres of land. Both are members of the Methodist Church and carry their religious thoughts and principles into their every-day lives.
